

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2025

https://archive.org/details/bwb_Y0-BVX-308

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

32 P.—34 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
32 P. 3

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 32, Nos. 1-15; Vol. 33, Nos.
1-10, 13-19; Vol. 34, Nos. 1-11.

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 34, Nos. 12-14.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 32-34 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Abbott; People v.	34	500
Acevedo; People v.	33	1099
Adair v. White	34	338
Adams v. Bradley	33	841
Agassiz; Kohler v.	33	741
Ah Len; People v.	32	880
Aldrich; Scarf v.	32	324
Allen; Samuel v.	33	273
Allenberg; Zellerbach v.	33	786
Allin v. Williams	32	441
Allspaugh; Kiessig v.	34	106
Altschul; Dowling v.	33	495
American Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia; Stockton Combined Harvester & Ag- ricultural Works v.	33	638
Andreson; San Bernardino Nat. Bank v.	32	168
Anthony v. Grand	34	325
Appleby v. Jansen's Heirs	33	438
Arnold; Tuller v.	33	445
Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Co.; Darby v.	32	454
Asevado v. Orr	34	777
Ashby; McKissick v.	33	729
Ashton v. Dashaway Ass'n	33	446
Ashworth; Butler v.	34	780
Ashworth; Connolly v.	33	60
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.; Norton v.	32	452
Auburn Opera-House & Pavilion Ass'n v. Hill	32	587
Austin v. Dick	34	655
Austin v. Dick	34	822
Baird; Clarke v.	33	756
Baird; Clarke v.	34	777
Baird v. Crank	33	63
Baker; People v.	34	649
Baker; Woolverton v.	33	731
Ballerino; Los Angeles County v.	32	581
Ballerino; Los Angeles County v.	34	329
Ballerino; People v.	34	330
Banegas v. Brackett	34	344
Bank of British North America v. Madison	33	762
Bank of California; Gunn v.	33	1105
Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Wickersham	34	444
Bank of Shasta v. Boyd	34	337
Bannister; People v.	34	710
Barber; Spring Val. Waterworks v.	33	735
Barker; Maskell v.	34	340
Barnard; Yosemite Commissioners v.	32	982
Barnhart; Harris v.	32	589
Barrett; Harralson v.	34	342
Barrows v. Fox	32	811

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Batcheller; De Baker v.	32	512
Bates v. McDowell	34	327
Bay View School Dist. of Santa Cruz County v. Linscott	33	781
Bear Valley Irrigation Co.; Roebling Sons Co. v.	34	80
Bedan v. Turney	34	442
Bedel v. Kowalsky	33	904
Bedell's Estate, In re	32	323
Beecher; Dammon v.	32	573
Beer v. Clifton	33	204
Beevers; People v.	33	844
Bell, Ex parte	34	641
Bell v. Sausalito Land & Ferry Co.	33	449
Bemmerly; People v.	33	263
Benicia Agricultural Works v. Estes	32	938
Benicia Agricultural Works v. Germania Ins. Co.	32	512
Benicia Water Co.; Clyne v.	34	714
Benson v. Central Pac. R. Co.	32	809
Benson v. Central Pac. R. Co.	33	206
Bergin v. Haight	33	760
Bergin's Estate, In re	34	867
Beronio; Grant v.	32	556
Bethell v. Rogers	34	645
Biggi v. Biggi	32	803
Birch; Blumberg v.	34	102
Birch v. Hale	33	1088
Bisagno; Williams v.	34	640
Bituminous Lime Rock Paving & Imp. Co. v. Fulton	33	1117
Black v. Clasby	32	564
Blackburn v. Nelson	34	775
Blake; Rowe v.	33	864
Blanchard; Gregory v.	33	199
Blevin; Rhoton v.	34	513
Blinn, In re	33	841
Blumberg v. Birch	34	102
Blythe's Estate, In re	34	108
Board of Education of City of Oakland; Marion v.	32	643
Board of Education of City of Oakland; Marion v.	32	644
Board of Equalization of Los Angeles; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles v.	32	312
Board of Law Library Trustees of Orange County v. Board of Sup'rs of Orange County	34	244
Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Conlin v.	33	753
Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco; Jacobs v.	34	630
Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County; Los Angeles Sav. Bank v.	34	437
Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County; Main Street Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v.	34	437
Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County; Maxwell v.	32	443
Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County; Security Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v.	34	437
Board of Sup'rs of Orange County; Board of Law Library Trustees of Orange County v.	34	244
Board of Sup'rs of San Bernardino County; Smith v.	33	1094
Board of Sup'rs of San Diego County; San Diego School Dist. of San Diego County v.	32	517
Boggs; Hogins v.	34	653
Boggs; Pearce v.	33	906
Bonney; People v.	33	98
Booker; Gordon v.	32	593

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Booker; Reyburn v.	32	594
Borland v. Nevada Bank of San Francisco	33	737
Bours; Burke v.	32	980
Bowie v. Grand Lodge of Legion of The West	34	103
Boyd; Bank of Shasta v.	34	337
Boyd v. Oddous	32	569
Boyne v. Ryan	34	707
Boyson v. Thorn	33	492
Brackett; Banegas v.	34	344
Bradbeer; New Zealand Ins. Co. v.	34	445
Bradford v. McAvoy	33	1091
Bradley; Adams v.	33	841
Bradley v. Parker	34	234
Bramlet; Welsh v.	33	66
Brandenstein; Rico v.	33	480
Brandt; Thompson v.	32	890
Breen; Nelson v.	33	85
Brickell; Whelan v.	33	396
Briggs; Townsend v.	32	307
Briggs; Townsend v.	34	116
Brizzolara; City of San Luis Obispo v.	34	1083
Broder v. Conklin	33	211
Broder v. Superior Court of Mono County	33	630
Brown; Chapin v.	34	525
Brown; German v.	33	58
Brown v. Jenks	32	701
Brown v. Parker	33	728
Brown v. Winship	33	728
Brunner v. Marks	33	265
Bryant; Hunter v.	33	51
Bryant; Hunter v.	33	55
Bucher; Porter v.	33	335
Bucher; Raker v.	34	654
Bucher; Raker v.	34	849
Bull v. Strong	32	973
Bullard; Foley v.	32	574
Bullard; Foley v.	33	1081
Bullard v. McCardle	33	193
Bump; Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v.	32	867
Burbridge v. Lemmert	32	310
Burke v. Bours	32	980
Burnett v. Llewelyn	32	702
Burns; Hogan v.	33	631
Burns v. Scooffy	33	86
Burns v. Sennett	33	916
Burns Wine Co.; Marten v.	33	1107
Bury v. Young	33	338
Butler v. Ashworth	34	780
Butler; Reay v.	33	1134
California Academy of Sciences v. Fletcher	33	855
California Academy of Sciences v. Fletcher	33	857
California Bituminous Rock Co.; Greenberg v.	33	192
California Hosiery Co.; Wiley v.	32	522
Campbell v. Freeman	34	113
Capp; D'Oyly v.	33	736
Capron v. Hitchcock	33	431
Carmelo Land & Coal Co.; Towle v.	33	1126
Carpenter; Crocker v.	33	271

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Carr v. Eel River & E. R. Co.	33	213
Carraher v. San Francisco Bridge Co.	34	828
Carroll, Ex parte	34	518
Caruthers; Hitchcock v.	34	627
Casteel; People v.	34	237
Castle; Claiborne v.	32	807
Cavanaugh v. Jackson	34	509
Cederberg v. Robison	34	625
Central Pac. R. Co.; Benson v.	32	809
Central Pac. R. Co.; Benson v.	33	206
Champlin, Appeal of	32	567
Chapin v. Brown	34	525
Chapman; Clark v.	32	812
Chapman; Clark v.	33	750
Charlton v. Southern Pac. R. Co.	33	1119
Chase; San Diego Flume Co. v.	32	245
Chuey Ying Git; People v.	34	1080
City and County of San Francisco v. Collins	33	56
City and County of San Francisco; Connolly v.	33	1109
City and County of San Francisco v. Kiernan	33	720
City and County of San Francisco v. Russell	34	516
City and County of San Francisco; Schmitt v.	34	961
City Bank; City of Los Angeles v.	34	510
City of Coronado v. City of San Diego	32	518
City of Fresno v. Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.	32	943
City of Los Angeles v. City Bank	34	510
City of Los Angeles; Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v.	32	240
City of Monterey v. Malarin	33	840
City of Oakland; Wetmore v.	33	769
City of San Bernardino; Electric Light & Power Co. v.	34	819
City of San Diego; City of Coronado v.	32	518
City of San Diego v. Dauer	32	561
City of San Diego; Gordon v.	32	885
City of San Luis Obispo v. Brizzolara	34	1083
City of San Luis Obispo; Smith v.	34	830
City of Santa Ana v. Harlin	34	224
City of Stockton v. Weber	33	332
Claiborne v. Castle	32	807
Clark v. Chapman	32	812
Clark v. Chapman	33	750
Clark v. Collier	34	677
Clark v. Olsen	33	274
Clark; Snyder v.	34	1034
Clarke v. Baird	33	756
Clarke v. Baird	34	777
Clarke v. Jennings	32	1049
Clarke v. Mott	33	884
Clarke v. Wittram, two cases	33	798
Clasby; Black v.	32	564
Clayton & G. W. Wagon-Road Co.; Kellett v.	33	885
Cleary v. Folger	33	877
Clements v. McGinn	33	920
Clifton; Beer v.	33	204
Clyma; Cockrill v.	32	888
Clyne v. Benicia Water Co.	34	714
Coalter v. Hurst	32	248
Cockrill v. Clyma	32	888
Coffman; Turner v.	32	947

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Cole; Drew v.	32	229
Cole; Higgins v.	34	678
Cole v. Wilcox	34	114
Colegrove v. Smith	33	115
Colgan; Owens v.	32	519
Colgan; Sawyer v.	33	911
Collier; Clark v.	34	677
Collins; City and County of San Francisco v.	33	56
Collins v. Scott	34	1085
Colton Land & Water Co. v. Swartz	33	878
Columbus Brewing Co.; Gribble v.	34	527
Comerford; Dowling v.	33	853
Conant; West v.	34	705
Conklin; Broder v.	33	211
Conlin v. Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco	33	753
Conlon v. Gardner	32	565
Conniff; McDonald v.	34	71
Connolly v. Ashworth	33	60
Connolly v. City and County of San Francisco	33	1109
Consumers' Lumber Co.; Creditors v.	33	196
Cooper; Rued v.	34	98
Corcoran v. Hinkel	34	1031
Cornish; Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v.	32	867
Couts' Estate, In re	34	865
Cowgill v. Dinwiddie	33	439
Cox v. Delmas	33	836
Coyne v. Rennie	32	578
Crank; Baird v.	33	63
Crawford v. Maddux	34	651
Creditors v. Consumers' Lumber Co.	33	196
Cressey; Easton v.	34	622
Crocker v. Carpenter	33	271
Crossman v. Kenniston	32	448
Crossman v. Leshner	32	449
Crowl; People v.	34	860
Crowley v. Strouse	33	456
Crump; Krumdick v.	32	800
Cunningham; Sanborn v.	33	894
Curran; Wood v.	33	774
Cyrus; Keyes v.	34	722
Daley v. Quick	33	859
Dammon v. Beecher	32	573
Damon v. Waldteufel	33	903
Daniels; People v.	34	233
Darby v. Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Co.	32	454
Dashaway Ass'n; Ashton v.	33	446
Dauer; City of San Diego v.	32	561
Daves v. Southern Pac. Co.	32	708
Davis; Floyd v.	33	746
Davis v. Honey Lake Water Co.	33	270
Davis v. Southern Pac. Co.	32	646
Daw v. Niles	33	1114
De Arnaz v. Jaynes	34	223
De Baker v. Batcheller	32	512
De Camp Lumber Co. v. Tolhurst	34	438
Defoor; People v.	34	642
Delmas; Cox v.	33	836
Dennis; San Gabriel Valley Land & Water Co. v.	34	441

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Descalso v. Duane	33	328
Desmond v. Faus	33	457
De Toro; Luco v.	34	516
Dick; Austin v.	34	655
Dick; Austin v.	34	822
Diggs v. Porteus	33	447
Dimmick; Levi v.	34	79
Dinwiddie; Cowgill v.	33	439
Dixon v. Pluns	33	268
Donohue; Mitchell v.	34	614
Doran v. Doran	33	929
Doray; Packer v.	33	118
Doray; Packer v.	34	628
Dougherty v. Miles	32	597
Douglass; People v.	34	490
Dowling v. Altschul	33	495
Dowling v. Comerford	33	853
D'Oyly v. Capp	33	736
Drew v. Cole	32	229
Drew; McDonald v.	32	173
Drew v. Rogers	34	1081
Drexler v. McGlynn	33	773
Driscoll v. Market St. Cable R. Co.	32	591
Drobaz Fishing Co.; Pearson v.	34	76
Duane; Descalso v.	33	328
Duffey; Harvey v.	33	897
Duhart; Rogers v.	32	570
Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co.	33	123
Duncan v. Grady	34	112
Dunham; Gill v.	34	68
Dunlop v. Kennedy	34	92
Dupuy v. Macleod	33	1115
Durralde; Saulque v.	33	1090
Easterbrook v. O'Brien	33	765
Easton v. Cressey	34	622
Eckert; Town of Santa Monica v.	33	880
Edwards v. Hellings	33	799
Edwards v. San Jose Printing & Pub. Co.	34	128
Eel River & E. R. Co.; Carr v.	33	213
Eel River & E. R. Co.; People v.	33	728
Elbert v. Los Angeles Gas Co.	32	9
Elder v. Kutner	32	563
El Dorado County v. Meiss	34	716
Electric Light & Power Co. v. City of San Bernardino	34	819
Elledge v. National City & O. R. Co.	34	720
Elledge v. National City & O. R. Co.	34	852
Ellsworth; Libbey v.	32	228
Eshleman v. Henrietta Vineyard Co.	32	595
Espittalier; Weyers v.	32	525
Estes; Benicia Agricultural Works v.	32	938
Etting; People v.	34	237
Eureka Endowment Ass'n of California; Henke v.	34	1089
Excelsior Pav. Co. v. Leach	34	116
Excelsior Pav. Co. v. Pierce	33	727
Ex-Mission Land & Water Co. v. Flash	32	600
Fagan; People v.	33	60
Fagan; People v.	33	846
Fairbanks v. Lampkin	34	101

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Fanning v. Foley	33	1098
Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles v. Board of Equalization of Los Angeles	32	312
Faus; Desmond v.	33	457
Fay; Jordan v.	33	95
Fice; People v.	32	531
Field v. Shorb	34	504
Finnerty v. Pennie	34	869
First Nat. Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Simmons	33	197
Fischer v. Superior Court of Tuolumne County	32	875
Fisher v. Hopkins	33	438
Fisher; Porter v.	34	700
Flagg v. Puterbaugh	32	863
Flash; Ex-Mission Land & Water Co. v.	32	600
Fletcher; California Academy of Sciences v.	33	855
Fletcher; California Academy of Sciences v.	33	857
Fletcher; Mills v.	34	637
Fletcher v. Northcross	32	328
Flint's Estate, In re	34	863
Floyd v. Davis	33	746
Foley v. Bullard	32	574
Foley v. Bullard	33	1081
Foley; Fanning v.	33	1098
Folger; Cleary v.	33	877
Folks; Hicks v.	32	8
Forbes; Shipman v.	32	599
Forbush; Perine v.	32	226
Forni v. Yoell	33	887
Foster; Harris v.	32	246
Fountain v. Semitropic Land & Water Co.	34	497
Fox; Barrows v.	32	811
Fox v. Hale & Norcross Silver Min. Co.	32	446
Fox; Malic v.	33	441
Frazier v. Lynch	32	319
Fredericks v. Tracy	33	750
Freeman; Campbell v.	34	113
Freeman v. Griswold	34	327
Freese; Grunwald v.	34	73
Freshour v. Hihn	34	87
Fresno Canal & Irrigation Co.; City of Fresno v.	32	943
Fresno Nat. Bank; White v.	32	979
Fruitvale Sanitary Dist.; Woodward v.	34	239
Fulton; Bituminous Lime Rock Paving & Imp. Co. v.	33	1117
Fulton v. Jansen	34	331
Gallagher; People v.	33	890
Galpin; Gray v.	33	725
Galvin v. Gualala Mill Co.	33	93
Galvin v. Gualala Mill Co.	33	94
Gamble v. Tripp	33	851
Ganceart v. Henry	33	92
Garber v. Gianella	33	458
Gardner; Conlon v.	32	565
Gardner; People v.	32	880
Garibaldi v. Garr	32	170
Garr; Garibaldi v.	32	170
Gaylord v. Place	33	484
German v. Brown	33	58
Germania Ins. Co.; Benicia Agricultural Works v.	32	512

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Gianella; Garber v.	33	458
Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co.	32	172
Gibbs; People v.	33	630
Gill v. Dunham	34	68
Gill; Weber v.	33	330
Gillis; People v.	32	586
Gilmore; McKenzie v.	33	262
Gisson v. Schwabacher	34	104
Gleason; People v.	33	1111
Glenn; Scott v.	32	573
Glenn; Scott v.	32	983
Glens Falls Ins. Co. of New York; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricul- tural Works v.	33	633
Gloster; Kennedy v.	32	941
Gordon v. Booker	32	593
Gordon v. City of San Diego	32	885
Gordon; People v.	33	901
Gould, Ex parte	33	1112
Gould v. Wise	32	576
Gould v. Wise	33	323
Grady; Duncan v.	34	112
Grand; Anthony v.	34	325
Grand Lodge of Legion of The West; Bowie v.	34	103
Grangers' Bank of California v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	33	1095
Grant v. Beronio	32	556
Grant; Strong v.	33	733
Gray v. Galpin	33	725
Gray v. McWilliams	32	976
Gray; Risley v.	32	884
Green; Appeal of, five cases	33	456
Green; People v.	34	231
Greenberg v. California Bituminous Rock Co.	33	192
Greene; People v.	34	630
Greenebaum; Lowenberg v.	33	794
Gregg; Naftzger v.	33	757
Gregory v. Blanchard	33	199
Gregory v. Gregory	32	531
Greig v. Riordan	33	913
Greiss v. State Inv. & Ins. Co.	33	195
Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co.	34	527
Griffin v. Scooffy	33	88
Griffith; Spinney v.	32	974
Griswold; Freeman v.	34	327
Grover; Jordan v.	33	889
Grunwald v. Freese	34	73
Gualala Mill Co.; Galvin v.	33	93
Gualala Mill Co.; Galvin v.	33	94
Gunn v. Bank of California	33	1105
Gutzeit v. Pennie	32	584
Gutzeit v. Pennie	33	199
Haaren v. High	32	518
Haas v. Whittier	32	449
Haas' Estate, In re	32	327
Hager v. Southern Pac. Co.	33	119
Haight; Bergin v.	33	760
Haight v. Tryon	34	712
Hale; Birch v.	33	1088

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol. Page
Hale; Toomy v.	34 644
Hale & Norcross Silver Min. Co.; Fox v.	32 446
Hall; Shanklin v.	34 636
Hall; Stewart v.	34 706
Hamburg-Madgeburg Fire Ins. Co.; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v.	33 638
Hamilton; People v.	32 526
Hamlin v. Philips	33 331
Handley; People v.	34 853
Hanly; Hilton v.	32 11
Hanly v. Sixteen Horses and Thirteen Head of Cattle	32 10
Hanson v. Slaven	33 266
Harlin; City of Santa Ana v.	34 224
Harper v. Hildreth	33 1103
Harralson v. Barrett	34 342
Harris v. Barnhart	32 589
Harris v. Foster	32 246
Harris; Orange County v.	32 594
Harshall, Appeal of	33 451
Hartford Fire Ins. Co.; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v.	33 637
Harvey, In re	32 567
Harvey v. Duffey	33 897
Hawes; People v.	33 791
Hawkins v. Morehead	34 223
Hayes, Ex parte	33 337
Hayes v. Los Angeles County	33 766
Hayne v. Hermann	32 171
Healy v. Woodruff	32 528
Heckman v. Swett	33 1099
Heffernan v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	33 725
Heldt's Estate, In re	33 549
Hellings; Edwards v.	33 799
Helsel v. Seeger	34 237
Hendy; Steen v.	33 899
Hendy Mach. Works v. Pacific Cable Const. Co.	33 1084
Henke v. Eureka Endowment Ass'n of California	34 1089
Henrietta Vineyard; Eshleman v.	32 595
Henry; Ganceart v.	33 92
Hensler; Ralphs v.	32 243
Hermann; Hayne v.	32 171
Herrlich v. Kaufmann	33 857
Hibberd v. Mellville	33 201
Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc.; McCallion v.	33 329
Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. of San Francisco v. Wackenreuder	34 219
Hicks v. Folks	32 8
Higgins v. Cole	34 678
High; Haaren v.	32 518
Hihn; Freshour v.	34 87
Hildreth; Harper v.	33 1103
Hildreth v. Williams	33 1113
Hill; Auburn Opera-House & Pavilion Ass'n v.	32 587
Hill; People v.	34 854
Hilton v. Hanly	32 11
Himmelein v. Supreme Council American Legion of Honor	33 1130
Hinckley v. Krug	34 118
Hinkel; Corcoran v.	34 1031
Hinton; Los Angeles Sav. Bank v.	32 6

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Hinton; Main St. Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. _____	32	6
Hinton; Security Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. _____	32	3
Hitchcock; Capron v. _____	33	431
Hitchcock v. Caruthers _____	34	627
Hoff; Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co. v. _____	34	518
Hogan v. Burns _____	33	631
Hogan v. Pacific Endowment League _____	33	924
Hogins v. Boggs _____	34	653
Holland v. Southern Pac. R. Co. _____	34	666
Honey Lake Water Co.; Davis v. _____	33	270
Hong Shin, Ex parte _____	33	799
Hooper v. Patterson _____	32	514
Hopkins; Fisher v. _____	33	438
Hoppe v. Hoppe _____	34	222
Hotaling; Kreiss v. _____	33	1125
Hovey v. Walbank _____	34	650
Hume; Sullivan v. _____	33	1121
Hunt v. Swyney _____	33	854
Hunt v. Ward _____	34	335
Hunter v. Bryant _____	33	51
Hunter v. Bryant _____	33	55
Hurst; Coalter v. _____	32	248
Hyndman; People v. _____	33	782
Ida Clayton & G. W. Wagon-Road Co.; Kellett v. _____	33	885
Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Pacific R. Co. _____	33	1132
Irvine's Estate, In re _____	33	1128
Irwin v. McDowell _____	34	708
Jackson; Cavanaugh v. _____	34	509
Jacob v. Lorenz _____	33	119
Jacobs v. Board of Sup'rs of City and County of San Francisco _____	34	630
Jacobs v. Walker _____	33	91
James; People v. _____	32	317
James' Estate, In re _____	33	1122
Jansen; Fulton v. _____	34	331
Jansen's Heirs; Appleby v. _____	33	438
Jarvis; Link v. _____	33	206
Jaynes; De Arnaz v. _____	34	223
Jenks; Brown v. _____	32	701
Jennings; Clarke v. _____	32	1049
Johnson v. Polhemus _____	33	908
Johnson; Sisson, Crocker & Co. v. _____	34	617
Johnson's Estate, In re _____	33	460
Jones v. Justice's Court of Los Angeles City _____	32	575
Jordan v. Fay _____	33	95
Jordan v. Grover _____	33	889
Joshua Hendy Mach. Works v. Pacific Cable Const. Co. _____	33	1084
Journal Pub. Co. v. Whitney _____	32	237
Joyce v. Shafer _____	32	320
Justice's Court of Los Angeles City; Jones v. _____	32	575
Kaufmann; Herrlich v. _____	33	857
Keefe; Marshall v. _____	34	89
Kellenberger v. Market St. Cable R. Co. _____	33	90
Kellett v. Ida Clayton & G. W. Wagon-Road Co. _____	33	885
Kennedy; Dunlop v. _____	34	92
Kennedy v. Gloster _____	32	941
Kennedy v. Miller _____	32	558
Kenniston; Crossman v. _____	32	448
Keyes v. Cyrus _____	34	722

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Kiernan; City and County of San Francisco v.	33	720
Kiessig v. Allspaugh	34	106
Kimberly's Estate, In re	32	234
Kindelberger; People v.	34	852
Kinsey, Appeal of	33	751
Kirschbraun; Ramish v.	33	780
Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co.	32	876
Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co.	34	516
Klauber v. Vigneron	32	248
Klopper v. Levy	33	444
Knight v. Pacific Coast Stage Co.	34	868
Knowles; Lyons v.	32	883
Koening; People v.	34	238
Kohler v. Agassiz	33	741
Kowalsky; Bedel v.	33	904
Kreiss v. Hotaling	33	1125
Krug; Hinckley v.	34	118
Krumdick v. Crump	32	800
Kutner; Elder v.	32	563
Labory v. Los Angeles Orphan Asylum	32	231
Lakeport Agricultural Park Ass'n; Tunis v.	33	63
Lakeport Agricultural Park Ass'n; Tunis v.	33	447
Lampkin; Fairbanks v.	34	101
Lane; People v.	34	856
Larsen; People v.	34	514
Lasar; Lippert v.	33	797
La Societe Francaise de Bienfaisance Mutuelle de Los Angeles v. Weide- mann	32	583
La Verne Land Co.; Mills v.	32	169
Leach; Excelsior Pav. Co. v.	34	116
Lemmert; Burbridge v.	32	310
Lem You; People v.	32	11
Leshner; Crossman v.	32	449
Levi v. Dimmick	34	79
Levinson's Estate, In re	33	726
Levy; Klopper v.	33	444
Lewis v. Widber	33	1128
Libbey v. Ellsworth	32	228
Light; Weill v.	32	943
Lillis v. People's Ditch Co.	34	715
Lindsay Irrigation Co. v. Mehrtens	32	802
Link v. Jarvis	33	206
Linscott; Bay View School Dist. of Santa Cruz County v.	33	781
Lippert v. Lasar	33	797
Llewelyn; Burnett v.	32	702
Lorenz; Jacob v.	33	119
Los Angeles Cemetery Ass'n v. City of Los Angeles	32	240
Los Angeles County v. Ballerino	32	581
Los Angeles County v. Ballerino	34	329
Los Angeles County; Hayes v.	33	766
Los Angeles County v. Orange County	32	316
Los Angeles County v. Reyes	32	233
Los Angeles County; Smith v.	34	439
Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co. v. Hoff	34	518
Los Angeles Gas Co.; Elbert v.	32	9
Los Angeles Orphan Asylum; Labory v.	32	231
Los Angeles Sav. Bank v. Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County	34	437
Los Angeles Sav. Bank v. Hinton	32	6

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Los Angeles & P. R. Co.; Patton v.	33	55
Los Angeles & P. R. Co.; Smith v.	33	53
Los Angeles & P. R. Co.; Smith v.	34	242
Lowe v. Woods	34	959
Lowenberg v. Greenebaum	33	794
Lucas; Partridge v.	33	1082
Luco v. De Toro	34	516
Lynch; Frazier v.	32	319
Lyons v. Knowles	32	883
Lyons; Washburn v.	32	310
Lyons; Wilhoit v.	33	325
Lytle Creek Water Co.; Will v.	34	830
McAvoy; Bradford v.	33	1091
McCallion v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc.	33	329
McCardle; Bullard v.	33	193
McClure v. McClure	34	822
McCormick v. Sutton	32	444
McCowen; McFarland v.	33	113
McCoy v. Van Ness	33	761
McDaniel v. Pattison	32	805
McDermott; People v.	32	7
McDonald v. Conniff	34	71
McDonald v. Drew	32	173
McDowell; Bates v.	34	327
McDowell; Irwin v.	34	708
McFarland v. McCowen	33	113
McFaul v. Pfankuch	33	397
McGinn; Clements v.	33	920
McGlynn; Drexler v.	33	773
McKenzie v. Gilmore	33	262
McKissick v. Ashby	33	729
Macleod; Dupuy v.	33	1115
McMann; Sam Yuen v.	34	80
McNally; Rourke v.	33	62
McNulty; People v.	33	900
McSherry v. Pennsylvania Consolidated Gold-Min. Co.	32	711
McWilliams; Gray v.	32	976
Maddux; Crawford v.	34	651
Madison; Bank of British North America v.	33	762
Magee; Appeal of	32	241
Magee v. Pacific Imp. Co.	33	772
Main Street Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County	34	437
Main St. Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Hinton	32	6
Malarin; City of Monterey v.	33	840
Malic v. Fox	33	441
Mallory v. Thomas	33	757
Mantes; Wells v.	34	324
Marion v. Board of Education of City of Oakland	32	643
Marion v. Board of Education of City of Oakland	32	644
Market St. Cable R. Co.; Driscoll v.	32	591
Market St. Cable R. Co.; Kellenberger v.	33	90
Marks; Brunner v.	33	265
Marshall v. Keefe	34	89
Marshall v. Taylor	32	515
Marshall v. Taylor	32	867
Marten v. Paul O. Burns Wine Co.	33	1107
Martinelli; Riley v.	32	579

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Marysville & Y. C. St. R. Co.; Nye v.	32	530
Maskell v. Barker	34	340
Mathews; Rosenthal v.	34	624
Mawhinney v. Southern Ins. Co.	32	945
Maxwell v. Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County	32	443
Mehrtens; Lindsay Irrigation Co. v.	32	802
Meiss; El Dorado County v.	34	716
Mellville; Hibberd v.	33	201
Mendenhall v. Rose	33	884
Merced Bank v. Rosenthal	33	732
Merrill; Southern California Motor Road Co. v.	34	712
Meserve v. Pomona Land & Water Co.	34	508
Meserve v. Pomona Land & Water Co.	34	509
Miles; Dougherty v.	32	597
Miller; Kennedy v.	32	558
Mills v. Fletcher	34	637
Mills v. La Verne Land Co.	32	169
Mitchell v. Donohue	34	614
Mitchell; People v.	34	698
Montague; Naftzger v.	33	757
Montecito Water Co.; People v.	32	236
Montgomery v. Sayre	34	646
Moore v. Moore	34	90
Moore v. Mott	34	345
Moorhead; Sullivan v.	33	796
Moóser v. Petersen	33	1086
Morehead; Hawkins v.	34	223
Morphy; People v.	34	623
Morris v. Wilson	32	801
Mott; Clarke v.	33	884
Mott; Moore v.	34	345
Mound City Land & Water Ass'n; Vejar v.	32	713
Mountaineer Gold Min. Co.; Williams v.	34	702
Mowry v. Nunez	33	1122
Mudd v. Mudd	33	114
Mulholland, In re	32	568
Mulkey v. Mulkey	34	621
Munroe; People v.	33	776
Naftzger v. Gregg	33	757
Naftzger v. Montague	33	757
Nance; Riley v.	32	315
National City & O. R. Co.; Elledge v.	34	720
National City & O. R. Co.; Elledge v.	34	852
Nelmes v. Wilson	34	341
Nelson; Blackburn v.	34	775
Nelson v. Breen	33	85
Nevada Bank of San Francisco; Borland v.	33	737
New Zealand Ins. Co. v. Bradbeer	34	445
Nicolosi; People v.	34	824
Niles; Daw v.	33	1114
Nonella; People v.	33	1097
Northcross; Fletcher v.	32	328
Norton v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.	32	452
Norton; Reed v.	34	333
Noyo Lumber Co.; People v.	34	96
Nunez; Mowry v.	33	1122
Nye v. Marysville & Y. C. St. R. Co.	32	530
O'Brien; Easterbrook v.	33	765

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Occidental Bldg. & Loan Ass'n; Wainscott v.	33	88
Occidental & Oriental Steamship Co.; Smith v.	34	84
Oddous; Boyd v.	32	569
Olds; Remy v.	34	216
Olsen; Clark v.	33	274
Omnibus Cable Co.; Tobin v.	34	124
O'Niel; Wilmington Transp. Co. v.	32	705
Orange County v. Harris	32	594
Orange County; Los Angeles County v.	32	316
Ord v. Ord	34	83
Oregon Pac. R. Co.; Toby v.	33	550
Orr; Asevado v.	34	777
Overall v. Tulare County	34	519
Owens v. Colgan	32	519
Pacific Cable Const. Co.; Joshua Hendy Mach. Works v.	33	1084
Pacific Coast Stage Co.; Knight v.	34	868
Pacific Endowment League; Hogan v.	33	924
Pacific Imp. Co.; Magee v.	33	772
Pacific Imp. Co.; Towle v.	33	207
Pacific R. Co.; Illinios Trust & Sav. Bank v.	33	1132
Pacific Wood & Coal Co.; Dulin v.	33	123
Pacific Yacht Club v. Sausalito Bay Water Co.	33	322
Packer v. Doray	33	118
Packer v. Doray	34	628
Painter v. Painter	33	483
Palmtag v. Roadhouse	34	111
Parker; Bradley v.	34	234
Parker; Brown v.	33	728
Parker; Thomas v.	32	562
Parsons v. Smilie	32	702
Partridge v. Lucas	33	1082
Patison; Powell v.	34	676
Patison; Powell v.	34	677
Patterson; Hooper v.	32	514
Pattison; McDaniel v.	32	805
Patton v. Los Angeles & P. R. Co.	33	55
Patton v. Thomson	33	97
Paul O. Burns Wine Co.; Marten v.	33	1107
Pearce v. Boggs	33	906
Pearson v. Drobaz Fishing Co.	34	76
Pearsons' Estate, In re	33	451
Pearsons' Estate, In re	33	456
Pearsons' Estate, In re	33	751
Peers; Pieper v.	32	700
Penney v. Simmons	33	1121
Pennie; Finnerty v.	34	869
Pennie; Gutzeit v.	32	584
Pennie; Gutzeit v.	33	199
Pennsylvania Consolidated Gold-Min. Co.; McSherry v.	32	711
People v. Abbott	34	500
People v. Acevedo	33	1099
People v. Ah Len	32	880
People v. Baker	34	649
People v. Ballerino	34	330
People v. Bannister	34	710
People v. Beevers	33	844
People v. Bemmerly	33	263
People v. Bonney	33	98

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol.	Page
People v. Casteel	34	237
People v. Chuey Ying Git	34	1080
People v. Crowl	34	860
People v. Daniels	34	233
People v. Defoor	34	642
People v. Douglass	34	490
People v. Eel River & E. R. Co.	33	728
People v. Etting	34	237
People v. Fagan	33	60
People v. Fagan	33	846
People v. Fice	32	531
People v. Gallagher	33	890
People v. Gardner	32	880
People v. Gibbs	33	630
People v. Gillis	32	586
People v. Gleason	33	1111
People v. Gordon	33	901
People v. Green	34	231
People v. Greene	34	630
People v. Hamilton	32	526
People v. Handley	34	853
People v. Hawes	33	791
People v. Hill	34	854
People v. Hyndman	33	782
People v. James	32	317
People v. Kindelberger	34	852
People v. Koenig	34	238
People v. Lane	34	856
People v. Larsen	34	514
People v. Lem You	32	11
People v. McDermott	32	7
People v. McNulty, three cases	33	900
People v. Mitchell	34	698
People v. Montecito Water Co.	32	236
People v. Morphy	34	623
People v. Munroe	33	776
People v. Nicolosi	34	824
People v. Nonella	33	1097
People v. Noyo Lumber Co.	34	96
People v. Roney	34	862
People v. Samonset	32	520
People v. San Francisco Public Stock Exchange	33	785
People v. Sansome	33	202
People v. Selma Irrigation Dist.	32	1047
People v. Sherman	32	879
People v. Smith	33	58
People v. Squires	33	1092
People v. Stewart	32	8
People v. Superior Court of San Francisco	34	492
People v. Vincent	33	900
People v. Vital	34	617
People v. Volcano Canyon Toll-Road Co.	34	522
People v. Walters	32	864
People v. Weiger	34	826
People v. Wells	34	718
People v. Wells	34	1078
People v. Wessel	33	216
People v. Wong Ah Leong	34	105

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Worth	33	913
People's Ditch Co.; Lillis v.	34	715
People's Lumber Co.; Shain v.	32	878
Perine v. Forbush	32	226
Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co.	33	1118
Petersen; Mooser v.	33	1086
Petersen; Shain v.	33	1085
Petersen v. Shain	33	1086
Petersen v. Taylor	33	436
Petersen v. Taylor	34	724
Pettit; San Luis Obispo County v.	34	1082
Pfankuch; McFaul v.	33	397
Phelan v. Smith	34	667
Philips; Hamlin v.	33	331
Pieper v. Peers	32	700
Pierce; Excelsior Pav. Co. v.	33	727
Pingree's Estate, In re	34	521
Place; Gaylord v.	33	484
Pluns; Dixon v.	33	268
Polhemus; Johnson v.	33	908
Pomona Land & Water Co.; Meserve v.	34	508
Pomona Land & Water Co.; Meserve v.	34	509
Porter v. Bucher	33	335
Porter v. Fisher	34	700
Porteus; Diggs v.	33	447
Posachane Water Co. v. Standart	32	532
Postel; Warren v.	33	930
Powell v. Patison	34	676
Powell v. Patison	34	677
Powers; Stewart v.	33	486
Powers; Stewart v.	33	489
Puterbaugh; Flagg v.	32	863
Quick; Daley v.	33	859
Raker v. Bucher	34	654
Raker v. Bucher	34	849
Ralphs v. Hensler	32	243
Ramish v. Kirschbraun	33	780
Randal v. Tatum	33	433
Rauer; Wiebold v.	33	839
Reay v. Butler	33	1134
Reay; Rousset v.	32	171
Reed v. Norton	34	333
Reed; Watriss v.	33	775
Reiter v. Rothschild	33	849
Remy v. Olds	34	216
Rennie; Coyne v.	32	578
Reyburn v. Booker	32	594
Reyes; Los Angeles County v.	32	233
Rhoton v. Blevin	34	513
Richard v. Wolfing	32	971
Rico v. Brandenstein	33	480
Riley v. Martinelli	32	579
Riley v. Nance	32	315
Riordan; Greig v.	33	913
Risley v. Gray	32	884
Riverside Banking Co.; Tibbetts v.	32	174
Roadhouse; Palmtag v.	34	111
Robb, In re	33	890

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Robinson v. Thornton	34	120
Robison; Cederberg v.	34	625
Roebling Sons Co. v. Bear Valley Irrigation Co.	34	80
Rogers; Bethell v.	34	645
Rogers; Drew v.	34	1081
Rogers v. Duhart	32	570
Roney; People v.	34	862
Rorke v. San Francisco Stock & Exchange Board	33	881
Rose; Mendenhall v.	33	884
Rosenthal v. Mathews	34	624
Rosenthal; Merced Bank v.	33	732
Rothschild; Reiter v.	33	849
Rourke v. McNally	33	62
Rousset v. Reay	32	171
Rowe v. Blake	33	864
Rued v. Cooper	34	98
Russell; City and County of San Francisco v.	34	516
Ryan; Boyne v.	34	707
Samonset; People v.	32	520
Samuel v. Allen	33	273
Sam Yuen v. McMann	34	80
San Bernardino Nat. Bank v. Andreson	32	168
San Bernardino Nat. Bank; Southern California Motor Road Co. v.	34	711
Sanborn v. Cunningham	33	894
Sanborn's Estate, In re	32	865
Sanders v. Sehorn	33	58
San Diego County v. Siefert	32	644
San Diego Flume Co. v. Chase	32	245
San Diego Flume Co.; Giant Powder Co. v.	32	172
San Diego Flume Co.; San Diego Water Co. v.	34	656
San Diego School Dist. of San Diego County v. Board of Sup'rs of San Diego County	32	517
San Diego Street-Car Co.; Klauber v.	32	876
San Diego Street-Car Co.; Klauber v.	34	516
San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co.	34	656
San Francisco Bridge Co.; Carraher v.	34	828
San Francisco Public Stock Exchange; People v.	33	785
San Francisco Stock & Exchange Board; Rorke v.	33	881
San Gabriel Valley Land & Water Co. v. Dennis	34	441
San Joaquin County v. Superior Court	33	482
San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v. West	33	928
San Jose Printing & Pub. Co.; Edwards v.	34	128
San Luis Obispo County v. Pettit	34	1082
Sansome; People v.	33	202
Saulque v. Durralde	33	1090
Sausalito Bay Water Co.; Pacific Yacht Club v.	33	322
Sausalito Land & Ferry Co.; Bell v.	33	449
Sawyer v. Colgan	33	911
Sayre; Montgomery v.	34	646
Scarf v. Aldrich	32	324
Schallert-Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Sheldon	32	235
Schmitt v. City and County of San Francisco	34	961
Schultz; Wenzel v.	34	696
Schwabacher; Gisson v.	34	104
Scooffy; Burns v.	33	86
Scooffy; Griffin v.	33	88
Scott; Collins v.	34	1085
Scott v. Glenn	32	573

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Scott v. Glenn	32	983
Scott; Threlkel v.	34	851
Security Loan & Trust Co. v. Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering & Manuf'g Co.	34	321
Security Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County	34	437
Security Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Hinton	32	3
Seeger; Helsel v.	34	237
Sehorn; Sanders v.	33	58
Selma Irrigation Dist.; People v.	32	1047
Semitropic Land & Water Co.; Fountain v.	34	497
Semi-Tropic Land & Water Co.; Shively v.	33	848
Sennett; Burns v.	33	916
Shafer; Joyce v.	32	320
Shain v. People's Lumber Co.	32	878
Shain v. Petersen	33	1085
Shain; Petersen v.	33	1086
Shanklin v. Hall	34	636
Sheldon; Schallert-Ganahl Lumber Co. v.	32	235
Sherman; People v.	32	879
Shipman v. Forbes	32	599
Shively v. Semi-Tropic Land & Water Co.	33	848
Shorb; Field v.	34	504
Shortridge, In re	34	227
Siefert; San Diego County v.	32	644
Silva; Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v.	32	866
Simmons; First Nat. Bank of San Luis Obispo v.	33	197
Simmons; Penney v.	33	1121
Sisson, Crocker & Co. v. Johnson	34	617
Sisson; Wallace v.	33	496
Sivers v. Sivers	32	571
Sixteen Horses and Thirteen Head of Cattle; Hanly v.	32	10
Slaven; Hanson v.	33	266
Smilie; Parsons v.	32	702
Smith v. Board of Sup'rs of San Bernardino County	33	1094
Smith v. City of San Luis Obispo	34	830
Smith; Colegrove v.	33	115
Smith v. Los Angeles County	34	439
Smith v. Los Angeles & P. R. Co.	33	53
Smith v. Los Angeles & P. R. Co.	34	242
Smith v. Occidental & Oriental Steamship Co.	34	84
Smith; People v.	33	58
Smith; Phelan v.	34	667
Smith v. Smith	34	77
Smith; Sterling v.	32	320
Smith v. Superior Court of Los Angeles	32	322
Smith's Estate, In re	33	744
Smithz, Ex parte	33	338
Snyder v. Clark	34	1034
Somps; Weinburg v.	33	341
Southern California Motor Road Co. v. Merrill	34	712
Southern California Motor Road Co. v. San Bernardino Nat. Bank	34	711
Southern Ins. Co.; Mawhinney v.	32	945
Southern Pac. Co.; Daves v.	32	708
Southern Pac. Co.; Davis v.	32	646
Southern Pac. Co.; Hager v.	33	119
Southern Pac. Co.; Stephenson v.	34	618
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Charlton v.	33	1119
Southern Pac. R. Co.; Holland v.	34	666

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Spinney v. Griffith	32	974
Spring Val. Waterworks v. Barber	33	735
Squires; People v.	33	1092
Standart; Posachane Water Co. v.	32	532
Staples; Stockton Sav. Bank v.	32	936
State Inv. & Ins. Co.; Greiss v.	33	195
State Inv. & Ins. Co.; West Coast Lumber Co. v.	33	258
Steen v. Hendy	33	899
Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co.	34	618
Sterling v. Smith	32	320
Stewart v. Hall	34	706
Stewart; People v.	32	8
Stewart v. Powers	33	486
Stewart v. Powers	33	489
Stewart; Thelin v.	34	861
Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. American Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia	33	638
Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. of New York	33	633
Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Hamburg-Madge- burg Fire Ins. Co.	33	638
Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co.	33	637
Stockton Sav. Bank v. Staples	32	936
Storke v. Storke	34	339
Story; Story & Isham Commercial Co. v.	34	671
Story v. Story & Isham Commercial Co.	34	675
Story & Isham Commercial Co. v. Story	34	671
Story & Isham Commercial Co.; Story v.	34	675
Stow, In re	33	490
Stowell v. Waddingham	34	436
Strong; Bull v.	32	973
Strong v. Grant	33	733
Strouse; Crowley v.	33	456
Sullivan v. Hume	33	1121
Sullivan v. Moorhead	33	796
Sullivan v. Sullivan	33	862
Sullivan v. Zeiner	33	209
Superior Court; San Joaquin County v.	33	482
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Grangers' Bank of California v.	33	1095
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Heffernan v.	33	725
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Vermont Marble Co. v.	34	326
Superior Court of Los Angeles; Smith v.	32	322
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Wagner v.	34	648
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Wagner v.	34	820
Superior Court of Mono County; Broder v.	33	630
Superior Court of San Francisco; People v.	34	492
Superior Court of Tuolumne County; Fischer v.	32	875
Supreme Council American Legion of Honor; Himmelein v.	33	1130
Sutton; McCormick v.	32	444
Sutton v. Symons	32	588
Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v. Bump	32	867
Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v. Cornish, two cases	32	867
Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v. Silva	32	866
Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v. Winter	32	867
Swartz; Colton Land & Water Co. v.	33	878

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Swett; Heckman v.	33	1099
Swyney; Hunt v.	33	854
Symons; Sutton v.	32	588
Tatum; Randal v.	33	433
Taylor; Marshall v.	32	515
Taylor; Marshall v.	32	867
Taylor; Petersen v.	33	436
Taylor; Petersen v.	34	724
Thelin v. Stewart	34	861
Thomas; Mallory v.	33	757
Thomas v. Parker	32	562
Thomas; Wolters v.	32	565
Thompson v. Brandt	32	890
Thomson; Patton v.	33	97
Thorn; Boyson v.	33	492
Thornton; Robinson v.	34	120
Threlkel v. Scott	34	851
Tibbetts v. Riverside Banking Co.	32	174
Tobin v. Omnibus Cable Co.	34	124
Toby v. Oregon Pac. R. Co.	33	550
Tolhurst; De Camp Lumber Co. v.	34	438
Toomy v. Hale	34	644
Towle v. Carmelo Land & Coal Co.	33	1126
Towle v. Pacific Imp. Co.	33	207
Town of Santa Monica v. Eckert	33	880
Townsend v. Briggs	32	307
Townsend v. Briggs	34	116
Tracy; Fredericks v.	33	750
Tripp; Gamble v.	33	851
Tryon; Haight v.	34	712
Tulare County; Overall v.	34	519
Tuller v. Arnold	33	445
Tunis v. Lakeport Agricultural Park Ass'n	33	63
Tunis v. Lakeport Agricultural Park Ass'n	33	447
Turner v. Coffman	32	947
Turney; Bedan v.	34	442
Valley Lumber Co. v. Wood	33	343
Vance's Estate, In re	34	1087
Van Ness; McCoy v.	33	761
Vejar v. Mound City Land & Water Ass'n	32	713
Vermont Marble Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco	34	326
Vigneron; Klauber v.	32	248
Vincent; People v.	33	900
Vital; People v.	34	617
Volcano Canyon Toll-Road Co.; People v.	34	522
Von Schmidt v. Widber	32	531
Von Schmidt v. Widber	32	532
Von Schmidt v. Widber	34	109
Wackenreuder; Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. of San Francisco v.	34	219
Waddingham; Stowell v.	34	436
Wagner v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County	34	648
Wagner v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County	34	820
Wainscott v. Occidental Bldg. & Loan Ass'n	33	88
Walbank; Hovey v.	34	650
Waldteufel; Damon v.	33	903
Walker; Jacobs v.	33	91
Wallace v. Sisson	33	496
Walters; People v.	32	864

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Ward; Hunt v.	34	335
Warner v. Warner	34	523
Warren v. Postel	33	930
Washburn v. Lyons	32	310
Watriss v. Reed	33	775
Webb; Wetzel v.	33	1105
Weber; City of Stockton v.	33	332
Weber v. Gill	33	330
Weidemann; La Societe Francaise de Bienfaisance Mutuelle de Los Angeles v.	32	583
Weiger; People v.	34	826
Weill v. Light	32	943
Weinburg v. Soms	33	341
Wells v. Mantes	34	324
Wells; People v.	34	718
Wells; People v.	34	1078
Welsh v. Bramlet	33	66
Wenzel v. Schultz	34	696
Weringer's Estate, In re	34	825
Wessel; People v.	33	216
West v. Conant	34	705
West; San Joaquin Land & Water Co. v.	33	928
West Coast Lumber Co.; Perkins v.	33	1118
West Coast Lumber Co. v. State Inv. & Ins. Co.	33	258
Wetmore v. City of Oakland	33	769
Wetzel v. Webb	33	1105
Weyers v. Espittalier	32	525
Whelan v. Brickell	33	396
Whetton's Estate, In re	32	970
White; Adair v.	34	338
White v. Fresno Nat. Bank	32	979
White v. White	32	600
White v. White	33	399
White; Yoakam v.	32	238
Whitney; Journal Pub. Co. v.	32	237
Whittier; Haas v.	32	449
Whitwell, Ex parte	32	870
Wickersham; Bank of San Luis Obispo v.	34	444
Widber; Lewis v.	33	1128
Widber; Von Schmidt v.	32	531
Widber; Von Schmidt v.	32	532
Widber; Von Schmidt v.	34	109
Wiebold v. Rauer	33	839
Wilcox; Cole v.	34	114
Wiley v. California Hosiery Co.	32	522
Wilhoit v. Lyons	33	325
Will v. Lytle Creek Water Co.	34	830
Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering & Manuf'g Co.; Security Loan & Trust Co. v.	34	321
Williams; Allin v.	32	441
Williams v. Bisagno	34	640
Williams; Hildreth v.	33	1113
Williams v. Mountaineer Gold Min. Co.	34	702
Williams' Estate, In re	32	241
Wilmington Transp. Co. v. O'Niel	32	705
Wilson; Morris v.	32	801
Wilson; Nelmes v.	34	341
Winship; Brown v.	33	728

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Winter; Swamp-Land Dist. No. 150 v.	32	867
Wise; Gould v.	32	576
Wise; Gould v.	33	323
Wittram; Clarke v.	33	798
Wolfing; Richard v.	32	971
Wolters v. Thomas	32	565
Wong Ah Leong; People v.	34	105
Wood v. Curran	33	774
Wood; Valley Lumber Co. v.	33	343
Woodruff; Healy v.	32	528
Woods; Lowe v.	34	959
Woods' Estate, In re	32	516
Woodward v. Fruitvale Sanitary Dist.	34	239
Woolverton v. Baker	33	731
Worth; People v.	33	913
Wren v. Wren	34	775
Yoakam v. White	32	238
Yoell; Forni v.	33	887
Yosemite Commissioners v. Barnard	32	982
Young; Bury v.	33	338
Zeiner; Sullivan v.	33	209
Zellerbach v. Allenberg	33	786

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

32 PACIFIC REPORTER

purpose of loaning funds of their depositors may loan the funds thereof, receive deposits of money, loan the same, and repay depositors, with or without interest,—the method in which such bank conducted its business.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by the Security Savings Bank & Trust Company against J. W. Hinton, city assessor of the city of Los Angeles, to recover a tax alleged to have been illegally assessed against plaintiff's property, and collected by defendant. From a judgment for defendant on a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. C. McFarland, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant upon his demurrer to the complaint. The complaint alleges, in substance, that plaintiff is a corporation, organized for the profit of its stockholders, exclusively, with a capital stock of $200,000. The purposes of the corporation, as stated in its articles of incorporation, are as follows: "To receive deposits, and pay interest on the same, upon such terms and conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by its board of directors; to preserve and to safely invest the funds of its members and depositors in loans on real and personal property, and all adequate securities, public or private, or in such manner, on such terms, at such rate of interest, and for such consideration, as may be determined by the officers of the corporation under direction of the board; to sell, transfer, and assign its loans to individuals and corporations, without recourse upon the corporation; and to receive funds from private parties and corporations for the purpose of loaning the same upon adequate security." That in June, 1891, the plaintiff made out and delivered to the defendant, the city assessor of the city of Los Angeles, upon a blank furnished by the city, a statement of its property, as it existed on the first Monday of March preceding, which statement showed that plaintiff had money and personal property amounting to $3,233; that there were owing to it solvent credits, unsecured, $58,002.50; due from banks and bankers, $6,424.23; and that there was due from the bank to depositors, bona fide residents of this state, unsecured debts for deposits of money with the plaintiff, $407,926.90. Mortgages to a very large amount were returned separately. Plaintiff offered to pay the taxes upon $3,233, its money and personal property, but declined to pay upon $64,426.73, being solvent credits unsecured, and moneys due from banks and bankers, claiming that it was entitled to deduct from its said credits the unsecured debts to its depositors, which amounted to a much larger sum. The assessor demanded payment of taxes upon the whole sum of its personal property and unsecured credits, being $67,659.73, amounting to $805.12, which plaintiff refused to pay, and tendered $38.80, the amount assessed upon the personal property; whereupon the assessor seized the amount of the whole tax,

97 Cal. 214

SECURITY SAV. BANK & TRUST CO. v. HINTON, City Assessor. (No. 14,877.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1893.)

MUNICIPAL TAXATION—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SAVINGS BANK—DEDUCTION OF UNSECURED DEBTS.

1. Const. art. 11, § 8, provides that any city of over 100,000 inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with the laws and constitution of the state, which shall be submitted to the legislature; and, if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, it shall become the charter of such city. Const. art. 11, § 12, provides that the legislature shall not impose taxes on cities for municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest such power in the authorities thereof. Held, that a city organized under a charter approved by legislature by resolution, and not by bill, may provide in its charter for taxation for municipal purposes, though no general law has been passed by legislature authorizing it to do so, since, the power of taxation being essential to municipal existence, such power is necessarily implied.

2. Const. art. 13, § 1, provides that all property in the state, not exempt under laws of the United States, shall be taxable; that the word "property" includes moneys, credits, etc.; and that the legislature may provide, except in the case of credits secured by mortgage, for a deduction of credits or debts due bona fide residents of the state. Los Angeles City Ordinance,

§ 4, subd. 5, (a copy of Pol. Code, § 3629, subd. 6,) provides that the taxpayer may deduct from his solvent unsecured credits his unsecured debts owing to bona fide residents of the state. Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 6, as amended by Laws 1881, provides that credits or debts arising on account of any money deposited with savings or loan corporations shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed an interest in the property of such corporation, and shall not be assessed to the creditors thereof. Held that, if there be any conflict between such ordinance and section 3617, the latter governs, as being a "general law," and a loan and savings bank doing business in the city of Los Angeles is not entitled, for the purposes of municipal taxation on its property, to a deduction from its solvent unsecured credits of its unsecured liability to its depositors for money deposited.

3. A contention that the debts of such bank are not, for the purpose of taxation, within section 3617, on the ground that they are not ordinary deposits, but debts for borrowed money, repayable in the exact sum borrowed, with interest thereon, irrespective of the profits or losses of the bank, cannot be sustained; Civil Code, § 571, under which such bank was organized, providing that corporations organized for the $805.12, in money, appellant owning no real estate; and this action is brought to recover of the defendant that sum, less the taxes admitted to be due on the personal property. Appellant presents two principal grounds upon which it contends that the action of the defendant was illegal, and which, if sustained, must require a reversal of the judgment: (1) That the city of Los Angeles has no power to levy taxes; (2) that, if it be conceded that the city has such power, the assessor had no authority to deny the deduction from its solvent credits of moneys due or owing to depositors.

1. The first of these propositions is based upon the fact that the charter of the city is what is known as a "Freeholder's Charter;" that the charter was approved by the legislature by resolution, and not by bill, and therefore, it is argued, is not a law; and that the existence of a law enacted by the legislature is essential to the exercise of the power to levy, assess, and collect taxes. It is not necessary to reconsider the case of People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333, 24 Pac. Rep. 603, cited by appellant. The question there presented was whether the city of Los Angeles could create a police court, and fix its jurisdiction; and the point of the decision was that under section 1, art. 6, of the constitution, the power to establish inferior courts in any incorporated city or town was vested in the legislature, and that by section 13 of the same article it was enjoined upon the legislature to fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior court established in pursuance of section 1. In none of the several cases appealed to this court, touching the charter of the city of Los Angeles, has it been held that the charter was not properly adopted, nor that it was invalid, though some of its provisions have been held to be inoperative because inconsistent with certain legislative acts which were declared to be "general laws." In Brooks v. Fischer, 79 Cal. 173, 21 Pac. Rep. 652, it was said: "It is enough to say that the whole charter cannot be held to be invalid because of the fact that a few of its provisions may conflict with general statutes now in force." And this language was repeated in People v. Toal. Brooks v. Fischer, supra, was an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the respondent, the city assessor of the city of Los Angeles, from proceeding to act as such assessor under the charter here brought in question. It was there alleged by the petitioner that the charter had been approved by resolution, and not by bill, and was not presented to nor approved by the governor; and the third paragraph of the petition alleged "that the powers and duties of the city assessor in relation to the assessment of property prescribed by the laws existing prior to the framing of the aforesaid charter, were other than, and essentially different from, the powers and duties provided in said charter;" and it was further alleged that respondent "threatens, and is now proceeding, to assess all taxable property in said city according to, and by virtue of, the provisions of said charter," etc. The petition was dismissed, and the effect of the decision could not have been less than a determination that the respondent was authorized to proceed in the discharge of his duties as city assessor.

But appellant contends that, in the absence of a law enacted by the legislature in the constitutional mode, the city of Los Angeles has no power to levy taxes, and that no general law applicable to cities having "freeholder charters" has been passed for that purpose. If no such general law has been enacted, there can be no conflict between the charter and such law, and it is only as to such conflicts that the validity of the charter has been heretofore questioned. But counsels' argument makes such general law the essential basis of the power of the city to impose taxes for municipal purposes. This argument is based upon section 12 of article 11 of the constitution, which is as follows: "The legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes." But the authority given by the constitution¹ to frame and adopt "a charter for its own government," which "shall become the organic law thereof," is comprehensive enough to authorize a provision such as that contained in the charter of the city of Los Angeles, providing for taxation for municipal purposes. The legislature, however, was required by the constitution to provide by a general law for the incorporation of towns and cities that could not, for the want of sufficient population, or should not for any reason desire to, adopt a freeholders' charter, and, as to municipal corporations organized under such general law, the latter clause of the above-quoted section has full application, and as there is no act of the legislature relating to taxation for municipal purposes, except that contained in the municipal government act, and which appellant correctly contends does not apply to cities having freeholders' charters, there can be no conflict between such charters and the general laws of the state upon this subject. As above remarked, in no one of the several cases have the validity, force, and constitutional authority of the Los Angeles charter for the exercise of all municipal powers been questioned as to any provision not in conflict with some general law, except in the Toal Case; and the decision was there based upon the constitutional provision wherein the judicial power of the state is granted to such inferior courts in any municipality as the legislature may establish. It is undoubtedly true that the legislative branch of the government has the exclusive power of taxation, except so far as that power is restrained by the constitution, or delegated by the legislature or the constitution to local municipalities. But by section 12 of article 11, above quoted, the legislature is prohibited from imposing taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other municipal corporations, for municipal purposes. It must therefore follow that in authorizing freeholders' charters, which the legislature cannot change or amend, the power of taxation being essential to municipal existence, that power is necessarily implied. In speaking of municipal corporations the supreme court of the United States said: "When such a corporation is created the power of taxation is vested in it, as an essential attribute, for all the purposes of its existence, unless its exercise be, in express terms, prohibited." U. S. v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. at page 393. See, also, Ralls County Court v. U. S., 105 U. S. 733; Peoria, D. & E. Ry. Co. v. People, 116 Ill. 401, 6 N. E. Rep. 497. The implication of this power, however, does not rest solely upon the power to create and adopt a charter, and the assent of the legislature in approving it; but by the prohibition against the imposition of such taxes by the legislature and by sections 13, 16-18 of article 11, prohibiting the delegation of power to special commissioners, private corporations, companies, or individuals, to exercise the power of municipal taxation; requiring county and city taxes to be paid into the treasury; prohibiting the making of profit out of county, city, or other public moneys; and restraining municipal indebtedness beyond the current revenue without making provision therefor,—the constitution assumes that all municipalities, however chartered, shall have and exercise the power of taxation. We have considered this point somewhat at length, because the question here presented was neither argued by counsel, nor considered by the court, in Brooks v. Fischer.

¹Const. art. 11, § 8, provides that any city of over 100,000 inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the constitution and laws of the state, which shall be submitted to the legislature for its approval or rejection; and, if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, it shall become the charter of such city, and shall become the organic law thereof.

2. In support of its contention that appellant was entitled to deduct from its solvent unsecured credits its unsecured liability to its depositors for moneys deposited, several considerations are urged.

It is first insisted that, if the charter vests the power to levy taxes, such power must be exercised strictly in accordance with the ordinances of the city, and that the ordinance upon the subject of taxation provides that the taxpayer may deduct from his solvent unsecured credits his unsecured debts owing to bona fide residents of this state, and that appellant was therefore entitled to the reduction claimed. The fifth subdivision of section 4 of the city ordinance, which contains the foregoing provision, is a copy of subdivision 6 of section 3629 of the Political Code. Section 46, art. 4, of the charter, (Laws 1889, p. 469,) defines the duty of the city assessor, and declares that he shall "make out, within such time as may be prescribed by ordinance of said city, * * * a full, true, and correct list of all the property, both real and personal, taxable by law, within the limits of said city," etc. Section 1 of article 13 of the constitution provides that all property in the state, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed; that the word "property" includes moneys, credits, bonds, etc. The last clause is as follows: "The legislature may provide, except in the case of credits secured by mortgage or trust deed, for a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents of this state." The legislature in 1881 amended section 3617 of the Political Code; and the sixth subdivision thereof, as amended, after defining the terms "credits" and "debts," concluded as follows: "But credits, claims, debts, and demands due, arising or accruing for or on account of money deposited with savings and loan corporations, shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property of such corporation, and shall not be assessed to the creditor or owner thereof." This section and section 3629, Pol. Code, as amended, and from which the above-mentioned city ordinance was copied, were approved and took effect the same day. It cannot be contended that the latter section was intended to repeal the provision above quoted from section 3617, or that it conflicted with it; and, if that be true, it cannot be held that the ordinance above quoted could in any manner conflict with the charter provision requiring the city assessor to make a list of all the property "taxable by law." We perceive no conflict between the charter and the ordinance, nor between the charter and ordinance and the provisions of the Code; but, if such conflict existed, we should be bound to hold that section 3617, Pol. Code, declares, and was intended to declare, the general policy of the state upon the subject of the taxation of savings and loan corporations, and was therefore a "general law," in the broadest sense of the term, and as such would control. In Dillon on Municipal Corporations, (section 772,) it is said: "So authority in the charter of a city to 'assess all taxable real and personal property within the city' refers to the general state law to ascertain what kind of property is subject to taxation; and the corporation has power to assess, not only what was then taxable, but also whatever might afterwards be made subject to taxation by any general statute."

It is, however, contended that appellant does not come within the provisions of section 3617, Pol. Code, because the debts in question are not ordinary deposits in savings banks, but debts for borrowed money, repayable in the exact sum borrowed, with interest thereon, irrespective of the profits or losses that may accrue to the bank. The learned counsel distinguishes between savings and loan associations which distribute to depositors the net profits realized by the bank, in proportion to their several deposits, and those which pay to depositors a specified rate of interest on time deposits; that in the former class the depositors are, in effect, members of the corporation, and interested in its profits, while in the latter class they are creditors, and have no interest in the profits. The language of section 3617, however, is comprehensive enough to include both classes, and we see no ground upon which we can say that the latter class was not intended to be included. All are organized under title 10 of the Civil Code. Section 571, Civil Code, is as follows: "Corporations organized for the purpose of accumulating and loaning the funds of their members, stockholders, and depositors may loan and invest the funds thereof, receive deposits of money, loan, invest, and collect the same, receive interest, and may repay depositors, with or without interest. No such corporation must loan money except on adequate security, on real or personal property, and such loan must not be for a longer period than six years." This section expressly authorizes such corporations to receive deposits, loan and invest the same, and repay depositors, with or without interest, which is the mode in which appellant conducts its business. We are not referred to any decision rendered since the amendment of section 3617, Pol. Code, was adopted; but it is argued that that amendment was made immediately after the decision was rendered in People v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594, which involved the taxation of the San Francisco Savings Union, which was of the first class of associations above mentioned, and that the amendment was therefore intended only to apply to those savings and loan associations in which depositors shared in the general dividend. In that case an effort was made to tax both the bank and the depositors upon the same moneys; and it was held that that would be double taxation, prohibited both by the constitution and the statute. But the other provision of the constitution and statute, requiring all property to be taxed, was found to be equally imperative; and for the purpose of securing the taxation of all property of the character in question, and at the same time avoiding double taxation, the amendment of section 3617, Pol. Code, was made. So far as the depositors are concerned, these deposits are not treated or taxed as solvent and unsecured credits, and therefore are not taxable to them, and, being thus taken out of the category of credits, cannot be treated as liabilities by the bank for the purpose of reducing the amount of its solvent unsecured credits liable to taxation. As savings banks are prohibited from loaning the money of depositors except on adequate security, upon real or personal property, we must assume that the solvent unsecured credits reported by appellant were loans of its capital or profits upon personal security; and, if its contention in this case should be carried out, a savings bank, with a capital paid in by its stockholders, could always evade taxation upon its entire capital, so long as its savings deposits equaled or exceeded its capital, by converting its capital into unsecured credits. We think the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, and advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES SAV. BANK v. HINTON,
City Assessor. (No. 14,879.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1893.)

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Savings Bank against J. W. Hinton, city assessor of the city of Los Angeles, to recover a tax alleged to have been illegally assessed against plaintiff's property, and collected by defendant. From a judgment for defendant on a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. C. McFarland, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The facts in this case are the same, except as to amounts, as in the case of Trust Co. v. Hinton, 32 Pac. Rep. 3, (No. 14,877, this day filed,) and the complaint, demurrer, and judgment were the same. The appeal is from the judgment, and is submitted upon the same briefs. On the authority of that case, the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the case of Trust Co. v. Hinton, 32 Pac. Rep. 3, (No. 14,877, this day filed,) the judgment is affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 757)

MAIN ST. SAV. BANK & TRUST CO. v.

HINTON, City Assessor. (No. 14,878.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1893.)

SAVINGS BANKS—TAXATION.

The fact that a corporation is engaged in a general banking business, in addition to a savings bank business, does not exempt that part of its business done as a savings bank from taxation under the laws applying to other savings banks.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by the Main Street Savings Bank & Trust Company against J. W. Hinton, city assessor of the city of Los Angeles, to recover taxes alleged to have been illegally assessed against plaintiff's property, and collected by defendant. From a judgment for defendant on a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. C. McFarland, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought by appellant to recover from the defendant the sum of $1,075.59, the tax assessed and collected by seizure upon its solvent and unsecured credits. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint, which was sustained, and judgment rendered thereon for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. This cause is submitted upon the briefs filed in Trust Co. v. Hinton, the same defendant, 32 Pac. Rep. 3, (No. 14,877, this day filed,) and involves the same questions, and an additional one, which we shall briefly notice. It is claimed in this case that appellant does a general banking business, as well as that of a savings bank. We do not see that this fact materially affects any question decided in 14,877, or the correctness of the judgment rendered in this case by the superior court. So far as its general banking business is concerned, appellant is subject to the same law, as regards taxation, as other banks not doing a savings bank's business; and, as to that part of its business done as a savings bank, it is subject to the same law that applies to other savings banks. There should be no difficulty in separating its ordinary deposits from its savings deposits, though none is found in its statement to the assessor, or in the complaint in this action. In paragraph 20 of the complaint, it is alleged that the unsecured debts due from appellant to bona fide residents of this state were debts "due depositors for sums borrowed from them upon interest;" and, that being true, no distinction can be made between this case and that of the Security Savings Bank, (No. 14,877,) and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

97 Cal. 247

PEOPLE v. McDERMOTT. (No. 20,921.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL—RECALL OF REMITTITUR.

Where, in a criminal cause, because of the failure of appellant's counsel to file a brief, or to appear at the hearing, an appeal from a conviction has been dismissed, and the judgment affirmed, without examination of the record, as prescribed by Penal Code, § 1253, under section 1265, providing that after the judgment has been remitted to the court below the appellate court has no further jurisdiction of the appeal or of the proceedings thereon, such court has no power to recall such remittitur, and to reinstate such appeal, even though appellant's counsel by inadvertence had failed to file the brief, and to appear at the hearing.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

Indictment against one McDermott for murder. This is a motion to recall the remittitur, and reinstate an appeal from a conviction that had been dismissed because of the failure of defendant's counsel to appear at the hearing on the appeal. Motion denied.

Blackstock & Shepherd, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a motion to recall the remittitur, and reinstate the appeal in a cause wherein the judgment was affirmed without examination of the record by reason of the failure of counsel for appellant to file a brief, or to appear at the time set for the hearing. The facts of the case are as follows: February 18, 1892, defendant was convicted in the superior court of Ventura county of murder in the second degree. On February 23d he appealed. March 30th he filed the printed transcript of the record at Los Angeles,—5 days before the commencement of the April term at Los Angeles and 33 days before the commencement of the May term at Sacramento. The cause was not placed upon either the Los Angeles or the Sacramento calendar, but was placed upon the calendar for the July term at San Francisco, and set down for hearing on July 27th. On that day, there being no brief on file, and no appearance of counsel, for appellant, the judgment and order appealed from were, on motion of the attorney general affirmed. Pen. Code, § 1253. After the expiration of 30 days, a remittitur was issued, and was, we presume, filed with the clerk of the superior court of Ventura county, though the papers before us do not show that fact. At the Los Angeles term in October this motion was submitted upon affidavits which show that the failure of counsel for appellant to appear in his behalf on the day set for the hearing of his appeal was solely due to inadvertence upon their part. It seems that counsel, recognizing the fact that the record was filed too late for the Los Angeles calendar, requested the deputy clerk there to have the cause placed on the Sacramento calendar. In the last week of April, in response to their inquiry, the clerk informed them that the cause was not on the Sacramento calendar, whereupon they assumed that it would not be heard until the October term at Los Angeles, and never knew that it had been placed upon the San Francisco calendar until September 7th, when they learned that the judgment had been affirmed.

The question arising upon this state of facts is whether this court has any power to recall the remittitur, and reinstate the appeal; whether, in other words, we have not lost all jurisdiction over the cause by the issuance of the remittitur and its filing in the superior court. It is the settled law of this state that when a remittitur has been regularly issued and filed, when there has been no violation of law or of our own rules in ordering the remittitur, no mistake of facts, and no fraud or imposition practiced by the prevailing party upon the court or upon the losing party, our jurisdiction over the cause is at an end, and our judgment final. Rowland v. Kreyenhagen, 24 Cal. 52, and cases therein cited; People v. Sprague, 57 Cal. 147; Vance v. Pena, 36 Cal. 328; Hanson v. McCue, 43 Cal. 178. Here there was no fraud or deception, no imposition or mistake, so far as the court is concerned. The cause was regularly on the San Francisco calendar for July. It might have been placed on the Sacramento calendar for May, and at the request of the appellant ought to have been so placed; but the failure to do so only rendered it more imperatively the duty of the clerk to place it on the July calendar, (Pen. Code, § 1252;) and by rule 15 of the old rules of this court, which remained in force until July 1, 1892, and after the July calendar was made up, it was the duty of the clerk to put the case on that calendar. Being a criminal case, it did not belong to the Los Angeles calendar, by reason of the fact that Ventura is one of the counties whose civil causes are assigned to the Los Angeles district. Criminal causes are regularly placed on the first calendar made up (whether for Sacramento, Los Angeles, or San Francisco) after the records are filed, regardless of the county in which the charges were tried.

Upon these grounds the motion must be denied, and it is so ordered.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(97 Cal. 241)

HICKS v. FOLKS, Sheriff. (No. 19,087.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1893.)

EMPLOYMENT OF CONVICTS—CUSTODY.

Pen. Code, §§ 1613, 1614, provide that certain prisoners may be required to labor on the public works or ways in the county, by an order of the board of supervisors; and in the county government act (Laws 1891, p. 306, § 25, subd. 30) it is stated that such work shall be done "under the direction of some responsible person." Held, that notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 4176, which provides that the sheriff must take charge of and keep the county jail, and the prisoners therein, and section 1600, which states that a prisoner must be kept actually confined in the jail until legally discharged, it was not intended that the prisoners should be in the actual custody of the sheriff while at work, and therefore he must deliver those required to work to such "responsible person" as is duly authorized by the supervisors to direct their labor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Petition by J. V. Hicks for a mandamus to compel John H. Folks, sheriff of the county of San Diego, to deliver to him certain prisoners required by the supervisors to work on the public road. From an order overruling his demurrer to the petition, and granting a peremptory writ, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Copeland & Daney, for appellant. Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from a judgment granting a writ of mandate. The board of supervisors of San Diego county passed an order providing for the working of prisoners thereafter committed to the jail of said county under judgment of conviction of a misdemeanor, under the direction of a responsible person, upon public roads and other places mentioned in the order, and appointing respondent overseer of such prisoners, with authority to receive them from, and return them to, the sheriff, and making him their "legal custodian" while at work, and going and returning therefrom. After respondent was appointed he demanded of the sheriff that he deliver to him such prisoners as were required by the order to perform such labor, for the purpose required by the order, but appellant refused to do so. An alternative writ of mandamus was granted and duly served, and appellant appeared and demurred to the petition. The demurrer was overruled and, appellant electing to stand on his demurrer, a peremptory writ was granted.

Appellant's contention is that the sheriff is the only legal and proper custodian of prisoners confined in the county jail, and cites section 4176, subd. 6, of the Political Code, which provides that "the sheriff must * * * take charge of and keep the county jail, and the prisoners therein."

The power of the board of supervisors to provide for the working of such prisoners is not questioned, but appellant insists that they cannot be taken out of the custody of the sheriff for such purpose; that the words, "under the direction of some responsible person," as used in the county government act, (Laws 1891, p. 306, § 25, subd. 30,) do not mean in his custody. Appellant also cites a part of section 1600 of the Penal Code, that "a prisoner * * * must be actually confined in the jail until he is legally discharged." This section prescribes the general duty of the sheriff in relation to prisoners, and whether the last clause of the section is a modification which would include the order of the board of supervisors it is not necessary to determine, inasmuch as sections 1613, 1614, of the Penal Code expressly provide that certain prisoners may be required to labor on the public works or ways in the county by an order of the board of supervisors. See, also, Laws 1891, p. 306, § 25, subd. 30. Appellant's contention cannot be sustained. These statutes do not impose any additional duties upon the sheriff. If it were intended that prisoners, while at labor, should be in immediate custody of the sheriff, it is reasonable to suppose the statute would have said so. The authority given the board of supervisors is broad enough to include the custody of the prisoners while absent from the jail; and, indeed, the custody by the "responsible person" under whose direction they are required to labor is essential to their profitable employment. It does not follow from the fact that they are such officers that the sheriff, or any of his deputies, are suitable persons to direct such labor; while it is undoubtedly competent for the legislature to commit the custody of this class of prisoners, for such special purposes, to a person selected by the board of supervisors. The authority conferred upon the board of supervisors "to provide for the working of prisoners" includes all that is required to prevent escapes, as well as the direction of their labor. Any other construction would, at the pleasure of the sheriff, defeat the operation of the statute, since the statute neither requires the sheriff to perform this duty, nor authorizes the board of supervisors to compel him to perform it. Their custody, as well as direction while at work, is confined to some "responsible person" by contract, and not by arbitrary direction. The sheriff might be selected for such purpose, but could not be required to perform the duty, except as the result of a contract voluntarily made by him. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(97 Cal. 238)

PEOPLE v. STEWART. (No. 20,941.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1893.)
ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO RAPE—EVIDENCE—COMPLAINT.

1. In the trial for an assault with intent to rape, made in the nighttime, in an isolated place on the highway, where defendant forcibly pulled the prosecutrix out of a buggy in which they were riding, and threw her down, and his conduct indicated that his mind was bent on using whatever force was necessary, the fact that he abandoned his purpose on hearing the approach of a third party does not purge him of the offense.

2. Where the prosecutrix, on the approach of such third party, jumped up, and ran to the approaching party, the fact that she remained unconscious or semiunconscious for some hours thereafter was admissible in evidence.

3. The fact that prosecutrix made immediate complaint was competent evidence, but her statement of the details of the affair was properly rejected as hearsay.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; E. A. Bridgford, Judge.

William Edward Stewart was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Howard, W. G. Dyas, and John B. Moore, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The appellant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, and now insists that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. Like a great majority of this class of cases, the facts here relied upon to support a conviction are largely dependent upon the testimony of the prosecuting witness alone; still this court has repeatedly held that the testimony of the prosecutrix may be sufficient of itself to establish a prima facie case. The alleged assault occurred in the nighttime, while the parties were traveling upon a public highway; and, after detailing certain language that appellant addressed to her touching his desires and purposes, the prosecuting witness further testified as follows: "He told me I could scream all I chose to, because there was nobody within three miles from me, and then he stopped the buggy and got out and took the lines and whip with him, and went around in front of the horse, and spent some little time like he was fastening the lines to the bridge railing. Then he came back and asked me if I would get out without any trouble, and I told him, 'No.' Then he said he would pull me out, and I told him that he would not either. Then he started to catch hold of me. He did catch hold of me, and I got hold of the buggy, and he pulled my hands loose, and pulled me all out,—out of the buggy,—but I came down, I believe, on my feet, as near as I could remember; and when I got down on the bridge he threw me and fell with me, and just as he fell with me he heard this team coming, and he jumped up and says 'Here comes a team; get into this buggy,' and I jumped up and ran for the team that was coming." We think the foregoing evidence, if bearing the stamp of truth, fills the measure furnished by the statute. If her statement as to the occurrence is true, the assault is entire and complete, and the intent is plainly apparent from the acts of the appellant, conjoined with his menacing language. This question as to the sufficiency of the evidence necessary to support a conviction for the offense here charged, and the principles of law applicable thereto, are quite fully discussed in People v. Fleming, 94 Cal. 308, 29 Pac. Rep. 647, and it is there held that the conduct of the defendant must be such as to indicate a purpose to use whatever force upon the female is necessary to accomplish the consummation of his desires. In this case the appellant's conduct indicates that his mind was bent on using whatever force the exigencies of the case demanded, but, fortunately for his intended victim, the arrival of third parties upon the scene furnished her an avenue of escape. The fact that he abandoned his wicked purpose upon the approach of other parties has not the slightest tendency to purge him of the legal consequences of his criminal conduct. If an assault with the intent here alleged is made, it is no less a crime, though the aggressor should abandon his intentions before the consummation of the act, by reason of the pains of a stricken conscience alone.

It is insisted that the court erred in admitting evidence showing that the prosecutrix remained in an unconscious or semiunconscious state some hours after she escaped from the defendant. We see no objection to this evidence. It is a universal rule that evidence of physical injuries upon the person of a female are proper matters to be placed before the jury, and the evidence here disclosed partakes of that character. The fact that she made immediate complaint was material and competent evidence, and her statements as to the details of the affair were properly rejected as hearsay. People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 6 Pac. Rep. 691; People v. Tierney, 67 Cal. 54, 7 Pac. Rep. 37; State v. Richards, 33 Iowa, 420; State v. Shettleworth, 18 Minn. 208, (Gil. 191.)

Let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

(97 Cal. 244)

ELBERT v. LOS ANGELES GAS CO. (No. 19,014.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1893.)

CONTRACT OF HIRING—EVIDENCE—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

1. In an action for damages for the breach of an alleged contract of employment for two years, the evidence showed that, as the result of a correspondence by letter and telegraph between plaintiff, residing in M., and the president of defendant company, residing in L., plaintiff gave up his position in M., came to L., and entered into the employ of defendant, and that he remained in such employ over a year, receiving as salary the amount stated in the correspondence. Held evidence sufficient to warrant a finding that a contract of employment for two years, at a fixed salary, was entered into by the parties.

2. Where plaintiff, as the result of a correspondence by letter and telegraph, enters the employ of defendant for a period of two years, these letters and telegrams constitute a contract or memorandum in writing sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by V. L. Elbert against the Los Angeles Gas Company for damages for breach of a contract by which defendant agreed to employ plaintiff. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cheney & Cronin, for appellant. Graft & Latham, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover damages for the breach by defendant of an alleged contract by which defendant agreed to employ plaintiff as its superintendent for a term of two years. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. The main points made by appellant may be condensed into the statement that the evidence does not show any contract such as is averred in the complaint and found by the court, and that, at least, it does not show a contract in writing, within the meaning of the statute of frauds. We, however, do not think that appellant's position is tenable. It appears beyond dispute, from the evidence, that in November, 1888, certain letters and telegrams passed between C. H. Simpkins, who was then president of the defendant, (a corporation,) and the respondent, concerning the employment of the latter. At that time Simpkins was in Los Angeles, Cal., which was the principal place of business of the defendant. Respondent was at Minneapolis, in the state of Minnesota. It appears further, beyond doubt, that in pursuance of said correspondence the respondent left his employment at Minneapolis, came to Los Angeles, entered upon the duties of the office of superintendent of appellant, performed said duties continuously for more than a year, and received his salary from the defendant in the amount stated in said correspondence. It appears, further, that, shortly after the expiration of the first year, the appellant, through its then president, W. B. Cline, without cause, discharged the respondent, and refused to accept further services, or to pay for the same; the only cause being that appellant desired to go out of business. Now, with respect to the question whether or not the letters and telegrams afford sufficient evidence that a contract for two years at a certain stipulated price was made, we deem it enough to say that we think said evidence was sufficient to show said facts; and we do not consider it necessary to repeat said letters and telegrams here in detail.

It is contended, however, by the appellant, further, that said letters and telegrams do not constitute a sufficient contract or memorandum in writing to satisfy the statute of frauds. It is settled law, however, that a correspondence through letters or telegrams, or both, if they show clearly what the contract was, is sufficient under the statute of frauds. In Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 534, 21 Pac. Rep. 179, this court said: "In order to take a contract * * * out of the statute of frauds, it is not necessary that there be a formal contract drawn up, with technical exactness. A memorandum of the agreement is sufficient, and it may be found in one or more papers, some or all of which may be telegrams." In Ryan v. U. S., 136 U. S. 68, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913, the court held that "a complete contract, binding under the statute of frauds, may be gathered from letters, writings, and telegrams between the parties relating to its subject-matter, and so connected with each other that they may fairly be said to constitute one paper relating to the contract." We think, also, that it clearly appears that the respondent was employed by the appellant, and not by said Simpkins personally.

We do not think that the court erred in sustaining an objection to a question put to the respondent, by which he was asked if he had tried to get employment in a kind of business different from that for which he was employed by the appellant.

The exception to the ruling of the court touching certain personal expenses of respondent is of no consequence, as in the findings and judgment no such expenses were allowed.

There are no other points necessary to be noticed. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 182

HANLY v. SIXTEEN HORSES AND THIRTEEN HEAD OF CATTLE. (No. 14,919.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1893.)

TRESPASSING ANIMALS—PROCEEDINGS IN REM.

Act March 7, 1878, which embraces the whole subject of trespassing animals in several counties, including Santa Barbara, and which restricts the right of proceeding in rem against such animals to cases where the owner is unknown, repeals, by implication, Act Feb. 4, 1874, which applies also to Santa Barbara county, and which gives a right of action in rem, where the owner is known.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

Proceedings in rem by Peter Hanly against 16 horses and 13 head of cattle. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and from a judgment thereon, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & Day, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The court below sustained the demurrer to the complaint; and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment, from which defendants appeal, was rendered for plaintiff. The action is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, against certain animals, under an act of the legislature approved February 4, 1874, concerning animals trespassing upon private property, which was made applicable to several counties, including the county of Santa Barbara. Afterwards, on March 7, 1878, another act of the legislature upon the same subject was approved, which was made applicable also to several counties, including Santa Barbara, although all the counties in the latter act were not identical with those named in the first act. It was held by the court below that the first act was in conflict with the last one, and that the last act really repealed the first; and we think that the court was right in so holding. The two acts are conflicting in many points. For instance, under the first act a proceeding in rem might be commenced against the animals, although their owner was known to the plaintiff, as was the case in this action, while under the act of 1878 a proceeding in rem could be commenced only in case the owner was not known. Moreover, it plainly appears that the act of 1878 embraces the whole subject of trespassing animals in the county of Santa Barbara, and was intended by the legislature to be, and was, a substitute for the first-named act. In such a case the latter act operates as a repeal of the former, although there be in the latter act no express words repealing the former act, by name. Fraser v. Alexander, 75 Cal. 147, 16 Pac. Rep. 757; Treadwell v. Board of Sup'rs of Yolo Co., 62 Cal. 563, and cases there cited; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 617. Judgment affirmed.

We concur. DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.

HILTON v. HANLY. (No. 19,071.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1893.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; B. T. Williams, Judge. Action by W. H. Hilton against Peter Hanly. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wright & Day, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The judgment in this case is affirmed, upon the authority of Hanly v. Sixteen Horses, etc., 32 Pac. Rep. 10, (No. 14,919, this day decided.)

97 Cal. 224

PEOPLE v. LEM YOU. (No. 20,961.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1893.)

PERJURY—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY OF STENOGRAPHER—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. In a prosecution for perjury it is competent to show what witnesses testified to in the cause in which defendant is alleged to have perjured himself, in order to show the materiality of defendant's alleged false testimony, and an objection that defendant was not present at the giving of such testimony, and had no opportunity to cross-examine such witnesses, cannot be sustained; the evidence being offered to show merely that such testimony had been given, and not to prove the facts stated therein.

2. A stenographer, who took down the evidence at a trial, may, subject to cross-examination from the adverse party, testify from his notes as to the evidence; Code Civil Proc. § 2047, providing that a witness may refresh his memory respecting a fact, by anything written by himself at the time such fact occurred, but that the writing must be shown to the adverse party, who may cross-examine the witness upon it if he desires.

3. In a trial for perjury it is for the court to determine whether certain false testimony alleged to have been given by defendant was material; a charge to the jury, defining materiality of testimony, and instructing them to find for or against defendant, according as they may determine that the facts are within or without that definition, being improper, as leaving to the jury the function of determining whether such testimony was material.

4. In the trial of A. for the murder of G. the two witnesses whose evidence was admitted to show the materiality of defendant's evidence on such trial testified that they heard gunshots, and, going in the direction of the house, found G. lying before her house wounded, and carried her in. Defendant testified that two Chinamen carried her into the house before such witnesses arrived. Held, that, there being no controversy as to the fact that G. was found lying in front of her house wounded, and no issue as to such fact, it was not material to know who carried her in, and an instruction that defendant's evidence in that regard was material was erroneous.

5. Defendant testified that when he approached the spot where G. laid wounded she told him that she did not know who shot her. Another witness testified that G. told him the day after the shooting that A. shot her. Held, that an instruction by the court that if they believed that the statement, made by G. the next day, was a dying declaration, defendant's testimony was material, was erroneous, in that the court should have more particularly determined for itself whether such statement was a dying declaration.

6. It appeared that A. had been tried for the murder of G. three times. A witness, L., did not appear at the first trial, but on the second trial testified that he saw A. shoot G. Held, that it was error to refuse to allow defendant, on trial for perjury committed in that action, to ask L. who took him up to the district attorney's office, in that it appeared somewhat suspicious that he should come at so late a time to tell what he knew about the case.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Lem You was convicted of perjury, and appeals. Reversed.

F. B. Guthrie and E. M. Guthrie, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., and James McLachlan, Dist. Atty., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. Defendant was convicted of perjury, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. It is charged in the information that the appellant, Lem You, gave certain false and material testimony on the trial of one Wong Ark for the alleged murder of a woman named Goot Gue, who was shot in or in front of the house in which she lived, on the night of April 26, 1891, in the city of Los Angeles. There is great conflict of evidence as to whether or not the said testimony of the appellant was false, and appellant makes no point as to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the jury in finding that said testimony was false. But appellant contends that the court committed several errors in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence and in instructing the jury.

1. For the purpose of showing the materiality of the alleged false testimony of appellant, the prosecution offered evidence of the testimony which two witnesses named Rohn and Bevan gave at the said trial of said Wong Ark. (There were two or three trials of the said Ark, but the alleged false testimony occurred at the first of said trials.) To this evidence appellant objected as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, because appellant, not being present when said testimony was given, had no opportunity to examine or cross-examine said witnesses, because said Rohn was living within the jurisdiction, and should have been called himself, and because, Bevan having since died, there is no rule by which his former testimony can be introduced in this cause. The court overruled the objections, and appellant excepted. The ruling of the court was right. The purpose was not to produce said testimony anew, as tending to prove the facts stated therein; it was offered merely for the purpose of showing as a fact that such testimony had been given, and it was expressly limited by the court to that purpose. The materiality of alleged false testimony does not always appear upon its face, or when simply compared with the indictment. It may be material on account of certain other testimony, which had been previously introduced on the trial of a cause. The testimony of a witness may be material when contradicting a part of the testimony given by another witness, which is material, or if going to the credit or discredit of other witnesses, etc. For instance, if on the trial of A. for a felony, B. should testify that C. was at a certain place at a certain time, this would not appear upon its face to be material; but if C. had previously testified that he was at another and remote place at said time, and had seen A. commit the criminal offense charged, then it clearly would be material. And so the previous evidence and the state of the cause in the action in which the alleged false testimony was given may be proven in order to show the materiality of the latter, (2 Russ. Crimes, 662; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 197;) otherwise the materiality of alleged false evidence could rarely be shown. The rule contended for by appellant that a defendant must be confronted with his witnesses, etc., does not apply here. All that was sought to be proven here was the mere fact that certain testimony had been given, and the appellant was confronted with the witnesses who testified to that fact. If the greater part of the testimony of appellant given in the Wong Ark trial was material at all, it was so only in connection with the said testimony of said witnesses Rohn and Bevan. The said previous testimony of said Rohn and Bevan was read by F. H. Longley, the official stenographic reporter of the court, from his transcript of notes of the testimony, which he testified to be correct; and appellant seeks to make the point that said transcript was not admissible evidence. But we do not think that the point whether or not a certified transcript of the reporter's notes would, as an independent document, have been admissible, arises in this case. Mr. Longley was sworn as a witness, and testified that he had taken such notes, and that they were correct, and he was allowed to read them, and was subject, of course, to cross-examination; and his testifying from his notes was clearly admissible under section 2047, Code Civil Proc.¹ None of the authorities cited by appellant are applicable to this point.

2. Appellant makes the contention that the court erred in instructing the jury, for the reason, among others, that in one part of the instructions given the question of the materiality of the alleged false testimony was left to the jury, while in another part of the instructions it was decided by the court, and taken away from the jury; and this contention must be sustained. For instance, instructions Nos. 4 and 5, given at the people's request, and instructions Nos. 3 and 11, given at request of defendant, go upon the theory that it was proper for the court to give the jury certain advice, information, and definitions upon the general subject of the materiality of the testimony, and allow the jury, under such instructions, to determine whether or not it was material; while in instructions Nos. 2 and 3, given by the court of its own motion, the court determined that two of the items of alleged false testimony were material. If the said two specific instructions had embraced all the matters charged in the information, it might perhaps be said that the general instructions did not work any prejudice to appellant, although even then the instructions would have been subjected to the charge of inconsistency. But the said two specific instructions do not embrace all the charges of false testimony made in the information, and therefore the materiality of all the other testimony alleged to have been given by appellant was left to the jury. The question of the materiality of evidence, no matter when or how it may arise, is always one of law for the court, and not of fact for the jury. It usually arises in the ordinary trial of a cause where one party offers evidence and the other objects to it as immaterial, and in that case it would be clear to every one that the question was for the court. But the question is exactly the same when, on a trial for perjury, the materiality of the alleged false testimony arises. Of course, a jury, in rendering a general verdict in a criminal case, necessarily has the naked power to decide all the questions arising on the general issue of not guilty; but it only has the right to find the facts, and apply to them the law, as given by the court. And on a trial for perjury it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to what facts would show material testimony. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1284; Cottrhan v. State, 39 Miss. 541; Steinman v. McWilliams, 6 Pa. St. 170; Reg. v. Southwood, 1 Fost. & F. 356; Power v. Price, 16 Wend. 448; State v. Lewis, 10 Kan. 157; People v. Clementshaw, 59 Cal. 385. There is nothing to the contrary in the case of People v. Brilliant, 58 Cal. 214. The court was there considering an entirely different question, viz. the sufficiency of the indictment; and in the language quoted by appellant from the opinion of McKinstry, J., it is merely said that certain questions were to be determined in that "present cause," and that whether certain facts existed which would make the matter material was to be determined by the jury. In Wharton's Criminal Law, supra, it is said that "the proper course is for the court, assuming all the evidence to be true, to determine whether the particular article of evidence is or is not material. Any dispute as to the truth of facts, however, must go to the jury." The same rule was substantially declared in People v. Clementshaw, supra,—the syllabus of the case being misleading. The proper course for the court to pursue in such a case is aptly stated on the kindred subject of malicious prosecution in the opinion of this court rendered by Mr. Justice Harrison, in Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 228, 28 Pac. Rep. 937. Substituting the words "materiality of testimony" for "probable cause," the following language from that opinion is a correct statement of the duty of the court on the trial of a defendant for perjury: "It is necessary for the court in each instance to determine whether the facts that they [the jury] may find from the evidence will or will not establish that issue. Neither is it competent for the court to give to a jury a definition of probable cause, and instruct them to find for or against the defendant, according as they may determine that the facts are with-in or without that definition. Such an instruction is only to leave to them, in another form, the function of determining whether there was probable cause. The court cannot divest itself of its duty to determine this question, however complicated or numerous may be the facts. It must instruct the jury upon this subject in the concrete, and not in the abstract, and must not leave to that body the office of determining the question, but must itself determine it, and direct the jury to find its verdict in accordance with such determination. The court should group in its instructions the facts which the evidence tends to prove and then instruct the jury that, if they found such facts to be established, there was or was not probable cause, as the case may be, and that their verdict must be accordingly." These views do not conflict with People v. Ah Sing, 95 Cal. 659, 30 Pac. Rep. 797. There the manner of establishing the materiality of evidence was not before the court.

¹Code Civil Proc. § 2047, provides that a witness may refresh his memory respecting a fact by anything written by himself at the time such fact occurred, but the writing must be shown to the adverse party, who may cross-examine the witness upon it if he desires.

It is not clear from the record whether or not appellant makes a specific objection to the correctness of said instruction No. 2, given by the court on its own motion; but, as we think said instruction was wrong, although the method pursued in it was right, and as the case may probably be tried again, we think it proper to notice it. It appears that on the said trial of Wong Ark the witness Rohn testified, in substance, that at the time the woman Goot Gue received the mortal wound, he, the witness, was about 140 yards from where she lived; that he heard a police whistle in the neighborhood of where she lived, and immediately proceeded to that place; that he found Goot Gue lying in front of the house, suffering from a gunshot wound; that there were only a few persons there at the time; that another man, named Roper, who was on horse-back, appeared at the scene at about the same time; and that he (Rohn) and Roper carried the woman Goot Gue into the house. Now, the appellant herein, Lem You, testified, among other things, that he heard the shot at the same time, being at another point near the place of shooting; that he, the appellant, and one Ah Tet, also went immediately to the place, and also found the woman lying on the sidewalk, shot; that when he got there there were a good many people present, but that neither Rohn nor Roper had come; that two other Chinamen carried the woman into the house, and that Rohn and Roper did not carry her in. The court, in said instruction No. 2, instructed the jury, in substance, that said testimony of the appellant was material; and in this we think that the court erred, at least upon the state of the evidence as it then appeared. There was no conflict of testimony and no issue as to the fact that the woman Goot Gue was found lying in front of the house, wounded. All the witnesses swore to that fact, and there was no controversy about it. Under those circumstances, we do not think it was material to know who carried her into the house; nor is the latter fact connected in any way with anything that was material. If the witness Rohn had given further testimony about something that was material, then the contradiction by appellant of his statement that he carried the woman into the house might have been material, for it might have affected his credibility, and lessened the weight of the additional material evidence. But the record does not show that at the first trial of Wong Ark the witness Rohn testified to any other fact material in the case, and the testimony of the appellant must have been material at the time when it was given.

It may be well also to notice the third instruction given by the court of its own motion. It seems that the appellant testified that when he approached the woman on the sidewalk he asked her who shot her, and she replied that she did not know; and it appears further that the witness Bevan testified that on the next day, about 11 o'clock A. M., the said Goot Gue told him, in substance, that Wong Ark killed her. The court told the jury that the testimony of the appellant as to what Goot Gue told him was material, if the jury believed that the statement made the next day by her to Bevan was a dying declaration; at least that is the way we construe the instruction. If the statement of Goot Gue, made to Bevan, was made under such circumstances that it was admissible as a dying declaration, then said testimony of defendant was probably material, because it might have affected in some degree the truth of the statement made by Bevan; but the court should have more particularly and clearly determined for itself whether or not the said statement, made to Bevan, was a dying declaration.

3. We think the court erred in refusing to allow appellant to ask of the witness Ah Lung, on cross-examination, the question: "Who took you up to the district attorney's office?" although this error may not be of great importance. The said Ah Lung had testified that he was present, and saw Wong Ark shoot Goot Gue; that he was not a witness on the first trial of Wong Ark, and had told no person what he knew about the shooting until he was picked up on the street during the second trial of Wong Ark, and taken to the district attorney's office. This conduct of the witness was rather suspicious; and, for the purpose of showing how he came at so late a time to tell what he knew about the case, we think it was not improper to ask him upon whose suggestion he went to see the district attorney. The record does not disclose any other error, and we do not deem it necessary to discuss the other points made by appellant. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 771)

SAN BERNARDINO NAT. BANK v. ANDRESON et al. (No. 19,002.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1893.)

NOTES SIGNED AS OFFICERS OF CORPORATION—
PERSONAL LIABILITY—ACTION—PLEADING.

1. Where defendants sign a note with their individual names, adding thereto "president" and "secretary," respectively, in which note they promise to pay plaintiff bank a certain amount, and there is nothing on the face of the note to indicate a principal back of them, they are personally bound, and cannot set up a defense that they executed the note as officers of a corporation, that the loan which the note was given to secure was made to such corporation, and that the intention of both parties was that it should bind the corporation, and not defendants.

2. The fact that a resolution of the corporation, with the corporate seal thereon, authorizing defendants to make the loan and execute the note in the name of, and as the note of, the corporation, was attached to the note, was without effect, as such attachment did not make the resolution a part of the note.

3. By failing to verify their answer, where a copy of the note was set out in the complaint, defendants admitted, not only the genuineness, but also the due execution, of the note.

4. A cross-complaint setting up the facts in regard to the execution of the note, and praying that the corporation be made defendant, and that the note be reformed so as to make it the note of the corporation, could not be sustained; for, if a proceeding for reformation could be maintained by plaintiff, it could not by defendants, whose only interest in reforming the contract was to relieve themselves from liability thereon, and to show it was not their contract, but that of the corporation, which they cannot be allowed to do.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by the San Bernardino National Bank against John Anderson and J. A. Crawford to recover on a promissory note. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Rowell and E. E. Rowell, for appellants. Curtis, Oster & Curtis, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The complaint is in the ordinary form, upon a promissory note, which is set out, and is as follows: "San Bernardino, Cal., July 16, 1888. $2,000. On August 16, 1888, at three o'clock P. M. of that day, (no grace,) for value received, in gold coin of the government of the United States, we promise to pay to the order of San Bernardino National Bank, of San Bernardino, two thousand dollars, with interest from date at the rate of one per cent. per month until paid, payable monthly; both principal and interest payable in like gold coin. John Anderson, President. J. A. Crawford, Secretary." The defendants answered, setting up two separate defenses. The first avers that the note was without consideration. The finding to the effect that there was sufficient consideration is fully sustained by the evidence.

The second defense was stricken out on motion of plaintiff, and this ruling is assigned as error. In this defense it is averred that the defendants, at the time of the execution of the note, were, and for a long time prior thereto had been, respectively, the president and secretary of the San Bernardino Fruit Company, a corporation, of which facts plaintiff had full knowledge; that, prior to the making of the note, plaintiff had agreed with the corporation to loan to it $2,000; that the money was so loaned and delivered to the corporation, and the note in suit was given to secure it, and for no other purpose; that plaintiff and its officers well knew the facts, and that the note was intended as and for the note of the corporation, and not as the individual note of the defendants, and that it was intended to bind the corporation and not the defendants, and was received by plaintiff as the note of the corporation; that the corporation had duly authorized, by resolution, the making of the loan, and these defendants to execute the note in the name of, and as the note of, the corporation, as plaintiff well knew, and that "there was attached to said note, as part thereof, a copy of said resolution, and that plaintiff received said note with such copy of said resolution attached thereto, which said resolution showed that defendants had been authorized by said company to make said note as the corporate note of said company, and not otherwise; and defendants further allege that said note bore the impress of the corporate seal of said company, and was so received by plaintiff, which corporate seal disclosed the corporate name and capacity of said San Bernardino Fruit Company."

The case of Hobson v. Hassett, 76 Cal. 203, 18 Pac. Rep. 320, would seem to be on all fours with this. It was as manifest in that case as here that the loan was to the corporation; that the defendant did not intend to bind himself personally, but did intend to bind the corporation; and that all these facts were known to the payee. There, as here, the action was between the original parties to the note. In that case, also, as in this, there was nothing on the face of the note to indicate that there was a principal back of the defendant. The signature was the same as here, and it was held that the defendant was personally bound, and could not show a contract differing from that which he had executed. The fact that the resolution of the company, with the corporate seal, was attached to the note, did not make that document a part of the note. Besides, by failing to verify their answer, since a copy of the note was set out in the complaint, the defendants admitted, not only the genuineness, but the due execution, of it. Section 447, Code Civil Proc.; Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 473.

There was also a cross-complaint, to which plaintiff demurred. The demurrer was sustained, and defendants did not amend. It set up pretty much the same facts which were stated in the second defense, as above recited; prayed that the San Bernardino Fruit Company be brought in, and made a defendant, and that the note be reformed so as to make it the note of the San Bernardino Fruit Company. This is on the theory that the execution of the note by the defendants as their individual note was a mistake. Conceding that such a proceeding could be maintained by plaintiff, it is plain that it cannot be done by these defendants. This would not be a reformation of an instrument which had been executed by the corporation. It would be to compel the corporation to execute a contract to which it is now not a party, on the ground that the corporation intended to execute it, and plaintiff received the note believing that it had done so. The only interest defendants have in reforming the contract is to be relieved from it themselves; that is, to have it show that it was not executed by them, was not their contract, but was the contract of the corporation. No authority for such a proceeding is cited, and I know of none. This would allow them to do indirectly that which it is held in Hobson v. Hassett they cannot do, to wit, to show by parol that they are not liable on the note as parties thereto.

The other alleged errors are disposed of by this conclusion. I advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(97 Cal. 254)

MILLS v. LA VERNE LAND CO. et al.
(No. 19,037.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1893.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—ASSIGNMENT OF RIGHT.

Code Civil Proc. § 1183, provides that "all persons, and laborers of every class, performing labor upon, or furnishing materials to be used in the construction" of, a building, may have a lien thereon for such services or materials; and section 1187 provides that such persons shall themselves file a claim for record, stating the character of the labor or materials which they themselves furnished for the building. Held, that the right to assert such a lien is a personal right, for the laborer's own protection, and cannot be assigned.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by J. S. Mills against the La Verne Land Company and others to enforce an alleged mechanic's lien. From a judgment for defendant, entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. G. Rossiter, for appellant. W. S. Wright, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to enforce an asserted lien under the mechanics' lien law. The court below sustained a general demurrer to the complaint, and judgment was rendered for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. The averments of the complaint are, in brief, that the La Verne Company, defendant, was indebted to Meek & Benton in the sum of $700 for labor and materials furnished by them for and in the construction of a building on land of said company; that said Meek & Benton, by a written instrument, assigned the indebtedness to plaintiff, and also assigned, if the thing could be done, all their "right of lien" against said building and land; and that afterwards, and within the statutory time, plaintiff, as assignee, formally filed in the recorder's office a notice of claim of lien against said property for the money due said Meek & Benton for the said labor and materials which they had furnished as aforesaid. And we think that the demurrer was properly sustained. The question presented is not whether a lien for work or materials can be assigned, or would pass under an assignment of the debt secured, but whether a laborer or material man can assign his mere right to assert and create a lien,—by complying with statutory provisions, clothe the assignee with the power to create the lien for himself,—and we are satisfied that he cannot. This question has never been heretofore determined in this state. In Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205, 16 Pac. Rep. 890, referred to by appellant, the only question involved was whether in an action brought by the assignee of "a lien," there should be an averment that the assignment was in writing. The case in our Reports which comes the nearest to touching the principle involved is Godeffroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 489, where it was held that "one who advances money as a loan, though expressly for the payment of materials and labor devoted to the structure of a building, can have no claim to the benefit of the mechanic's lien law. The decisions on the point in other states are no doubt somewhat conflicting, although the conflict may be explained to some extent by the different provisions of various statutes; some showing more clearly than others that only a personal right was intended to be conferred. But the weight of authority is clearly to the point that the said right cannot be assigned. In Rollin v. Cross, 45 N. Y. 771, the court said: "The lien under statutes of this character is, in general, a personal right given to the mechanic, material man, and laborer for his own protection, and the right to create it cannot be assigned or transferred to another. The statute under which the plaintiff claims does not authorize a lien to be filed by the assignee of a debt for work performed under a building contract." In Fitzgerald v. Trustees, Mich. N. P. 243, note, the court holds that "the lien is personal to the contractor or subcontractor, and is assignable." In Caldwell v. Lawrence, 10 Wis. 331, it is held that "the lien of the mechanic, lumberman, etc., for work and materials, is a personal right, and cannot be transferred or assigned so as to enable the assignee to prosecute the claim in his own name, and avail himself of the benefit of the lien given against the building." In Iowa, the courts having decided that such right was not assignable, the legislature enacted that "the mechanics' liens are assignable, and shall follow the assignment of the debt. But the court, in Brown v. Smith, 55 Iowa, 31, 7 N. W. Rep. 401, held that the statute referred "to the lien perfected by the filing of a claim therefor, and not to the inchoate right to a lien," and, further, as follows: "The mere performance of the requisite labor is not sufficient. His right to a lien cannot be said to exist until he has complied with the statute. When he does so, it will be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that he has a lien which may be assigned, and that an assignment of the account carries with it the lien. The language of the statute is that the lien is assignable, and not the mere right, which follows the performance of labor, and which depends for its existence on the volition of the subcontractor." In the late case of Dexter, Horton & Co. v. Sparkman, 2 Wash. 168, 25 Pac. Rep. 1070, the court, speaking of a claim filed by an assignee, said: "This he could not do. The lien given by statute is personal to the laborer. It does not run with the chose in action." There are many other decisions in various states to the same point, but the foregoing citations are sufficient to show the general drift of judicial opinion on the subject. In Phillips on Mechanics' Liens decisions on both sides of the question are referred to, and we think that the true rule is expressed in the following paragraph from section 54 of said work: "Where, throughout the whole act, the right of lien, and the right to enforce it, appear to be confined to the contractor, laborer, or persons furnishing materials, and where in no instance is the assignee of such claim recognized in connection with the creation or enforcing of the lien, there can be no construction given to such a statute other than as conferring a mere personal right on the contractor laborer, etc., and not on his assignee." And, under our statutory provisions on the subject, no right of lien is given to an assignee, or to any person other than those mentioned in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the persons there mentioned include only "mechanics, material men, contractors, subcontractors, artisans, architects, machinists, builders, miners, and all persons and laborers, of every class, performing labor upon, or furnishing materials to be used in the construction," etc.

Appellant invokes the rule that the assignment of a debt carries with it the lien by which it is secured. But, in the first place, that rule is not of universal application. It does not apply, for instance, to vendors' liens, or to the many liens which accrue to various kinds of bailees. And, in the second place, at the time of the assignment of the debt to plaintiff in the case at bar, there was no lien securing it in existence. The assignors had merely a personal right to create a lien by complying with the statute. But the statute nowhere confers such right upon an assignee. It would be impossible for an assignee to comply with the statute; for the Code, § 1187, provides that the contractor or other person mentioned in section 1183 must himself file a claim for record, stating the character of the labor or materials which he himself furnished for the building. And this shows clearly that the legislature was providing a lien only for a contractor, laborer, or material man. It is urged that it would be a construction beneficial to the laborer to hold that he could sell or raise money upon his mere personal, inchoate right to procure a lien; but the legislature may not have thought that it would be advantageous to a laborer (for whose benefit the law was originally passed) to allow him the privilege of frittering away his wages at ruinous discount to money lenders and speculators. At all events, a court can neither make nor amend a statute. The law must be enforced as we find it enacted.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: De HAVEN, J.; HARRISON, J.

97 Cal. 253

GARIBALDI v. GARR. (No. 19,079.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1893.)

DISMISSAL OF APPEAL—EFFECT.

Where a former appeal has been dismissed for failure to file a transcript within the prescribed time, and the order of dismissal did not expressly provide that it was made without prejudice to the right to take another appeal, such dismissal was, under Code Civil Proc. § 955, in effect an affirmation of the judgment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by one Garr against one Garibaldi. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

A. B. Hotchkiss, for appellant. James McLachan, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant. This is the second appeal plaintiff has taken from the same judgment. The former appeal was dismissed by this court on April 12, 1892, for failure to file the transcript within the time prescribed by rule No. 2; and the order of dismissal did not expressly provide that it was made without prejudice to the right of defendant to take another appeal. This being so, the dismissal of the former appeal was in its effect an affirmation of the judgment. Section 955, Code Civil Proc. The order submitting this case for decision upon the merits will be set aside, and the motion of respondent to dismiss the appeal granted. Appeal dismissed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.

(97 Cal. xviii; 3 Cal. Unrep. 717)

ROUSSET v. REAY et al. (No. 14,368.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 3, 1893.)

On petition for a rehearing. Denied.

For former report, see 31 Pac. Rep. 900.

PER CURIAM. Ordered: The petition for a rehearing herein is denied, but the judgment of the department is hereby modified so as to read as follows: "The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings."

(97 Cal. 259)

HAYNE v. HERMANN. (No. 19,099.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1893.)

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS — CONVEYANCE PROCURED BY UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

1. Civil Code 1886, § 153, provides that transactions between husband and wife shall be governed by the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other. Section 1575 defines undue influence as the use by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another of such confidence to obtain an unfair advantage over him. Held, that a conveyance of land from the husband to the wife, with an oral agreement that it was to be held in trust by her, would be presumed to have been obtained by undue influence whenever the trust should be violated. Brison v. Brison, 17 Pac. Rep. 689, 75 Cal. 525, and 27 Pac. Rep. 186, 90 Cal. 323, followed.

2. The declarations of the trustee as to the character in which she held the property are admissible in an action against her by the cestui que trust, to corroborate the latter's witnesses.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Martha H. Hayne against Angelica Hermann to enforce a trust in property, and for a conveyance thereof. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. S. Seaman and Louis Luckel, for appellant. A. G. Hinckley and Guthrie & Guthrie, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action to obtain a judgment that certain property is held by the defendant in trust for the plaintiff, and for a conveyance thereof. E. C. Hermann, the father of the plaintiff, and the husband of the defendant, in his lifetime caused a certain tract of land in Los Angeles county, of which he was the owner, to be conveyed to the defendant, and also certain moneys and other personal property to be paid and delivered to her. The court finds "that said money was paid to defendant, and note and deed delivered to her, upon the express understanding and agreement that she would hold the same in trust for said E. C. Hermann during his life, and for plaintiff and herself in equal proportions after his death, and said defendant accepted said money, note, and deed to hold in trust, as aforesaid, and without having paid any consideration therefor." This finding is fully sustained by the evidence. Von der Kühlen, who held the property in trust for Hermann, and who made the conveyance to the defendant, testified: "On the direction of Mr. Hermann, she was to hold it in trust for Mr. Hermann while he lived, and then for plaintiff and defendant equally. That is what was said at the making of the arrangement, that she should keep it in that way, and Mrs. Hermann consented." The plaintiff herself testified: "My father directed the deed to be made to my mother by Mr. Von der Kühlen. It was said by my father and mother at the time as to making the deed that way that it was to be made in my mother's name for my father in trust, and after a while to be divided up in equal proportions. My mother agreed to that. Mother and father said that it was to be held in trust for him, and after his death it was to be divided in equal parts between me and my mother."

* * * My father said to me and my mother that she was to take the deed in her name in trust for the family. * * * My father said the property was to be for us both, and said that it was to be conveyed to my mother in trust. I heard him use the word 'trust.' Other testimony to the same effect was given by these witnesses, and the finding of the court in conformity therewith must be sustained.

It is objected, however, on the part of the appellant, that a trust in lands cannot be created by parol, and that, inasmuch as there was no note or memorandum in writing expressing the trust, no trust was created, and that she is entitled to retain the property as her own estate. Constructive trusts, however, or such as arise by operation of law, are expressly excepted from the requirement that a trust can only be created by an instrument in writing, (Civil Code, § 852;) and whenever one person acquires from another the title to real estate by a fraud, actual or constructive, practiced upon that other, a constructive trust is created, which a court of equity will fasten upon the title in his hands. There are certain relations in which such confidence and trust exists between the parties that any dealings between them wherein one obtains an advantage from the other raises the presumption of fraud, and casts upon him the burden of executing the trust which the law imposes upon him. One of these relations is that of husband and wife, and their transactions with each other respecting property are declared by Civil Code, § 158, to be "subject to the general rules which control the action of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, as defined by the title on 'Trusts.'" Fraud also is presumed whenever one party gains an advantage to himself through any undue influence exercised by him over the party from whom the advantage is derived; and section 1575 of the Civil Code declares that undue influence consists "in the use by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another, or who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over him."

In Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 336, 27 Pac. Rep. 186, it is said: "The influence which the law presumes to have been exercised by one spouse over the other is not an influence caused by any act of persuasion or importunity, but is that influence which is superinduced by the relation between them, and generated in the mind of the one by the confiding trust which he has in the devotion and fidelity of the other. Such influence the law presumes to have been undue whenever this confidence is subsequently violated or abused." The complaint in the present case alleges, and it is not denied in the answer, "that the said E. C. Hermann reposed great faith and confidence in his wife, the defendant herein, and, believing that she would faithfully execute the trust created in her, directed Von der Kuhlen" to make the conveyance and deliver the property; and the court finds that the deed was made and the property delivered to her upon the aforesaid trusts, "on account of the confidence that said E. C. Hermann reposed in his said wife, the defendant, that she would take and hold the said property in trust for him during his lifetime, and in trust for the plaintiff and defendant thereafter." The facts in this case are not distinguishable in principle from those presented in the cases of Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. Rep. 689; Id., 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. Rep. 186; Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 26 Pac. Rep. 599; and Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 41, 27 Pac. Rep. 521; and upon the authority of those cases the action of the court below must be sustained.

The claim that the conveyance was made to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of Hermann is not sustained by the record. No issue of that character was presented by the pleadings, and there was no proof of any debts against Hermann that it could have defeated. See Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 47, 27 Pac. Rep. 521.

The court did not err in receiving the testimony of certain witnesses concerning the declarations by the defendant of the character in which she held the property. This testimony was not competent for the purpose of proving the trust, but was admissible in corroboration of the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 263

GIANT POWDER CO. v. SAN DIEGO FLUME CO. (No. 19,018.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1893.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—MATERIAL MEN.

Code Civil Proc. § 1183, provides that, where a building contract is void because it is not recorded, the materials furnished shall be deemed to have been furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and the material man shall have a lien for the value thereof. Held that, where materials used in the construction of a flume were furnished before the contract for the construction thereof was recorded, the material man is entitled to a lien against the flume for the value thereof.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by the Giant Powder Company against the San Diego Flume Company and another to enforce a material man's lien. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant flume company appeals. Affirmed.

Shaw & Holland, for appellant. J. F. Cowdery and Oscar Trippet, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is from a judgment rendered in the court below in favor of the plaintiff. The action was brought to obtain judgment against a contractor, by a material man, for materials furnished in the construction of certain works to be used to support the flume of one of the defendants and appellant, and against the flume company, to subject the structure in which the materials were used to the statutory lien of the plaintiff. The case has been twice before, on appeal, in the supreme court. 78 Cal. 193, 20 Pac. Rep. 419; 88 Cal. 20, 25 Pac. Rep. 976. The point made for the reversal of the judgment, on the judgment roll alone, now, is that the judgment is not supported by the findings; the argument appearing to be that it was held on the last appeal, which is the law of the case, that there was no valid contract existing between one John-drew, the contractor, and the flume company, until the contract was filed for record on the 6th of June, 1887, and that as a consequence there was no lien in favor of the material man against the structure, which had been accepted by the flume company from the contractor, for materials furnished before the filing of the contract, although the materials were used in the construction of the accepted work or structure. The opinion filed at that time is not, in our judgment, susceptible of any such construction. The pivotal point in that case was whether or not the structure was completed, by acceptance on the part of the flume company, when abandoned to it by the contractor; and thereby depended the determination of the question as to whether or not the filing of the notice of lien of the plaintiff was premature, under section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended March 15, 1887. That part of the section which makes the acceptance of the structure or improvement conclusive evidence of completion has reference to cases where there is a valid contract between contractor and owner of the structure, improvement, or building; and the language of the opinion, which it is erroneously claimed by appellant declares that the payment of the value of the materials furnished before the contract was filed for record cannot be enforced as a lien, must be read with reference to the precise matter which was being discussed in the opinion,—that is, whether, admitting a valid contract to have existed by virtue of the filing thereof for record on the 6th of June, 1887, the notice of lien was premature, or not. There was no need to determine whether a lien could be enforced for materials furnished, when no valid contract existed; that is, before the contract was filed for record. And the decision only goes to the extent, on that head, of determining that a lien for those materials furnished, "by virtue of the contract," i. e. the filing of the contract, could be enforced if the notice was properly filed for record. And, after that matter is disposed of, there follow expressions, merely, which lead up to the consideration of the real point in the case which was to be decided; and then the writer of the opinion proceeds to dispose of the mooted question in favor of the proposition that the notice was a proper one, because the date of the acceptance of the structure, under the circumstances of the case, was the date of its completion, and the plaintiff, having filed a notice of lien within 30 days after such completion, did not proceed prematurely.

But, as to the enforcement of the lien for the value of the materials furnished before there was any valid contract between the contractor and the owner, the findings must be construed with reference to the case as it is now presented, uncontrolled by anything said in the former opinion in 88 Cal. 26, 25 Pac. Rep. 976. The findings now show a completion of the structure by its acceptance, and that a notice of lien was filed in due and proper time; and they also show that the materials and the value thereof, claimed by the plaintiff to have been furnished to the contractor, and used in the completion of the structure, were so furnished and used. It was said by the supreme court in Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 170, 22 Pac. Rep. 509, where a contract was void because not filed for record, and where a material man sought to enforce his lien: "The extent of the material man's recovery is not measured by the terms of the contract. On the contrary, the statute provides in express terms that where the contract is not recorded the material man shall have a lien for the value thereof. In case the contract is not recorded the statute, and not the contract, measures the extent of his recovery." The statute alluded to above (section 1183, Code Civil Proc.) provides, where an attempted contract is void for nonfiling for record, that "in such case the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof."

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

97 Cal. 266

McDONALD v. DREW et al. (No. 14,916.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1893.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION—PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Defendant owned lot 7, adjacent to plaintiff's lot 4, and for more than five years the division fence existed so as to place a narrow strip of lot 4 on defendant's side. Held, where during all the time plaintiff's property was assessed to him as "lot 4," and he paid all taxes on such assessment, and defendant's property was assessed to defendant simply as "lot 7," without mention of the fence, and he paid all taxes on such assessments, that defendant's possession of the strip of lot 4 on his side of the fence was not adverse; Code Civil Proc.

§ 325, providing that adverse possession cannot be established without payment by claimant of all taxes on the land in question during the alleged adverse possession. Webb v. Clark, 2 Pac. Rep. 747, 65 Cal. 56; Ross v. Evans, 4 Pac. Rep. 443, 65 Cal. 439; McNoble v. Justiniano, 11 Pac. Rep. 742, 70 Cal. 395,—followed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by Mary A. McDonald against H. L. Drew and others. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rolfe & Freeman and Paris & Fox, for appellant. Goodcell & Leonard, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. Action in the nature of ejectment to recover possession of a narrow strip of land, about 18 inches wide and 100 feet in length, being part of lot No. 4, block 20, of the city of San Bernardino, the east side of which strip adjoins the east boundary line of said lot. The defendant pleaded title by prescription through an adverse possession during a period of five years. The court found the facts as follows: "For the purpose of this action the following are stipulated as facts: (1) That at the time of the commencement of this action the plaintiff was, and for twenty years next prior thereto she and her grantors had been, the owners of lot 4, in block 20, of the city of San Bernardino, the land described in the complaint, except in so far as such ownership may have been impaired by adverse possession of the defendants and their grantors as to the strip of land described and claimed in the answer; (2) that during all of said times the plaintiff and her grantors have been in the actual and exclusive possession of said lot four as owners, except in so far as such possession may have been ousted or withheld by the defendants and their grantors as to said strip; (3) that J. W. Satterwhite was such owner and possessor at the time of the construction of the fence mentioned in the answer, and referred to as a division fence, and the plaintiff's title is derived through him; (4) that during all of said times the defendants and their grantors were the owners of the west half of lot 7, in said block 20, lying east of and adjoining said lot four; (5) that, at the time of the construction of the fence mentioned, Byron Waters was the owner of the said west half of lot 7, and in the actual possession thereof, and the defendants' title is derived through him, but this does not admit any possession, or right of possession, as to said strip of land; (6) that during all of said times the said lot 4 has been assessed to the plaintiff and her grantors, described simply as lot 4, in said block 20, without mention of said fence or reference thereto, and the plaintiff and her grantors have paid all taxes upon such assessments; (7) that during all said times the said west one half of lot 7 has been assessed to the defendants and their grantors simply as to the west one half of lot 7 of said block, without mention of said fence or reference thereto, and the defendants and their grantors have paid all taxes upon such assessments. Rolfe & Freeman and Paris & Fox, for Plaintiff. Goodcell & Leonard, Attorneys for Defendants. And in addition to said stipulation the court finds the following facts from the evidence: (8) That the east line of lot 4, block 20, of the city of San Bernardino, referred to in the findings and the aforesaid stipulation, commences at a point on Court street, in said city, 22 inches west from the southwest corner of the brick building on the north side of said Court street known as the 'Courier Office,' running thence due north about 130 feet to the northeast corner of said lot 4, and the same line constitutes the west line of lot 7 of said block. (9) That ever since the spring of the year 1881, being more than five years before the commencement of this action, the defendants and their grantors and predecessors in interest were in the actual, uninterrupted, open, and exclusive possession of the strip of land along and upon the east side of said lot 4 referred to in the complaint, said strip being about one foot and a half wide at the south end, and extending north 100 feet from the north side of said Court street, and gradually narrowing northward a few inches, to wit, to about one foot in width at the north end of said 100 feet; such possession being under claim as of right, and adverse to plaintiff and her predecessors in interest and all the world, except as such adverse possession may be affected by the nonpayment of taxes by the defendants or their predecessors, on any of said lot 4, as shown by the aforesaid stipulation." Upon the facts found the court adjudged that the defendants were the owners of the land in question. Plaintiff brings this appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll, and contends that upon the findings of fact the judgment should have been in her favor; and so it appears to me.

The controversy is reduced to the question of law, as to whether the possession of the defendants could have been adverse without payment by them of all taxes which had been levied and assessed upon the land in question during the five-years period of the alleged adverse possession, as required by section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This question has been answered negatively by this court in several cases.—Webb v. Clark, 65 Cal. 56, 2 Pac. Rep. 747; Ross v. Evans, 65 Cal. 439, 4 Pac. Rep. 443; McNoble v. Justiniano, 70 Cal. 395, 11 Pac. Rep. 742; see, also, Allen v. Reed, 51 Cal. 362,—and, as all the arguments urged here by counsel for respondent seem to have been considered and answered in the cases cited, it is unnecessary to reconsider them on this appeal. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the lower court be directed to render judgment on the findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the lower court is directed to render judgment on the findings of fact in favor of plaintiff.

McFARLAND, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment because it does not appear in the findings either that the co-terminous owners had agreed upon the fence as the line between lots 4 and 7, or that respondents had claimed it as such line. All that appears is that respondents, in addition to the west half of lot 7, also held by adverse possession a part of lot 4 as such; and, as they had paid no taxes on the part of lot 4 in their adverse possession, they could not invoke the statute of limitations. But I do not think that the provision of section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, about the payment of taxes, applies to a small strip along a boundary line, when the adverse holder claims that the general description in his title deed carries him to the line to which he had held adversely by actual possession, and he has paid the taxes on the land thus described in his deed.

97 Cal. 258

TIBBETTS et al. v. RIVERSIDE BANKING CO. et al. (No. 19,154.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1893.)

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — SETTLEMENT — MANDAMUS.

Code Civil Proc. § 652, provides that, "if a judge in any case refuse to allow an exception in accordance with the facts, the party desiring the bill settled may apply by petition to the supreme court to prove the same." Held, that where a judge refuses to settle a statement of the case and bill of exceptions, prepared by an appellant, and served on the opposite party, or any bill of exceptions according to the facts of the case, the proceedings must be by mandamus to compel the judge to settle the bill or statement.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by L. C. Tibbetts and another against the Riverside Banking Company and another. On a motion for a new trial the judge of the superior court refused to sign the statement of the case and bill of exceptions offered by plaintiffs, or any other bill of exceptions. Plaintiffs petition the supreme court to settle the statement and bill. Petition denied.

L. C. Tibbetts and A. B. Paris, for petitioners. H. C. Hibbard, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiffs have filed a petition here purporting to be made under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Petitioners say that they prepared a statement of the case and bill of exceptions, served it on counsel for defendants, and presented it to the judge of the superior court for settlement; "that said judge refused to sign said bill of exceptions, and still refuses to sign said bill, or any bill, according to the facts of the case." Therefore they pray "that this court may sign and seal said bill of exceptions, as provided for under section 652, Code Civil Proc."¹ Petitioners have mistaken the provisions of said section. That section only provides that where, upon the settlement of a bill of exceptions or statement, the judge refuses to allow an exception, the party may petition this court to prove said exception; but in this case petitioners merely show that they presented quite a lengthy statement on motion for new trial to the judge of the superior court, and that he refused to sign it, or any other bill of exceptions. In such case the judge can be compelled by mandamus to settle the bill or statement; but this court has not the power, nor is it its duty, to take the place of the judge of the lower court, and perform the duty of settling the statement.

¹Code Civil Proc. § 652, provides that, "if a judge in any case refuse to allow an exception in accordance with the facts, the party desiring the bill settled may apply by petition to the supreme court to prove the same."

The petition is denied.

enforce the assessment, though the contract for the street work did not provide for those bulkheads, since defendant, not having appealed to the city council from the action of the superintendent, as provided by Act March 18, 1885, will be deemed to have waived his right to make such objection.

7. Act March 18, 1885, providing for work on streets, does not require a property owner to appeal to the city council in order to obtain relief from an assessment under a void contract, or from one which includes the cost of work which the council would not itself have jurisdiction to contract for, because not embraced in the resolution of intention.

8. Where, in an assessment made under a valid contract for street improvement, there is erroneously included the cost of work not falling within the provisions of the contract, though reasonably related thereto, and which might have been included in the contract without rendering it void, a failure by a property owner to appeal to the city council for redress is a waiver of the right to make the objection in an action brought to enforce the assessment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. Dillard, Judge.

Action by one Perine against one Forbush upon a street assessment. From a judgment for plaintiff, entered upon an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. B. Canfield and B. F. Thomas, for appellant. J. J. Perkins and Wright & Day, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This action is upon a street assessment, and it appears from the complaint that the contract which is the foundation of the assessment was not entered into within 15 days after the first posting of the notice of its award to plaintiff. Section 5 of the act of March 18, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 147,) contains the following: "But if said original bidder neglects, fails, or refuses for fifteen days after the first posting of notice of the award to enter into the contract, then the city council shall again advertise for proposals, as in the first instance, and award the contract for said work to the then lowest responsible bidder." This provision of the law is not directory, as claimed by plaintiff. It is true that statutes which fix the time within which official acts are to be performed are often held to be merely directory as to the time so fixed, but such a statute is never so construed when its language indicates the contrary intention; as, for instance, when the statute attaches a consequence to the failure to perform the act within the time limited. "In such a case," said Mr. Justice Cope, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Shaw v. Randall, 15 Cal. 385, "the consequence can be avoided only by compliance with the statute." The provision of the statute above quoted, which fixes the time within which contracts for street improvements shall be executed, is mandatory, and when the bidder has neglected or refused for 15 days to enter into the contract awarded him the city council must again advertise for proposals, and the superintendent of streets is without power to relieve him from the consequence of his neglect or refusal to complete the contract within the time specified. As al-

97 Cal. 305

PERINE v. FORBUSH. (No. 14,867.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1893.)

STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ACTION TO ENFORCE ASSESSMENT—COMPLAINT—DEFENSES—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

1. Where, in an action to enforce a street assessment, it appears from the complaint that the contract on which the assessment was based was not entered into within 15 days after the posting of the notice of its award, as provided by St. 1885, p. 147, and there is no averment that this delay was not caused by the fault of plaintiff, the complaint is demurrable as failing to state a cause of action.

2. Where a contract for certain street work was void because it was not made within the time prescribed by St. 1885, p. 147, the fact that the property owner did not appeal to the city council from the action of the superintendent of streets in entering into such contract will not validate an assessment made thereon.

3. In an action to enforce a street assessment it is no defense that the contract for the work contained a provision that there should be no assessment on the adjoining property for improving that part of the street occupied by a street-railway company, but that the company should pay therefor.

4. In an action to enforce a street assessment it is no defense that the property against which the lien is sought to be enforced is defendant's homestead.

5. In an action to enforce a street assessment it is no defense that plaintiff agreed orally to enter into a written contract by which plaintiff was to accept from defendant a conveyance of certain land in payment of the assessment against defendant's property, and then refused to enter into such contract.

6. An objection that a street assessment is void because the superintendent of streets included in the assessment the cost of certain bulkheads, will not be sustained in an action to ready stated, the complaint alleges that the contract for the street work was made more than 15 days after the first posting of notice of its award to plaintiff, but there is no averment therein that the delay in entering into the contract was not caused by the fault of plaintiff, and, in the absence of such an allegation, the complaint does not state a cause of action, as it fails to show any authority in the superintendent of streets to make the contract after the expiration of the 15 days named in the statute. The facts showing such authority cannot be left to inference, but they must be alleged. It is incumbent upon the plaintiff in this class of actions to show in his complaint, "by either special or general averment of the character permitted by our statute, that the various provisions of the statute under which it is sought to charge the defendant were complied with, for, unless they have been complied with, the defendant is not liable." Himmelmann v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441. It is claimed, however, by plaintiff that the assessment cannot be held invalid because of the act of the superintendent in entering into the contract after the time fixed in the statute, as the defendant failed to appeal to the city council from such action of the superintendent, as provided for by section 11 of the act of March 18, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 147;) but, the contract being void, it was not incumbent upon the defendant to appeal to the city council. This was so held in Brock v. Luning, 89 Cal. 316, 26 Pac. Rep. 972, construing a similar section found in the act of April 1, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 894.) The court in that case said: "As the action of the superintendent of streets was void, it could not become valid by the failure of the property owner to appeal, under section 12 of the law of 1872, to the board of supervisors. He could not appeal unless 'aggrieved.' Such owner was not aggrieved, for the contract made was void, and affected his rights no more than would a void judgment." And in the case of McBean v. Redick, 96 Cal. 191, 31 Pac. Rep. 7, it was also held that the property owner is not required to appeal to the board of trustees or city council, when the assessment is based upon an invalid contract. It follows from what we have said that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained.

It is possible, however, that the plaintiff may be able to obviate this objection to the complaint by its amendment, and it is therefore necessary to pass upon other questions which have been argued, which we now proceed to do. There was no error in sustaining the demurrer to the answer of defendant. The fact that there was a provision in the contract to the effect that there should be no assessment upon the adjoining property for improving that part of the street occupied by the railway company, and that plaintiff would accept as payment for all work done thereunder "the warrant of said superintendent as the same may be issued by him, * * * and also the amount which may be paid by any person holding a franchise for any operation of a street railroad throughout State street," did not render the contract void. The contract was to do all the work specified in the resolution of intention, and the agreement of plaintiff to accept payment from the street railway company for a portion of the work was one which he had a right to make, and which could not possibly injure the defendant, or any property owner.

Nor is it any defense to this action that the property against which it is sought to enforce the lien constitutes the homestead of defendant. The cost of making improvements like those embraced in this contract is as much a charge against the homestead as against any other property fronting upon such improvements.

The third separate defense set out in the answer is equally without merit. The verbal agreement of plaintiff to enter into a written contract with defendant by which plaintiff was to accept from defendant a conveyance of certain land in payment of the amount which should be assessed against the property of defendant for the street improvements, and to pay to defendant the balance of the purchase price of said land, and the refusal of plaintiff to complete such written contract after doing the street work, constitute no defense to this action. Nor is the case of defendant strengthened by the averment that, if it had not been for such verbal agreement, he would have commenced an action to enjoin plaintiff from prosecuting the street work under his contract made with the superintendent of streets. As we construe the answer, the alleged agreement upon the part of plaintiff to purchase defendant's land, and in part payment therefor to credit defendant with the amount of the street assessment, was never completed; and it is unnecessary to consider what would have been its effect if it had been reduced to writing, as verbally agreed upon, and defendant had tendered a deed in accordance with its terms.

In making the assessment the superintendent of streets included $444, the cost of 37 bulkheads, which were not named in the plans and specifications attached to the contract, and it is claimed by defendant that the assessment is for this reason void. This contention cannot be sustained. It is true that, as the contract did not provide for constructing these bulkheads, the superintendent of streets ought not to have included their cost in the assessment which he made, but for such erroneous action on his part the only remedy was an appeal to the city council, as provided for in section 11 of the act "to provide for work upon streets * * * within municipalities," approved March 18, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 147.) Such an objection to the assessment could have been corrected by the city council, and the defendant waived his right to now make it by not appealing to that body for its correction. Himmelmann v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 276; Boyle v. Hitchcock, 66 Cal. 129, 4 Pac. Rep. 1143; Fanning v. Leviston, 93 Cal. 186, 28 Pac. Rep. 943; Frick v. Morford, 87 Cal. 579, 25 Pac. Rep. 764. When, however, an assessment includes the cost of work not falling within the general description of that which is referred to in the resolution of intention, or when such work bears no relation whatever to that which is described in the contract, this rule would not apply. But this is not such a case. The construction of the bulkheads was not, so far as appears here, an entire departure from the general plan or scope of the improvement described in the resolution of intention, although mention of them is omitted in the plans and specifications attached to the contract. In such a case, the determination of the superintendent of streets that their construction was necessary in order to fully complete the work called for by the contract, was only an error of judgment, and his action in making an assessment to cover their cost was only a mere error, which it is too late now to correct, and which does not render the assessment wholly void. We do not regard the cases of Dyer v. Chase, 52 Cal. 440, and Donnelly v. Howard, 60 Cal. 291, cited by defendant, as being opposed to our conclusion upon this point, but, on the contrary, they are in harmony with the views here expressed. In each of those cases the assessment and the demand for its payment included the cost of work not authorized by the resolution of intention, although provided for in the contract upon which the assessment was based; and it was held that such assessment could not be enforced as a lien upon the property of the defendant, and that the owner was not required to appeal to the board of supervisors for its correction, or, failing to do so, submit to it as a burden upon his property. We are satisfied that section 11 of the act of March 18, 1885, above referred to, does not require the property owner to appeal to the city council for relief from an assessment based upon a void contract, (McBean v. Redick, 96 Cal. 191, 31 Pac. Rep. 7; Frick v. Morford, 87 Cal. 579, 25 Pac. Rep. 764; Brock v. Luning, 89 Cal. 316, 26 Pac. Rep. 972;) or for relief from an assessment which includes the cost of work which the city council itself would not have had jurisdiction to contract for, because not embraced in the resolution of intention; but when the contract is valid, and the error complained of is only found in the assessment because it was made to cover the cost of work not falling strictly within the provisions of the contract, although reasonably related thereto, and which might have been included in the contract without rendering it void, as not being within the authority conferred by the resolution of intention, the failure to appeal to that body for redress is a waiver of the right to make such objection in the action brought to enforce the assessment.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

97 Cal. 316

LIBBEY v. ELLSWORTH et al. (No. 19,009.) (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1893.)

STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ACTION TO ENFORCE ASSESSMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Under Act March 18, 1885, providing that the superintendent of streets "shall fix the time for the commencement, which shall not be more than 15 days from the date of the contract, and for the completion of the work, under all contracts entered into by him," the complaint in an action to enforce an assessment for street improvements must show that the contract under which the work was done fixed the time for commencement and completion of the work as provided in the statute.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by one Libbey against one Ellsworth and another upon a street assessment. From a judgment for defendants, entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Carlton, for appellant. Julius Lyons, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. The action is upon a street assessment. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and thereupon rendered judgment in favor of defendants. The plaintiff appeals.

We think the demurrer was properly sustained. It appears from the complaint that the contract which is the basis of the assessment sought to be enforced was not entered into between the assignor of plaintiff and the superintendent of streets within 15 days after the first posting of the notice of its award to plaintiff's assignor, the plaintiff alleging that posting of such notice was first made on September 22, 1890, and the contract executed on the 8th day of October following. There is no averment in the complaint that this delay in executing the contract was not caused by the neglect, failure, or refusal of plaintiff's assignor, and we held in the case of Perine v. Forbush, 32 Pac. Rep. 226, (No. 14,867, recently decided,) that such an allegation is necessary in order to state a cause of action in this class of cases, when it also appears from the complaint that the contract was not entered into within 15 days after notice of its award was first posted, and the judgment here must be affirmed upon the authority of that case.

In addition to this, the complaint fails to show that the contract entered into between the superintendent of streets and the assignor of plaintiff fixed any time for the commencement or completion of the work therein provided for. Looking at the contract as stated in the complaint, it is not possible to say whether it was one authorized by the law or not. Section 6 of the act "to provide for work upon streets * * * within municipalities," approved March 18, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 147,) provides that the superintendent of streets "shall fix the time for the commencement, which shall not be more than fifteen days from the date of the contract, and for the completion of the work, under all contracts entered into by him." This requirement of the statute is mandatory, and a contract not in accordance with its terms would be destitute of binding force; and, as the validity of the assessment must depend upon the validity of the contract upon which it is based, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff seeking to enforce the alleged lien of such assessment, to show by his complaint that the contract was one authorized by law. "The complaint must show by either special or general averments of the character permitted by our statute that the various provisions of the statute under which it is sought to charge the defendant were complied with, for, unless they have been complied with, the defendant is not liable." Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441. It is not sufficient to allege generally, as in this case, that the contract entered into with the superintendent of streets was one by which the contractor agreed to do the work named therein in accordance with specifications which are not set out, and under the direction and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets; but it must affirmatively appear from the statement of the contract, whether it is set out in haec verba or according to its legal effect, that it contained everything essential to make it a valid contract under the statute.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFarland, J.

3 Cal. Unrep. 765

DREW v. COLE et al. (No. 19,143.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1893.)

SURFACE WATER — OBSTRUCTING NATURAL FLOW.

Where, from time immemorial, surface water had flowed through well-defined channels, from the adjacent country, upon plaintiff's land, and would still but for the erection by plaintiff of an embankment which diverted the water upon defendants' land, the fact that a change in the conformation of the adjoining country, resulting from its cultivation by strangers, had obliterated the natural channels, and formed new ones, which would cause the water to overflow defendants' lands but for an obstruction erected by strangers many years before such change, will not justify plaintiff in maintaining his embankment, to the injury of defendants.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Petition for injunction by H. L. Drew against Henry Cole and another. Defendants filed a cross bill for affirmative relief. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Willis, Cole & Craig and C. W. C. Rowell, for appellant. Paris & Satterwhite, Rolfe & Freeman, and Harris & Gregg, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The action was brought to enjoin defendants from constructing a bulkhead or embankment by which, it is alleged, certain waters would be turned upon plaintiff's premises, to his injury. Defendants answered, and also filed a cross complaint, seeking affirmative relief against the plaintiff. The findings of the court, upon all the issues, were in favor of defendants. The locus of the controversy is upon a subdivided portion of the San Bernardino ranch, northwesterly from the city of Redlands. Colton avenue runs east and west and California street crosses the avenue at right angles.

The plaintiff's land lies on the north side of Colton avenue, and the land of defendants, Cole and Hicks, on the south side. California street is the east boundary of the land of the plaintiff and of defendant Hicks, and defendant Cole's land adjoins Mrs. Hicks' land on the west. The Adams or La Pierce land, mentioned in the testimony, lies on the south side of Colton avenue, and is separated from Mrs. Hicks' land by California street, and the land of William Curtis, mentioned in the testimony, lies on the west side of California street, and adjoins the land of defendant Hicks on the south. The lands of plaintiff and defendants, Cole and Hicks, are highly cultivated, and planted in orange, lemon, and other fruit trees and vines. The complaint alleges "That to the southeast of plaintiff's premises is a large section of country comprising what is known as the 'Old Barton Ranch' and 'Redlands,' all of which is cultivated and irrigated; and since the cultivation and irrigation of the same, and during heavy storms of rain, the water flows down from the same to the southeast corner of plaintiff's land, and has cut itself a channel down through said Colton avenue, running westward along plaintiff's south line, but outside and south of plaintiff's improvements, and is flowing thereon in greater or less quantities at different times." The complaint then charges that defendants are proceeding to build a bulkhead across Colton avenue, on the line of California street, for the purpose of preventing the water from passing down Colton avenue, and compelling it to pass over plaintiff's premises, to the great injury of his orchards and improvements, by cutting channels, etc. The answer alleges that during storms of rain, from time immemorial, the water has naturally flowed from the section of country mentioned in the complaint, in a northwesterly direction, to the southeast corner of plaintiff's land, and would still naturally flow in the same direction, upon and across plaintiff's premises, but for a dam or embankment constructed by plaintiff in the spring of 1890 across the natural course of said water, whereby it was diverted, and caused to flow down Colton avenue and over the defendants' lands; that the construction of the embankment being built by them, and the construction of which plaintiff seeks to enjoin, was necessary to prevent the diversion caused by plaintiff, and to protect their premises. Defendants' cross complaint repeats these allegations, alleges that plaintiff threatens and intends to maintain his dam, and prays for an injunction, and that the dam may be abated as a nuisance. Plaintiff's answer to the cross complaint denies specifically the material averments thereof, and alleges that about 1887, owing to the cultivation of the land lying to the southeast, large bodies of water were accumulated thereon for the purposes of irrigation, and ditches and canals were constructed; that by natural and artificial causes, over which he had no control, the conformation of the country lying southeasterly from his premises was so changed that ancient channels were obliterated, and new channels created, "and that the water since then coming through said channels will, if unobstructed, discharge itself over and through the place of William Curtis and the defendants in a north-west direction, and on through and over Colton avenue a long distance west of the southeast corner of his place;" and further alleges that defendants so graded California street, and constructed an embankment along the easterly side of said street, as to prevent the water from flowing as it otherwise would across their land, and that, if the water was permitted to flow as it naturally would across their land, the quantity would be insufficient to injure them. The court found (1) that all the matters and things stated in defendants' answer are true; (2) that plaintiff did, in the year 1890, erect a dam at the southeast corner of his land, with the intent and to the effect of diverting all of the water which flowed to said corner of his land through the natural drains of the country, down Colton avenue, and thereby caused a large wash or gulch to be made in the avenue, and also caused said waters to run over the defendants' lands, and wash and injure and greatly damage the same, and that the water never flowed down Colton avenue before the erection of said dam by plaintiff; and, as to the cross complaint, found all the allegations true, and all the denials and matters alleged in the answer thereto untrue. Judgment was rendered that plaintiff take nothing by his action, and upon defendants' cross complaint judgment was entered that plaintiff's dam be abated as a nuisance. Appellant's notice of intention to move for a new trial specified, as the grounds thereof, (1) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the court; (2) errors of law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the plaintiff; and (3) that said decision is against law. Under the second ground of motion above mentioned, there are no specifications whatever. Several particulars are specified wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient to justify the findings; but these, so far as material, hinge upon the question whether there was a natural channel or drainage which conducted the water to plaintiff's southeast corner, and thence into and upon his premises, and not down Colton avenue, or over the lands of defendants. The evidence is very voluminous, and every fact bearing on the issues between the parties appears to have been fully developed. Careful surveys of the country from which water flows to the vicinity of plaintiff's and defendants' lands were made, and topographical and profile maps were prepared to illustrate the various contentions of the parties and the testimony of the witnesses.

After a careful examination of the maps and the testimony of the witnesses, the principal issue of fact is not difficult of determination. It is somewhat obscured by the large mass of testimony, much of which is immaterial and sharply conflicting. Counsel for appellant concedes that "it is in evidence, and not contradicted, that at some time in the past a dry gulch ran down through these places to the southeast corner of plaintiff's place."

Plaintiff's answer to the cross complaint would seem to show quite conclusively that such dry gulch existed until about 1887, when, by the improvement and cultivation of the land, "the conformation of the country lying to the southeast" was changed by natural and artificial means; that old channels were obliterated and new ones created; and that "the water since then coming through said channels will, if unobstructed, discharge itself over and through the places of William Curtis and the defendants, Cole and Hicks." The change in the conformation of the country, and the obliteration of the old channels, and the creation of new ones, were not upon defendants' lands, nor caused by them. Defendants' map shows, and there is much evidence tending to establish the fact, that the main gulch or arroyo came down from at or near the city of Redlands, and entered the Adams or La Pierce lot near the middle of the east line, and pursued its course to the southeast corner of plaintiff's land, and continued in the same general direction for some distance into plaintiff's lands, where it spread out into what one of the witnesses termed "a swale." Another arroyo, but a smaller one, came into the Adams lot on the south side, and continued across the lot, and entered the main gulch near the point where it left that lot and entered plaintiff's premises. California street, as before stated, runs north and south on the west line of the Adams place and the east line of Mrs. Hicks' land. On the west line of the street is an embankment, averaging about three feet higher than the level of the cultivated land. This embankment was made 21 years ago for the purpose of a fence, by digging a ditch, and throwing the earth upon one side, and this embankment is about a foot higher than the present grade of California street. It does not appear, however, that at the time this embankment was made, nor until recent floods, the water would have flowed over the land of the defendants, nor that it would now have any material effect, but for the changes made in the surface of the lands above, whereby the ancient channels have been obliterated to a greater or less extent. Appellant relies very largely upon his topographical survey to show that the natural flow of the water would now be over defendants' land. That the natural flow would be at right angles to the contour lines is true, and would be conclusive upon that point if the surface were absolutely even and regular, but slight obstacles lying between the contour lines may divert the water from the course it would otherwise pursue. But such evidence cannot overcome or change the course of natural channels conceded to exist or to have existed. Besides, these surveys were made shortly before the trial, and after the changes in the surface of the lands referred to by appellant in his pleadings and testimony, and for these changes the defendants are not responsible; nor are they responsible for the increased quantity of water reaching the east line of plaintiff's and defendants' property, resulting from clearing the lands above them, and the increased use of water for the purpose of irrigation, the breakage or overflow of ditches, and the like. So far as the arroyos across the Adams place, if they had remained unobstructed, would have conveyed the water, as they formerly did, to appellant's southeast corner, and into his land, he is not injured by the same quantity of water being now turned to the same point by the grading up of California street, or by the embankment maintained by Mrs. Hicks; nor could the defendants in any manner be held responsible for the acts of the public authorities in grading the street, so far as that may, under present circumstances, operate to turn the water to plaintiff's corner. But no relief was sought against those who changed the surface of the land above, so as to change or divert the course of the water, or through whose agency the quantity of the flow was increased, nor against the public for raising the grade of the street, nor against Mrs. Hicks for maintaining an embankment made many years before; for, if the defendants could be held liable for all this in an appropriate action, it could not change the result in this action. Appellant erected a dam across what is conceded to be at that point a natural channel, and which at some time in the past was the continuation of a natural channel or drainage for storm water from the city of Redlands to that point; and by the erection of the dam, and the removal of earth from that part of Colton avenue next his premises, appellant diverted the water into a new channel, to the injury of the avenue and of defendants' premises. So far, therefore, as the judgment against appellant is concerned, the material facts necessary to support it, so far as the existence of the water course, the erection of the dam, and the diversion of the water down the avenue were concerned, could have been sustained upon his own testimony, while the injury to defendants resulting therefrom, as testified to by them, was practically uncontradicted; and the same facts found from the same evidence justified the dismissal of the plaintiff's bill for an injunction.

Appellant complains that there was no finding upon the allegation that not more than 2,500 inches of water naturally flowed at the point where the channel entered his land. But it is immaterial whether the quantity naturally flowing there was 500 or 2,500 inches. If any material quantity—that is, any quantity capable of doing damage to others if diverted—naturally flowed there, he had no right to obstruct it, and divert it to other and new channels, to the injury of others; and hence the quantity diverted, within the limits above stated, could not affect the character of his dam as a nuisance. I think the findings cover all the material issues, and are fully justified by the evidence, and that the findings support the judgment.

Some exceptions to evidence are found in the body of the transcript, but which are not referred to in the specifications of error, nor in appellant's brief, and we therefore assume that they are not relied upon. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

97 Cal. 270

LABORY v. LOS ANGELES ORPHAN ASYLUM. (No. 19,111.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1893.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION—CONSTRUCTIVE OCCUPANCY—RIGHT OF CORPORATION TO DEFEND SUIT—FILING ARTICLES.

1. In an action to quiet title to land included in a patent originally granted to a city, it appeared that plaintiff claimed title relying on adverse possession by his predecessors in interest, who had actually occupied a small portion of the grant the required period, and claimed constructive possession of much more, including the land in controversy, which the city deeded to defendant's predecessors. Held, that the city, being the owner of the land, was constructively in possession of all that was not actually occupied by others, and therefore plaintiff's title extended only to the amount actually occupied by him, and the deed to defendant, including only what plaintiff claimed by constructive possession, conveyed the valid title.

2. An objection that defendant corporation is not entitled to defend the suit because it has not complied with Civil Code, § 299, requiring that every corporation shall file a copy of its articles of incorporation in every county where it holds property, and on failing to do so it shall not maintain or defend any proceeding in relation to such property, will be deemed waived unless taken during the trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department

2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Leonard Labory against the Los Angeles Orphan Asylum. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. A. Meserve and M. W. Conkling, for appellant. Stephen M. White, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to quiet the plaintiff's title to a tract of land in the city of Los Angeles, and the complaint is in the usual form. The defendant is a corporation, and by its answer it denies that the plaintiff is the owner or entitled to the possession of a described portion of the tract, and avers that it is the owner in fee, and in possession thereof; and it disclaims any claim to or interest in the remaining portion of the tract. The court below found the facts to be in accordance with the averments of the answer, and gave judgment accordingly. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The city of Los Angeles was incorporated by an act of the legislature in 1850, and was made to succeed to all the rights, claims, and powers of the pueblo of that name in regard to property. In due time it presented to the board of land commissioners, appointed under the act of congress of March 3, 1851, its claim for four square leagues of pueblo lands, and its title thereto was thereafter duly and regularly confirmed. The decree of confirmation became final on February 1, 1858, and on August 9, 1866, the United States issued its patent for the lands to the city. The land in controversy is included within the four leagues so confirmed and patented, and the principal question is, had the plaintiff's predecessors in interest acquired a title thereto by prescription as against the defendant and its predecessors in interest, who claimed title under conveyances from the city? To establish his title the plaintiff relies upon deeds, executed by his predecessors in interest, of a tract of land including the land in controversy, and an actual occupancy of a small part of the tract, under claim in good faith and color of title to the whole. The first deed was executed on May 31, 1866, and the last to the plaintiff on August 26, 1890. The tract described was situated on the east side of and adjoining the Los Angeles river, and was in form a parallelogram, having a length from west to east of 400 varas, and a width of 250 varas. Next to the river was a small flat, containing two or three acres, then a rise or hill, and back of that a level plain or mesa, extending east for many miles. The flat next to the river was inclosed and planted with fruit trees, and on it was an adobe house, which was occupied by each of the grantors, or his tenants, during the time of his claimed ownership. The balance of the tract was never inclosed or used by any of the plaintiff's predecessors in interest, but was a common pasture, used by any one and every one for that purpose who chose to do so, until the part of it in dispute was inclosed by the defendant in March, 1886. To establish its title the defendant relies upon two deeds executed by the city to its predecessors in interest, both deeds conveying the land in controversy and other land, and one dated August 12, 1875, and the other March 8, 1886.

The plaintiff claims that the entry of each of his predecessors into the actual possession of the flat by the river was made in good faith, and under claim and color of title to the whole tract; and that under section 322 of the Code of Civil Procedure a title to the whole tract, denominated a "title by prescription," (section 1007, Civil Code,) which was good as against the city and the whole world, had vested in his predecessors before the city made its first deed to one of defendant's predecessors. This claim cannot, in our opinion, be sustained. At all the times named the city was the owner of all the pueblo lands, except such parcels thereof as private parties had acquired title to by purchase or otherwise; and the court will take judicial notice that the city had actual possession of certain parcels of such lands and constructive possession of the balance. This being so, no mere intruder could obtain a constructive possession which would oust or supersede the constructive possession of the real owner. "The rule is well settled that title draws to it the possession, and it remains with the owner of the legal title until he is divested of it by an actual adverse possession; and while he is in possession of a part of the premises his possession is entitled to the constructive possession, and can only be ousted by and to the extent of the actual occupation of a mere intruder." Wood, Lim. Act. § 261. In Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U.S. 368, it is said: "It is true that when a person enters upon unoccupied land, under a deed or title, and holds adversely, his possession is construed to be coextensive with his deed or title, and the true owner will be disseised to the extent of the boundaries described in that title. Still his possession beyond the limits of his actual occupancy is only constructive. If the true owner be at the same time in actual possession of part of the land, claiming title to the whole, he has the constructive possession of all the land not in the actual possession of the intruder, and this though the owner's actual possession is not within the limits of the defective title. The reason is plain. Both parties cannot be seised at the same time of the same land under different titles. The law, therefore, adjudges the seisin of all that is not in the actual occupancy of the adverse party to him who has the better title." And in Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 26, it was held that if one who claims title under a deed to a large tract of land enters upon it and erects a house, and acquires actual possession of a small part around his house and constructive possession of the whole, and the owner of the true title afterwards enters on the same tract in another place, claiming the whole, the constructive possession thus acquired by the one who first entered is overcome by the constructive possession of the true owner, so that the statute of limitations does not run in favor of the one who had not the true title. In view of these authorities,—and many more to the same effect might be cited,—it is clear that, as to the premises in controversy, the statute of limitations did not begin to run in favor of any of the plaintiff's predecessors in interest before August 12, 1875, the date of the city's first deed of the property. It is also clear that after the first deed was made no title by limitation could have been acquired, for the reason that to create such title an adverse possession for five years, and after April 1, 1878, the payment by the adverse claimant of all taxes assessed against the property, were required. Section 325, Code Civil Proc. But it was proved that, beginning with 1878, the land had been assessed to the defendant and its predecessors in interest, and that all the taxes thereon had been paid by them. It is also claimed that the judgment should be reversed for the reason that the defendant failed at the trial to show that it had complied with the provisions of section 299 of the Civil Code. That section requires every corporation to file a copy of the copy of its articles of incorporation, duly certified by the secretary of state, in the office of the county clerk of every county in this state in which it holds any property, except the county where the original articles are filed; and it declares that "any corporation failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall not maintain or defend any action or proceeding in relation to such property." The complaint alleges "that the defendant, the Los Angeles Orphan Asylum, is now and ever since the 21st day of June, 1869, has been a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California." At the trial the defendant offered all its testimony, and it was received without objection or suggestion by the plaintiff that it had no right to defend the action. The case was then argued, submitted, and decided, and after that the point seems to have been first raised by a specification attached to the statement on motion for new trial, to the effect that the finding that the defendant was the owner of the land in controversy was not justified by the evidence, because it was not shown by the evidence that defendant had complied with the provisions of the section named. We do not think the point can be thus raised for the first time. The objection should have been made when the defendant was introducing its evidence, or at least at the conclusion of it. Not having been made at any time during the trial, the objection must now be deemed waived. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

3 Cal. Unrep. 775

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. REYES et al.
(No. 19,106.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1893.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—PROCEEDING TO OPEN PRIVATE ROAD—VALIDITY.

1. Where defendant, through whose land a private road was surveyed, refused to accept the compensation awarded, and the case was tried by a jury, he cannot complain of the jury's action in assessing damages on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, as the burden of proving damages rests on defendant.

2. Pol. Code, § 2692, provides that a private road may be opened for the convenience of one or more residents or freeholders in the same manner as public roads are opened, except that only one petitioner shall be necessary. Held, that while the principal use of such private road may be for the petitioner, as a means of egress from his farm, it is also for the use of the public, in deriving the benefit of his products, and in going to his place, and the legislature has the power to declare it a public use, for which the right of eminent domain may be exercised. Monterey Co. v. Cushing, 23 Pac. Rep. 700, 83 Cal. 511, followed.

3. The appellate court will not consider an objection to oral instructions given by the trial court, where no exception was taken, nor the attention of the court called to anything objectionable therein.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by the county of Los Angeles against Pablo Reyes and others. From a judgment opening a road through defendants' property, and awarding damages therefor, defendant Reyes appeals. Affirmed.

Roberts & Robinson, for appellant. James McLachlan, Dist. Atty., Waldo M. York, and B. M. Marble, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This is an action to condemn certain lands for road purposes, by virtue of the provisions of article 6, tit. 6, pt. 3, of the Political Code, and of title 7, pt. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The contemplated road is one designated in section 2692, Pol. Code,¹ as a private road. Proceedings were duly taken by the board of supervisors, under the statute, upon the petition of Cheesebrough, to lay out and establish the road. Viewers were appointed, and reported. But defendants, through whose lands the road was surveyed, refused to accept the compensation awarded; and this proceeding was ordered by the board to be taken in accordance with the statute. The cause was tried by a jury, who found the special facts authorizing the condemnation of the land for the purposes of a private road, and assessed the damages and benefits accruing to the defendants, and the value of the land proposed to be taken; and the court, having made its findings to the effect that all the allegations of the complaint were true, and the allegations of the answer untrue, rendered the appropriate judgment. A motion for a new trial made by defendants was denied, and this appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial is taken by the defendant Pablo Reyes alone.

The first point urged by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury and the findings of the court, especially as to the damages awarded the defendants, and the practicability of some other route than that selected by the viewers, and adopted by the court and jury. As to the first of these particulars the appellant cannot complain, if, as urged by counsel, there was no evidence, since the burden of proving the damages in condemnation cases rests upon the defendant. Counsel contend that the true rule is to determine the effect of the proposed change upon the market value of the property effected. Such evidence would, of course, cover the entire question of compensation, viz. the value of the land taken, and the damage to the land not taken, diminished by the benefits accruing to the defendant from the opening of the road; but it is not contended that defendant was prevented from giving evidence of such market value. The jury assessed the damages to the land not taken at $50, and the benefits at the same sum, and we think there was sufficient evidence to sustain each of those findings; and, as to the value of the land taken, there was evidence which, if uncontradicted, would have justified a less valuation than that found by the jury. All the facts necessary to enable the jury to make a proper estimate of the compensation to be awarded the defendant were as fully presented as could be reasonably required, and upon most points the evidence was sharply conflicting. As to whether it was practicable to locate the road upon section or quarter section lines, or by the route of Macala Canon, the evidence was also conflicting, but, we think, largely preponderated against each of those routes, and that the selection made is fully justified by the evidence.

¹Pol. Code, § 2692: "Private or by roads may be opened, laid out, or altered, for the convenience of one or more residents or freeholders of any road district, in the same manner as public roads are opened, laid out, or altered, except that only one petitioner shall be necessary, who must be either a resident or freeholder in said road district, and the board of supervisors may, for like cause, order the same to be viewed, opened, laid out, or altered; the person for whose benefit said road is required paying the damages awarded to landowners, and keeping the same in repair."

Counsel for appellant refer to the case of Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 242, and question its correctness. They admit that as a general rule a legislative declaration that a specified use is a public use, for which the right of eminent domain may be exercised, is not open to review by the courts, yet that when it appears plainly that property sought to be taken is for a purely private use, the courts are not bound by the declaration. But that is not this case. The use is not "a purely private use." The principal use will doubtless be by Mr. Cheesebrough, but every one of the public at large who may have occasion to visit his place has the right to use the road. Besides, the state and all its inhabitants have an interest in having the products of his land brought to market, thus adding to the wealth of the state, and the comfort of its inhabitants. Not that the state will do that for a man which he can do for himself; but where he is powerless to do that which is necessary to be done, and which is essential to the use and enjoyment of his property for purposes in which the public have an interest, it is clearly in the power of the legislature to declare the use a public one. This question must be regarded as settled by the case of Monterey Co. v. Cushing, 83 Cal. 511, 23 Pac. Rep. 700, where the case of Sherman v. Buick is approved. Nor is there any inconsistency between these cases and Consolidated Channel Co. v. Central Pac. R. Co., 51 Cal. 269, cited by counsel. For a more extended discussion of this subject, see the recent case In re Madera Irrigation Dist., 92 Cal., especially pages 309 to 313, 28 Pac. Rep. 274, 275, 675.

It is further contended that the oral instructions given by the court were erroneous. This point cannot be considered, because no exception was taken to it, nor the attention of the court called to anything objectionable therein. Rider v. Edgar, 54 Cal. 130.

We see no objection to the instructions given to the jury at the request of the parties, nor do we think that the court erred in refusing to give the instructions requested by defendants which were not given. So far as they correctly stated the law, they were covered by instructions given; so that the court could properly decline to modify them, and none of them could properly be given without modification.

Several exceptions were taken to the rulings of the court upon the admission and exclusion of evidence; but, as the questions presented by these exceptions do not present any new or important principles of the law of evidence, it is sufficient to say that a careful consideration of them does not disclose any error which could prejudice appellant, or justify a reversal of the judgment. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 281

In re KIMBERLY'S ESTATE. (No. 19,082.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1893.)
SETTING APART HOMESTEAD TO WIDOW—ADVERSE TITLE.

On a petition to set apart a homestead property inventoried as belonging to the decedent's estate, the probate court has no jurisdiction to try adverse claims to such property.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Petition in probate by the widow and minor children of one Kimberly, deceased, to have the homestead set apart. From the order denying the petition, petitioners appeal. Reversed.

B. F. Thomas, for appellants. E. B. Hall and Richards & Carrier, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. Appeal from an order refusing to set aside a homestead for the widow and minor children of deceased out of property claimed to belong to the estate of the deceased, and inventoried as such. In refusing to set aside a homestead for the widow and minor children of deceased the court erred. The question of the validity of the adverse title claimed by the contestants to an undivided interest in the property sought to be set apart as a homestead is one not proper to be litigated in this proceeding. In re Groomer's Estate, (Cal.) 29 Pac. Rep. 487; Estate of Burton, 64 Cal. 428, 1 Pac. Rep. 702. Whether the contestants acquired by virtue of the foreclosure proceedings referred to in the findings of the court any interest in the land described in the petition for homestead must be determined in some appropriate action brought for the purpose of settling that question. The question is not involved here, and we express no opinion in relation to it. Order reversed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 779)

SCHALLERT-GANAHL LUMBER CO. v. SHELDON et al. (No. 19,044.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1893.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—TIME OF FILING—COMPLETION OF WORK.

Under Code Civil Proc. § 1187, as amended by St. and Amend. 1887, p. 154, providing that every person, save the original contractor, claiming a lien, must, within 30 days after the "completion" of the building, file his lien, but that any "trivial imperfection" in the construction shall not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of the lien, a lien filed before the doors of a house were hung, the plumbing finished, the closets and bath room completed, ventilators placed, and mouldings put in, is premature, and cannot be enforced, as such things are not "trivial imperfections," but are necessary to be done to effect a "completion" of the building.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by the Schallert-Ganahl Lumber Company against H. A. Sheldon and others to foreclose a material man's lien. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Barclay, for appellant. W. P. Gardiner, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Action to foreclose a material man's lien. Appellant is a corporation engaged in the lumber business. Sheldon & Son are copartners, and contracted in writing with the defendant Annie C. Severance to furnish the material and erect upon her separate property a dwelling house. Appellant furnished lumber to Sheldon & Son for the building, and a notice of lien therefor was filed. Both parties to this appeal concede that the contract was void. Sheldon & Son abandoned the work early in January, 1889, before completion, and Mrs. Severance employed mechanics, and proceeded with the work. In May, 1889, she, with husband and servants, moved into and occupied the rear portion of the house, and continued such occupation while work proceeded upon the remainder of the building; and upon August 22, 1889, appellant filed its notice of lien. Sheldon & Son made no defense, and judgment passed against them. Mr. and Mrs. Severance answered, and upon the trial rested upon plaintiff's evidence, and had judgment. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The court found that the building was not completed at the time the notice of lien was filed; and, if that finding is justified by the evidence, it will not be necessary to consider any other specification of error. The occupancy of the rear portion of the house was known to appellant on June 25th, but appellant makes no point upon such occupancy. The complaint alleges completion "on or about August 22d," and whether the building was then completed was a question of fact to be determined by the court. Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal. 237, 29 Pac. Rep. 629. The only witness who testified upon the subject of the completion of the building was Mr. Driscoll, the secretary of the plaintiff corporation. He testified in substance that he visited the building on August 21st; that workmen were there on that day, doing some little things; that there might be one or two men there for several months doing little things, waiting the arrival of material from the east; that Mr. Cranton was working in the house; that Cranton said there were 24 doors to hang, ventilators to make, water-closet traps, bath room not completed, wardrobe not completed, a painter working on the house; that the doors were made, and only had to be hung; that the oxidized hardware, door knobs and locks were not on; that it was stated the locks costs $35 each,—a couple of thousand dollars on the whole house, he heard; that he did not know whether the tiling was in the bath room, nor whether the picture mouldings were up in the second story, nor whether the front chamber was completed, nor whether the closets were finished, or the plumbing finished, but thought the house was substantially completed; and, further, that the oxidized hardware and the tiling he thought were not in the contract. Such was the condition of the building on August 21st, the day before the lien was filed, and that was the last time the witness visited the house. Upon this evidence we think the court correctly found that the notice of lien was prematurely filed; that the building was not substantially completed, and that what remained to be done constituted something more than "trivial imperfections." The burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show completion of the building within 30 days prior to the filing of the lien. Mr. Driscoll testified that he "thought the house was substantially completed," but admitted that certain things, which it is apparent are necessary to completion, had not been done, while his testimony that he did not know whether certain other things had been completed, and which he could have ascertained by inspection, destroys any weight which his statement that he "thought the house was substantially completed" might otherwise have had. It is immaterial whether the oxidized hardware and tiling were in the written contract attempted to be made with Sheldon & Son, or whether they were to be furnished by the owner or the contractor. If the use of these materials was necessary to the completion of the building, the purchase of them by the one party or the other could not affect the question whether the building was completed. As was said in a recent case: "In the absence of any statutory qualification or definition of the term 'completion,' there would be no room for its construction by the court, but it would be construed to mean 'completion,' and would be a question of fact in each case." Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal. 237, 29 Pac. Rep. 629. For a statement of these qualifications and definitions, and their application, see Id. It may be quite true that it would not takelong to do what remained to be done, and that what remained to be done was trifling, compared with the whole work of building an elegant residence; but it must be obvious that if the erection and completion of the house had been provided for in a valid contract, the contractor could not have successfully insisted on the day the lien was filed that he had complied with his contract within the meaning of any of the qualifications or exceptions contained in the statute. That the filing of a lien before the completion of the building is premature and confers no right, see Roylance v. San Luis Hotel Co., 74 Cal. 273, 20 Pac. Rep. 573, and Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., supra. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 276

PEOPLE v. MONTECITO WATER CO. et al. (No. 19,074.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1893.)

CORPORATIONS — VALIDITY OF INCORPORATION — FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISES — PARTIES TO PROCEEDING.

1. In an action by the state to forfeit a corporation's charter for want of substantial compliance with the statutory requirements in its formation, the corporation is a necessary party defendant, and making it such is not an admission of its corporate character, so as to preclude the state from questioning its right to corporate existence. People v. Stanford, 18 Pac. Rep. 85, 19 Pac. Rep. 693, and 77 Cal. 360, distinguished.

2. Civil Code, § 292, provides that articles of incorporation must be subscribed by five or more persons, and acknowledged by each. Held, in an action by the state to forfeit a charter, that a complaint showing that the articles of incorporation were signed by five persons, and acknowledged by four only, stated a cause of action.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by the people against the Montecito Water Company, C. B. Hall, and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., John J. Boyce, and Richards & Carrier, for the People. W. C. Stratton, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered upon demurrer to complaint. The demurrer was general, and on the ground of insufficiency of the facts. It is a proceeding taken by the attorney general of the state, in the nature of a quo warranto, to deprive the defendant corporation of its corporate charter, and procure its dissolution on two grounds—First, for want of a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements in its formation; and, second, for abandonment and misuse of its corporate franchise and powers, and for alleged violations of law.

In answer to the first point the respondent ent raises the preliminary objection that, by making the corporation a defendant, its corporate character is admitted, and cannot be questioned in this proceeding. As authority for this proposition the case of the People v. Stanford, 77 Cal. 360, 18 Pac. Rep. 85, and 19 Pac. Rep. 693, is chiefly relied upon. In that case it was alleged in the complaint that the assumed corporation had never been a corporation. If it were not a corporation of any character, it had no legal existence, and could not be sued. By making it a party, plaintiff conceded that it was a person that could be sued. It was said that the corporation could not be treated as a person which could be sued simply to obtain a judgment; that it was not and never had been such a person. There is no such inconsistency here. It is averred that the corporate defendant is a corporation de facto, but it is claimed that it did not become a corporation de jure, because the persons who attempted the incorporation did not comply with the conditions which the statute makes conditions precedent to its rightful incorporation. Under such circumstances, although the association is a legal entity, which may be sued, its right to corporate existence may be questioned by the state in a proceeding of this character. Section 358, Civil Code. This court said in People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 530, 8 Pac. Rep. 84, and repeated the language in First Baptist Church v. Branham, 90 Cal. 22, 27 Pac. Rep. 60: "A corporation de facto may legally do and perform every act and thing which the same entity could do or perform were it a de jure corporation. As to all the world, except the paramount authority under which it acts, and from which it receives its charter, it occupies the same position as though in all respects valid; and even as against the state, except in direct proceedings to arrest its usurpation of power, it is submitted its acts are to be treated as efficacious." Under such circumstances it seems clear that the corporation is not only a proper, but a necessary, party. People v. Flint, 64 Cal. 49, 28 Pac. Rep. 495; People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 244, 24 Pac. Rep. 718.

It is contended that the corporation is not rightfully such because, while five incorporators signed the articles of incorporation, only four acknowledged the same. Section 292 of the Civil Code reads as follows: "The articles of incorporation must be subscribed by five or more persons, a majority of whom must be residents of this state, and acknowledged by each before some officer authorized to take and certify acknowledgments of conveyances of real property." It was said in People v. Selfridge, 52 Cal. 331: "The right to be a corporation is in itself a franchise; and, to acquire a franchise under a general law, the prescribed statutory conditions must be complied with." Still, a substantial, rather than a literal, compliance will suffice. People v. Stockton & V. R. Co., 45 Cal. 313. Was there substantial compliance in this case? Because a substantial compliance will do, it does not follow that any positive statutory requirement can be omitted, on the ground that it is unimportant. They are conditions precedent to acquiring a statutory right, and none can be dispensed with by the court. What is a substantial, rather than a literal, compliance, may be illustrated from the cases. In Ex parte Spring Valley Waterworks, 17 Cal. 132, the certificate stated the place of business, but did not describe it as the "principal place of business," as required. The court said: "The statement that San Francisco was the place of business would seem to imply that it was not only the principal, but the only, place of business." In People v. Stockton & V. R. Co., 45 Cal. 306, the affidavit required in such cases to be attached to the certificate stated that 10 per cent. of the amount subscribed had been actually paid in, omitting the words "in good faith," which the statute required. In the certificate it was stated that more than 10 per cent. had been actually in good faith paid in. It was held sufficient, and it would seem that, if it was actually paid in cash, it must have been paid in good faith; and it was further held that payment by checks drawn against sufficient funds in a bank, which was ready to accept and pay the checks, was substantially payment in cash. In People v. Cheeseman, 7 Colo. 376, the acknowledgment taken by the notary omitted to state that the persons whose acknowledgments were taken were personally known to the notary. The certificate did state that the persons who signed appeared before him and acknowledged it. The statute did not prescribe what the acknowledgment should contain, and it was held a substantial compliance with the requirement, although the form prescribed for acknowledgments to deeds was not followed. It was acknowledged. In all these cases it will be seen that the thing required was done, but not literally as directed; but there was no omission of any requirement. No case has been cited where the entire omission of a thing prescribed has been excused, unless it be the case of Larrabee v. Baldwin, 35 Cal. 155. That was not an action instituted by the state to disincorporate on the ground of noncompliance. As we have seen, unless the state complains, a de facto corporation must be considered, under our Code, as possessing a corporate character; and the stockholders, when sued upon their individual liability, should not be allowed to make the point that they did not comply with the law. In that case the certificate was signed by five directors, but two failed to acknowledge it. Other questions are discussed at great length in the opinion, but in regard to the point made on the certificate it was simply remarked: "It is not clear that any fatal defect exists in the certificate of incorporation. If so, it is cured by the act of April 1, 1864." Plainly it was unnecessary to consider the question. The curative act referred to declares: "All associations or companies heretofore organized, and acting in the form and manner of corporations, and that have filed certificates for the purpose of being incorporated, but whose certificates are in some manner defective, or have been improperly acknowledged before a person not authorized by law to take such acknowledgments, are hereby declared to be, and to have been, corporations from the date of the filing of such certificates, in the same manner and to the same effect and intent as if such certificates were without fault, and properly acknowledged before the proper officer; and all such certificates are hereby validated, and declared to be legal, and shall have the same force and effect as if such certificates were free from all fault or defect, and were properly acknowledged," etc. St. 1863-64, p. 303. Section 292 of the Civil Code requires the articles to be subscribed and acknowledged by each. As this is an express condition precedent to a valid incorporation, it is not of consequence to the court whether it be a wise or necessary requirement or not. Still, it is easy to see a reason for it. The certificate secures the state, and all concerned, against the possibility of any fictitious names being subscribed to the articles, and furnishes proof of the genuineness of the signatures. If the acknowledgment can be dispensed with as to one, why not as to two or three, or all? Ordinarily, no doubt, the state would not be expected to institute a proceeding of this character for such a defect alone, and we must presume that the attorney general would not have instituted this inquiry if he were not convinced that there were reasons sufficient to justify it. Other reasons are alleged; but, as the statute authorizes a proceeding to forfeit the charter where the statute has not been complied with, although the corporation is acting in good faith, and is a de facto corporation, the complaint must be held to state a cause of action, and the demurrer should be overruled. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

97 Cal. 283
JOURNAL PUB. CO. v. WHITNEY, Tax Collector. (No. 19,110.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1893.)

COUNTIES—PUBLICATION OF TAX LIST—LOWEST BIDDER—MANDAMUS.

1. Under St. 1891, c. 216, § 25, subd. 23, providing that the board of supervisors shall fix the price of all county advertising, and each county officer shall procure such advertising, at a price no greater than is so fixed, mandamus will not lie to compel a tax collector to publish a delinquent tax list in a certain newspaper, even though such newspaper has tendered the lowest bid for such publication.

2. St. 1891, c. 216, § 25, subd. 23, providing that the board of supervisors shall fix the price of all county advertising, repeals Pol. Code, § 3766, providing that county advertising must be contracted for with the lowest bidder.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Mandamus at the relation of the Journal Publishing Company to compel A. B. Whitney, tax collector, to publish a delinquent tax list in relator's newspaper. From a judgment dismissing the petition, entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to it, relator appeals. Affirmed.

E. A. Meserve, for appellant. Stephen M. White, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is taken from a judgment of dismissal of a petition for a writ of mandate, after sustaining a demurrer to said petition. The object had in view by the petitioner was to compel the defendant, who is the tax collector of the county of Los Angeles, to advertise and publish the delinquent tax list in the newspaper of the plaintiff, a publishing company. The demurrer is general in its nature, and is to the effect that the complaint does not show facts sufficient for a good cause of action. The whole matter turns upon the question whether or not, under the law of this state, it is the duty of the tax collector to publish the delinquent tax list about which this controversy has arisen, in such newspaper as has tendered the lowest bid to do such advertising. Prior to the enactment of the county government act of 1891, section 3766 of the Political Code, as to such publication, ran thus: "The publication must be made once a week for three successive weeks in some newspaper, or supplement thereto, published in the county; and the publication must be contracted for with the lowest bidder, and after ten days' public notice that such will be let. The bidding must be by sealed proposals. If there is no newspaper published in the county, then by posting a copy of the list in three public places in each township." Section 3764 of the Political Code provides, among other things, that the tax collector must publish the list, and that such publication is a charge against the county. These two sections, among others, were construed by the supreme court in Publishing Co. v. Alameda Co., 64 Cal. 469, 2 Pac. Rep. 246, before the county government act of 1891 became a law; and it was there held to be the duty of the board of supervisors, and not that of the tax collector, to advertise for proposals to print the delinquent tax list, and to contract for the publication of such list; the duty devolved on the tax collector being held limited to preparing the list for publication, and causing it to be published as contracted for by the board of supervisors. But the new statutory provision (subdivision 23 of section 25 of the county government act, just mentioned) defines the duties of the board of supervisors in such a matter thus: "The board of supervisors shall annually fix the price at which the county shall be supplied with job printing and blank books, and also the price of all county advertising; and each county officer shall procure such blank books, job printing, and advertising at a price no greater than is so fixed, and certify the bills therefor to the board of supervisors." This changes the rule as declared in section 3766 of the Political Code, and the board of supervisors, of the own motion, now are to fix the price of county advertising, such as here involved, without advertising for bids or sealed proposals. When that duty is performed by them, the tax collector must "procure" some newspaper to do the advertising, not by any bid which may have been made, but at the price previously fixed by the board of supervisors in their discretion. Such being the force and effect of the statute, the tax collector, against whom this petition is filed, is not shown to be violating any law in not procuring the advertising in question to be published in the paper of the plaintiff. Its bid and his advertisement for sealed proposals amounted to nothing. The tax collector could, notwithstanding this unnecessary proceeding, select any paper he saw fit in the county, and procure the advertising to be done, provided it was done at the price fixed by the board of supervisors, and he cannot be compelled to publish the delinquent tax in any other way.

The argument of the appellant that the county government act does not operate to repeal any part of section 3766 of the Political Code is without force, in view of the decision of the appellate court in Mendocino Co. v. Bank of Mendocino, 86 Cal. 255, 24 Pac. Rep. 1002, and Ex parte Benjamin, 65 Cal. 310, 4 Pac. Rep. 23.

The judgment is affirmed.

97 Cal. 286

YOAKAM et ux. v. WHITE et al. (No. 19, 114.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1893.)

MORTGAGES—RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE—FORECLOSURE ON NONPAYMENT OF INTEREST.

Code Civil Proc. § 726, provides for an "action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right, secured by mortgage," and that the court may "direct the sale of the incumbered property," and apply the proceeds to the payment of "the amount due to the plaintiff." Section 728 provides that if the mortgage debt is not all due the sale must cease as soon as enough is realized to pay the amount due, and afterwards, as often as more becomes due, the court may order more property to be sold. Held, where the mortgage note was payable five years after date, with interest payable annually, "and, if not so paid, to be compounded annually," and the mortgage provided for payment of the note "according to the terms and conditions thereof," and, "in default of the payment of the note by its terms" the mortgagee might foreclose, that the mortgagee could foreclose for the first year's interest on nonpayment thereof when due. Broadribb v. Tibbets, 58 Cal. 6, distinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by George B. Yoakam and wife against W. Y. White and others. From a judgment dismissing the action without prejudice, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Clarence A. Miller, for appellants. Burnett & Gibbon, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. On February 10, 1891, the defendant White executed to the plaintiffs his promissory note and mortgage to secure payment of the same. The note was for $7,800, and was payable five years after date, "with interest at the rate of eight per cent. per annum from date until paid; interest payable annually, and, if not so paid, to be compounded annually, and bear the same rate of interest as the principal." The mortgage stated that it was given as security for the payment of the note, a copy of which was set out in hæc verba, and then contained the following agreement: "And the mortgagor promises to pay said note according to the terms and conditions thereof, and, * * * in default of the payment of note by its terms, the mortgagees or their assigns may foreclose this mortgage, and may include in such foreclosure a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court." After the mortgage was executed, and on the same day, the mortgagor conveyed the mortgaged premises to the defendants Childress and Park; and as a part of the consideration for the conveyance, the grantees covenanted and agreed to pay, according to its terms, the said mortgage, and to do and perform the covenants and agreements upon the part of the said White in said mortgage mentioned and contained. On February 13, 1892, the plaintiffs commenced this action to foreclose their mortgage, and they alleged, among other things, that no part of the principal or interest of the note had been paid; that the sum of $624, being one year's interest upon the note, was due, owing, and unpaid from the defendants to plaintiffs, though demanded by plaintiffs after the same fell due; and that the property described in the mortgage could not be sold in portions without injury to the parties. Wherefore, they prayed for a decree of foreclosure for the entire debt evidenced by the note. The defendants demurred to the complaint, and their demurrer was overruled. They, however, failed to answer, and their defaults were duly entered. When the case came on to be heard the plaintiff introduced the formal proofs usual in such cases, and moved the court for a decree granting the relief demanded in their complaint. This motion was denied, and they then asked for so much relief as the court would grant upon the pleadings and evidence; but the court refused to grant them any relief, and entered judgment dismissing the action without prejudice. From the judgment so entered the plaintiffs appeal.

In Jones, Mortg. (section 654) it is said: "A provision for the payment of interest annually, and that if not so paid it shall be compounded, is in waiver of the right to enforce payment when due." Respondents, in effect, admit that this is a correct statement of the law, and that there was no right of election on their part to pay the interest when it became due, or to let it be compounded, and have its payment deferred until the maturity of the note. They, however, contend—and this is the only point made—that the note and mortgage, when properly construed according to the intention of the parties, gave no right to foreclose for nonpayment of an installment of interest. In support of this position counsel cite Broadribb v. Tibbets, 58 Cal. 6. In the case cited the mortgage was given "as security for the payment to said mortgagee of the sum of twenty-one hundred dollars * * * on the 16th day of September, A. D. 1881, with interest thereon, according to the terms and conditions of a certain promissory note of even date of this mortgage, in the words and figures following." The note was dated September 16, 1879, and was payable two years after date, "with interest thereon, in like gold coin, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from date, payable monthly until paid." An inspection of the transcript in the case shows that the mortgage contained no provision for foreclosure. It was said by this court, sitting in department: "By the terms of the mortgage the lien was to be foreclosed only when the principal sum named in the promissory note became due. The parties might have agreed that the mortgage should be foreclosable, to the extent of the interest due, whenever any installment should become due. But they have not so agreed in terms or by implication." And after rehearing in bank it was said: "Neither the note nor mortgage contains any agreement for foreclosure of the mortgage on default of the payment of interest. In the absence of such an agreement the mortgage cannot be foreclosed until the note shall become due." This decision does not seem to be in harmony with the general current of authority upon the subject; but, assuming it to be correct, it is not, as we think, in point here. In this case the mortgagor promises to pay the note "according to the terms and conditions thereof," and that, "in default of the payment of the note by its terms, the mortgagees might foreclose. The terms of the note were that the interest should be payable annually, and the principal at the end of five years. The words, 'by its terms,' cannot be construed to mean that there must be a default in the payment of the whole note, principal and interest, before a foreclosure can be had, but only that there must be some default in paying the note by or according to its terms. At the end of the first year the interest for that year became due and payable, and was a debt secured by the mortgage. Section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for an 'action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right, secured by mortgage,' and that 'in such actions the court may, by its judgment, direct a sale of the incumbered property,' and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of 'the amount due to the plaintiff.' And section 728 of the same Code provides: 'If the debt for which the mortgage, lien, or incumbrance is held is not all due, so soon as sufficient of the property has been sold to pay the amount due, with costs, the sale must cease; and afterwards, as often as more becomes due, for principal or interest, the court may, on motion, order more to be sold. But, if the property cannot be sold in portions without injury to the parties, the whole may be ordered to be sold in the first instance, and the entire debt and costs paid; there being a rebate of interest, where such rebate is proper.' In our opinion the plaintiffs were entitled to a foreclosure for the interest then due; but whether, under section 728 of the Code, above cited, they were entitled to all the relief asked, is a matter which must be determined by the court below on a rehearing of the case. We advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded.

I concur: HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 783)

LOS ANGELES CEMETERY ASS'N v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (No. 19,028.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1893.)

DEDICATION—WHAT CONSTITUTES — ACCEPTANCE.

1. In an action to quiet title to a strip of land, it appeared that plaintiff company filed for record a map of its land, platted as a cemetery, on which map the strip in question, 40 feet wide along the west side of the tract, was left blank, with an entrance indicated therefrom into the cemetery. Subsequently, in cutting the land up into cemetery lots, the company left another strip, 20 feet wide, adjoining the former strip, and the whole was known as "E. Avenue," which was used by the public for three years without objection. Held, that the facts showed an intention to dedicate the strip to the public for street purposes.

2. User by the public of a strip of land as a street for four years is sufficient to show acceptance of a previous offer to dedicate the land for street purposes.

Commissioners' decision. Department

1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by the Los Angeles Cemetery Association against the city of Los Angeles to quiet title. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Judson and M. C. Hester, for appellant. C. McFarland, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to quiet the plaintiff's title to a strip of land, 40 feet wide and 1,256 feet long, in the city of Los Angeles. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, from which, and from an order refusing a new trial, the plaintiff appeals. The facts found by the court are in substance as follows: On October 26, 1877, the plaintiff, a corporation, was the owner of a tract of land in the city of Los Angeles, which included the land in controversy, and on that day it filed for record a map of the tract, on which were delineated the usual plats and avenues of cemetery grounds, and along the southerly and westerly sides of which were left blank colored strips, 40 feet in width, the one on the southerly side being now a portion of First street, and the one on the westerly side being the land in controversy. The map also showed that the only entrance to the cemetery was from the strip in controversy, and that the strip opened out at one end into First street, and at the other end into Broderick avenue, public streets of the city. About the time of the filing of this map, plaintiff planted along the easterly and inner line of the street in controversy a hedge fence, leaving an opening therein where the entrance to the cemetery was located, and also planted pepper trees for a short distance on each side of such entrance, which hedge fence is still intact, and is now, and has been since the year 1885, a good and substantial fence. In 1885 plaintiff moved a fence which had been erected upon the outer or westerly line of the strip into the inner line thereof, and adjoining the hedge fence on the easterly side thereof. Some time about the year 1885, the lands adjoining the strip in controversy on the west side were laid out in lots, and spaces between them for streets, and among other spaces was one 20 feet in width, the full length of and adjoining the said strip, and making therewith a 60-foot strip, known as "Evergreen Avenue." Previous to and since 1885, plaintiff has sold to divers persons a great number of lots in its cemetery, and the only carriage entrance thereto fronts on the strip of land in dispute, about midway between the north and south ends thereof. Since the year 1885, the said strip of land has been continuously used and traveled by the public as a public street, which use has been with the knowledge and consent of plaintiffs. On December 15, 1890, the city council of the city of Los Angeles duly passed an ordinance accepting all streets theretofore dedicated, or offered to be dedicated, by property owners for public use. And, as conclusions of law, the court found that the said strip of land was a part and portion of a public street in the city of Los Angeles, known as "Evergreen Avenue;" that the plaintiff had no right to its possession; and that the defendant was entitled to its possession as a public street. Judgment was entered in accordance with these conclusions.

In support of the appeal it is claimed that the findings that the plaintiff moved the fence which had been erected along the westerly line of the disputed strip in the year 1885; that the lands adjoining the strip on the west were laid out in lots, etc., about the same year; and that since that year the said strip had been continuously used and traveled by the public as a public street,—were not justified by the evidence, in so far as the year named is concerned; and it is said that the evidence clearly shows that none of the acts referred to were done or commenced before the year 1887. It is admitted that the fence on the south side of the tract was removed in 1885, and there was some evidence that the fence on the west side was removed about the same time, and that the use of the strip for public travel commenced shortly after the fence was taken away. But whether the findings were right as to the year named or not is, in our opinion, not material. The only real question is, do the findings show a dedication of the strip, or offer to dedicate, for the purposes of a street, and an acceptance by the public? And if they do, it can make no difference whether the dedication or offer to dedicate was in 1885, or not till 1887.

It is further claimed that the first conclusion of law was erroneous, and not justified, for the reason that the plaintiff, having been organized as a corporation for cemetery purposes, "had no power, directly or indirectly, to dedicate its land to the public for street purposes." This claim is sufficiently met and answered by the decision of this court, reported in 95 Cal. 420, 30 Pac. Rep. 523. That case was between the same parties as this, and the question involved related to the dedication of the 40-foot strip along the south side of the plaintiff's track. It was held that the dedication was made and accepted, and that the strip formed a part of First street.

It is also claimed that, admitting an offer to dedicate was made by the plaintiff, still there was no direct finding, and no sufficient evidence to show, that the offer was ever accepted by the public. The court found, as we have seen, that, after the fence was removed, the strip was continuously used by the public as a public street, and with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff. The correctness of the finding in this respect is not questioned, nor could it be here, there being ample evidence to support it. The user then commenced as early at least as 1887, and was continued up to the time of the trial in 1891. This was sufficient to show an acceptance without the formal ordinance passed by the city council in 1890. The question of the admissibility of that ordinance in evidence need not therefore be specially considered.

Did, then, the plaintiff intend to dedicate the strip to the public for street purposes? It is true that the law is well settled in this state and elsewhere that, where there is no grant in writing, a dedication of land can only be established by proof of acts on the part of the owner which manifest clearly and unequivocally the intention of the owner to make such dedication; but, in our opinion, the probative facts found do show acts and conduct on the part of the plaintiff from which the ultimate fact that there was an intention to dedicate the strip must necessarily result. If not, why was the strip marked out on the map, extending the whole length of the tract, with an entrance therefrom into the part laid out for cemetery purposes? The surveyor who laid out the grounds and made the map says he was simply told to leave a 40-foot strip on the south and west sides, and "I supposed they were left for streets." And why did the owners of the adjacent land on the west leave an additional 20-foot strip? Judson, who had been president of the corporation, testified that he was one of such owners, and that they "left twenty feet along there for street purposes. There is a twenty-foot strip left there." So, after the hedge had been growing for 8 or 10 years, why was the fence removed, and the strip, in connection with the additional 20-foot strip, left open so that it could be used and traveled over by the public? And why was the public permitted to use the strips which had become known as "Evergreen Avenue" for more than three years at least without objection on the part of the plaintiff? It seems to us that these undisputed facts can be rationally accounted for only upon the theory that there was a clear intention to dedicate the strip for the purposes of a street.

The offer on the part of the plaintiff to prove that the fence was removed "because it had become out of repair, and for the purpose of using it in repairing the breaks in the hedge," does not require serious consideration. Surely, if the fence needed repairs, the repairs could have been made more cheaply and better where it had stood for 8 or 10 years than by moving the whole line of it a distance of about 40 feet; and if there were breaks in the hedge, which does not appear, they could have been protected by the fence in its original location, as they had been ever since the hedge was planted in 1878. We see no error in the ruling of the court upon this offer. It follows, in our opinion, that the conclusions of the court below were warranted, and were correct, and that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 788)

In re WILLIAMS' ESTATE. (No. 15,012.)

Appeal of MAGEE.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1893.)

SALE BY EXECUTOR UNDER POWER — CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE—APPEALABLE ORDER.

1. An executor, as devisee in trust, acting under the provisions of the will, sold property of the estate, and applied to the probate court for a confirmation. Plaintiff filed an advanced bid with the court, whereupon the executor conveyed the property to the first bidder. The court denied confirmation, and ordered and confirmed a sale to plaintiff, he paying the amount of his bid to the executor. The first bidder appealed from the order of confirmation, which was reversed. Plaintiff then filed a petition to compel the return from the estate to him of the money paid to the executor. Held, that plaintiff held no debt or claim against the estate.

2. An appeal cannot be taken to the supreme court from an order dismissing the petition, under Code Civil Proc. § 903, subd. 3, which provides for an appeal from a judgment or order refusing, allowing, or directing the payment of a debt or claim against an estate.

3. In such case plaintiff's remedy is in an action against the executor individually.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge. (Not to be published in California Reports.)

Proceeding by Thomas Magee against the executor of the estate of Thomas H. Williams to recover money paid. From an order dismissing the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Goodfellow, John A. Stanley, and George R. B. Hayes, for appellant. Adams & Adams, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from an order denying and dismissing the petition of appellant for an order that the executor of the estate of Thomas H. Williams restore to him $11,000 purchase money paid for the interest of the testator in certain real estate in pursuance of an order of the court confirming the sale. The executor filed a report of a sale made by him under a power of sale contained in the will. Appellant's agent and assignor thereupon filed in the probate court an advanced bid. The matter was postponed for some time, but the sale was finally confirmed to appellant's assignor, who thereupon paid $11,000—the amount of his bid—to the executor, who executed and delivered to him a deed in due form. By the will, the real estate had all been devised to the executor, in trust. After the advanced bid was filed, but before the confirmation of the sale to appellant's assignor, the executor, in his capacity of trustee, conveyed the property to the first bidder, who, after appellant had paid his money and had received his deed from the executor, appealed from the order of confirmation to this court. This court held (92 Cal. 183, 28 Pac. Rep. 227, 679) that under the circumstances the sale was properly made by the devisee in trust, and therefore reversed the order of confirmation. The remittitur having been filed in the court below, this petition was presented.

The respondent now makes the point that the order dismissing the petition is not appealable. I think the point well taken. If an appeal is allowed in such case, it must be on the ground that appellant has a claim or debt against the estate for the amount so paid to the executor, and that the order dismissing his petition is an order refusing to allow, or refusing to direct the payment of, a debt or claim, within the meaning of the third subdivision of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may well be doubted whether appellant's demand is a claim or debt against the estate in any sense. After the order of confirmation was reversed, and the property had been legally sold, and the proceeds accounted for to the estate, it is difficult to see how the executor can be made to account for this amount. But if we examine the section of the Code alluded to we shall find that it contains no general language giving this court jurisdiction of appeals from probate rulings, but the appellate jurisdiction is conferred by specially enumerating certain orders and judgments from which appeals may be taken. All refer to acts which the Code expressly authorizes, and very nearly in the order in which such action is likely to be taken in the course of administration. Such an enumeration is necessarily a limitation. The words "claim" and "debt" are used interchangeably in the Code, as in section 1497, Code Civil Proc., and elaborate provision is made, running through many sections, for their presentation, allowance, rejection, and finally for an order directing their payment. Section 1647 et seq. Manifestly, in the subdivision of section 963 reference is made to debts and claims which can be so allowed, rejected, or ordered paid. It will not be contended that the demand of petitioner is of that character, even if it be conceded that it is a demand against the estate. In the case of Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 487, 14 Pac. Rep. 35, it was held that a demand for an attorney's fee for services rendered the administrator was not a claim within the meaning of section 963, Code Civil Proc. In that case the appellate jurisdiction was sustained on the ground that the demand had in fact been presented and allowed, and therefore ranked among the acknowledged debts of the estate. The court said: "In this instance it is apparent the demand was presented, allowed, and ordered paid as a claim against the estate, to be paid, not as costs, but in the due course of administration. When so allowed, it became one of the 'acknowledged debts of the estate, to be paid in due course of administration.' Code Civil Proc. § 1497. When thus treated, an order for its payment was appealable, under section 963, supra." The order was held appealable as an order directing the payment of a debt. Whether it was thus rightly held to be a debt or not, in view of section 1643, Code Civil Proc., and other sections, may be doubted, but the case is express authority for the proposition that to authorize an appeal under section 963 the order allowing, refusing to allow, or directing the payment of a debt refers to debts and claims, which by the Code are expressly mentioned as debts to be allowed, rejected, or ordered paid. Courts may always order the expense of managing trust funds paid from the estate held by the trustee. The debts of an estate, which include all other payments authorized, are classified in section 1643, Code Civil Proc. The debt of appellant—if it be one—is not included in that section, unless in the fifth class, which supposition would be absurd. The word "claim" is applied to a demand against an estate, in the Code, after it has been allowed as well as before. Sections 1636, 1645, 1649. In section 1636 it is provided that an heir may contest a claim against an estate upon final settlement of the account of the administrator or executor. If this be a claim against the estate, it should not be ordered paid until the final settlement, after the heirs or devisees have had an opportunity to contest the appellant's right to it. Whether the payment was voluntary or not raises a question not passed upon by this court on the former appeal.

Whether the probate court had jurisdiction to confirm the sale or not, the money is not now held by the executor for the estate. To recover it from him by suit it would not be necessary to make the estate a party. Any property in the hands of the executor, which is not a legal asset, may be recovered by the rightful owner, without presenting a claim against the estate. So held in People v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 348, Gunter v. Janes, 9 Cal. 643; Myers v. Reinsteint, 67 Cal. 89, 7 Pac. Rep. 192; In re Allgier, 65 Cal. 228, 3 Pac. Rep. 849; Stanwood v. Sage, 22 Cal. 517. The decisions seem to be uniform upon this point. Property, though lawfully possessed by the administrator as assets, may be recovered in an action against him individually by one who asserts title adverse to the estate. Merrick's Estate, 8 Watts & S. 402; Beach v. Forsyth, 14 Barb. 499. At first impression, Vallengin v. Duffy, 14 Pet. 282, may seem to be an authority to the effect that a claimant may elect to sue the administrator individually or in his representative capacity. Decedent had been vested by the claimant with the legal title to personal property, which was afterwards taken from him wrongfully. After his death his administrator recovered the value of it. The claimant sued to recover the money. Pending the suit the administrator died. The question was whether the suit could be continued against the administrator de bonis non. It was held that it could be, on the ground that the money constituted assets of the estate, and that the administrator de bonis non could recover it as such from the estate of the administrator. It was said the defendant would not be held liable unless he so recovered it, or failed through his neglect. After all, then, it was against the administrator individually, and the decision is in accord with those quoted from this state. A trustee cannot make the estate liable for his own wrongful act. Suppose the executor had absconded with the money, could it then have been recovered from the estate? Are the beneficiaries of a trust sureties for their trustee? They did not procure the erroneous order. Evidently the mere custody of the funds would not make the beneficiaries of the trust responsible. To hold them it must not only appear that it came to the hands of their trustee, but that it has been actually paid to them, or used for the benefit of their estate. There is no mode in which an action could be brought against the estate upon this demand. Section 1500, Code Civil Proc. No mode is provided in which it could be paid in course of administration. Unless, therefore, it be a claim which could be enforced against the executor individually, the claimant has no remedy. The only ground upon which it could be plausibly argued that the court had the power to grant the relief prayed for is that the executor is an officer of the court. This is suggested in the briefs, but, if that be the basis of the power to grant the petition, this order is not appealable. I think the appeal should be dismissed.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ.
For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal is dismissed.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment. The order from which this appeal is taken is not appealable.

(97 Cal. 296)

RALPHS v. HENSLER et al. (No. 19,012.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1893.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—RATIFICATION—EVIDENCE —ACTION BY EXECUTOR—WHEN MAINTAINABLE —JUDICIAL NOTICE.

1. In an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by M. as defendant's attorney, defendant answered that the power of attorney given by her to M. did not give authority to execute mortgages or notes; and also that M., as her agent, and on her behalf, made a written agreement with the mortgagee, whereby he agreed to extend the time of payment of the sums mentioned in the mortgage on certain conditions; that as her agent, and on her behalf, M. had performed those conditions, and that by reason thereof the mortgage did not become due till after the commencement of the action. Held that, in the absence of evidence that defendant ever repudiated the execution of the notes or mortgage by M., her averment that she authorized the procurement of the agreement for the extension of time was prima facie sufficient evidence of her ratification of such execution.

2. Whether or not the power of attorney was sufficiently specific to authorize the execution of the notes and mortgage, it was admissible to strengthen the other evidence of a ratification by showing the relation between defendant and M.

3. An action to foreclose a mortgage, brought by an alleged executor of the mortgagee, cannot be maintained when there is no evidence as to when the mortgagee died, or to prove that his will, if he made one, was ever admitted to probate, that letters testamentary were ever issued to plaintiff, or that he was in any way qualified to act as executor.

4. A court's judicial knowledge does not extend to the contents of its records in former actions.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by George A. Ralphs, executor of Kimball Hardy, deceased, against Mrs. L. E. Hensler and J. Irving Weed, to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Hensler appeals. Reversed.

Willis & Appel, for appellant. Jones & Carlton, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage on defendant Hensler's real property, given to secure the payment of three several promissory notes. It is alleged in the complaint that the notes and mortgage were executed by defendant Hensler to Kimball Hardy in his lifetime, (on July 9, 1887;) that on or about February 16, 1889, Hardy died; that his will was admitted to probate on March 12, 1889; that letters testamentary were duly issued to plaintiff on March 18, 1889; and thereupon, that the plaintiff duly qualified and entered upon his duties as such executor. By her answer the defendant Hensler specifically denied each of the above allegations. Weed, who was made a party defendant on the ground that he had or claimed some interest in the mortgaged property, failed to answer, and his default was duly entered. The court found upon all the issues in favor of plaintiff, and decreed a sale of the mortgaged property in the usual form, ordering that a judgment be docketed against the defendant Hensler for any deficiency of the proceeds of the sale to pay the amount found due on the notes. The defendant Hensler appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

When the notes and mortgage were offered in evidence they were objected to by defendant on the ground that they appeared to have been executed through the agency of James P. McCarthy, as attorney in fact, being signed as follows: "Mrs. L. E. Hensler by her attorney in fact, James P. McCarthy." To prove the authority of McCarthy the plaintiff then offered the following instrument, the execution of which in the state of New York was properly attested: "Know all men by these presents that I, Mrs. L. E. Hensler, of the state of New York, have made, constituted, and appointed, and by these presents do hereby make, constitute, and appoint, James P. McCarthy, of the city and county of Los Angeles, and state of California, my true and lawful attorney for me and in my name, place, and stead, in all transactions of whatsoever nature which may effect any property situate in the said state of California which I may now hold, or which I may hold at any time hereafter; giving and granting unto my said attorney full power and authority to do and perform all and every act and thing whatsoever requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises, as fully to all intents and purposes as I might or could do if personally present, and hereby ratifying and confirming all that my said attorney, James P. McCarthy, shall lawfully do or cause to be done by virtue of these presents. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal the 19th day of February, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven. [Seal.] Mrs. L. E. Hensler." This instrument was objected to on the ground that it conferred no authority to make the notes, nor to mortgage defendant's real property. To obviate this objection, the plaintiff claimed that the acts of McCarthy in making the notes and executing the mortgage had been ratified by defendant on the 28th day of December, 1888, and that such ratification was shown by the following paragraph of defendant's answer: "And for another, further, and separate defense to said action defendant alleges that prior to the commencement of this action, to wit, on December the 20th, 1888, Kimball Hardy, the deceased named in plaintiff's complaint, for a valuable consideration paid to him by James P. McCarthy, as agent of and for and on behalf of defendant, agreed to and with said McCarthy for and on behalf of this defendant that he would extend the time for the payment of the sum of money mentioned in said promissory notes and mortgage to May the 1st, 1890, upon payment to said party by said McCarthy for and on behalf of this defendant, each two months after said agreement was executed, of the accrued interest on the said mortgage and notes, and which then and there amounted to $860 given with said interest. That defendant is informed and believes that her said agent, James P. McCarthy, acting for her and on her behalf, has well and truly performed the conditions of said agreement, and the terms thereof, for and on behalf of this defendant, and has fully paid and satisfied, as defendant is informed and believes, all of the said payments and interest within the time required to be paid in said agreement aforesaid. That by reason thereof the said notes and mortgage became due and payable on May the 1st, 1890, and after the commencement of the said action." The court overruled defendant's objection, and admitted the power of attorney, notes, and mortgage, as evidence; to all which defendant excepted.

1. Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting the power of attorney, notes, and mortgage; and also contends that the finding that defendant executed the notes and mortgage is not justified by the evidence. Conceding, without deciding, that the power of attorney was not sufficiently specific to authorize the execution of the notes and mortgage, yet defendant was not injured by the rulings of the court excepted to, if she had ratified the acts of McCarthy in executing the notes and mortgage; since such ratification was equivalent to original authority, and justified the finding that defendant executed the notes and mortgage. I think the paragraph of defendant's answer above quoted, and the deposition of McCarthy to the same effect, substantially tend to prove the ratification claimed. They show that in the lifetime of Kimball Hardy the defendant knew that the notes and mortgage had been executed and remained unpaid. In her answer she alleges that "McCarthy as agent of and for and on behalf of defendant," made a written agreement with Hardy, whereby he agreed to extend the time of payment "of the sums of money mentioned in said promissory notes and mortgage to May the 1st, 1890," on certain conditions; that, as her agent, and on her behalf, McCarthy had performed those conditions; and "that by reason thereof the said notes and mortgage became due and payable on May the 1st, 1890, and after the commencement of the said action." The alleged agreement is attached to McCarthy's deposition, and is as follows: "Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 29, 1888. Received from James P. McCarthy, agent, the sum of fifty dollars, to apply on interest on mortgage of Mrs. L. E. Hensler, now all due; the said mortgage being given to secure balance of payment on the five acres sold James P. McCarthy off from my place on south side of Pico street, 'Arlington Heights,' and for value received, to wit, above payment. I agree to extend time for the payment of the said mortgage to May 1, 1890, upon payment each two months hereafter of the accrued interest on the said mortgage notes, now amounting to $860.00 balance. [Seal.] Kimball Hardy. James P. McCarthy, witness." There was no evidence tending to disprove the genuineness of this writing, or the signature of Hardy; but the testimony of McCarthy that the interest had been paid was disputed by the testimony of the plaintiff. But for the purpose of the question now being considered (that of ratification) it is immaterial whether the defendant paid the interest or not, for, whether she complied with the conditions upon which Hardy agreed to extend the time of payment or not, her averment, in her answer, that she authorized the procurement of the agreement for the extension of time, in the absence of evidence that she ever repudiated the execution of the notes or mortgage by her assumed agent, is prima facie sufficient evidence of her ratification of such execution. In Taylor v. Association, 68 Ala. 229, Brickell, C. J., said: "We do not mean that it was shown that there was assent to and confirmation of the transaction expressed in words. That is not essential, for ratification is more often implied from the acts and conduct of parties having an election to avoid or confirm than expressed in words; and it is implied whenever the acts and conduct of the principal, having full knowledge of the fact, are inconsistent with any other supposition than that of previous authority, or an intention to abide by the act though it was unauthorized." See, also, Mechem, Ag. §§ 146-157. I think the power of attorney was admissible as a circumstance tending at least to strengthen the other evidence of a ratification, by showing the relation between defendant and McCarthy. It showed that McCarthy was not a stranger to defendant; that he was authorized to act as her attorney to some extent in regard to all her real property in this state, even though he may not have been authorized to mortgage it. "All the authorities," says Mr. Mechem, (section 160,) "agree that the relations of the parties have much to do in determining whether or not there has been a ratification." Where an authorized agent transcends his authority, the liability of the principal to be held to have ratified the unauthorized acts by mere acquiescence is much greater than it would be in case an utter stranger had assumed to act as agent without any authority for any purpose whatever; because, "in general, where an agent is authorized to do an act, and he transcends his authority, it is the duty of the principal to repudiate the act as soon as he is fully informed of what has been thus done in his name, * * * else he will be bound by the act as having ratified it by implication." Ward v. Williams, 26 Ill. 447. But where an utter stranger assumes to act as agent, without any authority for any purpose, the assumed principal is not required to repudiate so promptly, in order to repel the charge of having ratified the unauthorized acts by acquiescence; since in the latter case the assumed agent bears no ostensible relation as agent to the person for whom he assumes to act, and therefore third persons are not so liable to be deceived by his pretensions, it being their own fault if they deal with him as agent without some apparent evidence of his authority. And since the undisputed evidence made a prima facie case of ratification, the finding that the notes and mortgage were executed by defendant was thereby justified, the ratification being equivalent to original authority.

2. Appellant further contends that the evidence does not justify the findings that Hardy died before the commencement of this action, that his will was admitted to probate, that letters testamentary were issued to the plaintiff, or that plaintiff ever qualified to act as executor. I think these points should be sustained. While the evidence tends to show that Hardy died before the trial of the action, it does not show when he died. There is no evidence tending to prove that his will (if he made a will) was ever admitted to probate, or that letters testamentary were ever issued to plaintiff, or that plaintiff was in any way qualified to act as executor. It is not claimed by counsel for respondent that there was any evidence of these alleged facts; but it is claimed that the court took judicial notice of them, inasmuch as the probate proceedings in the matter of the estate of Hardy were in the same court. In the first place, there is no evidence of any such proceedings in any court; and, in the second place, it is too clear to admit of question that the judicial knowledge of the court does not extend to the contents of its records in former actions or proceedings. I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment and in the foregoing opinion. The amended complaint is defective, as the mortgage therein referred to is not set out in terms or according to its legal effect, nor does the amended complaint contain any description of the property described in the mortgage. The allegation of the amended complaint as to the mortgage is that a copy of "said mortgage, with the indorsements thereon, is annexed to the original complaint herein, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this complaint." This is not sufficient. Records and papers cannot be made a part of a pleading by referring to them in this manner.

3 Cal. Unrep. 792
SAN DIEGO FLUME CO. v. CHASE. (No. 19,083.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1893.)

CONTRACTS—PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN.

Where a contract has been interpreted on an appeal to this court, such contract is not ambiguous or uncertain, and on a new trial parol evidence cannot be introduced to show the intention of the parties, under Civil Code, § 1649, and Code Civil Proc. § 1864, authorizing parol evidence in cases of doubtful and ambiguous contracts; for these sections do not apply when the courts are able to declare the true intent of the parties.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by the San Diego Flume Company against Levi Chase for the reformation of a contract. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For prior reports, see 25 Pac. Rep. 756, and 26 Pac. Rep. 825.

Levi Chase and Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for appellant. Shaw & Holland, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is an appeal from the judgment, with a bill of exceptions, and is the second appeal in the case. See 87 Cal. 561, 25 Pac. Rep. 756, and 26 Pac. Rep. 825. The nature of the case, and most of the facts necessary for understanding it, are there stated. As stated, the action was brought to have a contract reformed to accord with the alleged intention of the parties, which, it was averred, was to sell $2\frac{1}{4}$ inches of water, miners' measure, under a 4-inch pressure, whereas, by the fraud of defendant, the contract was so drawn as to entitle defendant to all the water which would run through two connections of a 2-inch iron pipe, entering the side of plaintiff's flume near the bottom, to be carried through $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch standard pipes. The defendant answered, and filed a cross complaint asking for a specific performance of the agreement, and a restoration of the pipes which had been removed by plaintiff, etc. Upon the first trial he had judgment, and the plaintiff appealed to this court, when it was held that the contract meant, and could only mean, without rendering some part of it inoperative, that "two and one quarter inches of water, miners' measure, under a four-inch pressure, it is the privilege of the defendant to take and distribute daily, as he pleases, over his land, through his pipe system attached to plaintiff's flume." It was also said of the two provisions, one in regard to the pipes, and the other in regard to the quantity of water: "The one clause refers to the amount of water to be taken; the other, to the manner of taking." After the remittitur was filed in the lower court, the defendant, on due notice, asked leave of the court to amend his cross complaint by adding thereto an allegation to the effect that at the time the contract was executed both parties understood, and plaintiff knew that defendant understood, that the true interpretation of the contract was that defendant was entitled to have all the water he might need for uses specified, and might draw from the pipes, regardless of the amount that might be required, and was not limited to $2\frac{1}{4}$ inches mentioned as a water right. Leave to so amend was refused, and defendant excepted. Evidence was offered at the trial to prove the facts stated in the proposed amendment. The evidence was rejected, and defendant again excepted. Whether these rulings were correct is the question on this appeal.

These rulings are attacked as a violation of section 1649¹ of the Civil Code, and section 1864² of the Code of Civil Procedure. These two sections seem intended to accomplish the same purpose, although expressed in different words; and if they authorize the introduction of parol evidence to ascertain the intention of the parties, where the contract is ambiguous or uncertain, this does not mean whenever the proper interpretation of a contract is a difficult matter, or one about which men may differ. They are qualified by section 1639 of the Civil Code and section 1859 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If, after a full consideration, with a full knowledge of the surrounding circumstances, the court is able to declare with certainty what the intention of the parties was, from the writing itself, no matter how difficult the task may be, it is not ambiguous or uncertain, within the meaning of the rule, and the court cannot, as it is said, travel outside the four corners of the instrument. That the instrument in question here can be so interpreted is manifest from the fact that its meaning was clearly ascertained and determined by this court. That counsel have held different views, or courts have otherwise decided, or have held divers views upon the subject, does not tend even to establish such ambiguity or uncertainty. No matter how much this court may have doubted what the true construction ought to be, if finally satisfied that the intent can be certainly ascertained from the writing, parol evidence cannot be introduced, as to the intention of the parties, on the ground that its terms are ambiguous or uncertain.

I concur: VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

97 Cal. 292

HARRIS v. FOSTER. (No. 19,104.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1893.)

MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—LEASE OF PROPERTY BY MORTGAGOR—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER AT SALE.

1. Where the owner of land mortgages it, and, after a judgment of foreclosure, leases it for five months, and receives the rent in advance, the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, after the time of redemption expires, can compel the tenant to pay again the rent accruing after the foreclosure sale, when his mortgage is recorded, since the case is not governed by Civil Code, § 1111, providing that no tenant who, before notice of grant, shall have paid rent to the grantor, shall suffer any damage thereby, but by Code Civil Proc. § 707, providing that the purchaser from the date of the sale until redemption shall be entitled to receive the rents from the tenant in possession.

2. Where, in such case, the tenant holds over, he does not cease to be a tenant in possession, or acquire any right to use the purchaser's property without paying for it.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by Harris against Foster to recover for use and occupation of land. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. F. Thomas, for appellant. A. C. Freeman, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. On March 12, 1888, L. D. Stone and his daughter Harriet each owned an undivided half of the Sisquoc rancho in Santa Barbara county. Upon that day the father mortgaged his interest therein to the plaintiff in this action. In ²Code Civil Proc. § 1864, provides: "When the terms of an agreement have been intended in a different sense by the different parties to it, that sense is to prevail, against either party, in which he supposed the other understood it, and, when different constructions of a provision are otherwise equally proper, that is to be taken which is most favorable to the party in whose favor the provision was made."

¹Civil Code, § 1649, provides: "If the terms of a promise are in any respect ambiguous or uncertain, it must be interpreted in the sense in which the promisor believed, at the time of making it, that the promisee understood it."

January, 1890, the plaintiff commenced an action to foreclose this mortgage, and at the same time filed and recorded a notice of the pendency thereof. Stone was thereafter declared insolvent, and one Bush was appointed his assignee, and as such was made a party to the foreclosure suit. Judgment of foreclosure was entered in that action September 1, 1890, and, two days thereafter, Bush, the assignee of Stone, and F. W. Burke, as the guardian of Stone's daughter Harriet, executed to the defendant a lease of lots 4 and 6 of the Sisquoc ranch, giving him the right to pasture his stock thereon from that date until January 1, 1891; and the defendant went into possession under his lease, paying the rent in advance, in accordance with its terms, and occupied the premises until February 1, 1891, and thereafter until April 1, 1891, under an agreement made with the guardian of Harriet Stone, as to her undivided interest therein. On October 6, 1890, the land described in the mortgage made by Stone to the plaintiff was sold under the judgment of foreclosure, and the plaintiff became the purchaser at such sale; and, as there was a failure to redeem from this sale, he received the sheriff's deed therefor April 14, 1891. This action was brought to recover from the defendant, as tenant in possession, one half the value of the use and occupation of the property from the date of the sale under the judgment of foreclosure until April 1, 1891. The court below found the facts as above stated, and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for one half the value of the use and occupation of the land from the date of his purchase until February 1, 1891; the value of its use during the time it was occupied by defendant under the lease made to him on September 3, 1890, by the assignee of Stone and the guardian of Harriet Stone, being the amount reserved in that lease. The defendant appeals, and claims that the findings do not sustain the judgment appealed from.

1. The defendant contends that as he leased the land before it was purchased by the plaintiff at the foreclosure sale, and paid to the then owners the rent in advance for the whole term, in accordance with the agreement contained in the lease, he is not liable to the plaintiff, as successor in interest of one of his lessors, for any portion of the value of his use and occupation of the premises under that lease; and, to sustain this position, defendant cites section 1111 of the Civil Code, which is as follows: "Grants of rents or of reversions or of remainders are good and effectual without attornments of the tenants; but no tenant who, before notice of the grant, shall have paid rent to the grantor, must suffer any damage hereby." The language of the section just quoted is plain, and, as held in the case of Dreyfus v. Hirt, 82 Cal. 621, 23 Pac. Rep. 193, the last clause thereof affords "protection to the tenant who pays rent to his landlord before notice of the grant of the reversion;" but it has no application to the facts as presented here. Not only was the mortgage of plaintiff on record, but a judgment foreclosing it, as against one of defendant's lessors, had been entered before the defendant obtained his lease or paid any rent thereunder.

This being so, it must be held that the defendant was not without notice of the rights of plaintiff under his mortgage and the judgment foreclosing it; but, on the contrary, that he accepted the lease, and paid the rent, with knowledge that plaintiff then had the right to have an undivided half of the land so leased sold to satisfy the judgment of foreclosure, and that "the purchaser, from the date of the sale until a redemption," would be "entitled to receive from the tenant in possession the rents of the property, or the value of the use and occupation thereof." Code Civil Proc. § 707. The plaintiff having become the purchaser of the land, under a decree foreclosing a mortgage made long before the date of defendant's lease, and of which mortgage the defendant had notice, it is no defense to this action that defendant paid the rent in advance. The lessor, to whose title plaintiff has succeeded, was not entitled to the rent accruing, or to the value of the use and occupation of the property, subsequent to the sale under the judgment of foreclosure, unless such lessor effected a redemption from the sale; and the payment of rent for the period extending beyond the date of such sale was made by defendant at his peril. This necessarily results from the well-established rule that a subsequent grant or lease of mortgaged premises is subject to the prior mortgage, if the purchaser or lessee had either actual or constructive notice of such mortgage. If the law were otherwise, it would be in the power of the mortgagor to materially diminish the value of the mortgaged property, as security for the debt for which the mortgage was given, by simply leasing it for a long period and collecting the rent in advance, or by leasing it for such period for a nominal rent. It was held in the case of McDevitt v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 593, in accordance with the views we have here expressed, that where the owner of mortgaged premises leases the same for a term of years, and the rent is paid in advance by the tenant, the purchaser under the mortgage sale can require the tenant to pay the rent over again. We think the court below was clearly right in holding that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for his proportion of the value of the use and occupation of the premises during the time defendant was in possession under the lease made to him by Stone's assignee and the guardian of the other cotenant.

2. The defendant continued in possession for one month after the expiration of the lease just referred to, and the court below found the value of the use and occupation for that period to be $100, and also gave judgment against defendant for one half that sum. This ruling of the court was right. The defendant did not, by holding over, cease to be a tenant in possession, or acquire any right to use the plaintiff's property without paying for it.

As to the other points made by appellant, it is only necessary to say that the findings are within the issues made by the pleadings, and fully sustain the judgment. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(97 Cal. 280)

COALTER v. HURST. (No. 14,961.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1893.)

APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS.

Where, in an action to recover for services, payment is averred as a defense, plaintiff may show that defendant was indebted to him on other transactions had between them prior to the performance of the services, and that the money so paid was not in settlement of any specific demand, and, if there is nothing to show the date at which such payment was made, the court will presume that it was in extinguishment of the obligations maturing prior to the debt due for services, and apply such payment thereon; Civil Code, § 1479, providing that where a debtor owing several debts makes a payment which is applicable to either of them, and indicates no intention as to which debt it shall be applied, such payment must be applied to the one earliest in date of maturity.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John F. Finn, Judge.

Action by Coalter against Hurst to recover for services performed by him for defendant. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Taylor & Craig, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The statement of the account between the parties upon all of their transactions with each other which the court made in its findings was not a finding upon issues not presented by the pleadings, but was a direct finding upon the issue of payment presented by the defendant's answer. The defendant had alleged in his answer that he had fully paid for the services for which the plaintiff brought the action. Under this averment he showed that he had paid to the plaintiff various sums of money, amounting in other aggregate to more than the court found to be the value of the services; but, as the plaintiff had alleged in his complaint that he had not been paid for his services, there was an issue upon this averment, and the plaintiff was at liberty to show that the moneys had in fact been paid upon other transactions. The court, in its findings, stated the account between the parties, and in effect found that $1,090 of the amounts paid by the defendant was upon other transactions, $800 of which was for moneys that had been received by the defendant from the plaintiff before any services were rendered. As the defendant did not make application of any of the moneys paid by him to a discharge of his obligation for the services rendered by the plaintiff, or to any specific demand of the plaintiff, the court was at liberty to apply them to the extinction of the obligations earliest in date of maturity, (Civil Code, § 1479, subd. 3, par. 3;)¹ and, as the record does not disclose the dates at which the respective payments were made, we may assume that it appeared from the evidence that all of the obligations matured prior to those dates, and that the court applied the payments thereon. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 795)

KLAUBER et al. v. VIGNERON et al. (No. 14,869.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1893.)

CONVEYANCE IN CONSIDERATION OF MARRIAGE — VALIDITY—MORTGAGES.

1. A conveyance by the owner of mortgaged premises, in consideration of marriage and money received, of his interest in the premises, to his intended wife, is valid.

2. Where such mortgagor, after marriage, substitutes for the previous mortgage, which is canceled, one of larger amount, the last-named mortgage is void.

3. If the mortgagee is entitled to any relief, he should declare on the previous mortgage, and ask to have the satisfaction set aside on the ground that it was made through mistake, accident, or fraud.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by A. Klauber and another, partners as Klauber & Levi, against George Vigneron and another, and Joanna Vigneron, to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiffs. Joanna Vigneron appeals. Reversed.

Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for appellant. A. E. Cochran, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. The material facts of this case are as follows: On December 16, 1887, the defendant George Vigneron executed to John A. Watson his promissory note for $300, and a mortgage to secure its payment on certain real property which he then owned. This note and mortgage were subsequently assigned to the plaintiffs. On January 26, 1888, Vigneron executed to the plaintiffs his promissory note for $700, due one year after date, and a mortgage to secure its payment on the same real property. On July 16, 1888, Vigneron, for the expressed consideration of one dollar, executed, acknowledged, and delivered to Joanna Ford a deed conveying to her the mortgaged property, which deed was duly filed for record on October 1, 1888, and was thereafter duly recorded. On July 17, 1888, Vigneron and Joanna Ford were married, and have ever since been husband and wife. On May 7, 1889, Vigneron executed to the plaintiffs his promissory note for $1,200, due six months after date, and a mortgage to secure its payment on the same real property mortgaged and conveyed as before stated; and on the same day the plaintiffs marked "paid" their $700 note, and delivered it to the maker, and also satisfied of record the mortgage given to secure its payment. On January 1, 1890, Vigneron and his wife, Joanna, executed to C. H. Hill their promissory note for $3,500, due one year after date, and a mortgage to secure its payment on the same real property.

¹Civil Code, § 1479, provides that when a debtor, under several obligations to another, does an act by way of performance, in whole or in part, which is equally applicable to two or more such obligations, and it does not appear that the debtor intended to apply such performance to the extinguishment of any particular obligation, it must be applied to the obligation earliest in date of maturity.

Each of the before-mentioned mortgages was duly recorded on the day or the day after its date. On June 27, 1890, the plaintiffs commenced this action to foreclose their $300 and $1,200 mortgages; and Vigneron, Mrs. Vigneron, and Hill were made parties defendant. The complaint, among other things, alleged that the $1,200 mortgage "was given in lieu of, and substitution of, and in renewal of" the $700 mortgage which had been satisfied, and that neither of said mortgages had been paid; and that Mrs. Vigneron claimed an interest in the mortgaged property by virtue of the conveyance to her of July 16, 1888, but that the said deed was accepted by the grantee "with full knowledge of the existence of said debt, and of its nonpayment," and her interest or claim was subsequent to the lien of the plaintiffs' mortgage. And the prayer was that plaintiffs have judgment for the amounts due for principal and interest on the $300 and $1,200 notes, together with attorneys' fees and costs; that the deed from George Vigneron to Joanna Ford be ordered delivered up, and canceled, and that plaintiffs be subrogated to the rights of the payees of the $700 note; that the mortgaged land be decreed to be subject to and sold under the $1,200 mortgage, and that the proceeds of the sale be applied in payment of the amount due the plaintiffs; that the defendants, and all persons claiming under them, be barred and foreclosed of all rights and claims in and to the said premises, and every part thereof; and that the plaintiffs have judgment and execution against George Vigneron for any deficiency, etc. George Vigneron failed to answer, and judgment was rendered against him by default. Mrs. Vigneron answered, and admitted that she claimed an interest in the mortgaged premises under and by virtue of the conveyance made to her on July 16, 1888; denied that her interest in the premises was subject to the lien of plaintiffs' $1,200 mortgage, but, on the contrary, averred that it was prior and paramount to said mortgage; denied that said deed was made or accepted by her with any knowledge of the existence of the said debt, or its nonpayment; and, upon information and belief, denied that the $1,200 mortgage was given in lieu of, substitution of, or renewal of the $700 mortgage; and also, in like manner, denied that the last-named mortgage had not been paid. Hill answered, making substantially the same denials and averments as are made by Mrs. Vigneron in her answer, and then, by way of cross complaint, set up his note and mortgage, and asked for a foreclosure. The case was tried, and the court found the facts as to the notes and mortgages, the conveyance, and the marriage of defendants, to be as before stated. It also found that the $1,200 mortgage was given in lieu of, substitution of, and as renewal of the $700 mortgage, and that all the allegations and averments of the plaintiffs' complaint were true, and all the denials and allegations of the defendants' answer were untrue. It further found the amount due Hill upon his note and mortgage.

And as conclusions of law it found, among other things, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief sought under the note and mortgage for $1,200, to the extent of the amount due upon the note and mortgage for $700, with interest thereon to the date of the decree, making in all $965.08, for which amount plaintiffs had a priority of lien over the claims of defendants Hill and Joanna Vigneron. A decree was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiffs, and from that decree, and an order denying her motion for a new trial, Mrs. Vigneron appeals.

When the deed of July 16, 1888, was executed, the parties to it intended to be, and were in fact, married on the next day. The consideration for the deed, as stated therein, was one dollar, but the real consideration, as shown by the uncontradicted testimony, was the proposed marriage, and about $1,000 in money advanced and paid by the grantee to the grantor. Marriage alone is a good and sufficient consideration for an antenuptial settlement, and such a settlement will not be set aside, in the absence of the clearest proof of fraud, participated in by both parties. Prewitt v. Wilson, 103 U. S. 22. The deed was therefore not a fraudulent transfer, and the contention of respondents on this point cannot be sustained.

When the deed was delivered and accepted, it operated to vest the title to the premises conveyed in the grantee, subject, of course, to any valid subsisting liens thereon; and the grantor had thereafter no power to convey, mortgage, or incur the same. As said in Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 20, after citing numerous authorities, the cases "establish the principle that after a conveyance of the mortgaged premises, or the transfer of an interest therein, the mortgagor has no power to create, revive, renew, or prolong a charge upon the premises, or interest therein, so conveyed or transferred, while such interest remains in another party." The mortgage to secure the $1,200 note was therefore void; and whether or not it was given in lieu of, substitution of, and in renewal of the $700 note and mortgage, is a matter entirely immaterial for the purposes of this case. If the plaintiffs were entitled to any relief by reason of the last-named mortgage, they should have declared upon it, and asked to have the satisfaction set aside upon the ground that it was made by or through mistake, accident, or fraud. The judgment rendered upon the $1,200 mortgage cannot be sustained; and we advise, therefore, that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend their complaint, if so advised.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend their complaint, if so advised.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 803)

TOWNSEND v. BRIGGS. (No. 14,889.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 21, 1893.)

DAMAGES FOR PERSONAL INJURIES — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS—EXAMINATION OF WITNESS—NEW TRIAL—PREJUDICE OF JURORS.

1. In an action for personal injuries it appeared that plaintiff entered defendant's shop and was ordered out; that, as plaintiff stepped back to the door, defendant struck him several times on the head with a mallet and with his fist, which caused plaintiff to fall on a cutting machine, and injure his left arm so that it had to be amputated. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff was justified by the evidence.

2. In such action, a verdict of $9,000 was not so excessive as to show bias or prejudice.

3. It was not prejudicial error to allow plaintiff to answer the preliminary question: "You may state whether or not you have ever received any injury caused by * * * defendant," when there follows, without objection, a narration of how the injury was received, and what was said and done by defendant.

4. It was proper to allow plaintiff to testify that he had formerly lost two fingers on his right hand, and to show his hand to the jury, since they should know to what extent the loss of his left arm had deprived him of his earning power.

5. It was proper for plaintiff's physician to testify that he told plaintiff of his condition, and that it was necessary to amputate his arm; since the mental suffering resulting therefrom was attributable to defendant, if he was the cause of the injury.

6. Where a life insurance agent was called to testify that the mortuary tables in an encyclopedia are in general use, and was not asked on his examination in chief to whom the tables applied, but stated on cross-examination that they applied only to insurable persons, it was not proper cross-examination to ask him "what insurable persons are."

7. Defendant's questions: "Do you know his [plaintiff's] habits as to sobriety?" and "Do you know what his reputation is for sobriety?" were incompetent, as they called for the witnesses' knowledge at the time of the trial, which was two years after the injury was received.

8. In such action it was proper to charge that, "if the jury find from the evidence that defendant, from malicious motives, and a wrongful disregard of" plaintiff's rights, "assaulted him and beat him wrongfully," and plaintiff was injured, "directly or approximately, then plaintiff is entitled to recover all damages he has suffered thereby," and the amount of damages is for the jury alone to determine.

9. Where a new trial was asked for because two of the jurors were prejudiced against defendant, and affidavits are read as to statements made by the jurors showing their prejudice, which statements are denied by the jurors in counter affidavits, the action of the court in denying the new trial will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by Charles Townsend against J. S. Briggs for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brousseau & Thomas, (Blackstock & Shepherd, of counsel,) for appellant. Barnes & Selby and H. L. Poplin, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff. It is alleged in the complaint that on the 18th day of June, 1889, at San Buenaventura, in this state, the defendant wrongfully, wantonly, and maliciously assaulted the plaintiff, struck him several blows on the head with a mallet, and also with his fist, and beat, pushed, and knocked him over upon the knife of an apricot pitting machine, and thereby cut, bruised, and injured his head and left arm; that by reason of the injuries so received plaintiff lost his left arm, it being necessary to amputate the same above the elbow, and he was caused to suffer great bodily pain and mental agony, and was permanently disabled from doing any work or business, to his damage in the sum of $20,000, for which he asked judgment. The answer denied all the averments of the complaint, and alleged that the injuries complained of were received by the plaintiff through his own wrongful acts, carelessness, and negligence, while he was willfully and unlawfully trespassing upon the property of defendant, and not by or through any wrongful act of defendant. On the first trial of the case a verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff for $500 damages. A motion for new trial was made by the plaintiff and granted by the court, and on appeal to this court the order was affirmed. Townsend v. Briggs, 88 Cal. 230, 26 Pac. Rep. 108. On the second trial, 11 special interrogatories were submitted to the jury and answered in favor of the plaintiff. A general verdict was also returned awarding the plaintiff ¹Rehearing granted.

$9,000 damages, for which sum judgment was entered. From this judgment, and an order denying his motion for new trial, the present appeal is prosecuted by defendant.

It was proved that defendant and one Leach had a shop in San Buenaventura, in which they were manufacturing and testing machines for pitting apricots and peaches; that there were three machines standing on the floor of the shop, two of them finished and one unfinished; that about 6 o'clock in the afternoon of June 18, 1889, the plaintiff entered the shop through an open front door to see one Barnard, an acquaintance of his, who was working there; that on entering plaintiff spoke to Barnard, and immediately stepped to the machine which was nearest the door, and commenced turning the wheel of it rapidly, and then stepped to another machine and turned the wheel of that; that the turning made a rattling, loud noise, which was heard by defendant in an adjoining room, and that he at once went into the shop, and told plaintiff to let the machines alone, and to get out from there, or he would pound his head; that plaintiff stepped back near the door and said, with an oath, "I would like to see you pound me;" that defendant then seized a mallet and went up to plaintiff and struck him on the head with it; that the blow caused plaintiff to fall back against the door, but that he gathered himself up and stepped forward, and as he did so defendant again struck him with the mallet several times, and then struck him with his fist; and that, while plaintiff was moving about, he fell on one of the machines, and his left arm was so badly cut by the knife of the machine that to save his life it became necessary a few days later to amputate it above the elbow. It is claimed by appellant that the verdict was not justified by the evidence, and therefore that the judgment should be reversed. In answer to this claim, it is sufficient to say that there was evidence clearly tending to support the verdict and to justify the answers to all of the special interrogatories. It is true that the testimony was in many respects conflicting, but under the well-settled rule in such cases the judgment cannot, in our opinion, be disturbed on this ground.

It is also claimed that the damages allowed were excessive. But the rule is that, where damages are asked for personal injuries committed from wanton or malicious motives, the measure of damages is left largely to the discretion of the jury, and courts will not disturb the verdict on the ground that the amount allowed is excessive, unless it is so disproportionate to the injury received as to make it clear that the jury must have been influenced by passion or prejudice. Here the injury sustained was serious and lasting, and we do not think it can be said that the sum awarded was an excessive compensation for it.

It is further claimed that the court committed several errors in its rulings upon the admission of evidence which were prejudicial to the defendant. The rulings complained of were as follows: After the plaintiff had taken the stand as a witness in his own behalf, his attorney said to him: "You may state to the jury whether or not you have ever received any injury caused by Mr. Briggs, the defendant in this action." The question was objected to as incompetent, because it called for a conclusion, an ultimate fact, to be determined by the jury, and not by the witness. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered, "I have received it." We see no prejudicial error in this ruling. The question was merely preliminary, and the answer was followed, without objection, by a narration of the facts showing how the injury was received, and what was said and done by the defendant. The attorney also said to the same witness: "You may state to the jury the condition of your other hand prior to and at the time you received this injury." The answer was: "I have only two fingers and a thumb. I lost them in 1869." The attorney then said, "Hold your hand up, and show to the jury." It was objected that the evidence sought was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and it is argued that the purpose and effect of it was to excite the sympathy and prejudice of the jurors. But the plaintiff was entitled to have the jury informed as to his physical condition, and to what extent the loss of his left arm had deprived him of the means of earning a livelihood. For this purpose, as we understand it, the evidence was introduced, and it seems to have been competent and proper.

Dr. Bard was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and testified that he was a physician and surgeon, and was called upon to dress the plaintiff's wounds; that 10 days after the injuries were received he, with other consulting physicians, decided that it was necessary that the arm should be amputated, and that on the next day he amputated it. He said: "His condition at the time of the amputation was very critical. It was necessary to amputate the arm to save his life. He received proper medical attention and good nursing." He was then asked: "Did you notify Mr. Townsend of his critical condition that you have mentioned?" and the answer was: "I did notify him of his critical condition, and obtained his consent to the amputation." The question was objected to by defendant as incompetent and immaterial, and it is now urged by his counsel that the doctor's expression of his opinion to his patient was incompetent as against the defendant, because, as they say, "it may be that it had a depressing effect on the plaintiff's mind at the time, but such suffering cannot be attributed to the defendant." We see no merit in this objection. It was natural and proper for the doctor to tell the plaintiff of his condition, and that it had become necessary to amputate his arm; and the physical and mental suffering resulting therefrom was clearly attributable to the defendant, if he was the cause of the injury.

John H. Reppy was a witness for plaintiff, and testified that he had been engaged in the life insurance business as agent of the Mutual Life of New York for four years, and that the American Mortuary Tables were used by the leading life insurance companies; that he had compared the American Mortuary Tables, of which he had a copy, with the American Experience Tables, found in volume 3 of Johnson's New Universal Encyclopedia, so far as they related to the age of 46,—the plaintiff's age at the time he received the injury,—and that they were identically the same. Plaintiff then offered and read in evidence, over the objection of defendant, the page in the encyclopedia showing the probable duration of life at the age of 46 to be 23.81 years. On cross-examination the witness stated that he had been a soliciting agent in the life insurance business, but had made no examinations of applicants for policies; and that the table referred to applied only to insurable persons. He was then asked, "Can you tell us what insurable persons are?" The question was objected to by plaintiff as not proper cross-examination, and the objection sustained. It is argued that this ruling was erroneous, because, if the witness had answered in the affirmative, and had said that plaintiff was not an insurable person, defendant would then have been entitled to demand that all his evidence be stricken out; and, if he had answered in the negative, defendant could properly have made the same motion. But the witness was called to prove simply that the mortuary tables found in the encyclopedia were in general use, and on his direct examination had been asked no questions as to whom the tables applied, or as to who were or were not insurable persons. And the general rule is that a witness cannot be cross-examined except as to facts and circumstances connected with matters testified to by him on his direct examination. There was no error, therefore, in the ruling of the court. The objection that the mortuary tables were not admissible in evidence is not insisted upon, nor could it be successfully. It had already been proved that plaintiff was in good health at the time he received the injury; and the rule seems to be general that, in an action to recover damages for an injury to a healthy person, caused by the negligence or wrongful act of the defendant, where the injury has resulted in the death of the injured party, or in practically destroying his earning capacity, standard mortuary tables are admissible to show what was his probable duration of life, and thus to assist in determining what amount of damages would be reasonable and proper in the case. Gallagher v. Railway Co., 67 Cal. 16, 6 Pac. Rep. 869; 15 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 881, note 3, and cases cited.

When defendant was making his own case he asked one of his witnesses, "Do you know his [Townsend's] habits as to sobriety?" and another witness, "Do you know what his reputation is for sobriety?" Both questions were objected to as incompetent, and the objection sustained. The questions called for the knowledge of the witnesses at the time of the trial, which was two years after the injury complained of was received, and they were therefore clearly immaterial and incompetent.

It is next claimed that the court erred in giving to the jury certain instructions asked by the plaintiff. The first instruction complained of reads as follows: "If the jury find from the evidence that the defendant, from malicious motives, and a wrongful disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, assaulted him and beat him wrongfully, and in so beating the plaintiff was injured thereby, directly or approximately, then plaintiff is entitled to recover all damages he has suffered thereby, and the measure of damages and the amount thereof would be for you alone to determine under the evidence and instructions given by the court in this case." It is said that "this instruction assumes the fact that, if the defendant did assault the plaintiff, such assault was from malicious motives, and the wrongful disregard of the rights of the plaintiff." We fail to see any such assumption; on the contrary, the instruction seems properly to leave to the jury the determination, from the evidence, of all the matters referred to. Similar objections are made to other instructions, but we see no merit in them, and therefore pass them without special notice. The instructions asked by the defendant were all given, and when read, as they must be, in connection with those given at the request of the plaintiff, the law applicable to the case seems to have been fully, fairly, and correctly stated.

Finally, it is claimed that a new trial should have been granted, because two of the jurors before whom the case was tried were prejudiced against the defendant, and had made statements showing that they were wholly disqualified to act as jurors in the case. The jurors referred to were E. P. Cook and P. K. Miller, and the defendant, in an affidavit made by himself, stated that he "did not know before said jurors were called and sworn, touching their qualifications to serve as jurors in said case, or before they were so accepted as such, that they were so prejudiced against him. And that he had no means of knowing of such prejudice and ill will." He did not state, and there was no proof, that the prejudice of the jurors, if any existed, was not known to him and his attorneys before the trial was concluded and the case submitted. Such proof, however, should have been made. But, waiving that, we do not think the action of the court in denying the motion for new trial can be disturbed on this ground. It is true that several affidavits were read in support of the motion, in which the affiants stated that in conversations with Cook and Miller, at times and places named, the latter had made statements to them, which, if true, clearly showed that they entertained prejudice and ill feeling against Briggs. But, on the other hand, counter affidavits made by Cook and Miller were read, in which they denied that at the times or places named, or at any time or place, or at all, they had ever made to the affiants, for defendant, or in conversation with them, the statements charged, or any statements of like or similar import, nature, substance, or character. Counsel for appellant suggest that the counter affidavits are insufficient, because they only deny that the affiants ever made the statements charged to or in conversation with the affiants on the other side. And it is said that the statements may have been made in the hearing of, if not to, or in conversation with, the parties deposing to them. But, in our opinion, there was a real and substantial conflict as to whether the said statements or any like statements were ever made, and, after carefully reading all of the affidavits, we cannot say that the conclusions of the court below, as shown by its action in denying the motion, were not reasonable and proper. We advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(97 Cal. 314)

WASHBURN v. LYONS et al. (No. 19,008.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1893.)

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY OF CONTRACT.

1. St. 1885, p. 147, § 3, as amended by St. 1889, p. 157, provides that before ordering any work done or improvements made on streets, as authorized by section 2 of the act, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do, which shall be published "and" posted for two days in the manner prescribed by section 34 of this act. Held, that since such statute refers to section 34, which provides for the "posting" of the notice of the resolution, it must be construed to mean that "publication" of notice alone is sufficient, where there is a paper in which publication may be made; and, if there is no paper, then the notice must be "posted" as provided in section 34.

2. Where the complaint in an action to enforce an assessment for street repairs fails to show that the contract under which the work was done fixed the time for the commencement and completion of the work to be done thereunder, in accordance with the requirements of Act March 18, 1885, § 6, such omission will be fatal to the complaint. Libbey v. Ellsworth, (Cal.) 32 Pac. Rep. 228, followed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Washburn against Lyons and others to enforce payment of an assessment for street repairs. There was a judgment for defendants on a demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Carlton, for appellants. Julius Lyons, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and thereupon gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals. The complaint does not allege that the resolution of intention was posted, but it does aver that such resolution was published for two days in a daily paper, printed in the city, and designated by the city council for that purpose. The first sentence of section 3 of the act "to provide for work upon streets * * * within municipalities," (St. 1885, p. 147,) as amended by the act of March 14, 1889, (St. 1889, p. 157,) is as follows: "Before ordering any work done or improvements made, which is authorized by section 2 of this act, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do, * * * which shall be published and posted for two days in the manner prescribed by section 34 of this act." It is claimed by defendants that, under this provision, the resolution itself should have been posted, as well as published; but we do not think so. The reference to section 34 of the act, and a consideration of the subsequent part of section 3, which provides for the posting of the notice of the passage of the resolution, make it very clear that the word "and," as used in the clause "published and posted," in the sentence above quoted, should be construed to mean "or." Thus construed, the statute requires the resolution of intention to be published the prescribed length of time, if there is a paper printed in the city; and, if there is no such paper printed, that then it shall be posted in the manner prescribed by section 34 of the act. The objection of defendants, therefore, to this part of the complaint, is not well taken.

But in another respect the complaint is defective. It fails to show that the contract, which is the foundation for the assessment sought to be enforced, fixed the time for the commencement and completion of the work to be done thereunder, in accordance with the requirements of section 6 of the act of March 18, 1885, before referred to. In the recent case of Libbey v. Ellsworth, 32 Pac. Rep. 228, we held this to be an omission fatal to the complaint in this class of actions; and, upon the authority of that case, the judgment must be affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(99 Cal. 493)

BURBRIDGE v. LEMMERT. (No. 14,920.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1893.)

CONTRACT—INTERPRETATION—ILLEGALITY.

An agreement, with sureties, executed contemporaneously with a mortgage, binding the mortgagor to pay all taxes assessed against the mortgage, evinces a clear intention of the parties that the mortgagor shall pay the taxes; and such intention will govern, though the agreement is thereby rendered unlawful, and though it is seemingly inconsistent with a provision in the mortgage apparently making it the duty of the mortgagee to pay such taxes.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.
(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by Sarah R. Burbridge against P. H. Lemmert to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment in defendant's favor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Donnell, for appellant. A. W. Hutton, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage on real property to secure the payment of a promissory note, dated January 29, 1889, for $12,000, made by defendant, payable to plaintiff, or order, five years after date, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, payable annually; and, if not so paid annually, then the whole principal and interest to become immediately due and payable, at the option of the holder of the note. The defendant failed to pay interest for the first year; and, about six months after it became due, (September 1, 1890,) this action to foreclose for both principal and interest was commenced. The answer of the defendant denied that the principal or any interest thereon had ever become due on said note or mortgage, by reason of facts affirmatively alleged in the answer as follows: "For a second and separate defense the defendant alleges that at the city and county of Los Angeles, Cal., on the 29th day of January, 1889, at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage set forth in the complaint, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the execution of the agreement hereinafter set forth as a part of the said note and mortgage, and, in accordance with said demand, the defendant, with the said W. C. Furrey, at said city, on said 29th day of January, A. D. 1889, at the time of the execution of said note and mortgage, and as a part thereof, made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff an agreement in writing, and in the words and figures following, to wit: 'Southern California National Bank, Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 29, 1889. It is hereby agreed by P. H. Lemmert, as principal, and W. C. Furrey, surety, that, in consideration of Mrs. Sarah R. Burbridge lending P. H. Lemmert twelve thousand ($12,000) dollars, at 10 per cent. interest, we, the undersigned, agree to and bind ourselves and our assigns and heirs to pay all taxes of whatever nature which may be assessed against said mortgage of twelve thousand ($12,000) dollars, and that said Mrs. Sarah R. Burbridge, or her assigns, shall be to no costs or expense on account of taxes on said mortgage. P. H. Lemmert, Principal. W. C. Furrey, Surety. Witness: H. M. Russell.'" The court found all these affirmative allegations in the answer to be true, and, as a conclusion of law therefrom, found "that the written agreement set forth in defendant's answer was and is in contravention of section 5 of article 13 of the constitution of this state, and renders null and void all the provisions of the said note and mortgage as to the payment of any interest specified therein;" and, consequently, that no interest ever accrued or became due, so as to give plaintiff the right by election to treat the principal as due prior to the expiration of five years from the date of the note, and thereupon rendered judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and also from an order denying a new trial.

1. It is contended by counsel for appellant that the findings of fact as to the instrument set out in the answer by which the defendant agreed to pay the taxes on the mortgage are not justified by the evidence. It is claimed that this instrument was not demanded nor authorized by plaintiff, and was not executed at the same time the note and mortgage were executed, nor as a part of the same transaction. Upon these issues the evidence is conflicting, but the preponderance thereof seems to be in favor of the respondent, and amply sufficient to justify the findings of the court. The evidence touching these issues covers 75 pages of the transcript, and cannot fairly be so condensed as not to occupy more than reasonable space in this opinion; and for this reason a statement of it is omitted.

2. The mortgage contains the same provision as the note as to the consequence of a failure to pay the annual interest, and also authorized the mortgagee, if necessary to protect the mortgaged property, to insure it, and to pay the taxes thereon, "other than the taxes of this mortgage or the money hereby secured," and provides that the sums so paid, with interest at the same rate, shall be deemed to be secured by the mortgage. Counsel for appellant contends that the express exception of the taxes on the mortgage from the taxes which the mortgagee may pay and recover from the mortgagor, with conventional interest, is inconsistent with a stipulation in the same mortgage that the mortgagor is, nevertheless, to pay the taxes on the mortgage; that is to say, it is inconsistent for mortgagor and mortgagee to agree that the mortgagee may pay the taxes on the interest of the mortgagor in the land, and recover it back with interest, and at the same time agree that the mortgagor shall pay the taxes on the mortgagee's interest in the land. That the latter part of the agreement is unlawful is clear; but that the two parts of the agreement are necessarily inconsistent with each other I am unable to perceive. But, however this may be, all the provisions of the mortgage, including the concurrent agreement that the mortgagor should pay the taxes on the mortgage, must be read together, and seeming inconsistencies reconciled, if they can be without violence to the language, for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties. If, when thus read and construed, the intention be found to be clear and certain, such intention must prevail, though the agreement be thereby rendered unlawful. The agreement that the mortgagor should pay the taxes on the mortgage was prepared with distinct care and deliberation, and a surety was required to sign it; and its language is so unequivocal and certain as to the intent that the mortgagor should pay the taxes on the mortgage that there is no doubt that such was the intention of the parties. This view of the case renders all other points discussed by counsel immaterial. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 318
FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF LOS ANGELES. (No. 14-873.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

TAXATION—EQUALIZATION—NOTICE—WRIT OF REVIEW.

1. An order of the board of equalization finding that a bank has omitted property from the list of its taxable property, and should be assessed thereon, and directing the assessor to add such property to its assessment, is not an attempt by the board to add property to the list, and exercise assessorial powers, but is a direction that the assessor make such addition, though the order specifies the value of the property to be added, and is authorized by Pol. Code, § 3681, requiring the assessor, at the request of the board, to list and assess property which he has failed to assess.

2. Pol. Code, § 3681, under which the assessor is required, at the request of the board of equalization, to list and assess property which he has failed to assess, which section the city charter of Los Angeles makes applicable to the common council, sitting as a board of equalization, does not conflict with the constitutional provisions which define the powers and duties of state and county boards of equalization, and which do not give the power to cause property to be added to the assessment list, since it merely extends the power and duty of the assessor.

3. A notice to a bank to appear before the board of equalization, and show cause why its "assessment on solvent credits should not be increased from $2,774 to $275,000," sufficiently informs it that it is proposed to add property to the assessment.

4. A person appearing before the board of equalization in response to a notice, and submitting to the action of the board, waives any defect in the notice.

5. A finding by the board of equalization that a person has omitted taxable property from his list to a certain amount is conclusive on the courts on writ of review, since Code Civil Proc. § 1074, provides that the review on such writ cannot be extended further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal or board has regularly pursued its authority.

6. Even if the fact that property has been so omitted is necessary to give the board jurisdiction, the court cannot review the evidence to determine whether there was evidence to show such fact, since the fact is one to be determined by the board.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. P. Wade, Judge.

Petition by the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles for a writ to review an order of the board of equalization of Los Angeles directing property to be added to petitioner's assessment. From a judgment annulling the order the board appeals. Reversed.

C. McFarland, for appellant. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county annulling an order made by the common council of the city of Los Angeles, sitting as a board of equalization. The judgment was rendered in a proceeding under a writ of review, issued upon a petition and the affidavit of John Milner, the cashier of the plaintiff, a corporation, doing a general banking business at Los Angeles. No return to the writ was made; but it was stipulated that "the said petition, and the matters stated therein, shall be treated and considered as the certified transcript of the record and proceedings of the city council, sitting as a board of equalization, in the matter of the assessment complained of." This stipulation is not altogether satisfactory. Questions raised upon such a proceeding are to be determined by an inspection of the record, and, in general, not upon pleadings or evidence. It is perfectly manifest that many matters stated in the petition were not, and could not have been, in the records of the board of equalization. The only course open to us would seem to be to regard only those matters as transcripts of the record which are stated to be such or are such orders as were required to be entered in the minutes of the board. For instance, the petition sets forth what petitioner claims was the evidence taken before the board. It is not stated that this evidence is set out in the minutes of the board, and the law did not require it to be done. We are not bound to consider this evidence as something apparent upon the face of the record.

The proceeding before the board was taken for the purpose of ordering the assessor to add certain property to the assessment roll, and an objection is made that the city of Los Angeles has not power to assess, levy, or collect taxes, because the legislature has not granted such authority by a general law, as required by the constitution. This question was decided adversely to respondent in the recent case of Trust Co. v. Hinton, (Cal.) 32 Pac. Rep. 3, and need not be again considered.

The petition shows that petitioner duly made and returned to the city assessor a list of all the personal property which was in its possession or under its control on the first Monday of March, 1891. That all its personal property, except mortgages, at that date, subject to assessment for city taxes were: Money, $21,465.33; vaults and safe, $4,000. That the city assessor listed and assessed to petitioner: Money on hand, $21,465.33; solvent credits unsecured, $2,774; vaults and safe, $4,000. That the city council, sitting and acting as a board of equalization, August 5, 1891, ordered notice to be given petitioner to show cause August 12, 1891, before the board, why its assessment of solvent credits should not be increased from $2,774 to $275,000. The notice given was in writing, as follows: "Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1891. To Farmers' and Merchants' Bank—John Milner, Cashier: You are hereby notified to appear before the board of equalization of the city of Los Angeles on Wednesday, the 12th day of August 1891, at 10 o'clock A. M., in the council chamber in the city hall, and show cause why your assessment on solvent credits should not be increased from $2,774 to $275,000. By order of the board of equalization. Freeman G. Teed, City Clerk and Clerk of said Board. By Geo. E. Seip, Deputy." That no other notice was given, but petitioner appeared before the board, by the affiant, and submitted itself to the board, answering such interrogations as were propounded to it or to the affiant touching its property. What is averred to be the testimony is set out in the petition, and it is alleged that no other evidence was taken at such hearing. It is claimed that this testimony does not show, or tend to show, that the petitioner had any solvent credits or any which had escaped assessment. Nevertheless, the board made and entered in its minutes the following order, which, it is claimed, the board had no jurisdiction or power to make: "The Farmers' and Merchants' Bank having been notified to appear on August 12th, to show cause why its assessment for solvent credits should not be increased from $2,774 to $275,000, and John Milner, cashier of said bank, having appeared in response to said notice, was sworn and testified in regard to the assets of said bank; and it appearing to the board that said bank has returned a false and incomplete list of its taxable property, and that said bank should be assessed for solvent credits to the amount of $270,774, and that it had escaped assessment for solvent credits to the amount of $268,000, on motion of Mr. Tufts, it is ordered that the assessor be directed to add to the assessment of said bank for solvent credits the sum of $268,000, and assess the bank for solvent credits in the total sum of $270,774." That the assessor did, in pursuance of the order, enter upon the assessment roll an addition to the assessment of petitioner the sum of $268,000, solvent credits, making the total of solvent credits assessed to petitioner $270,774, instead of $2,774, as listed and returned by the assessor.

1. The first point made upon the record is that it is apparent therefrom that the proceeding was not to equalize the values of property which had been listed and assessed by the assessor, but was an attempt by the board to add other property to the list which had not been listed or valued by the assessor. This it is claimed the board could not do, as it is not vested with assessorial power. But, plainly, the board did not attempt to add property to the assessment roll, or to exercise assessorial powers. It simply directed the assessor to list and assess $268,000 of solvent credits, which it found had escaped assessment. In this case it is no objection to the order that it states the value of the item to be added, instead of simply directing the assessor to add the property to the list and assess its value. Respondent itself claims that solvent debts, like gold coin, must necessarily be assessed at their face value. To describe the property, therefore, is to fix its value. The board was authorized to make the order by section 3681 of the Political Code, which the city charter expressly makes applicable. It is claimed that this section of the Code is unconstitutional, because the state constitution expressly defines the powers and duties of both the state and county boards of equalization, and the power to cause property to be added to the assessment roll is not there given. The premise is admitted, but I can see no force or logic in the conclusion. It is not claimed that the power comes from the constitution, but from the act of the legislature. Section 3681, Pol. Code, simply extends the power and duty of the assessor, enabling and requiring him, at the request of the board, to list and assess property which he had failed to assess, notwithstanding the time for assessments had passed, and the roll was no longer in his possession; and the exercise of this power is directly in accord with the policy and express provisions of the constitution, which requires all property not exempt from execution to be taxed. Section 1, art. 13: "If any property subject to taxation should escape assessment in any year, the taxation for that year would not be equal and uniform; nor would all property in this state be taxed in proportion to its value, and the behest of the constitution would not be obeyed." Biddle v. Oaks, 59 Cal. 94. The exercise of this power by the board of equalization does not obstruct the performance by the board of any duty enjoined upon it by the constitution, but is in aid of the functions there created; nor does it disturb the division of powers made by the constitution between the state and county boards. The cases of Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Board of Equalization, 56 Cal. 194, People v. Sacramento Co., 59 Cal. 320, and People v. Dunn, Id. 328, have no bearing upon this subject. In those cases the construction of section 9 of article 13 of the constitution was considered, and the distinct powers and duties of state, and county boards to some extent pointed out. Of course no valid law could be made disturbing this division of power made by the constitution, and perhaps it would follow that functions or powers given to one board are thereby denied to the other. So far the provisions would constitute a limitation upon legislative power, but it constitutes no argument against the power of the legislature to grant other powers, or to impose other duties upon either board so long as these implied limitations are not violated. People v. Hastings, 29 Cal. 449, has no application to the new constitution. One of the chief arguments in favor of constitutional revision was the necessity of getting rid of the provision requiring property to be assessed by assessor elected by the electors of the district in which he exercised his powers. The new constitution contains no such limitation. Besides, as we have seen, the board did not make an assessment, but directed the assessor to do so. The propriety of this course was recognized under the old constitution, when assessorial powers could not be conferred upon any other officer than an elected assessor. People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 107.

2. It is next contended that the board had no power to act in the matter, because the notice was insufficient. It is said that it gave no information that it was proposed to add other property to the assessment. The position of respondent upon this matter is not quite consistent. Under another point it contends, and quite properly, I think, that to increase the assessment of solvent credits is necessarily to increase the subject of taxation, as was said in regard to money in People v. Dunn, 59 Cal. 328. That being so, the notice in question could only have meant that other solvent credits might be added. The listing of property, however, is part of the process of assessing. The assessment roll includes the list with the values added, and the result is often spoken of as the assessment. The assessment may mean the completed tax list. Cooley, Tax'n, 352. Besides, it is averred that the petitioner appeared and submitted itself to the action of the board, and furnished all required evidence as to its property. If the notice was ambiguous or imperfect, the defect was waived by such appearance. Spring Val. Waterworks v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69; Wade, Notice, 1358.

3. The next contention is that the order is void, because there was no evidence before the board that any property had escaped assessment. The board had no power to order a new assessment to be made without evidence. City and County of San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 504, 2 Pac. Rep. 264. The order recites that testimony was taken, and, in effect, that the conclusion was reached from the evidence that the bank had returned a false list of its property, and had escaped assessment for solvent credits to the amount of $268,000. This must be held conclusive. "It is not a proper function of the writ of review to add to or modify the record with reference to jurisdictional facts determined therein, but to test the question of jurisdiction on the facts on the face thereof." Freem. Judgm. §§ 263, 619; In re Grove St., 61 Cal. 453; Ex parte Sternes, 77 Cal. 156, 19 Pac. Rep. 275; De Pedronena v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. 144, 22 Pac. Rep. 71. In Hagenmeyer v. Board, 82 Cal. 214, 23 Pac. Rep. 14, it is said: "The record does not show by affirmative proof that the board did not act upon evidence before it. Therefore its order in the premises is conclusive that it did act on such evidence as was necessary." Counsel have cited cases, and no doubt many more could be found from other states in which the writ of review has been used for the correction of errors. Our Code provides: "The review upon this writ cannot be extended further than to determine whether the inferior tribunal, board, or officer has regularly pursued the authority of such tribunal, board, or officer." Section 1074, Code Civil Proc. It has been held that this language is equivalent to the phrase in section 1068 authorizing the court to inquire whether the tribunal, board, or officer has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer. Central Park R. Co. v. Placer Co., 43 Cal. 365. But, where the writ is understood as affording a remedy for mere errors, it has been held that the question must be determined by an inspection of the record, unless the statute has provided for a bill of exceptions. In Birdsall v. Phillips, 17 Wend. 464, the common-law rule was elaborately considered by Judge Cowen. After citing numerous cases, he says: "From these authorities and others I collect the following general rule: Wherever, were the suit at common law, the matter alleged for error is of such a nature that a bill of exceptions would be essential to its review by writ of error, a certiorari will not reach it unless some statute has enlarged the effect of that writ in the particular case." It is true the petition sets out certain evidence alleged to have been submitted to the board, and avers that no other evidence was taken. This can certainly have no greater effect than an offer to impeach the record by evidence de hors. It is not stated that the record of the proceedings of the board discloses the evidence, though, if it did, I cannot see how that would help the matter. The board had jurisdiction to inquire as to whether any property of petitioner had escaped assessment. If I am right on the other points disposed of, it had jurisdiction both as to the subject-matter and the person. This being granted, its procedure within its jurisdiction is no more open to question than it would be were it a court of general jurisdiction. Certainly it was its province to decide as to the effect of the testimony, and that includes the necessity of determining whether it tended to show and did show that property belonging to petitioner had escaped assessment. All its acts after having acquired jurisdiction constituted the exercise of such jurisdiction, none the less that such acts were erroneous. Central Park R. Co. v. Placer Co., supra, is similar to this. It was a proceeding before a board of equalization to have an assessment reduced. It was claimed that the board acted upon illegal testimony. It is said that the board acted within its jurisdiction, and its rulings could not be reviewed. Barber v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 630, is a similar case. It was a writ to review the action of the board of supervisors in regard to a street assessment. It was claimed that the evidence did not justify the conclusion of the board. The court said: "The board, therefore, had jurisdiction to entertain, hear, and determine the appeal upon the proofs introduced; and, if it committed an error in its conclusions as to the facts, the error would not affect their jurisdiction, and could not be reviewed on certiorari. The return of the board to the writ purports to contain the evidence given on the hearing of the appeal, but there is nothing in the record to show what facts the board considered proved; and if there was, and if we should be of opinion that the board found the facts contrary to the evidence, we could not correct the error in this form of proceeding." See, also, People v. Dwinelle, 29 Cal. 632. But, if it can be claimed that the fact as to whether the petitioner had property which had escaped assessment was in any sense jurisdictional, it was, nevertheless, a fact as to the existence of which the board was authorized and required to determine in that proceeding. It is said by Wells on Jurisdiction, (section 62:) "Where the jurisdiction of even an inferior court is dependent on a fact which that court is required to ascertain and settle by its decision, such decision is held conclusive." In Railroad Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395, the same doctrine is declared, and numerous authorities cited to the same effect. Britain v. Kinnaird, 1 Brod. & B. 432, was trespass for taking a vessel by magistrates. The owner had been convicted under a statute called the "Bum Boat Act." Evidence was offered to show that the conviction was void, as the court had no jurisdiction, as the vessel was not a "boat" within the meaning of the act. Chief Justice Dallas considered the case at great length, and concludes that, conceding that the fact were jurisdictional, still it was a fact the court had jurisdiction to determine, and such determination was conclusive. I do not think, however, the fact was jurisdictional. Jurisdiction was conferred by the statute, the claim that the petitioner had property which had escaped assessment, and the service of the notice. If the board had determined that the evidence did not tend to prove the existence of property which had escaped taxation, it would not be doubted that such determination was an act within its jurisdiction. A contrary conclusion must be equally an act within its power. Jurisdiction to determine an issue involves the power to determine it erroneously. Jurisdiction to determine the effect of evidence involves the power to draw erroneous conclusions from it. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to sustain the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to sustain the demurrer.

97 Cal. 203

RILEY v. NANCE. (No. 19,093.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

Concurring opinion. For majority opinion, see 31 Pac. Rep. 1126.

BRATTY, C. J. The result of the decision of the department in this case is to confirm the validity of the title derived under the attachment, and is therefore, in my opinion, correct; but I cannot concur in the reasoning upon which the judgment of reversal is based, and, while I do not dissent from the order denying a rehearing, I desire to state briefly the views which have led me to the same conclusion reached by other members of the court. The question whether an attachment lien merges in the lien of the judgment, or in the lien created by levy of the execution so completely that the filing of a stay bond on appeal will not only release the property from the levy of the execution, and cause the lien of the judgment to "cease," (Code Civil Proc. § 671,) but will also discharge the attachment lien, cannot, in my opinion, be ignored in this case, because the land was conveyed by the attachment debtor before judgment docketed, or execution levied. That circumstance appears to me to be wholly immaterial. A debtor cannot convey land subject to attachment so as to exempt it from the judgment lien; and the case of People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 434, does not affirm, either in terms or in effect, that he can. If the law is that the attachment lien merges in the judgment lien when the property is conveyed by the debtor after the docketing of judgment against him, and if the filing of a stay bond on appeal in such case extinguishes the judgment lien without reviving the attachment lien, I do not think a conveyance before judgment docketed could prevent the same effect from following; but, in my opinion, the effect of the filing of a stay bond on appeal is to extinguish only the liens resulting from the judgment, and from process thereunder. The sureties on an appeal bond do not undertake to pay any judgment that may be recovered in the action, but only the judgment appealed from in case it is affirmed, or the appeal dismissed. The security of the appeal bond is therefore no security at all for the judgment that may ultimately be recovered by the plaintiff, after a reversal of the first judgment and an order for a new trial. In such a case, on the assumption that the attachment lien is extinguished by the stay bond on appeal, together with the judgment or execution lien, the creditor would lose the security of his lien by the appeal, and the security of the stay bond by the reversal of the judgment, and if, in the mean time, the land had been sold by his debtor, would have no security for a judgment afterwards recovered. This being so, and the declared object of the attachment law being to give the creditor security for any judgment that may be recovered, (Code Civil Proc. § 537,) I do not think it can be held that an attachment lien is discharged by a stay bond on appeal. There is no express provision of the statute to the effect that the filing of such a bond discharges an attachment lien, and it is only by construction that that result is worked out. It has been decided that the attachment lien merges in the judgment lien, and therefore it is argued that when the judgment lien ceases, in consequence of the filing of the stay bond, the attachment lien must also cease. But in the case relied on (Bagley v. Ward, 37 Cal. 121) the effect of the decision is merely that the attachment lien is so far merged in the judgment lien that when the latter expires, by lapse of the two-years limitation, the former is also at an end, and this conclusion is based upon the absurdity of supposing that there is no limitation to an attachment lien, and the impossibility of fixing its duration unless it is held to merge in the judgment lien. It is not at all inconsistent with the reasoning to hold that when, instead of expiring by lapse of time, the judgment lien is extinguished by the act of the defendant within the two years, the attachment lien which it superseded is thereby revived; and, in order to give effect to the statute, this conclusion is necessary. Upon these grounds, I concur in the judgment.

97 Cal. 329

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. ORANGE COUNTY. (No. 14,917.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

DIVISION OF COUNTY — APPORTIONMENT OF DEBT.

Const. art. 11, § 3, provides that every county created from territory taken from any other county shall be liable for a just proportion of the existing debts of the last-named county. Act 1889, March 11, creating the county of O. from the territory of L., provides that commissioners shall ascertain the indebtedness of the county of L., "existing at the time this act takes effect," and certify the amount due from the county of O. to the county of L. Held, that the county of O. is not chargeable with moneys expended on its territory by the county of L. between the date of the act and the organization of the county of O.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. F. Williams, Judge.

Action by the county of Los Angeles against the county of Orange to recover the amount of moneys expended on the territory of the county of O. between the date of the act creating it and the time of its organization. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James McLachlan, Dist. Atty., B. M. Marble, and Waldo M. York, for appellant. F. W. Sanborn, Dist. Atty., and A. W. Hutton, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The county of Orange was created under the provisions of an act of the legislature approved March 11, 1889, and its organization was completed August 2, 1889. By the provisions of section 7 of the act, commissioners were appointed to adjust the respective liabilities of the two counties; and they made their report, fixing the amount of the liability of Orange county to the county of Los Angeles as of the 11th day of March, 1889, and also made a supplemental report, that, in addition to the indebtedness found to exist on that date, "moneys had been advanced after March 11, 1889, by Los Angeles county to Orange county, in the sum of $11,375.42, and that, as a matter of equity, that amount should be refunded by Orange county to Los Angeles county. These advances consisted of moneys expended in the construction of a bridge, and of certain transfers to different road-district and school-district funds within the boundaries of Orange county. The county of Los Angeles presented its claim for this sum to the board of supervisors of Orange county, and, its payment being refused, brought this action for their recovery, as for moneys paid and advanced by it in behalf of Orange county. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and from the judgment rendered thereon the plaintiff has appealed.

Counties are merely local subdivisions the state, created by the legislature for governmental purposes, and are denominated "public corporations" for the reason that they are but parts of the machinery employed in carrying on the political affairs of the state. The legislature, except as restrained by constitutional limitations, may change their boundaries and extent, consolidate two or more into to one, or divide and create new counties out of the territory of one or more previously existing ones. It has been established by an unvarying line of decisions that, upon the creation of a new county out of the territory of another, the legislature, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, may make such provision with reference to the public property and debts, or their division, as to it may seem just, and that, in the absence of any provision in reference thereto, the old county will be entitled to retain all public property and assets, except such public buildings and structures as lie within the territory of the new, and will also be liable for all its prior obligations. Hampshire v. Franklin, 16 Mass. 86; Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S. 307; Depere v. Bellevue, 31 Wis. 120; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. Rep. 1067; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 188, 189. Article 11, § 3, of the constitution of this state, provides that "every county which shall be enlarged or created from territory taken from any other county or counties shall be liable for a just proportion of the existing debts and liabilities of the county or counties from which such territory shall be taken." The mode of determining the "just proportion" of the debts and liabilities for which the new county shall be liable is not prescribed in the constitution, but is left to the determination of the legislature in each particular case; and by section 7 of the act under consideration the legislature provided that commissioners should be appointed from each of the two counties, who should determine the indebtedness of Los Angeles county, existing at the time the act took effect, in the following manner: "They shall ascertain the total amount of indebtedness of Los Angeles county, existing at the time this act takes effect, and also the total value of all assets of said county, including real estate, buildings, and bridges, erected or in progress of erection, money and solvent credits of whatever nature, and any other property belonging to the said county of Los Angeles. They shall also ascertain the assessed value of all property in Los Angeles county under the assessment made in 1888, and also the assessed value of the property under the same assessment assessed in the territory hereby set apart to form Orange county. They shall then find the balance of the total assets and indebtedness of Los Angeles county, and, if there is a balance of indebtedness against said county, the same shall be divided between the two counties according to the following proportion: As the total assessed value of the property of Los Angeles county at the time of the taking effect of this act is to the total assessed value of the property in Orange county, so is the balance of said indebtedness, so as aforesaid ascertained, to the amount of said indebtedness to be assumed and paid by Orange county to Los Angeles county. Said commissioners shall then certify forthwith to the respective boards of supervisors of said counties of Orange and Los Angeles such amounts of the said indebtedness due from Orange county, together with the ascertained value of all bridges and other property, reckoned among the assets of Los Angeles county as aforesaid, erected or purchased by county funds, and situated in Orange county, which property shall be charged to the new county; and the amount thereof shall be an indebtedness to Los Angeles county, and shall thereupon become the property of said Orange county. In case said commissioners shall find a balance of assets of Los Angeles county over and above its liabilities, they shall belong to Orange county by the proportion aforesaid, and shall certify the same to the said boards of supervisors, together with the value of the purchases and other property aforesaid; and, if the amount of said balance of assets belonging to Orange county is less than the value of said property, then the difference between the two amounts shall be assumed and paid by Orange county to Los Angeles county. But, if said amount is greater than the value of said property, then said Los Angeles county shall pay the difference between the two amounts to said Orange county."

As the provision of the constitution relates only to the indebtedness of the county, and does not require any division of the assets or property of the old county, the disposition of these matters remains within the scope of legislative provision; and, in the absence of any such provision, the effect of creating a new county would be to give to the old county all the public property, except such as was situated in the territory embraced within the boundaries of the new county. As the legislature could divide the public property and assets of the county in such mode as it might choose, it was competent for it to fix upon any date which it might select as the time for ascertaining their amount and value, as well as for determining, in connection therewith, the "just proportion" of the debts and liabilities to be assumed by the new county. In the present instance the legislature fixed the time when the act took effect as the proper period for ascertaining the amount of these assets and liabilities; and it cannot be held that the constitutional provision was violated in selecting that as the point of time at which to properly determine what would be a "just proportion" of the debts and liabilities to be assumed by the new county. It is not claimed that any of the indebtedness of the county accrued after that date, or that the amount of its debts or liabilities was greater at the organization of the new county than it was at the passage of the act.

The items for which the present action is brought were expenditures made between the date of the passage of the act and the organization of the new county, but during all that time the territory within which these expenditures were made was a portion of Los Angeles county; and we must assume that the expenditures were made in the wise exercise of its control over that territory. It does not appear at what date after March 11, 1889, the moneys were expended; and it must be borne in mind that, until after the election upon the question of a division of the county, it could not be known that any new county would be authorized. Until that time it was the duty of Los Angeles county to expend such moneys within the territory that afterwards became Orange county as might be needed. Until after the election upon the question of a division had been had, the moneys which were expended were for the benefit of Los Angeles county, and cannot be said to have been paid or advanced to or for the benefit of the county of Orange. The legislature may have considered that it would be necessary for the county of Los Angeles to expend money for municipal purposes within this territory; and, as it was within its discretion to determine that Los Angeles county should bear the burden of any of the expenditures which it might thus make, the fact that it has made no provision for its reimbursement is indicative that it was not its intention that it should be reimbursed therefor. It would violate all rules of construction to hold that, when the legislature fixed the time when the act took effect as the point of time for ascertaining the amount of indebtedness, it intended those words to apply to the date when the county of Orange was organized. The commissioners are directed, in express language, to determine the indebtedness of said county, "existing at the time this act takes effect;" and the statute itself declares that the act "shall take effect and be in force from and after the date of its passage and approval." There is nothing in the act itself, or in the subjects to which it relates, which requires, or would permit, any different construction to be given to those words from that which they express. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 400

PEOPLE v. JAMES. (No. 20,950.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER JEOPARDY.

On a trial for assault, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, but that they were not bound by his instruction. When the jury were brought into court, and asked if they had agreed on a verdict, the foreman said that they disagreed; that they did not wish to render a verdict, but that the court would discharge them; that, if they were discharged without a verdict, it would leave the case for the district attorney and the court to handle; and that they did not wish to be placed in the position of acting as a scapegoat. Held, that the failure of the jury to agree, and their consequent discharge, avoided a plea of once in jeopardy; Pen. Code, § 1140, providing that the jury may be discharged if, "at the expiration of such time as the court may deem proper, it satisfactorily appears that there is no reasonable probability that the jury can agree."

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wheaton A. Gray, Judge.

Walter James was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape. From the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Clark, Rowell Irwin, and R. F. Roth, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The appellant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit rape, and he appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. There had been a former trial of the case, at which the jury had been discharged by the court for a failure to agree, and at the second trial the appellant pleaded once in jeopardy. On the issue of jeopardy the jury found in favor of the people, and the main contention of appellant is that the verdict ought to have been in his favor on that issue. At the first trial the record shows, after the statement of the jury that they could not agree, as follows: "Whereupon the court, after an examination of the jury separately, and it appearing that it was impossible for the jury to agree, ordered that they be discharged from further consideration of this case." Section 1140 of the Penal Code provides that such an order may be made, if, "at the expiration of such time as the court may deem proper, it satisfactorily appears that there is no reasonable probability that the jury can agree;" and this clause has been held to be not violative of the provision of the constitution as to jeopardy. Ex parte McLaughlin, 41 Cal. 211; People v. Cage, 48 Cal. 323; People v. Soto, 65 Cal. 621, 4 Pac. Rep. 664. But appellant contends that this rule does not apply to the case at bar, on account of certain things which transpired at the time the jury was discharged.

The appellant was charged in the indictment with having committed the alleged crime upon the person of a girl under 14 years old; that being the legal age of consent, under our statute. After the jury had been regularly impaneled at the first trial, the district attorney put the father and mother of the girl, and also the girl herself, upon the witness stand; and, evidently to the surprise of the prosecution, they all testified that the girl was 14 years old several months before the date of the alleged crime. The district attorney then stated to the court that, as the case of the prosecution depended upon proof of the fact that the girl was under 14, it was useless to introduce further evidence, and no further evidence was introduced. The court then instructed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, but also, pursuant to the provision of section 1118 of the Penal Code, that they were not bound by his advice. The jury then retired, and, after some time, the exact period not being shown, they were brought into court, and asked if they had agreed upon a verdict. The foreman said that they disagreed; and some conversation then took place between the court and the foreman of the jury, upon which the appellant mainly rests on the point of once in jeopardy. The substance of said conversation was in brief this: The foreman said that they did not want to render a verdict in the case, and would ask the court to discharge them; that, if they were discharged without a verdict, it would leave the case for the district attorney and the court to handle; that they did not want to be placed in the position of acting as a scape-goat, etc. Counsel for the appellant insisted that the court should instruct the jury, absolutely, to acquit the appellant. But the court said it had no power to compel the jury to render a verdict, and sent them back to their room with the instruction that no evidence had been introduced tending to prove the guilt of the appellant, and advising and instructing them that it was their duty to acquit him. In the course of a couple of hours more, the jury were again brought into court, and were again asked if they had agreed upon a verdict. The foreman answered: "We have not, and we cannot, and ask the judge to discharge us." Counsel for appellant then moved the court to discharge the defendant, and dismiss the action, on the ground that he had been tried, and there was an absence of any evidence against him; and the motion was denied. The court then polled the jury, and asked each one of them, individually, if there was any probability of their arriving at a verdict, and they all answered, "No." One of the jurors, Mr. Bacon, first answered: "Yes, sir; I could arrive at a verdict in a minute." But when the court said: "What I mean by that, can you get the jury to agree with you?" he answered, "No, sir; I think it is impossible;" saying, further, "nine of us one way, and three the other." Whereupon the court made the order discharging the jury, as hereinabove stated.

No doubt it would have been the duty of the jury to have acquitted the appellant, under these circumstances, at the first trial; and, if they had returned a verdict of guilty, the court would no doubt have granted a new trial. But we do not see that appellant is in a position different, in point of law, from that of any other defendant whom the jury should have acquitted, but failed, through erroneous notions of some of the jurors, to agree upon a verdict, and after a reasonable time were discharged. We do not see that the conversation between the foreman and the court puts any different phase on the matter, or makes any stronger case for appellant, on his plea of jeopardy, than if the jury had merely said they were not able to agree, without assigning any reason. Therefore the present case cannot be taken out of the rule that the failure of the jury to agree, and their consequent discharge, avoids the plea of once in jeopardy.

With respect to the motion for a continuance, without considering the evidence in detail upon the subject, we do not think that the court committed any error in denying it. There are no other points necessary to be specially noted. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: De HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

97 Cal. 370

FRAZIER v. LYNCH et al. (No. 19,063.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1893.)

ACTION TO RECOVER POSSESSION OF LAND — EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover possession of land, where there is evidence that defendants entered thereon and ordered plaintiff off, and, by threats or force, prevented her from plowing the land, but thereafter exercised no control over the land, and were not in possession, the court erred in instructing the jury that they might infer defendant's possession because of the former trespass, since it is not presumed that a trespass continues from its commission to any subsequent date.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by one Frazier against one Lynch and others to recover possession of certain land, with damages for the withholding thereof. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Z. Montgomery & Son, for appellants. A. E. Nutt and F. W. Ewing, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action to recover possession of certain land in San Diego county, with damages for the withholding thereof. The possession of the land by the defendant at the time when the action is commenced is a necessary element of the plaintiff's right to recover in an action of this nature, and must be alleged in the complaint; and, being an issuable fact, must, if denied in the answer, be established at the trial. Under the common-law system, in which the declaration consisted of only a series of fictions, the tenant was not permitted to defend the action, except upon entering into the "consent rule," whereby he consented to plead the general issue, and at the trial to admit his possession, and also the lease, entry, and ouster of the plaintiff, and to insist only on his title, so that the only matter which was tried by the court was an issue not presented by the pleadings or alleged in the declaration, viz. whether the plaintiff's lessor had any title to the land. When these fictions were abolished by the reform in pleading, and the pleader was required to state in ordinary and concise language the facts which constitute his cause of action, inasmuch as the withholding of the possession by the defendant at the time of commencing the action is one of the facts which constitute the plaintiff's right to a recovery, it is essential that it be averred, (Payne v. Ireadwell, 16 Cal. 244;) and, being an issuable fact, if denied, that it be proved. This action, being only for the recovery of the possession of certain real property, cannot, in a case where the defendant is not in possession, be substituted for an action to determine whether the plaintiff or the defendant has the title to the land. The gravamen of the action is the withholding of the possession from the plaintiff, and the very essence of the plaintiff's cause of action is lacking, if the defendant is not shown to be in such possession. Accordingly it has been invariably held that, if the plaintiff fails to show that the defendant was in possession of the land sued for at the commencement of the action, he is not entitled to judgment. Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268; Owen v. Fowler, 24 Cal. 192; Hawkins v. Reichert, 28 Cal. 535; Pope v. Dalton, 31 Cal. 218. The jury in the present case were instructed by the court in accordance with the foregoing rule, but the defendants assign as one of the errors committed at the trial that the evidence was insufficient in this respect to sustain the verdict. The evidence presented on the part of the plaintiff of any possession of the land by either of the defendants had reference to certain acts done by them on the land a few days before the action was commenced, and tended more to show a trespass, or a prevention of the plaintiff from going thereon, than an actual possession thereof by the defendants. It was testified on behalf of the defendants that from that time until the commencement of the action neither of them was in possession, or exercised any control of the land, and the record does not contain any evidence of any subsequent act by either of them with reference to the land, nor has the respondent called our attention to any evidence which shows that the defendants were either of them in possession of the land at the commencement of the action, or for several days prior thereto. The court instructed the jury that, "if from all the evidence in this case you should find that a few days before the commencement of this action the defendants, or some or any of them, were upon the premises described in the complaint, or entered thereon and ordered and drove the plaintiff and her agents and employes off from said premises, and prevented them from plowing said premises by threats or force, such acts on the part of such defendant or defendants were acts of possession on the part of such defendants; and, if there is no evidence to the contrary, you have a right to presume and to find that such defendant or defendants so ordering, driving, preventing, or threatening, were in possession of the said real estate at the time of the commencement of this action." In this instruction the court erred. The possession of the land by the defendants was a fact to be shown by the plaintiff, and, while it may be sufficient in some cases to show a constructive, as contradistinguished from an actual, possession, (Crane v. Ghirardelli, 45 Cal. 235,) yet the evidence presented in this case did not tend to establish a constructive possession; and it is not a presumption of law that a trespass continues from the time of its commission until any subsequent date, nor should the jury have been instructed that they might infer the possession of the defendants from the fact that they had previously committed a trespass upon the possession of the plaintiff. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 335

JOYCE v. SHAFER et al. (No. 19,026.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)
VENDOR AND VENDEE—RECOVERY OF PURCHASE MONEY.

After default in the last installment of the purchase money due under a land contract, the vendor's conveyance of the land to a third person is not such a breach of the contract as will enable the purchaser to recover the installments already paid, without tendering the last installment due.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Thomas F. Joyce against A. C. Shafer and F. D. Lanterman to recover the first installment paid on a contract for the sale of land. From a judgment in defendant's favor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Foley, for appellant. M. W. Conkling, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from a judgment upon demurrer to the complaint. It is an action to recover the first installment paid upon an executory contract for the sale of land. The demurrer is general that the complaint does not state a cause of action. From the complaint it appears that on the 26th of July, 1887, Miss S. A. Popplewell entered into an agreement with defendants, in writing, whereby she agreed to pay them $1,250 in three installments,—one at the execution of the agreement, one in one year, and the third two years from date,—in consideration of which they sold and agreed to convey to her certain lands. The contract contained the usual covenants, making time of the essence of the contract, and providing for a forfeiture of installments paid, as liquidated damages, in case of failure to make any of the payments as stipulated. The first installment was paid, but no more. December 18, 1889, about five months after the last payment fell due, defendants, without having tendered a deed to Miss Popplewell, or demanded payment from her, without her consent, conveyed the land for a valuable consideration to one J. H. Bryant. July 23, 1891, Miss Popplewell duly assigned said contract, and all rights, legal and equitable, under said agreement, to plaintiff. Neither plaintiff nor his assignor has ever tendered to defendants the amount due on their contract, or offered to perform their agreement, but it is contended that the defendants, by conveying the land which was the subject of the contract, have put it out of their power to comply with their agreement, and that therefore an offer of performance on the part of the purchaser would be unavailing, and plaintiff is therefore at liberty to consider the contract as abandoned, and sue to recover the money paid. Therefore, having made due demand, he brings this action.

Plaintiff bases his claim upon the rule laid down in Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 Pac. Rep. 280; Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. Rep. 749; and Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 572, 30 Pac. Rep. 774. So far as applicable to the facts of this case, the rule laid down in those authorities is simply that, when the parties to a contract have abandoned it, or it has been rescinded by mutual consent, either party may recover money paid under it; but it was not intended in those cases to hold that a purchaser may, upon his own default, recover money paid by him, when the vendor has not refused to complete the sale, and the vendee still declines to do so. The conveyance by the vendors was not a breach of the contract. One may sell land which he does not own, and yet be able, when the time of performance arrives, to furnish a good title. In the mean time the purchaser would not be at liberty to disaffirm the contract, on the ground that then the vendor was unable to make a good title. It would be incumbent upon him to offer to perform, or to show that at the time of performance the vendor could not furnish the title. It may be added that it is at least doubtful whether the assignment of the contract of sale would carry with it the right to maintain this suit, even if it were conceded that plaintiff's assignor could have maintained a suit for money she had paid. The action is based upon the theory that, by abandonment or rescission, the contract of sale became non-existent, and therefore moneys which have been paid before its cancellation may be recovered as money paid for the use of the person who paid it. This action is not therefore an action arising under the contract of sale. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 343

STERLING v. SMITH. (No. 14,911.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

PLEADING AND PROOF—RIGHTS OF PRINCIPAL AGAINST AGENT.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. § 462, which provides that the statement of new matter in the answer in avoidance, or constituting a defense or counterclaim, must on the trial be deemed controverted by the opposite party, plaintiff is at liberty to prove fraud at the trial to overcome the new matter set up in the answer, though no allegation of fraud is contained in the complaint.

2. An agent who invests his principal's money in a corporation of which he is a member, and which is largely indebted, without informing her either of his membership or of the debt, is guilty of fraud, though there may be no actual wrongful intent; and the principal may recover such sum from the agent in the absence of a ratification by her of such investment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Margaret T. Sterling against James Smith for the recovery of money. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gould & Stanford, for appellant. Anderson, Metcalf & Anderson, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. In her complaint the plaintiff averred that during a certain period defendant was her confidential agent in purchasing and selling real estate, and in transacting other business for her; that as such agent, and for such business, he received from her during said period the sum of $11,920 or thereabouts; that during said period he paid out and expended for her the sum of $6,225 or thereabouts, leaving a balance of $5,695, with interest, due her from him; and for this last sum she prays judgment. The defendant answered, admitting the agency as alleged in the complaint, but denied that he had received of plaintiff's money more than $9,920.70. The court found that defendant had received of plaintiff's money only the said amount of $9,920.70. But the defendant averred that, in addition to the said sum of $6,225 paid out by him for plaintiff, as averred in the complaint, he also paid out for her the further sum of $3,600. He averred that this latter sum of $3,600 had been paid out by him for her in purchasing certain interests in what is called generally the "Kansas Street Syndicate," which afterwards became a corporation, and was engaged in the purchase and sales of land, principally at Pasadena, Cal. The facts as to this syndicate and the expenditure of money of plaintiff, by defendant in connection with the same, are stated in great detail in the answer. The court found against the defendant as to the said $3,600 alleged to have been expended with said syndicate, and refused to allow defendant for the same, and entered judgment for plaintiff upon the basis of allowing defendant as against said sum of $9,920.70 only the sum of $6,503.75. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and the only point made by him for a reversal of the judgment is the refusal of the court to allow him for said amount paid out in said syndicate. The court found that prior to the time when defendant made the purchase of interests from said syndicate for plaintiff, "he had already become a member of said syndicate, and was one of the joint owners of the property of said syndicate, and of the interests so purchased by him for her; that he did not inform her, and she did not know, at the time she made said purchase, that he was a member of said syndicate, and a part owner of the interests he was about to purchase for her, but led her to believe he was not a member of said syndicate;" and that at the time defendant made said purchase for plaintiff the syndicate was indebted in a large amount, exceeding $55,500, which defendant had been instrumental in incurring, and that he did not notify her of said debt, but represented to her that she would not have any calls to pay if she became a member of the syndicate.

The main contention of appellant is that the findings above referred to are entirely outside of any issues made by the pleadings, for the reason that the complaint does not contain any allegation of facts constituting fraud of any character, or any allegation that appellant was a member of the syndicate, or that she did not know of his having an interest therein, etc., which allegations appellant contends were absolutely essential in order to admit evidence upon the subject. This position, however, is not tenable. Our system of pleading does not include a replication, and under section 462, Code Civil Proc., "the statement of new matter in the answer in avoidance, or constituting a defense or counterclaim, must on the trial be deemed controverted by the opposite party." The averments in the answer as to the investments in the syndicate constituted new matter; and, if a replication were allowable, the plaintiff, by such a pleading, could have set up the facts found by the court as aforesaid. But under our system of pleading she is deemed to have set up such facts. No doubt, when a cause of action rests upon fraud, the facts constituting the fraud must be set up in the complaint; but such was not the case here, for the necessity of proving fraud appeared only after the answer of the defendant. And a plaintiff is in that position with respect to all new matters set up in the answer. Williams v. Dennison, 94 Cal. 540, 29 Pac. Rep. 946; Association v. Clark, 84 Cal. 204, 23 Pac. Rep. 1081; Colton L. & W. Co. v. Raynor, 57 Cal. 588; Curtiss v. Sprague, 49 Cal. 301; Canfield v. Tobias, 21 Cal. 349. In Colton L. & W. Co. v. Raynor, supra, the court, in speaking of said section 462, say: "This has always been regarded as allowing a plaintiff, in reply to such new matter, to introduce on the trial any evidence which countervails or overcomes it, as if it were inserted in a replication, and pleaded with all the precision and fullness which the strictest rules of law ever required." With respect to respondent's criticism of the findings, it is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, they are full and specific enough, and that no further findings were necessary.

As to the merits of the case, it was not necessary for the respondent to prove or for the court to find expressly that the acts done by appellant were done with a fraudulent and wrongful intent, because the acts themselves were of such a character, considering the relationship of the parties, that the law imputes fraud. In Pom. Eq. Jur. § 959, the rule, as between principal and agent, is stated as follows: "Equity requires and treats this relation in the same general manner, and with nearly the same strictness, as that of trustee and beneficiary. The underlying thought is that an agent should not unite his personal and his representative characters in the same transaction; and equity will not permit him to be exposed to the temptation, or brought into a situation where his own personal interests conflict with the interests of his principal. In dealings without the intervention of his principal, if an agent, for the purpose of selling property of the principal, purchases it himself, or an agent, for the purpose of buying property for the principal, buys it from himself, either directly or through the instrumentality of a third person, the sale or purchase is voidable. It will always be set aside at the option of the principal. The amount of consideration, the absence of undue advantage, and other similar features are wholly immaterial. Nothing will defeat the principal's right of remedy except his own confirmation after full knowledge of all the facts." See, also, Burke v. Bours, 92 Cal. 108, 28 Pac. Rep. 57.

The objection that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment because they do not contain an express statement that the respondent did not ratify the investment in the syndicate, cannot be maintained. The findings clearly go upon the theory that there was no such ratification; and, moreover, there was no evidence tending to show any ratification after respondent had learned all the facts about the transaction. Appellant was not entitled, upon the evidence, to a finding that there had been such ratification. Neither do we think that the stipulation of counsel referred to in finding 14 can be held as estopping the respondent from attacking the invalidity of the investment in the syndicate, and the trial was not conducted upon any such theory. There are no other points which we deem it necessary to notice in detail. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 348

SMITH v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES. (No. 15,106.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

RECEIVER—APPOINTMENT—CERTIORARI.

1. An action on a note by a bank against a railroad company is an action at law, and the court has no power to appoint a receiver for the railroad company, though it consents to such appointment, and though the complaint alleges that it is insolvent, that other creditors are threatening to sue, that defendant has no property out of which to satisfy such judgment, and that the action is brought in behalf of all other creditors willing to come in as plaintiffs.

2. Certiorari will not lie to review a judgment after the expiration of the time limited for appeal, unless circumstances of an extraordinary character intervene.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Petition for a writ of certiorari to review an order made by the superior court of Los Angeles county appointing a receiver for the Los Angeles & Pacific Railroad Company. Petition dismissed.

Thomas L. Winder, for appellant. Wilson & Lamme and Anderson & Anderson, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. It appears from the return to the writ of certiorari issued herein that the superior court of Los Angeles on September 30, 1889, made an order appointing one Silver receiver for the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company. The order was made in an action then pending in that court, wherein the California Bank, a corporation, was plaintiff, and the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company and others were defendants. The petitioner here claims that the order appointing the receiver was in excess of the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the object of this proceeding is to procure the judgment of this court, annulling such order. It is stated in the complaint in the action in which the receiver was appointed that the plaintiff therein brings the action in behalf of itself and all other unsatisfied creditors of the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company who shall come in, and contribute to the expenses of the action. The complaint then proceeds to state a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff therein, and against the defendant railroad company, upon two unsecured promissory notes, and further alleges that the defendant railroad corporation is indebted to various persons in sums amounting in all to $225,000; that this indebtedness is long past due, and that the numerous holders thereof are "pressing for payment of such indebtedness, and threatening to, and will, commence suits, attachments, and other proceedings" against said corporation; that the road of the defendant corporation is completed, but that the rolling stock is not owned, but only leased, by said defendant; that there is a mortgage upon record which purports to secure a lien of $240,000 upon the property of said railway company, "and all the rolling stock and motor power of the said company being so leased, as aforesaid, the said defendant corporation has no property, of any kind or character, out of and from which said plaintiff's claim could be met, and a judgment at law and execution would not avail this plaintiff, nor any of the other unsecured creditors; that the said defendant railway company is wholly insolvent, and unable to pay its debts and liabilities, and there is great danger that by reason of attachments and other legal proceedings the property of the said company will be wasted in costs and expenses." There are other averments, not necessary to be here set out, which tended to show that the plaintiff in that action was entitled to an injunction against one Wicks and his wife, who were made defendants in the action. The prayer of the complaint is for an injunction against defendant Wicks and his wife, and "that the court appoint a receiver to take possession of all the property, rights, effects, rents, tolls, issues, and incomes of the said defendant railway corporation, * * * and retain the same, under the direction of this honorable court; that the court issue an order restraining and enjoining the said defendant railway company * * * from claiming any interest in said property, or interfering in the management thereof, except under the orders of this court; that the court ascertain the amount of all the indebtedness of the said railway company, and to whom owing, and adjust and settle the amounts due each,"—and for general relief. The order for the appointment of the receiver was made with the consent of the defendant the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company, and directed said receiver "to continue the operation of said roads in accordance with the usual modes and methods of operating railroads."

1. We are unable to distinguish the action in which the order under review was made from that of the French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495. It was there held that the appointment of a receiver in such an action was unauthorized and void, and should be annulled on certiorari. The only relief to which the plaintiff in the case of The California Bank v. The Los Angeles & Pacific Railway et al. was entitled to was a judgment against the defendant railroad company for the amount alleged to be due upon the promissory notes of which the plaintiff therein was alleged to be the owner, and in such an action the court was without power to appoint a receiver. The allegations of the complaint to the effect that the corporation was insolvent, and that other creditors were threatening to sue the defendant railroad, and that said defendant had no property out of which the plaintiff would be able to satisfy any judgment it might obtain, and that the action was brought in behalf of the plaintiff, and all other creditors of the defendant railroad who were willing to come in as plaintiffs, did not change the essential character of the action from one at law, to recover upon an unsecured indebtedness, to one in which, according to the usages of courts of equity, a receiver may be appointed; nor would the consent of the defendant railroad to the appointment of the receiver at all affect the right of any creditor aggrieved thereby to have the order appointing such receiver annulled in a proceeding of this character.

2. It appears from the record before us that, more than two years after the date of the order appointing the receiver, the petitioner, on his own application, was permitted to intervene in the action in which that order was made, and to join as a plaintiff therein. In his petition for intervention he demanded a judgment against the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company for an alleged indebtedness due him from that corporation, and that its land be sold by the receiver already appointed, and the proceeds thereof applied to the payment of the debts of that defendant. This action upon the part of the petitioner was, in effect, a consent to the order now sought to be overruled; but whether such consent would be of itself sufficient to defeat the present proceeding need not be determined, as we are of opinion that the further contention of respondent, that petitioner has by delay lost the right to the relief now sought, must be sustained. The petition herein was not filed until July 22, 1892, nearly three years after the making of the order sought to be annulled, and no circumstances are shown which in any manner tend to excuse the long delay in making this application. In the case of Reynolds v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. 372, 28 Pac. Rep. 121, it was held that delay in commencing proceedings of this character for a period exceeding one year, unless excused by circumstances, was sufficient to defeat the application for such relief. In that case the court said: "By means of certiorari the petitioner seeks to call in question the validity of a judgment, and an order made under it, considerably more than one year before the presentation of his petition. In Keys v. Marin Co., 42 Cal. 256, it was held that, unless circumstances of an extraordinary character be shown to have intervened, the remedy through a writ of certiorari should be held to be barred by the lapse of the same length of time that bars an appeal from a final judgment." We regard the case just cited as conclusive of this, and upon its authority the writ must be discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.

97 Cal. 339

In re BEDELL'S ESTATE. (No. 15,179.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

ADMINISTRATOR—WHO ENTITLED TO LETTERS.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. § 1365, which fixes the relative order in which persons interested in the estate of an intestate are entitled to administration, and section 1379, which authorizes the appointment of a person not entitled to administration at the written request of the person entitled, the nominee of a person entitled has a preference over one who belongs to a class subsequent in rank to the person making the nomination.

2. Where there has been a waiver of the right to administer an estate by the person entitled, and a written request by him for the appointment of another, the court is not required to pay any attention to his subsequent request for the appointment of the public administrator.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffee, Judge.

Petition for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of Bedell. From an order appointing E. W. Gunther, the public administrator appeals. Affirmed.

J. D. Sullivan and James G. Maguire, for appellant. William F. Herrin and Arthur Rodgers, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The question presented on this appeal is whether the public administrator, or the nominee of the father and mother of the deceased, is entitled to letters of administration upon her estate. The deceased left a will which was admitted to probate, but, the person named therein as executor having renounced his right to serve, the father and mother of the deceased severally requested that the court appoint E. W. Gunther as administrator with the will annexed, and a petition for such appointment was thereupon filed by him. The public administrator also filed a petition that administration on the estate be granted to him. Both petitions were heard by the court at the same time, and, at the conclusion of the hearing, the court made its order appointing Gunther, and denying the application of the public administrator, from which order the public administrator has appealed. The appellant claims that he is entitled to the administration by virtue of the provisions of section 1365, Code Civil Proc.; while the respondent claims that under the provisions of section 1379, Id., the court was authorized to appoint him in preference to the appellant. Section 1365, Id., is as follows:

"Administration of the estate of a person dying intestate must be granted to some one or more of the persons hereinafter mentioned, the relatives of the deceased being entitled to administer only when they are entitled to succeed to his personal estate, or some portion thereof; and they are respectively entitled thereto in the following order: (1) The surviving husband or wife, or some competent person whom he or she may request to have appointed; (2) the children; (3) the father or mother; * * * (8) the public administrator; * * * (10) any person legally competent." And it is alleged on behalf of the appellant that the several classes named therein have the respective right to be appointed in the order in which they are named in the section, and that, with the exception of the nominee of the husband or wife, the persons named in the section must be preferred in their respective rank to the nominee of any other prior class; in other words, that in the present case the court could consider only the nominee of a husband of the deceased, and that the public administrator has a preferred right to the administration over that of the nominee of the father. This construction would, however, deprive the provisions of section 1379, Id., of the effect to which its language is entitled. That section provides that "administration may be granted to one or more competent persons, although not otherwise entitled to the same, at the written request of the person entitled, filed in the court." If the relative right of appointment is to be determined by the order in which the parties entitled are enumerated in section 1365, and the nominee of any of the classes therein named, other than that of the husband or wife, is not to be regarded by the court, this provision of section 1379 would lose all effect. The fact that the person entitled is permitted to make a request that administration be granted to a person "not otherwise entitled" must receive some consideration in the construction of the statute, for it is not to be supposed that the legislature has given such permission merely to have the request denied. The evident purpose of the provision is to give to the one entitled to administration the power to select some competent person to discharge the duties of the office; but to hold that his request is not to be considered when resisted by one who belongs to a class subsequent in rank to his own would be to confine his selection to some person falling within the class immediately after his own. The provision in section 1365 giving to the surviving husband or wife the right to nominate some competent person does not restrict the right of requesting an appointment to them, but makes a special provision for the appointment of their nominee, irrespective of whether they are themselves entitled to administration. Estate of Stevenson, 72 Cal. 164, 13 Pac. Rep. 404. But the provisions of section 1379 are general, and apply with equal effect to each of the classes named in section 1365, the difference between the two sections being that by section 1365 a non-resident husband or wife, though himself incompetent to serve, may confer upon any other competent person the right to be appointed in preference to any one of the subsequent classes; while by section 1379 only the nominee of one who is himself competent to serve can be considered by the court. Estate of Beech, 63 Cal. 458; Estate of Hyde, 64 Cal. 228, 30 Pac. Rep. 804. The provision in this section, being general in its terms, and having no qualifications except the conditions named therein, must be construed as giving to the court the discretionary power to grant administration to any competent person who otherwise would not be entitled thereto, at the written request of a person who would be so entitled. The only conditions necessary for invoking the discretion of the court are that there be a written request from some one who, if applying, would himself be entitled to receive letters of administration, and that the person for whom the request is made be a competent person. In the present case the father was entitled to administration, and the respondent, being a competent person, gave to the court the right to exercise its discretion in making the appointment. This construction finds confirmation in the provision of section 1383, Code Civil Proc., that declares that "when letters of administration have been granted to any other person than the surviving husband or wife, child, father, mother, brother, or sister of the intestate, any one of them who is competent, or any competent person at the written request of any one of them, may obtain the revocation of the letters, and be entitled to the administration by presenting to the court a petition praying the revocation, and that letters of administration may be issued to him." If the court could, immediately upon having appointed the public administrator, revoke his letters, at the request of a nominee of the father, it is reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended by section 1379 to give to it the same discretion in the original appointment of the administrator. The request of the father for the appointment of the respondent, and the application thereon for administration, was not rendered ineffective by the subsequent request of the father for the appointment of the public administrator. Having once waived and relinquished his right to administration in favor of the respondent, the court was not required to pay any regard to his subsequent request for the appointment of the public administrator. Estate of Kirtlan, 16 Cal. 162. The order is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 360
SCARF v. ALDRICH. (No. 19,070.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1893.)

SALE OF WARD'S REALTY—JURISDICTION—PETITION—ORDER OF SALE—COLLATERAL ATTACK—GUARDIAN'S DEED.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 1782, provides that on petition by a guardian to sell his ward's land the probate court must make an order for the appearance of "the next of kin of the ward, and all persons interested in the estate, * * * not less than four, nor more than eight, weeks from the time of making such order, to show cause why an order of sale should not be granted." Held that, though an order of sale made 23 days after the order to show cause was erroneous, the sale was valid, since the court acquired jurisdiction, when the petition was presented, as the proceeding was not adverse to the ward.

2. Code Civil Proc. § 1783, providing that a copy of the order to show cause must be personally served on all persons interested, or must be published, does not require that the order shall be served on a ward, since he is in court by the filing of the petition, and submits his property to the jurisdiction and order of the court. Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45, distinguished.

3. A petition for a sale of land by a guardian, and an order to show cause, described the land as "a part of lot number 5, in block number 12, of the town of San Bernardino, Cal." In the order of sale the description was specific, giving a precise starting point, and describing the land by metes and bounds. Held, that the defective description in the petition and order to show cause did not affect the jurisdiction of the court, or the validity of a sale by the correct description. Wilson v. Hastings, 5 Pac. Rep. 217, 66 Cal. 244, distinguished.

4. Irregularities in a proceeding by a guardian to sell his ward's land, occurring after the court acquires jurisdiction, which would have required a reversal on appeal, do not affect the validity of a sale on collateral attack.

5. A ward's title to land passes by his guardian's deed therefor, and not by the confirmation of the sale by the court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; George E. Otis, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Henry S. Scarf, an infant, by W. L. G. Soule, his guardian ad litem, against J. B. Aldrich. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Willis, Cole & Craig, for appellant. C. W. Rowell and E. E. Rowell, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action is to quiet title, and involves the validity of a sale of the premises in question, by the guardian of the plaintiff, to the defendant. The complaint is in the usual form, alleging ownership in fee, that plaintiff is entitled to the possession, that defendant claims an interest adversely to the plaintiff, and that such claim is without right. Findings and judgment passed for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll, and a bill of exceptions setting out the evidence. Elizabeth Wagner, the guardian of the plaintiff, filed a petition in the probate court on November 20, 1879, praying for an order to sell the premises in controversy. This petition set out facts showing the necessity for the sale of the premises, which consisted of a part of a lot in the city of San Bernardino; and no question is made as to its sufficiency, except as to the description of the premises sought to be sold. Upon this petition the court on the same day made an order requiring all persons interested to show cause before the court on the 13th day of December, 1879, why an order of sale should not be granted; and, no objection having been made, an order of sale was granted on the day last named. The premises were subsequently sold to the defendant under this order, and the sale was confirmed March 5, 1880, and on the next day the guardian executed and delivered to the defendant a deed of conveyance therefor. The respondent's principal contention is that the order to show cause did not conform to the statute; that, therefore, the court did not acquire jurisdiction; and that all subsequent proceedings were void, and did not divest the title of the plaintiff.

Section 1782 of the Code of Civil Procedure then provided, as it does now, that the time fixed in the order for the hearing should not be "less than four, nor more than eight, weeks from the time of making such order to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate." Sections 1783 and 1784 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as they then existed, were as follows: "1783. A copy of the order must be personally served on the next of kin of the ward, and on all persons interested in the estate, at least fourteen days before the hearing of the petition, or must be published at least three successive weeks in a newspaper printed in the county, or, if there be none printed in the county, then in such newspaper as may be specified by the court or judge in the order. If written consent to making the order of sale is subscribed by all persons interested therein, and the next of kin, notice need not be served or published. 1784. The probate court, at the time and place appointed in the order, or such other time to which the hearing is postponed, upon proof of the service or publication of the order, must hear and examine the proofs and allegations of the petitioner and of the next of kin, and of all other persons interested in the estate, who oppose the application." This order was published four times,—the first publication on November 21st, and the last, December 12th. The statute requiring three weeks' publication was therefore complied with. From the date of the order to and including the day of hearing, there were but 23 days, while there should have been not less than 4 weeks, or 28 days; and for that reason respondent contends that the order was void, and that the court acquired no jurisdiction. That the order was erroneous, is evident, but the sole question is whether the court had jurisdiction to order the sale; for whatever errors may have occurred in the proceedings, if the court acquired jurisdiction, the sale of the real estate was not void, and the title passed to the purchaser. It is contended by respondent that proceedings by a guardian for the sale of the ward's estate are adverse to the ward, that the order to show cause is in the nature of a summons, and that a substantial compliance with the statute is a prerequisite for obtaining authority to proceed. Respondent's principal error lies in the first part of his contention, viz. that the proceedings are adverse to the ward; for in fact the proceedings are by the ward, and for his benefit. Our statute does not require that notice shall be given to or served upon the ward, thus emphasizing what is apparent from the nature and object of the proceeding, and clearly distinguishing it from a proceeding by an administrator to sell the real estate of the intestate to pay debts, which is clearly adverse to the heir; and therefore a valid and sufficient notice to the heir is essential to give the court jurisdiction over him, as a party to the proceeding. But in the case of guardians' sales the minor is in court by the filing of the petition, and submits his property to the jurisdiction and order of the court. An order for the sale of the property is not an order against or adverse to the minor, but is a granting of his request. It is not a judgment in personam, but operates only on the property, and is therefore in rem.

In the case of Gager v Henry, 5 Sawy. 243, the order to show cause was directed to be published "for four successive weeks," while the proof of publication showed that it was only published three weeks. The court said: "This, at least, is a serious irregularity; and if the jurisdiction of the court did not attach upon the filing of the petition, but until due service of the prescribed notice of the time and place of the hearing on the petition, the subsequent proceeding would probably be void. * * * But the better opinion seems to be that the proceeding by a guardian to obtain a license to sell his ward's land is not one between adverse parties, and of which the court does not acquire jurisdiction until due service is made of the notice of application, but rather a proceeding in rem, carried on by and in the interest of the ward through his legal representative,—his guardian." That court, after citing several authorities, and among them Fitch v. Miller, 20 Cal. 381, concluded that the county court had acquired jurisdiction by the presentation of the petition, and therefore its judgment could not be questioned collaterally on account of any errors committed in the course of its subsequent proceedings. In Mohr v. Manierre, 101 U.S. 418, a case originating in the state of Wisconsin, the guardian of a lunatic petitioned for the sale of his ward's property to pay debts. The order to show cause why the application should not be granted was required to be published at least four successive weeks. The order was not published for the full time. The order of sale was granted, and the property sold. After the recovery of the lunatic, he brought a suit in ejectment to recover the land. The supreme court held: "(1) That the publication of the notice of the hearing is only intended for the protection of parties having adversary interests in the property, and is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court. (2) That, so far as the rights of the lunatic are concerned, the jurisdiction of the court attached upon filing the guardian's petition setting forth the facts required by the statute. (3) That, as against the lunatic, a license to sell is not rendered invalid by reason of an insufficient publication of notice of the hearing." See syllabus. In another case where property of a minor had been sold by guardian, the same court said: "In this form of proceeding the guardian sufficiently and fully represented the infants, and no notice to them was required by the statute of Maryland, or by any general rule of law." Thaw v. Ritchie, 136 U.S. at page 548, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. at page 1044. See, also, Fitzgibbon v. Lake, 29 Ill. 176; Mulford v. Beveridge, 78 Ill. 458; Mohr v. Porter, 51 Wis. 487, 8 N.W. Rep. 364. Respondent's citations from Freeman's Void Judicial Sales all refer to "proceedings in probate to obtain a sale of real estate as an independent adversary proceeding in personam;" but in the latter part of section 15 the author seems to concur in the views we have endeavored to express, and cites Mohr v. Manierre, supra, and other cases. Haws v. Clark, 37 Iowa, 355, cited by respondent, is not applicable. There the statute required notice to be served upon the minor, and to be returned and heard upon a regular term day. It was clearly in the power of the legislature to limit the exercise of jurisdiction by the court to a day in the regular term; and, as to service of the notice upon the minor, the case can have no application here, as our statute does not require such notice. Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 592, and De la Montagne v. Insurance Co., 42 Cal. 292, were cases of the sale of personal property without any order of court. Halleck v. Moss, 17 Cal. 340, was a sale by executors upon insufficient notice. Stilwell v. Swarthout, 81 N.Y. 109, was an action by creditors of an estate against the administrators and heirs, and involved a question as to the validity of a sale of real estate by the administrators. The inapplicability of the foregoing cases cited by respondent is clear. The case of Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 45, cited by respondent several times, is not in point. That was an action in ejectment by a minor, by his guardian ad litem, to recover real estate. But in that case the land had been sold by the administrator to pay debts. Schellenberger was the general guardian of the infant, as well as administrator of the estate. Section 159 of the probate act required a copy of the order to be served on the general guardian. It was contended that as Schellenberger was the petitioner, and also the guardian, he, as guardian, had notice. But it was held that Schellenberger could not represent both sides; that the minor had no guardian quoad the petition; and that, therefore, the knowledge of the guardian was not equivalent to the notice required, the proceeding being hostile to the minor, as heir of the estate. The question we are considering was not before the court in that case, and was not decided, but the reasoning of the court is entirely consistent with the view we have taken of the case at bar.

The petition of the guardian for the sale of these premises alleged that the property was unproductive, by reason of being in bad repair; that it was the only property of any character belonging to the minor; that there was no fund out of which the property could be put in repair, or to pay the taxes thereon; that it would be sold for taxes unless sooner converted into money; that the minor was then but seven years of age; and that a sale was necessary to provide him with the common necessities of life. These facts are nowhere contradicted in the record, and it may therefore be safely asserted that, if the guardian had not sold the property, it would have been lost to the plaintiff by a sale for taxes, and that during his earlier years, at least, he would have been compelled to subsist upon the charity of strangers, or become an inmate of an almshouse. No question is made, either in the complaint or in the evidence, but that the full value of the property was realized, or that fraud of any character intervened, nor that he has not had the full benefit of the proceeds, though, if it were otherwise, it would not affect the question here. While courts of equity are zealous in their efforts to protect the rights and property of infants, and all others who are not sui juris, they are equally unwilling, unless compelled by some strict rule of law, to make their incapacity a shield or ground for doing wrong. Certainly in this case there is nothing to commend the respondent to the sympathies of a court of equity to which he has resorted. It may be that the next of kin, or others interested in the estate of the minor, (if there are such,) are not bound, for want of proper notice, but that does not aid the plaintiff. Nor would the court subvert the best interests of wards by making the titles of purchasers at guardian's sales so uncertain as to prevent the obtaining of a fair price when necessity compels a sale.

Another ground upon which respondent contends that the court had no jurisdiction requires notice, viz. that the petition and order to show cause were void because of an insufficient description of the real estate sought to be sold. The description was as follows: "A part of lot number five, in block number twelve, of the town of San Bernardino, Cal." In the order of sale, however, the description was specific, giving a precise starting point, and describing the premises by metes and bounds. In the complaint in this case the starting point, instead of being "at the northeast corner of the lot owned by L. Caro," as in the order of sale, is fixed, by reference, to a certain corner of lot 5. There is no allegation or evidence that the premises sold under the description given in the order of sale are not identical with those described in the complaint; and hence, if the court had jurisdiction to sell the premises described in the order, there can be no partial recovery by the plaintiff. That the defective description in the petition and order to show cause did not affect the jurisdiction of the court, or the validity of the sale by the correct description, see Fitch v. Miller, 20 Cal. 352; Estate of Boland, 55 Cal. 312; Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 Pac. Rep. 9; Gager v. Henry, 5 Sawy. 239. The case of Wilson v. Hastings, 66 Cal. 244, 5 Pac. Rep. 217, cited by respondent, was one where the sale was by the executor of an estate, and as to the heir was an adverse proceeding; and hence is widely distinguished from this case, where the proceeding was ex parte by the minor, for his own benefit. There was no inconsistency between the general description in the petition and the definite description in the order of sale. The property mentioned in the petition is the property that was sold.

Other irregularities are pointed out by respondent which would have required a reversal of the proceedings upon appeal; but it is not necessary to notice them, as they occurred after the court acquired jurisdiction, and hence do not affect the validity of the sale upon collateral attack.

Counsel for respondent quotes the concluding part of a stipulation in the case, made to relieve plaintiff of the necessity of proving title to him prior to the guardian's sale, viz.: "And no question is made as to the title of plaintiff and his ownership in all of the premises described in the complaint up to and including March 5, 1880," and contends that this stipulation "lets the defendant out," because, it is said, "if plaintiff was the owner up to and including March 5, 1880, the decree of confirmation cuts no figure whatever." The obvious intention of the stipulation was to concede that prior to the time when title would have vested in the defendant under the sale to him, if the proceedings were valid, the plaintiff was the owner; thus leaving the sole question whether or not his title was divested by these proceedings. This is clearly shown by the body of the stipulation, which admits that the plaintiff was seised in fee "prior to the decree of confirmation, * * * and prior to the execution of the deed of Elizabeth Wagner, then guardian," etc. This deed was made March 6, 1880, and as plaintiff's title was divested by the deed, and not by the confirmation of the sale, the stipulation, even as construed by respondent, cannot aid him. Doe v. Jackson, 51 Ala. 514.

All of the proceedings had in the probate court, except the petition, were objected to, as offered by the defendant; and the objections were sustained by the court, as was also the objection to the deed made by the guardian to the defendant. As those objections are fully covered by what has been said, it is not necessary to notice them further. The court erred in sustaining these objections, and the judgment should be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed.

97 Cal. 232

In re HAAS' ESTATE. (No. 19,107.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1893.)

In bank. On rehearing.

For former report, see 31 Pac. Rep. 893.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied, but judgment modified so as to read as follows: Order reversed, except that part thereof disallowing claim of Ella V. Haas. As to that part, affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 799)

FLETCHER v. NORTHCROSS. (No. 19,007.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

MORTGAGE OR CONDITIONAL SALE.

Foreclosure proceedings were dismissed, and the mortgagor executed a deed to the mortgagee, pursuant to an agreement whereby the mortgagee was to satisfy the mortgage of record, and the mortgagor was to have the privilege of selling the land within six months thereafter, and retain all moneys which he might receive therefor over and above a specified sum, which he was to pay to the mortgagee. Held that, in view of the facts that the mortgagor made no promise to pay any sum to the mortgagee, that the sum to be paid the mortgagee in case of a resale was several thousand dollars less than the mortgage debt, that no interest was to be paid by the mortgagor, and that the mortgagee at once took possession of the premises, the transaction must be construed, not as a mortgage, but as a conditional sale, to become absolute on the mortgagor's failure to sell the land within the time specified.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. Towner, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by John R. Fletcher against James W. Northcross to recover the possession of real estate. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, F. W. Sanborn, and Julian P. Jones, for appellant. Victor Montgomery and C. C. Hamilton, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This action was brought to recover the possession of real estate under section 380 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Two defenses are pleaded. The first simply denies plaintiff's title and right of possession. In the second, it is shown that plaintiff claims title under and from defendant, and it is averred that the deed from defendant, under which plaintiff claims, was intended and received as security for a loan, and is therefore a mortgage. Defendant alleges that on the 1st day of August, 1890, he was indebted to plaintiff in divers sums upon certain notes, secured by mortgage upon the premises described in the complaint. That the amount of the indebtedness was $21,000. The mortgaged premises were then worth $35,000. That defendant desired to sell, and from the proceeds to pay plaintiff's demand. That he might be able to give a clear title, it was agreed between himself and plaintiff that the mortgages should be nominally satisfied of record, and, in lieu of them, defendant should execute to plaintiff an absolute deed, and plaintiff would then reconvey to defendant by a deed, which should be placed in escrow, to be delivered to defendant upon payment of $21,000 to Balcom, who was to hold the deed. That this agreement was carried out, and a deed conveying the premises to defendant was executed, and placed in the hands of Balcom, with written directions to deliver the same to defendant on receipt of $21,000, on or before February 1, 1891. That it was agreed that, upon sale of said premises, plaintiff should have $21,000 of the proceeds, and no more, and that the residue, if any, realized from the sale, should belong to defendant. That defendant diligently endeavored to procure a purchaser for said land, but was unable to consummate a sale. That the plaintiff, in violation of his obligation, has at all times since the execution of the deeds endeavored to discourage, and did discourage, many intending purchasers from purchasing said land, and, in consequence of such acts of plaintiff, defendant has been unable to procure a purchaser. In reference to this defense the court finds that on the 1st day of August, 1890, defendant was indebted to plaintiff in divers sums, evidenced by certain promissory notes, and secured by mortgages upon the land in controversy; that there was due upon the mortgages between $26,000 and $27,000, that an action brought by plaintiff was then pending to foreclose the mortgages; that defendant, in consideration of having the indebtedness satisfied and the mortgages discharged, conveyed the land to plaintiff, who thereupon canceled, satisfied, and discharged the indebtedness and the mortgages, and dismissed the suit pending for foreclosure, and at the same time agreed that the defendant should have, for the period of six months thereafter, the right and authority to sell said land, and to retain all moneys he might receive therefor, over and above $21,000, and might, during that period, retain possession of the house and barn on the premises, and, in pursuance of this agreement, executed a deed conveying the land to defendant, and placed the same in escrow in the hands of Balcom, to be delivered to defendant upon receipt of $21,000, if paid prior to February 1, 1891, and, in case said sum was not paid by that time, the deed to be surrendered to plaintiff; that no sale was made by defendant, and shortly after the 1st day of February, 1891, the deed was surrendered to plaintiff, in pursuance of the understanding; that all the other allegations in the answer were untrue. Judgment was thereupon entered for plaintiff. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial.

The question presented is whether the transaction must be considered a mortgage, or an actual sale to plaintiff, with an agreement to resell at a certain price. The difficulty of determining whether the transaction is not a mere device to obtain security for a debt, and at the same time to escape the expense and delay of a foreclosure, has often been recognized. If A conveys to B a tract of land, in consideration of a sum of money, due from or then paid to the grantor, and agrees to reconvey at a specified time, if the money is repaid, with interest, the grantor in the meantime remaining in possession, it is difficult to comprehend a motive for the transaction except upon the theory that the conveyance is security for a debt. Yet it is said: "To deny the power of two individuals capable of acting for themselves to make a contract defeasible by the payment of money at a future day, or, in other words, to make a sale with a reservation to the vendor of a right to repurchase the same land at a fixed price, and at a specified time, would be to transfer to the courts of chancery in a considerable degree the guardianship of adults, as well as infants." Conway's Ex'rs v. Alexander, 7 Cranch, 237. In Henley v. Hotaling, 41 Cal. 22, the negotiations and the agreement were with the agent of the borrower for a loan; but it was discovered that the warrant of attorney did not authorize the agent to execute a mortgage, but did authorize a sale. So it was arranged that the agent should make an absolute conveyance, defeasible on a day named, by repayment, with interest. This court held that it was not a mortgage, on the ground that there was no agreement, express or implied, to pay. It is said: "If there is no debt, there is no mortgage. We look in vain in this case to find any evidence of a promise on the part of Storms to repay the purchase money, or of the existence of a debt of any kind from him to Hotaling." And it is further said that, in case Hotaling brought suit to foreclose, "the answer that there was no promise, either express or implied, on the part of the alleged mortgagor, would have been a complete bar." To the same effect are Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169; Page v. Vilhac, Id. 75; Montgomery v. Spect, 55 Cal. 352; Manasse v. Dinkelspiel, 68 Cal. 404, 9 Pac. Rep. 547. The case at bar is not nearly as close a case upon this point as either of the cases above cited. In all of those cases it was plausibly argued that there was an implied promise to pay, which would create a liability at least to the extent of the property conveyed. There may be a mortgage in which the mortgagee is restricted to his lien, and cannot recover a judgment for deficiency. In this case, in addition to the fact that there is no promise to pay, there are many circumstances which rebut the presumption that either party supposed that the deed was held as security. (1) The payee had commenced suit to foreclose, because he believed the security insufficient. Further time would have been given if further security could have been had. (2) The amount to be paid was not the amount of the debt, but more than $5,000 less. (3) No interest was to be paid. (4) The grantee took immediate possession. True, the defendant continued to occupy the house and barn under the agreement for six months, but the beneficial use passed at once to the grantee. (5) It was supposed that it would cost $1,500 to cultivate the orange orchards. As defendant was authorized to sell at any time, plaintiff might not be able to gather the crop. In that case he would lose this expense. And (6) all the circumstances show that the arrangement was simply in pursuance of an agreement to give defendant the exclusive privilege of selling as plaintiff's agent for six months, with the right to retain all over $21,000 as commissions. Such, indeed, are the allegations of defendant's answer, and such is the testimony. Plaintiff thought the land only worth that sum, and was willing to take that for it. Defendant naturally valued it much higher, and was sure he could get more for it. Nothing was more natural, then, than that plaintiff should employ defendant to sell. The option was for a limited period. If the presumption which it seems to me naturally arises in such transactions can be rebutted, I think it is in this case. There was no error in not finding whether the land was worth $35,000 or not. If true, this was a mere probative fact. Nor do I think the record shows that there was any evidence that it was worth that sum. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

that defendant afterwards indorsed on the note a waiver of payment and protest, since such act constitutes a ratification of the indorsement.

3. Money was deposited with defendant, as trustee, to pay off an indebtedness on a note owned by plaintiff, but the payee refused to accept payment, because the note was not then due. He then loaned out the fund without any authority from plaintiff, who, being dissatisfied with the loan, caused defendant to transfer to him the mortgage and note given to secure the loan, defendant indorsing the note. The proceeds of the loan were used by the borrower to pay a debt due by him to defendant, which had been secured on the same land, and this land was at the time declining in value. Held, that the court was justified in finding that defendant's indorsement of the note was intended as further security for its payment, and not merely to transfer the title thereto.

4. Where a mortgage given to secure a note has been foreclosed, the land sold, and a deficiency judgment entered up against the mortgagor, an indorser of the note is not entitled to an assignment of such judgment before he has paid the balance due on the note.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. J. Clark, Judge.

Action by John Allin, trustee, against R. Williams, to recover a balance due on a note indorsed by defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Haynes, for appellant. A. R. Metcalf, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. In February, 1888, 10 individuals, including the plaintiff and the defendant herein, borrowed upon their individual credit the sum of $10,000, for the use and benefit of the Pasadena Lake Vineyard, Land & Water Company, a corporation in which they were interested, ($5,000 thereof from the San Gabriel Valley Bank, and $5,000 from a Mrs. Banta,) for which they gave their joint and several notes. About a month afterwards the corporation paid to the defendant a sufficient sum of money therefor, for the purpose of taking up the notes and repaying the sums thus advanced, and the defendant deposited the same with the San Gabriel Valley Bank, to the credit of "R. Williams et al." He immediately paid the loan that had been made by the bank, but Mrs. Banta refused to accept the money on her note, for the reason that it would not mature for nearly a year, and thereupon the money for its payment, viz. $5,221.98, was left in the bank to the aforesaid credit. Prior to this time the defendant had contracted to sell to one Webster certain real property in Pasadena, and Webster had contracted to sell a portion of the same property to one Wilson. Webster was owing defendant $5,000 on his contract of purchase, and Wilson was owing to Webster a little more than this amount on his contract with him; and on April 18, 1888, in pursuance of an arrangement between them for the purpose of liquidating these several obligations, the defendant made a conveyance of the land to Wilson, Webster uniting therein. Wilson executed to the defendant his note for $5,000, payable February 10, 1889, and secured the same by a mortgage upon the land, made to the defend-

97 Cal. 403

ALLIN v. WILLIAMS. (No. 19,076.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

NOTE SECURED BY MORTGAGE—ACTION AGAINST INDORSEE—EVIDENCE.

1. The indorser of a note secured by a mortgage given by the maker is liable, after judgment against the maker in a suit to foreclose, for any deficiency arising on the sale under foreclosure.

2. A contention by defendant that a person who indorsed a note for him had no authority to do so, is untenable where it appears ant, as trustee for the 10 individuals who had signed the Banta note; and on April 21st the defendant transferred the aforesaid sum of $5,221.98 from the account of "R. Williams et al." to his own personal account in the same bank. In September of that year several of these individuals expressed a dissatisfaction with his acts relating to the money, and thereupon the defendant, acting through his attorney, Wright, who was one of the 10, surrendered to Wilson the aforesaid note and mortgage, and took from him a new note for $5,000, maturing February 10, 1889, payable to "R. Williams or order," together with a mortgage on the same property, securing its payment, and on the same day indorsed the note to the order of "John Allin, as trustee," the plaintiff herein, and assigned the mortgage to him, "in trust for the benefit" of the 10 contributors, naming them. After the Wilson note had matured, the plaintiff brought an action thereon, making Wilson and the defendant herein defendants in the action. Wilson suffered default, and the plaintiff, having dismissed the defendant herein from the action, took judgment against Wilson for the amount of the note, and for a sale of the mortgaged property. Upon the sale under that judgment the property was bid in by the plaintiff for the sum of $2,400, and the sheriff returned a deficiency judgment of $3,737. Thereupon the plaintiff, as trustee for the benefit of the 10 contributors, brought this action to recover from the defendant the amount of this deficiency.

1. The action against the defendant is for the purpose of enforcing his liability as an indorser upon the Wilson note. The averments of a recovery of judgment in the action against Wilson, and of the proceedings thereunder, are for the purpose of showing that a portion of the note has been paid by subjecting the security given therefor to a sale, and thus determining the amount to be recovered from the defendant. The right to maintain an action against the indorser of a note whose payment has been secured by a mortgage given by the maker, after judgment has been recovered against the maker in a suit to foreclose, was established in Vandewater v. McRae, 27 Cal. 596.

2. The court finds that Wright, who was the defendant's attorney, by whom the indorsement was made, was fully authorized to indorse the note, and there was sufficient evidence before it to authorize this finding. Aside from the general power of attorney which he had given him, the defendant directed Wright, at the time he was leaving the state, in September, just after objection had been made by the contributors to his disposition of the money, to fix the matter up to suit those who were making those objections, and while he was absent from the state he sent a telegram to Wright to exercise his best judgment in arranging the matter. In addition to this, the defendant himself, after his return to Pasadena, indorsed upon the note a waiver of payment, presentment for payment, protest and notice of protest, and the court was authorized to treat this act as an affirmance and ratification of the prior indorsement by his attorney.

3. The appellant contends that his indorsement of the note to the plaintiff was without consideration, and merely for the purpose of transferring the title thereto, and that he did not incur the liability of an indorser. An indorser may show, as between himself and his immediate indorsee, that the indorsement was made merely for the purpose of transferring the note from a nominal holder to the true owner, as from an agent to his principal; or that the circumstances under which the indorsement was made were such as would render it inequitable to enforce an indorser's liability against him, (McPherson v. Weston, 85 Cal. 90, 24 Pac. Rep. 733;) but in any such case the burden of establishing such a defense to the apparent liability attendant upon his indorsement rests upon the indorser. The court below found upon evidence (which we think amply sustains its finding) that the "indorsement on the said note was made for the purpose of making the said defendant liable as an indorser of said note, and giving to the persons for whose benefit the plaintiff prosecutes this action the additional security of such indorsement, and was made and received in settlement of the differences which existed between the defendant and the said persons, and that it is untrue that said indorsement was without consideration." When the money was placed in the hands of the defendant, he was but a mere depository thereof for the purpose of paying the Banta note, and, after Mrs. Banta had refused to accept it until the note should mature, he still held it in trust for the 10 contributors, without any authority to make any other disposition of it. Although some of these contributors expressed an opinion that the money ought not to lie idle, but should earn as much interest as they were paying to Mrs. Banta, still the defendant does not claim to have had any express authority to make a loan of it, but seeks to uphold his action by showing that there was a general desire that it should be loaned. He does not claim to have spoken specifically to more than three or four of the contributors, and they contradicted his statement, and, as well as the others, testified that the loan to Wilson was made without their knowledge. Under this evidence the court was authorized to find that the making of the loan to Wilson was his own act, and those for whom he held the money had the right to hold him responsible for any loss. They had the right to demand of him a transfer to another trustee of all of the money which had originally been placed in his hands for the purpose of paying the Banta note, irrespective of the use which he had made of it; but, instead thereof, they agreed to accept a transfer of the Wilson note and mortgage, with the additional security of the defendant's indorsement. This was a direct advantage to the defendant, as it relieved him from the obligation to make immediate payment of the trust money, and gave him the contingent advantage of having his obligation entirely satisfied out of the mortgage security given by

Wilson. The defendant does not contend that there was any express agreement by which his indorsement of the Wilson note was to be taken in satisfaction of his liability for the money left with him in trust, but insists that the circumstances under which the indorsement was made show that it was so intended. Instead, however, of it appearing in the evidence that it was the intention of the parties to accept the Wilson note and mortgage in satisfaction of the obligation of the defendant, the circumstances and negotiations between them at the time of the transaction show that the parties were dealing at arm's length, and that the contributors were demanding the indorsement of the defendant as an additional security; and the court was justified in finding that it was given for that purpose. It is undoubtedly true that when a trustee holds funds which it is his duty to invest, and when the beneficiaries are interested chiefly in the income resulting from such investment, he will not be held liable for a depreciation of the security, or even for a loss in an investment that was made by him in good faith, and upon suitable security which was ample at the time of the investment. But this rule has no application to the present case. The defendant was a trustee of the moneys placed in his hands for the sole purpose of paying the Banta note, and when that could not be done his duty was merely to hold the money until those for whose benefit he held it should give him definite directions. He was at no time a trustee for the purpose of lending, or with power to lend, the money. The court, moreover, finds that his acts in making the loan were not only not authorized by the contributors, but also that the loan itself was not made in good faith. The land which he took from Wilson as security for the note was at the time held by him as security for an obligation of Webster to himself, and he was pressing Webster for payment. Although several of the witnesses testified that, in their opinion, the land was at that time a sufficient security for the loan, yet they were unable to corroborate their opinion by evidence of a sale of any land in that vicinity at any time between the transaction with Wilson and the time of the trial, and it appeared that within a little more than a year it sold for less than half the amount of the loan. It was also shown that lands were then declining in value, and Webster was himself willing to deduct $1,200 from the amount due him from Wilson, in order to effect the arrangement by which Wilson should be substituted for himself as the debtor to the defendant. These facts authorized the court to find that the defendant dealt with the trust property for his own profit, in violation of section 2229, Civil Code, and, consequently, that he did not act in good faith in making the loan. Section 2234, Id.

4. The judgment in the case of Allin v. Wilson is not set forth in the record, and we cannot say that it is of such a character as to constitute a bar to the present action. The mere filing of a dismissal with the clerk, or the entry of an order of dismissal in the minutes of the court, would not, of itself, constitute such a bar. The facts shown in reference to the dismissal justify the conclusion that it was filed before the hearing of the matter upon the default of Wilson.

5. It was not necessary that the plaintiff should have alleged in his complaint or shown an offer to assign to the defendant the deficiency judgment against Wilson, or that the judgment herein should direct that such assignment be made. Although an indorser is entitled, upon payment of a note which he has indorsed, or of a judgment against the maker rendered thereon, to an assignment thereof, yet such assignment is not a condition of the plaintiff's right of recovery, but is a right accruing to the defendant by reason of his payment.

6. A considerable portion of the brief on behalf of the appellant has been devoted to a discussion of the relative rights of the plaintiff and the defendant in the property bought under the Wilson judgment, as well as in the deficiency judgment, in case he shall satisfy the present judgment; and he argues therefrom that, as he is liable for only his share of the Banta note, there can be no right of action against him until that share shall have been ascertained by a sale of the property bought in under the Wilson judgment, and the means of collecting the deficiency judgment against Wilson shall have been exhausted. It is unnecessary for us, however, to pass upon these questions, as they are not involved in this action. This is an action by the plaintiff, as trustee for the 10 contributors, to recover from the defendant the unpaid amount of the note taken by him from Wilson, and indorsed to the plaintiff. The relative rights and obligations of the defendant towards the several contributors can be presented in an action for their adjustment at the settlement of the trust, after the Banta note shall have been paid. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

3 Cal. Unrep. 782
MAXWELL v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (No. 19,109.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1893.)

MANDAMUS TO COUNTY BOARD—ADVERTISING CONTRACT.

1. Under St. 1891, c. 216, § 25, subd. 25, providing that the board of supervisors shall fix the price of all county advertising, mandamus will not lie to compel such board to contract for such advertising by giving public notice calling for proposals.

2. Such statute repeals Pol. Code, § 3766, providing that county advertising must be contracted for with the lowest bidder.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Mandamus at the relation of H. M. Maxwell to compel the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county to give public notice calling for proposals for county advertising. From a judgment dismissing the petition, entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to it, relator appeals. Affirmed.

E. A. Meserve, for appellant. James McLachlan, Dist. Atty., and B. M. Marble and Waldo M. York, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is taken from a judgment of dismissal of a petition for a writ of mandate, after demurrer sustained to such petition on the ground that it did not contain facts showing a cause of action. It depends for its determination upon the construction to be given to subdivision 23 of section 25 of the county government act of 1891, as affecting the provisions of section 3766 of the Political Code as it stood before the passage of the act. It has been held in the case of Publishing Co. v. Whitney, 32 Pac. Rep. 237, (this day decided,) that the county government act repeals so much of section 3766, Pol. Code, as requires the board of supervisors to contract for the publication of the delinquent tax list by advertising for sealed proposals to do the same, and awarding the advertising of the list to the lowest bidder. It is plain that the legislature intended to make it the duty of the board of supervisors themselves, in the exercise of a proper discretion, to fix the price of such advertising, without any necessity for giving public notice calling for proposals from those wishing to do such work; but the contract for advertising is to be made by the proper officer, and for a price not exceeding that fixed by the board of supervisors.

Judgment affirmed.

97 Cal. 373

MCCORMICK v. SUTTON et al. (No. 18,053.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1893.)
TOWN SITES—DEED FROM TOWN—TITLE ACQUIRED—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Where a patent to a town site has issued, a deed from the town authorities, of a town lot, vests in the grantee a title which cannot be afterwards questioned collaterally, if at the time the patent issued no mine had been discovered, and the land was not known to be mineral.

2. Where a person holding the title to a lot has general possession thereof, her constructive possession extends to the whole of the lot, except such parts as are actually occupied by persons holding adversely to her; and they cannot set up title by adverse possession to any parts of the lot except those occupied by them.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; John M. Corcoran, Judge.

Action by Margaret McCormick against Frederick Sutton and another to quiet title to land. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wheaton, Kallloch & Kierce, for appellant. J. F. Rooney and F. W. Street, for respondents.

McFARLAND, C. J. This is an action to quiet title to a piece of land described as lot 50 in a certain block in the city of Sonora, county of Tuolumne. The defendants filed separate answers, and each claimed title to a large portion of said lot by virtue of an alleged location and ownership of a quartz-mining claim, called the "San Guiseppi Quartz Mine;" and defendant Sutton further averred that he had been in the adverse possession of that portion of said mine which is embraced in said lot 50 for more than five years before the commencement of the suit, and pleaded the statute of limitations. Judgment went in the lower court for the defendants, and the court decreed that Sutton was entitled to the possession of all that part of said lot 50 which was included within the said alleged mining claim. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

It appears from the findings that on March 24, 1874, the government of the United States issued its patent of the town site of the city of Sonora to the trustees of said city. Said lot 50 was a part of said town site, and was conveyed by the said trustees on the 6th of August, 1874, to one Oliver Cowan; and by several mesne conveyances the title under the said town-site patent to said lot 50 passed from said Cowan to the appellant before the commencement of this action. About nine years afterwards, to wit, in January, 1883, the respondent Sutton and one Gerlach undertook to locate a certain quartz-mining claim, generally known as the "Guiseppi." They posted and recorded a notice claiming 1,500 feet along a certain quartz ledge, with 300 feet surface ground on either side, properly designated its boundaries, and since then have done sufficient work within said boundaries to comply with the laws of congress upon the subject. The surface location included a large part of lot 50. The apex of the vein located was outside of said lot 50, but the vein, in its dip, extended under the surface ground of said lot. Gerlach afterwards conveyed his interest to Sutton, and the respondent Halsey claims the right of possession under a contract with Sutton.

It is not entirely clear upon what theory the court below decided the case in favor of respondents. It is true that there is a finding to the effect that Sutton held the mining claim adversely for more than five years; and counsel for respondent, in some parts of his brief, seems to found his right upon such adverse possession. But some of the findings of the court and arguments of respondent seem to go upon the theory that the town-site patent did not convey any mines that might be in the land, although not discovered until after the date of the patent of the town site. The court also found that the said Cowan, the original grantee from the town authorities, did not occupy said lot 50 as a residence, or as a place of business, or for any purpose; and from a quotation made by counsel for respondent from the opinion of the court in Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95, and quoted in Richards v. Dower, 81 Cal. 44, 22 Pac. Rep. 304, it would seem that both court and counsel were of opinion that mines discovered within the patented town site, before the occupation of a lot for business or residence purposes, could be held against the grantee from the town site, although not discovered until after patent to the town site had issued. If the judgment of the court went upon any such theory, it is sufficient to say that the law is clearly established to be that a patent to a town site conveys a perfect title, in fee, except as to such land as was known to contain valuable mines before the issuance of the patent. Smith v. Hill, 89 Cal. 122, 26 Pac. Rep. 644, and cases there cited; Deffeback v. Hawke, supra; Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628. Richards v. Dower, supra. The expression referred to in the opinion in Deffeback v. Hawke is as follows: "A mine is not reserved unless it is not only known, but known to be valuable, at the date of the patent, or discovered to be so before the occupation or improvement of the land containing it for residences or business under the town-site title." It seems to be contended that the meaning of this expression is that although a town-site patent may have issued, and a deed to a lot thereof may have been regularly granted by the town authorities to an individual claiming it, before any known mine had been discovered, still, if a mine had been discovered before the occupancy of the lot for residence or business purposes, then the newly-discovered mine would hold, as against the grantee under the town site. But this is clearly not so. In Deffeback v. Hawke the suit was commenced by the holder of a mining claim which had been entered at the land office, and no patent had issued for the town site. The defendants in that case claimed that, although they had no patent under the town site, still they had occupied the lot for business purposes before the location of the plaintiff's mine, and therefore they claimed that their right of possession was superior to that of the mine claimant. It was admitted, however, in that case, that the land was known to be valuable mineral land before its occupation for business or residence purposes, and therefore the court held that the right of the owners of the mine was superior to that of the defendants; and the opinion of the court can be construed to mean nothing else than this: That when a patent to a town site has issued, and a deed made to a lot owner, the latter will hold, as against any claimants of a mine discovered, made subsequent to his original occupancy of the lot for business or residence purposes. But, when a patent has issued to a town site, a deed from the town authorities of a town lot carries to the grantee a perfect title, where no mine had been discovered, and the land was not known to be mineral, at the date of the patent. Davis v. Wiebbold, supra. And the regularity of the conveyance from the authorities of the town site to the claimant of a town lot cannot be afterwards questioned collaterally. In the case at bar, lot 50 was not known to contain a valuable mine at the date of the patent; and therefore the respondents obtained no title to any portion of the lot by virtue of the attempted mining location, made nearly nine years afterwards.

This leaves only the question of adverse possession to be disposed of. Most of the work done by respondents upon their asserted mining claim was done outside of lot 50. A small amount of work was done underground, within the boundaries of said lot 50; and there was an actual occupancy of only a small portion of the surface of said lot 50 by the respondents. They had an arastra there, and a dump pile, although it does not appear how much of the dump pile was made within five years before the commencement of the suit. There may also have been an occupancy of some other small portions of the lot. But respondents contend that having located their mine, covering a large portion of lot 50, and having continued to work on some part of the general location, the work outside of lot 50 gave them constructive possession of all of lot 50, within the lines of their mining location. But we do not think that this contention can be maintained. At the time of the attempted location of the mining claim, lot 50 was no longer public land of the United States, but had passed into private ownership; and the attempted location of a mine upon said lot in the manner prescribed for the location of mines on the public domain was invalid. Moreover, the appellant and her grantors were themselves, during the whole time, in possession of the whole of lot 50, except such parts thereof as were actually occupied by respondents, having it inclosed with a fence, and using it for pasturage. If the findings of the court can be construed as finding that they were not thus in possession, they are not, as to that subject, justified by the evidence. The testimony of James McCormick clearly shows that there was such possession on the part of plaintiff and her grantors, and there is no evidence contradicting it. Moreover, respondents' counsel admits such possession, and in his brief says: "It is true that appellant, during such time, was in the general possession of lot 50." If it be admitted, therefore, that, as claimed by appellants, the notice of location of the mining claim was a written instrument, within the meaning of section 322, Code Civil Proc., and would carry constructive possession to the boundaries designated in it, still that doctrine only applies to unoccupied land, of which there is no possession in the true owner. But, where the owner of the true title is also in possession, the constructive possession follows his title, except as to that part of the land which is in the actual adverse possession of the intruder. Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 29; Labory v. Orphan Asylum, (Cal.) 32 Pac. Rep. 281, and cases there cited. Therefore, in the case at bar, the appellant having the true title, and being in general possession of lot 50, her constructive possession went to the whole lot, except the portions actually occupied by the respondents; and respondents cannot be held to have an adverse possession of any portion of lot 50, except those parts thereof of which they were in the actual possession, and the judgment of the court that they were entitled to the possession of all of lot 50 embraced in their mining location was erroneous.

These views make it unnecessary to notice any other points made in the case. Certain records of judgments which were offered in evidence by respondents, but excluded by the court, are printed in the transcript; but they are so printed improperly, and can have no consideration. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(37 Cal. 353)

FOX v. HALE & NORCROSS SILVER MIN.
CO. et al. (No. 15,238.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1893.)

APPEAL BOND—SUFFICIENCY—CORPORATION AS SURETY—JUSTIFICATION.

Code Civil Proc. § 1056, provides that a corporation with a paid-up capital of $100,000 or more, for the purpose of becoming surety on undertakings required by law, shall be accepted as sole surety on such undertakings, the insurance commissioner having power to examine into its affairs, and to require it to file statements of its assets and liabilities, and, whenever the latter exceed the former, it shall do no business in the state till the deficiency is paid up. Section 1057 provides that the officer taking an undertaking required by law, except in case of such a corporation, must require the sureties to make affidavit that they, either singly or collectively, are worth the sum specified in the undertaking; but no such corporation shall be accepted as surety whenever its liabilities shall exceed its assets. Section 942 provides that an undertaking in an appeal from a money judgment does not stay the proceeding unless executed by two sureties in double the amount named in the judgment. Section 948 provides that when the sufficiency of the sureties are excepted to they must justify before the lower court or county clerk. Held that, where such a corporation becomes sole surety on an appeal from a money judgment, the sufficiency of the surety may be excepted to, as provided by section 948, and it must show surplus assets equal to its undertaking.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by M. W. Fox against the Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appealed, and proceed by a writ of prohibition or supersedeas to stay proceedings on the judgment pending appeal. Proceedings dismissed.

Lloyd & Wood, Mastick & Waters, and Wm. F. Herrin, for appellants. Wm. T. Baggett and Lindley & Eickhoff, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an application by some of the defendants in the above-entitled action for a writ of prohibition or supersedeas to restrain the superior court from enforcing its judgment against them pending their appeal to this court. By the judgment appealed from the plaintiff, Fox, recovered of the defendants, who are petitioning here, a little more than a million of dollars, and the amount of the undertaking necessary to stay proceedings pending the appeal is therefore in excess of two millions of dollars. Code Civil Proc. § 942. Such an undertaking in the proper amount—$2,030,000—was duly filed, but the only surety by which it was executed was the Western Surety & Guaranty Company, a corporation with a paid-up capital of no more than $100,000, incorporated under the laws of the state of California for the purpose, among others, of making, guarantying, or becoming surety upon bonds or undertakings required or authorized by law. Within due time the respondent, Fox, in pursuance of section 948, Code Civil Proc., excepted to the sufficiency of said undertaking and surety, and thereafter, upon notice duly given, the officers of said corporation appeared before the county clerk, and proved the fact of incorporation, and full compliance by said company with all conditions necessary to entitle it to do business. They also proved that its entire capital stock of $100,000 was paid up and intact. Upon this proof the county clerk certified that said corporation had justified to his satisfaction, and accepted its said undertaking as a good and sufficient undertaking to stay proceedings under said judgment pending the appeal. Notwithstanding this action of the clerk, the superior court was entertaining and proceeding to hear and determine a motion by respondent to issue its execution to enforce said judgment, when the appellants sued out the alternative writ or order to show cause, issued herein.

At the hearing the facts above stated were admitted or proved, and, though certain preliminary questions of practice were raised by the demurrer and answers then filed, all such matters were waived in the argument, and the single question submitted for decision was whether this corporation, with a paid-up capital of barely $100,000, is sufficient as sole surety upon an undertaking to secure more than 20 times that sum. The proposition that it is in fact sufficient is, on its face, a palpable absurdity. A corporation which has only a hundred thousand dollars can no more pay a loss of two millions than a natural person can. It is true that there is a personal liability on the part of the stockholders of a corporation for their proportion of its debts, and it is suggested that it was shown that some of the stockholders of this corporation were men of large means. But that fact does not help us to a construction of the law. Counsel for petitioners could not deny that the solvency and sufficiency of the stockholders of such corporations is a circumstance of which the law takes no account. If, under the statute upon which they rely, this undertaking is sufficient, it would be equally so if its amount, instead of two millions of dollars had been twenty millions, and if the stockholders, instead of being in some instances men of means, were every one of them notoriously insolvent.

The sole question, therefore, to be determined is whether the statute of March 12, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 114,) or sections 1056, 1057, Code Civil Proc., as enacted in 1889, (which are, in effect, a re-enactment of the statute of 1885,) require the construction contended for by the petitioners, viz. that a corporation of the character therein defined must be accepted as sole and sufficient surety upon any undertaking, no matter what the disparity between its amount and the amount of the corporate assets. To indicate the argument of counsel, we quote sections 1056, 1057, Code Civil Proc., with their italics: "(1056) In all cases where an undertaking or bond with a number of sureties is authorized or required by any provision of this Code or of any law of this state, any corporation with a paid-up capital of not less than one hundred thousand dollars, incorporated under the laws of this state or any other state of the United States for the purpose of making, guarantying, or becoming a surety upon bonds or undertakings required or authorized by law, or which, by the laws of the state where it was originally incorporated, has such power, and which shall have complied with all the requirements of the law of this state regulating the formation or admission of these corporations to transact such business in this state, may become and shall be accepted as surety or as sole and sufficient surety upon such undertaking or bond, and such corporate surety shall be subject to all the liabilities and entitled to all the rights of natural persons' sureties: provided, that the insurance commissioner shall have the same jurisdiction and powers to examine the affairs of such corporations as he has in other cases; shall require them to file similar statements, and issue to them a similar certificate. And whenever the liabilities of any such corporation shall exceed its assets, the insurance commissioner shall require the deficiency to be paid up in sixty days, and if it is not so paid up, then he shall issue a certificate showing the extent of such deficiency, and he shall publish the same once a week for three weeks in a daily San Francisco paper; and until such deficiency is paid up such company shall not do business in this state. In estimating the condition of any such company, the commissioner shall allow as assets only such as are allowed under existing laws at the time, and shall charge as liabilities, in addition of eighty per cent. of capital stock, all outstanding indebtedness of the company, and a premium reserve equal to fifty per centum of the premiums charged by said company on all risks then in force. (1057) In any case where an undertaking or bond is authorized or required by any law of this state, the officer taking the same must, except in the case of such a corporation as is mentioned in the next preceding section, require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit that they are such residents and householders or freeholders within the state, and are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking or bond, over and above all their just debts and liabilities, exclusive of property exempt from execution; but when the amount specified in the undertaking or bond exceeds three thousand dollars, and there are more than two sureties thereon, they may state in their affidavits that they are severally worth amounts less than the amount specified in the undertaking or bond, if the whole amount be equivalent to that of two sufficient sureties. Any corporation such as is mentioned in the next preceding section may become one of such sureties. No such corporation shall be accepted in any case as a surety whenever its liabilities shall exceed its assets as ascertained in the manner provided in section 1056."

It cannot be doubted that this corporation meets all the conditions required to bring it within the application of the words, "may become and shall be accepted as," etc., in section 1056, but we do not attribute to those words the sweeping force which petitioners claim for them. No doubt they must be allowed some operation, but if it is possible to find a meaning for them which will justify their insertion in the statute without convicting the legislature of having enacted an absurdity, they must be limited to such meaning; or, in other words, if the apparent object and policy of the law is subserved by taking them in a qualified and restricted sense, while one of its principal objects is utterly defeated by giving them their largest possible significance, the former interpretation must be preferred. Now, the apparent object of this law was not only to enable corporations of the class designated to become cosureties upon undertakings required in legal proceedings, but to make the sole undertaking of such a corporation equivalent to the joint undertaking of two or more natural persons. To accomplish that object, the use of the language quoted, or something equivalent, was necessary, and the words chosen are as apt for the purpose as any that could be suggested, their only fault being that, taken literally, they seem to mean something more, viz. that such a corporation is not only sufficient as a surety,—the same as a natural person,—and sufficient by itself, without a cosurety, but also sufficient as surety for any amount, no matter how much greater such amount may be than the value of its assets. But to allow this clause of the act such unlimited operation would defeat its general policy, which is undoubtedly to provide ample security for money judgments in order to stay proceedings for their enforcement pending appeals. Such a judgment, when docketed, becomes a lien upon all real estate of the judgment debtor in the county. By the levy of execution liens may be established not only upon real, but also upon personal property; but all such liens are removed by the filing of a proper stay bond; and it is not to be supposed that the legislature intended to discharge one security without providing an equivalent where a corporation becomes surety upon the stay bond, any more than in the case where the sureties are natural persons. The force of these considerations is not in the slightest degree impaired by either of the italicised clauses in section 1057. By the first, corporations are merely exempted from annexing to their undertakings the usual affidavit required of natural persons. For this exception a good and sufficient reason is found in the fact that they cannot, in many cases, be residents of the state in any sense, nor in any case in the ordinary sense of the word, and they need never be, if they possibly can be, either householders or freeholders within the state. And as to their ability to pay, a full equivalent for the affidavit ordinarily required is supplied by the insurance commissioner's certificate. Nevertheless, the last clause of the section seems to imply that the undertaking of such a corporation shall be accompanied by an affidavit showing that its liabilities do not exceed its assets, computed according to the rule of the statute, in which case it is incapable of becoming surety or cosurety for any amount whatever. But this clause does not necessarily imply that, so long as the assets of the corporation are equal to its liabilities, or, in other words, that so long as it has available assets applicable to the payment of losses equal in amount to 80 per centum of its capital stock, it may become surety for any amount in excess of such assets. All that it necessarily implies is that the corporation may go on doing business, i. e. executing bonds in such amount as other provisions of the statute authorize. What, then, is the amount for which such corporations are authorized to become surety? This question is not answered by the act of 1885, or by sections 1056, 1057 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Nor is any express provision as to this matter to be found in any other statute. In the absence of such provision, petitioners claim that the amount is unlimited. We think, on the contrary, that the question may be safely decided upon analogous provisions with respect to natural persons. When a corporation executes an undertaking in pursuance of section 942, Code Civil Proc., exception to the sufficiency of the surety may be taken in pursuance of section 948, with exactly the same effect as if the undertaking had been executed by natural persons. In response to such exception the corporation must justify upon notice, and, in addition to the facts which qualify it to do business, it must, like natural persons, show surplus assets equal to the amount of its undertaking. For these reasons it follows that the undertaking in this case was and is wholly insufficient to stay execution. Proceeding dismissed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 379

CROSSMAN v. KENNISTON. (No. 14,816.) (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

MUNICIPAL OFFICERS—REMOVAL—STATUTES—REPEAL BY IMPLICATION.

Act March 30, 1874, (St. 1873-74, p. 911,) provides that any member of any board of city officers who shall be found guilty of any willful violation of official duty shall be deprived of his office. Section 2 provides that any person may file a complaint charging the officer with such violation, and, if the charges are sustained, the officer may be deprived of his office, "and the court may enter a judgment for one hundred dollars in favor of the complainant." Act March 13, 1883, (Municipal Corporation Act; St. 1883, p. 266,) § 811, provides that no officer of a city shall be interested in any contract with or in furnishing supplies for such city or its officers in an official capacity; that any willful violation of such provisions shall be ground for removal from office, "and shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and punished as such." Held, that the act of 1874 is inconsistent with the latter act, and was repealed thereby. Frazer v. Alexander, 16 Pac. Rep. 757, 75 Cal. 147, followed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by Crossman against Kenniston for removal of defendant from the office of trustee of the city of San Bernardino on account of willful misconduct in office. From a judgment of removal, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rolfe & Freeman and Hargrave & Bledsoe, for appellant. E. Crossman and Harris & Gregg, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The plaintiff filed an accusation against the defendant, who is a member of the board of trustees of the city of San Bernardino, charging him with having willfully violated his official duty as a city trustee, and asking that he be removed from office. It was alleged that while holding the office of trustee he leased a certain building to the city, to be used by the latter as a city hall, and that he received pay for the use of the building; that he also let to divers city officials teams belonging to a firm of livery stable proprietors of which he was a member and collected pay from the city for the use thereof. A demurrer to the accusation, and a motion to dismiss the proceeding, were filed and overruled. Thereupon an answer was filed, the cause was heard on the merits, the allegations of the complaint were found to be true, and judgment was entered as prayed for. From this judgment the defendant has appealed.

The act of March 30, 1874, provides that any member of any board of officers, state, city, or county, who shall be found guilty of a willful violation of any provision of the statute prescribing or defining his duties, or who shall be found guilty of any other willful violation of official duty, shall be deprived of his office. Section 2 of the act provides that any person may file a complaint charging the officer with a willful violation of official duty; that thereupon a citation may be issued, and a summary hearing had, and if, upon such hearing, the charges are sustained, the officer may be deprived of his office, and the court may enter a judgment for $100 in favor of the complainant, and for his costs of suit. But this act, so far as it provides for the removal and punishment of municipal officers for malfeasance in office, is inconsistent with the provisions of section 811 of the municipal corporation act, passed March 13, 1883, (St. 1883, p. 266,) which reads as follows: "No officer of such city shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract with such city, or with any of the officers thereof in their official capacity, or in doing any work or furnishing any supplies for the use of such city or its officers in their official capacity; and any claim for compensation for work done, or supplies or materials furnished, in which any such officer is interested, shall be void, and, if audited and allowed, shall not be paid by the treasurer. Any willful violation of the provisions of this section shall be a ground for removal from office, and shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and punished as such." The act of March 30, 1874, (St. 1873-74, p. 911,) provides for a judgment of removal from office, and a judgment in favor of the complainant for $100. The act of March 13, 1883, provides for a judgment of removal, and conviction of a misdemeanor, to be punished as such. Manifestly the remedy and penalty provided in the former act are different from those provided in the latter act. This being the case, the latter act repealed the former, and the proceeding must be dismissed. Fraser v. Alexander, 75 Cal. 147, 16 Pac. Rep. 757. It is claimed by respondent that the case just cited was overruled in Wickersham v. Brittan, 93 Cal. 34, 28 Pac. Rep. 792, and 29 Pac. Rep. 51. In this he is mistaken. The only matter decided in the Wickersham Case germane to the present inquiry was that the decision in Fraser v. Alexander was obiter dictum in so far as it held that the act of March 30, 1874, was repealed by the provisions of the constitution of 1879, but nothing was said in that case impairing the decision in Fraser v. Alexander as to the effect of section 55 of the county government act upon the act of March 30, 1874. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to dismiss the proceeding.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

97 Cal. 382

CROSSMAN v. LESHER. 14,762.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

MUNICIPAL OFFICER—REMOVAL—ACCUSSION—BY WHOM PRESENTED.

Pen. Code, § 889, providing that when proceedings are had for the removal of district, county, municipal, or township officers, they may be commenced by an accusation in writing, as provided in sections 758 and 772, does not authorize a private person to file an accusation in writing for the removal of a city trustee for official misconduct in leasing a building and letting teams to the city, and collecting pay therefor from the latter, since section 772 provides for proceedings on such accusation for "charging and claiming illegal fees for services rendered or to be rendered in his office," or neglect "to perform the official duties pertaining to his office," and for other willful or corrupt misconduct the accusation must be presented by the grand jury, as provided in section 758.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by Crossman against Leshner for removal of defendant from the office of trustee of the city of San Bernardino on account of willful misconduct in office. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. Crossman and Harris & Gregg, for appellant. Rolfe & Freeman and Hargrave & Belcher, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The charges of the plaintiff, in his accusation filed herein, are of the same nature as those referred to in Crossman v. Kenniston, 32 Pac. Rep. 448, v.32P.no.5—29

(No. 14,816, this day filed.) By the accusation the plaintiff herein sought, as in the Kenniston Case, to remove the defendant from his office as city trustee. The matter was heard before another department of the superior court. Judgment was entered in favor of defendant for his costs, and plaintiff has appealed.

Counsel for appellant herein—counsel for respondent in No. 14,816—rely upon a proposition not presented in the other proceeding. They claim that under section 889 of the Penal Code plaintiff is authorized to commence and prosecute this proceeding. That section reads as follows: "When the proceedings are had for the removal of district, county, municipal, or township officers, they may be commenced by an accusation or information in writing, as provided in sections 758 and 772." We see no merit in this contention. The section referred to simply provides that proceedings for removal of public officers may be commenced by either an accusation or an information, as provided in sections 758 and 772. Section 772 provides for proceedings in the superior court upon an accusation in writing, filed by any person against any officer, for "charging and claiming illegal fees for services rendered or to be rendered in his office," or neglect "to perform the official duties pertaining to his office." It is not claimed in this case that the defendant charged or collected illegal fees, or that he has refused or neglected to perform any official duty. The accusation charges the defendant with an entirely different kind of misconduct in office. When the proceedings are for any willful or corrupt misconduct in office, other than such as are mentioned in section 772, they must be commenced by accusation presented by a grand jury, as provided in section 758. It is only when the misconduct complained of consists in charging and collecting illegal fees, or failure or neglect to perform the official duties imposed upon the officer by law, that the prosecution may be had upon the complaint of an individual.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

97 Cal. 411

HAAS v. WHITTIER et al. (No. 19,020.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

INSOLVENCY—PREFERENCES—JUDGMENT NON OBSTANTE VERDICTO.

1. Insolvent act of 1880 (section 55) forbids an insolvent to make any preference by transfer, and provides that any transfer of property by such insolvent, not made in the ordinary course of business, shall be prima facie evidence of fraud. Held, that the prima facie presumption of fraud and preference may be overcome by the uncontradicted evidence of the insolvent and the agent of the creditor who acted in the matter of the transfer, showing that the transfer was made in good faith, and that there was no intent to make or secure any preference over other creditors; the question of intent in such case being one of fact.

2. In an action by the assignee of an insolvent attacking a transfer by the insolvent to a creditor on the ground that it was a fraudulent preference, the jury returned a general verdict for plaintiff, and found specially that the transfer was not made in the usual course of business; that it was not made to give the creditor any preference; that such creditor had no reasonable cause to believe that the transfer was made to prevent the insolvent's property from coming into the hands of the assignee, or to prevent it from being distributed ratably among the creditors. Held, that judgment should be entered for defendant, notwithstanding the general verdict; Code Civil Proc. § 625, providing that, where special findings are inconsistent with a general verdict, the former control.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Abe Haas, assignee in insolvency of the estate of Edgar Sessions, an insolvent debtor, against W. F. Whittier, W. P. Fuller, Jr., F. N. Woods, Bryant Howard, and I. A. Lothian, surviving partners of the firm of Whittier, Fuller & Co. From an order granting a new trial and refusing defendant's motion for judgment because the general verdict for plaintiff was not supported by the special findings under Code Civil Proc. § 625, providing that, where special findings are inconsistent with a general verdict, the former control, defendants appeal. Reversed.

The following are the instructions referred to in the opinion:

The part of plaintiff's fourth instruction given is as follows: "In determining the question of whether Whittier, Fuller & Co. had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent at the time he made the assignment, you will consider all the facts and circumstances by which the parties were surrounded, so far as known to them, or either of them, or to their agent, who was negotiating the assignment. It is not necessary that positive knowledge of the insolvency of the debtor should exist; neither is ignorance of the law any excuse, as all men are presumed to, and must, know the law. If you believe that the debtor was at the time in such a condition financially that he could not pay his debts from his own means as they became due, and the said Whittier, Fuller & Co. knew that fact, or had reasonable cause to believe it, and under such circumstances obtained a transfer of the property mentioned in the complaint in payment of their claim, then you should find for the plaintiff." The court refused to give the remainder of such instruction, which was as follows: "And the fact that either Sessions or said Whittier, Fuller & Co., or its agent, may have supposed at the time that the debtor would be able, in the course of time, to work out of debt, does not make any difference in the case. The solvency or insolvency of the debtor is not a question of the possibility of his paying off his debts in the course of time, but it is a question of his ability to pay as they become due in the ordinary course of business, and the fact that a debtor transferred a large portion of his property to one creditor without making provision for an equal distribution of its proceeds to all of his creditors, and especially when the transfer is made not in the due course of business, and is made under the pressure of the creditor, these are all facts and circumstances to be considered by you in determining whether the assignment was made or intended as a preference of said Whittier, Fuller & Co., and also in determining whether they had reasonable cause to believe at the time that he was insolvent."

The following is plaintiff's fifth instruction, which was allowed: "You are further instructed that a transfer of a considerable portion of his property by Sessions to said Whittier, Fuller & Co., the property being of a different character from that which Whittier, Fuller & Co. were accustomed to deal in, and made for the purpose of satisfying a debt, is not a transfer made in the usual and ordinary course of business; and a transfer not in the ordinary course of business is prima facie evidence of fraud."

Plaintiff's sixth instruction, as follows, was refused: "It does not alter the case that Whittier, Fuller & Co. acted in this matter through an agent, for, although they were not personally present, yet, having acted through an agent, and especially as they have received the benefit of the assignment, it is in law the same as if they had acted personally in the matter. And, furthermore, as a matter of law, Whittier, Fuller & Co. had knowledge of everything known to their agent, and whatever the agent had cause to believe they had cause to believe; and, therefore, if you find that the agent knew, or had reasonable cause to believe, that Sessions was insolvent at the time said transfer was made to said firm, and that such transfer and payment was made with a view to prevent said property from being distributed ratably among his creditors, or to defeat the object of, or in any way hinder, impede, or delay the operation of, or to evade any of the provisions of the insolvent act, such transfer is void, and you should find for plaintiff for the amount stipulated, to wit, $856.99, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 26th day of November, 1887."

Defendants' first, third, fourth, and fifth instructions were as follows: (1) "The question of fraudulent intent is one of fact, and not of law. The jury are exclusive judges of all questions of fact." (3) "You are further instructed, in this case, no actual fraud is charged against these defendants, but the complaint simply charges that the assignment in question was made to defendants by Sessions, and was accepted by these defendants with a view to give a preference to defendants, with a view to prevent the property so transferred from coming to the assignee of said Sessions in insolvency, and to prevent the same from being distributed ratably among his creditors, and to defeat the objects of the insolvent act of 1880; and that the defendants had reasonable cause to believe, and knew, that said Sessions was insolvent, and that the transfer was made for the purpose mentioned. Now, if you believe from the evidence that defendant [had not reasonable cause to believe as charged and] had no other intent than to collect an honest debt due them by Sessions, and had no intent of defeating the insolvent law, then you must find for the defendants." Said instruction being modified by the court by inserting in said instruction the words inclosed in brackets. (4) "Even if you believe from the evidence that Sessions was insolvent at the time of the transfer, and even if he did make the transfer with intent to prefer the defendants to other creditors, if you believe from the evidence that the transfer was made for a valid debt to defendants, and that there was no intent on the part of the defendants to defeat the operation of the insolvent law, [and no reasonable cause on their part to believe as charged,] you must find for the defendants." Said instruction being modified by the court by inserting in said instruction the words inclosed in brackets. (5) "If you believe from the evidence that Sessions did not transfer the property with the view or intention to give preference to defendants, it makes no difference what were the views or motives of the defendants in receiving the property, or what they suspected or believed about the solvency of Sessions; and you should find for the defendants."

H. A. Barclay, for appellants. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, and Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action brought to recover a sum of money, which the plaintiff, as assignee of an insolvent debtor, Edgar Sessions, claims should be paid him in his representative capacity by the defendants, W. F. Whittier et al., by reason of their having received from the insolvent, and converted to their own use, certain goods delivered to them in satisfaction of a debt due the defendants by the insolvent. The proposition upon which the plaintiff based his claim for a recovery is that the defendants had received the property by a transfer made by the insolvent with the intention of giving them a preference over his other creditors. The cause was tried before a jury, and they gave a general verdict for the plaintiff, but found "No" upon the special issues submitted to them. The special issues were: (1) At the time that Edgar Sessions transferred to Whittier, Fuller & Co. the goods described in the complaint, was he able to pay his debts from his own means as they became due? (2) Was the transfer of said goods by Sessions to Whittier, Fuller & Co. made in the usual and ordinary course of business of said Sessions? (3) Did Sessions make said transfer with a view to give a preference to said Whittier, Fuller & Co.? (4) Did Whittier, Fuller & Co., at the time they received said transfer, have reasonable cause to believe that it was made with a view to prevent Sessions' property from coming to his assignee in insolvency? (5) Did Whittier, Fuller & Co., at the time of said transfer, have reasonable cause to believe that the transfer was made to prevent said property from being distributed ratably among his creditors? The defendants moved the court for a judgment in their favor, because the general verdict was not supported by the special findings, under section 625, Code Civil Proc. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial.

and the court below considered the two motions together, refused that of the defendants, and granted that of the plaintiff, from which rulings this appeal is taken.

The real questions involved in the case are whether the trial court was justified in believing, upon the evidence, and contrary to the view of the jury, that the preference denounced by section 55¹ of the insolvent act had been given, and whether such errors of law had been committed on the trial as warranted a new trial. It would have been useless to have entered judgment for the defendants on the special issues found by the jury if the trial court had not considered the evidence sufficient to support the special findings of the jury, or had believed itself to have committed errors of law on the trial; for, immediately following the order for judgment for defendants, the court would, by granting a new trial, have rendered the judgment inoperative. The jury found, as it was proper they should, under the evidence, that the transfer was not made in the usual and ordinary course of business. This, of course, made the transaction prima facie a preference not allowed by section 55 of the insolvent act. But they also found, as we think justifiably from the evidence, that neither of the parties had in fact any intention to violate the law denouncing a preference in favor of one creditor over others. If the court was not right in coming to a different conclusion from the evidence, then it could not, in the exercise of its discretion, grant a new trial on that ground. As we look at the evidence, it is all one way,—that both parties were desirous that all creditors should share alike. This is shown in part by the fact that both of them were willing and desired that a general assignment should be made for all creditors, and were prevented from taking this course by the advice of an attorney, who thought it could not be done. The creditor's agent wished to secure his debt; the debtor wished to settle it in some way, and preferred to make a general assignment; and for this, also, the creditors were willing, if they were advised it could be done; but they did not proceed in that way, as they were advised to the contrary by an attorney at law. It is clear that there was no intent to make or to secure a preference over other creditors. The main idea of the insolvent was to secure all his creditors alike. He had his choice to make an assignment, which, under the advice he had, he was justified in not doing, to be attached, which would render his chance to pay all his creditors worse, or to pay his creditor in goods, as he had not the money. This shows the contrary of any intention on his part to make a preference of one creditor over another. The truth is, he seems to have been very anxious to do the best he could for all his creditors. The creditor had no ground to believe that the debtor intended to make any preference such as the law denounced.

¹Insolvent Act of 1880. (section 55:) "If any person, being insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, within one month before the filing of a petition by or against him, with a view to give a preference to any creditor or person having a claim against him, or who is under any liability for him, procures any part of his property to be attached, sequestered, or seized on execution, or makes any payment, assignment, transfer, or conveyance of any part of his property, either directly or indirectly, absolutely or conditionally, the person receiving such payment, pledge, assignment, transfer, or conveyance, or to be benefited thereby, or by such attachment or seizure, having reasonable cause to believe that such person is insolvent, and that such attachment, seizure, payment, pledge, conveyance, transfer, or assignment is made with a view to prevent his property from coming to his assignee in insolvency, or to prevent the same from being distributed ratably among his creditors, or to defeat the object of, or in any way hinder, impede, or delay the operation of, or to evade any of the provisions of, this act, such transfer, payment, conveyance, pledge, or assignment is void, and the assignee may recover the property, or the value thereof, as assets of such insolvent debtor; and if such sale, assignment, transfer, or conveyance is not made in the usual and ordinary course of business of the debtor, that fact shall be prima facie evidence of fraud."

The declarations of the insolvent and the agent of Whittier, Fuller & Co. are directly to the point that they did not have the least intention of preferring any creditor. The insolvent was a witness for the plaintiff in this action. He is contradicted in his material statements by no witness. And the evidence of both these witnesses was not on this trial given orally in the presence of the court, but was, by agreement, read from the transcript of the case made up when it was in this court on a former appeal. 25 Pac. Rep. 917. There was nothing, then, in their manner or appearance (as the court did not have them before it) which could have influenced that tribunal to disbelieve their positive statements, and we perceive nothing in the circumstances to raise any such disbelief. The presumption, prima facie, which the law makes from the unusual nature of the transfer is entirely done away with by the testimony of these two uncontradicted witnesses, and the jury was right in its special findings. The court below had, therefore, no legal ground to doubt the correctness of their conclusion, and should not have done so.

The question then recurs, what, if any, were the errors in law committed by the trial court? That tribunal should not have directed a verdict for the plaintiff, as the respondent contends it should, for the question of intent to make a fraudulent preference, denounced by the statute, was one of fact. Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 298, 26 Pac. Rep. 873. And, as we have seen, there was no evidence except the prima facie presumption, which was entirely done away with, to support any such theory of the case as the plaintiff contends for.

The next contention of respondent in support of the court's action is that the court erred in striking out a portion of the fourth instruction. The matter which it was proper should be contained therein as an instruction in the part stricken out was fully covered by the fifth instruction for the plaintiff and the part of the fourth given. The matter concerning the responsibility of Whittier, Fuller & Co. for the acts of their agent in the plaintiff's sixth instruction was sufficiently explained in the plaintiff's fourth instruction granted, and the balance of what was refused was given by the court in the first instruction for plaintiff. We perceive no objection to the first instruction given for defendants. It is sustained by Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 298, 26 Pac. Rep. 873. Neither do we perceive any valid objection to the third and fourth instructions asked and given for defendants. The fifth instruction is in accordance with the law of this case, as settled by the appellate court in 87 Cal. 613, 25 Pac. Rep. 917.

It is further claimed that the jury found contrary to the fourth instruction given by the court for the plaintiff, and therefore the new trial should have been granted. Taking all the instructions together, such was not the effect of the findings by the jury. They were not told by the instruction last mentioned to find for the plaintiff at all events, but that, if they believed certain facts existed, or things had been done by defendants, they would find for plaintiff; and the basis on which this instruction is placed as one element necessary to show a wrongful intent is, did defendants know, or have reasonable cause to believe, the debtor was insolvent when they took the transfer? But the insolvency of the debtor, known to the creditor when he took the transfer, was not the only condition on which the jury were told that they could find for plaintiff. Taking all the instructions together, and interpreting them fairly, the jury had the right, if the evidence warranted, to find that the defendants and the debtor had no intent to make a preference in violation of section 55 of the insolvent act. This they did find in effect, and in so doing they did not violate the instructions of the court. We think that the court below should not have granted a new trial, but should have rendered judgment for the defendants on the special findings, and therefore the order granting a new trial is reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment for defendants as herein indicated.

97 Cal. 388

NORTON v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO.
(No. 14,614.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—FAILURE TO SERVE SUMMONS—SETTING ASIDE ON MOTION—OFFER TO PLEAD—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS—EVIDENCE.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 473, providing that a court may relieve a party from a judgment taken against him "through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," has no application to a motion to set aside a judgment by default for want of service of summons, and hence such motion need not be accompanied by any affidavit of merits, nor need defendant offer to appear, and plead to the merits.

2. Where a judgment is entered by default against a nonresident defendant, who has not been personally served with summons within this state, the court has power to set it aside on a motion in the same action, if such motion is made within a reasonable time, and an independent action need not be brought.

3. Ten days after the rendition of such judgment is a reasonable time within which to file such motion.

4. Where, on the hearing of such motion, the evidence is conflicting as to whether or not defendant was served within the state, a finding that such service was not made will not be disturbed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by C. V. Norton against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company. After judgment for plaintiff by default, defendant appeared, and moved to set aside the judgment on the ground that there was no legal service of summons. An order granting said motion was affirmed in department. Affirmed.

William Fuller, for appellant. A. Brunson and Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the superior court granting a motion of defendant to quash the service of summons, to set aside and vacate the default of defendant, and to set aside and vacate the judgment which had been entered in the case in favor of plaintiff. The appeal was heard in department 2, and the order of the court below was there, upon an opinion prepared by Belcher, C., affirmed. 30 Pac. Rep. 585. Upon a petition by appellant, urging strongly that there was no authority in the court to grant said motion, a hearing was ordered in bank. After a further and full consideration of the point made, we are satisfied that a correct conclusion was reached in department. The respondent is a corporation formed under the laws of Kansas, and having its principal place of business in, and being a resident of, that state. The action, which is in personam, was commenced in San Diego county, and the sheriff of that county returned that he had personally served the summons on the 19th of November, 1890, on K. H. Wade, general manager of defendant, "by delivering to said defendant personally, in the county of San Diego, a copy of said summons," etc. No appearance having been made by respondent within 10 days, its default was entered by the clerk on the 1st day of December, 1890. On the 3d day of December, 1890, judgment was entered by the court against defendant, the judgment reciting that defendant had been regularly served with summons. Within 10 days thereafter, to wit, on December 12, 1890, respondent, by its attorneys, served and filed a notice that "the defendant in the above-entitled action will appear for the purpose of this motion only, and for no other purpose, and will move the court to set aside and recall the execution heretofore issued in this case, and to set aside the judgment and default heretofore entered on the 1st day of December, 1890, and to quash service of summons herein, upon the ground that said service is not such as is authorized by law, and that said court has no jurisdiction of defendant to enter said default or judgment, and that the same is void." Affidavits were filed by both parties on the hearing of this motion, but appellant objected to the entertainment of any such affidavits on the part of respondent. On the 23d of January, 1891, the court granted a motion quashing the service of the summons, vacating the judgment, etc. From that order plaintiff appeals.

It is contended strenuously by appellant that such a motion can be maintained only when based upon section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that this motion is not based upon that section, and is not accompanied by any affidavit of merits, which affidavit has been held to be necessary when proceeding under the section; and that under that section a party can be relieved only upon an offer to appear and plead to the merits. Appellant relies on this point upon People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 608, 24 Pac. Rep. 311; People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. Rep. 197; People v. Goodhue, 80 Cal. 200, 22 Pac. Rep. 66, and some other cases cited. But the cases cited go no further than to hold that a motion to vacate a judgment cannot be made after the expiration of six months, or, with respect to one ground for setting aside the default, after one year, unless it be void on its face. The recent case of Jacks v. Baldez, (Cal.; filed December 28, 1892,) 31 Pac. Rep. 899, might also be cited in support of what appellant deems to be the correct position. But those authorities relate to cases which come clearly within, or should have been brought under, the provisions of said section 473. The main provision of that section is that a court may relieve a party from a judgment taken against him "through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect;" and it is quite clear that the provision just quoted has no application to the ground upon which respondent moved in the case at bar. Defendant here is not asking relief from its neglect, or mistake, or default of any character. Its contention is that the court has no jurisdiction over it, and no power to compel it to answer to the action. It does not ask to be allowed to come in and answer, but contends that in its situation it cannot be called upon to answer; therefore there can be demanded of it no affidavit of merits. In the cases cited the parties making application to set aside the judgment confessed some neglect or misconduct from which they sought to be relieved, and thus come clearly within the provisions of said section, and, of course, were compelled to comply with the provisions of the section under the construction which the court had given them. Moreover, they were residents of the state, and within the territorial jurisdiction of her courts; while in the case at bar respondent is a non-resident, and beyond such jurisdiction, except so far as the statute of this state can provide, and has provided, for jurisdiction under special circumstances. It was clearly, then, the duty of the court to quash the service of the summons, when it appeared to it that the return of such service was false; and the vacating of the judgment was an incident which necessarily followed, provided that the proceeding by motion by which this result was sought to be accomplished was a proper one. In Freeman on Judgments (commencing at paragraph 105) there is a chapter on "Vacating judgments under statutes," and various statutes of different states, similar to section 473 of our Code, are reviewed, and the distinction between proceedings under those statutes and proceedings independent of them is stated; and in paragraph 108 the author says: "In all cases an affidavit of merits must be made and filed, except where it appears that the court had never acquired jurisdiction of the moving party, and that its judgment against him is void; but in this class of cases he is entitled to relief independently of those statutes." In Bell v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 707, the court makes this same distinction,—section 68 of the practice act being at the time of that decision the same substantially as the present section 473 of the Code; and also in People v. Greene, supra, in Society v. Thorne, 67 Cal. 53, 7 Pac. Rep. 36, and other cases. See, also, Ladd v. Stevenson, 112 N. Y. 325, 19 N. E. Rep. 842, and Dobbins v. McNamara, 113 Ind. 54, 14 N. E. Rep. 887. In Cowles v. Hayes, 69 N. C. 410, the court, in discussing a motion similar to that in the case at bar, say: "The motion is not made under section 133, Code Civil Proc. The plaintiff does not ground his claim to relief on his own mistake, inadvertence, surprise, etc., but he puts it on the ground that the judgment of which he complains was irregular, and against the course and practice of the court."

Appellant contends that there should have been an independent action brought to set aside the judgment, but we do not think so. The general common-law rule is that courts have power over their judgments during the entire term at which they are rendered, and may vacate them on motion. Freem. Judgm. § 90 et seq. Many of the courts have vacated judgments after the expiration of the term, but it was established in California that such jurisdiction was exhausted at the close of the term, unless kept alive by some motion or appropriate proceeding during the term. Bell v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 706; Shaw v. McGregor, 8 Cal. 521; Robb v. Robb, 6 Cal. 21; Baldwin v. Kramer, 2 Cal. 582. Under our present system terms of court are abolished, and a motion to set aside a judgment would have to be made within a reasonable time, (People v. Greene, supra,) and perhaps, following the analogy of section 473, six months might be considered the extent of a reasonable time for any motion; but, however that may be, there is no question in the case at bar as to reasonable time, because the motion was made within 10 days after the judgment. It is admitted that a motion to vacate a judgment is a direct, and not a collateral, attack; and if, as we hold, a motion was the proper proceeding in this case, of course any fact going to show the invalidity of the judgment could be presented at the hearing of such motion. Where a return shows that a nonresident was personally served with summons within the state, and it is made to appear to the court that such return was false, it would be strange if, within a reasonable time, the court could not, upon application, set aside the service, or the false return of service, and vacate the judgment. There is no reason why, in such a case, the nonresident should be put to the necessity of an independent action. We hold, therefore, that, where a nonresident has not been personally served within the state, the court has power, within a reasonable time, when it finds that it has been deceived by a false return of such service within the state, to quash the service of summons, and vacate the judgment. This is as broad a statement of the rule as the facts of this case require; and, so holding, we think that the order of the court below should be affirmed.

With respect to the question of fact whether or not the respondent in the case at bar was served within the state, the evidence before the lower court was conflicting, and we would not be warranted in disturbing the finding of the court as to that fact. Upon this point we are satisfied with the said opinion prepared by Commissioner Belcher in department. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; HARRISON, J.

BEATTY, C. J., (concurring.) Before terms of court were abolished it is clear that a default judgment entered upon a false return of personal service of summons could have been set aside upon motion made within the term. The abolition of terms cannot be held to have abolished the remedy by motion, but only the limitation of time within which the motion must be made; and if, under section 473, Code Civil Proc., a defendant may be relieved on motion from a default judgment taken against him through his mistake or excusable neglect, provided his motion is made within a reasonable time, not exceeding six months, a fortiori he should be relieved on motion made within the same time, when he has been guilty of no neglect. None of the decisions cited are in conflict with this view. They merely hold that judgment will not be vacated upon motion made after the lapse of the prescribed period unless it is void upon its face, which is quite consistent with the proposition that a motion made within the statutory period may be granted as well when the defendant is wholly without fault as when he has been guilty of neglect, mistake, etc. As to the conditions upon which the order should be made, the statute only requires the imposition of such terms as may be just; and when, as in this case, the court finds that the defendant has never been brought within its jurisdiction, it would not be just to require it to answer to the merits, or to make an affidavit of merits. Upon these grounds I concur in the judgment.

97 Cal. 384

DARBY v. ARROWHEAD HOT SPRINGS HOTEL CO. (No. 19,101.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

PAROL EVIDENCE.

In an action against a corporation to recover money it appeared that plaintiff had been a stockholder in the corporation, and had made advances to it to the amount sued for; that he had transferred his stock and interest in defendant corporation to other stockholders therein by a written instrument which recited that he sold "all right, title, and interest of whatsoever nature in and to all property * * * hitherto and now belonging to" defendant, including all "claims and advances." Held, that parol evidence was admissible to show to whom the claim for "advances" mentioned in the instrument belonged, and that they were those which formed the basis of the action.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Action by R. R. Darby against the Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Company for money loaned. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Holloway & Kendrick and Ray Billingsley, for appellant. Chapman & Hendrick and H. C. Rolfe, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff, R. R. Darby, brought this action to recover a certain sum of money from the defendant, an hotel corporation, claimed by him to have been loaned to the corporation. The defendant denied all the allegations of the complaint, except that the defendant was a corporation; and for a further and separate defense alleged that before the commencement of this action the plaintiff had sold and transferred to other parties, every indebtedness due by the defendant to the plaintiff, which included the present demand; and that at the time the action was brought the plaintiff was not the owner or holder of any demand against the defendant. The court below found all the allegations of the answer to be true, and rendered judgment in favor of defendant for costs, etc. From that judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The main ground assumed by the plaintiff and appellant for a reversal of the judgment and order is that the court erred in the admission in evidence of a certain deed from the plaintiff to three other persons, who were stockholders in the hotel corporation. The objection made was that the evidence proffered was irrelevant and immaterial, and not responsive to any of the pleadings in the case. If it is sufficiently appears from the recitals of this instrument that the plaintiff's claim against the hotel corporation for loaned money was transferred and assigned to the three persons named in that instrument as transferees, then, of course, the deed was relevant and material to the issues raised in the pleading. To our minds the recitals above adverted to, taken in connection with the circumstances of the transfer proved by the plaintiff himself, make it clear that it was intended by that instrument to sell and transfer to the three parties above named the demand against the hotel corporation, which is the basis of plaintiff's action. The language describing a part of the property, and which affects the matter in hand, runs thus: "And also all right, title, and interest of whatsoever nature in and to all property, real, personal, and mixed, in San Bernardino county, hitherto and now belonging to the Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel Company, a corporation, including all furniture and fixtures, insurance, papers, stock, books of account, bills receivable, accounts, claims, and advances, business and good will." The plaintiff had shown by evidence that he was a stockholder in the corporation; and that he had made to it loans and advances to the amount he sued for; that the other stockholders, four in number, had also made such loans, and that he had sold his stock and interest in the hotel company property by instrument of writing to the three grantees in the deed. The instrument in question was certainly not one by the terms of which the transferees and purchasers were selling any stock or claims for the money they had loaned or advanced. The hotel corporation did not have and could not have belonging to it any shares of stock which it could sell or transfer; neither could such a corporation have any claims for money advanced or loaned. Therefore it is very clear that the only other person or party to this instrument who had any stock or claim for advances, which he transferred or could transfer, was the plaintiff. It does not appear from the language of the instrument, therefore, with absolute certainty, to whom the "advances" mentioned in the deed belonged; but, taking the evidence of the plaintiff that he had made advances of money as a stockholder, and that of the transferees of the plaintiff's interest in the hotel company, it is plain that the advances intended to be transferred were those which formed the basis of this action. The argument suggested by the appellant against this view of the matter is that the language of the deed as affecting these "advances" is too plain to admit of any explanation whatever; that it is there distinctly asserted that these advances belonged to the hotel company, and therefore no explanation by parol could be admitted which could vary the meaning of that language. But, as we have seen, such an hotel corporation could not, according to the rules of law, advance money to any one, as a bank or commission merchant could; therefore it appears on the face of the instrument itself that such advances made to some one could not belong to the corporation. "Courts cannot adopt a construction of any legal instrument which shall do violence to the use of language or the rules of law." 2 Pars. Cont. (7th Ed.) p. 495. This being so, it seems pertinent to show in this matter what advances were transferred by the deed, and, as it were, identify to whom they belonged when the instrument was executed, and thus to explain this language of the contract by reference to the circumstances under which it was made. Code Civil Proc. §§ 1647, 1856-1860; Brewster v. Lathrop, 15 Cal. 21; 2 Pars. Cont. (7th Ed.) p. 550. It will be observed here, also, that the corporation against which this suit is brought is not a party to the instrument offered in evidence. The three stockholders to whom the transfer was made, and the fourth, who made it, are the sole parties. The fifth stockholder is not a party in privity with them in the matter. It would seem, therefore, that the strictness of the rule against the admission of parol evidence to explain this contract should be relaxed in a case like this. "In such cases much of the reason which prohibits the introduction of extrinsic evidence fails, and with it the prohibition fails." 2 Pars. Cont. (7th Ed.) p. 687. We therefore think that the deed and the evidence explanatory of it were admissible. There being no prejudicial error shown by the record, the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 468

BENICIA AGRICULTURAL WORKS v. GERMANIA INS. CO. (No. 18,076.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1893.)

INSURANCE—CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

Where a fire insurance policy on a harvesting machine, though running in terms for a year, contains a clause stating that it only insures the machine while operating in the grain fields, and in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting, the insurance company is not liable for a loss of the machine by fire within the year if at the time of such loss it was not actually in operation or in transit, as provided by such clause.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by the Benicia Agricultural Works against the Germania Insurance Company. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Lynch and Geo. B. Graham, for appellant. T. C. Van Ness, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover for the loss of a certain harvesting machine and outfit insured by defendant against loss from fire. The court below granted a nonsuit, and rendered judgment for defendant. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff appealed.

The policy ran, in terms, for a period of one year from June 12, 1890, to June 12, 1891; but, after reciting the character of the property, it contained the following clause: "All while owned by assured, and known as the 'Harvest King harvesting machine and outfit,' and operating in the grain fields, and in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting in Fresno county, of California." It appeared that the harvesting season in Fresno county usually ends about the 1st of September; that in 1890 it was somewhat longer than usual; that the insured, appellant's assignor, finished harvesting that year in September, or about the 1st of October; that he then took the machine home to his ranch, having entirely finished using it in the business of harvesting for that year; that he separated the header from the balance of the machine, so that the whole machinery could be more readily placed in his shed; that he was prevented by other work from putting it in his shed; and that it remained near the shed until the 18th of the following November, at which time it was destroyed by fire. It is clear, therefore, that it was not burned while "operating in the grain fields, or in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting in Fresno county." But appellant now contends—and, indeed, that is nearly its whole contention—that because the policy runs, in terms, for a year, respondent is responsible for the loss, whether the fire occurred during the harvesting season, or at any other time during the year. But to maintain that contention would be to hold that the most prominent part of the policy could be ignored entirely. The plain, clear meaning of the language used is that the respondent would be responsible if the property, at any time between June, 1890, and June, 1891, should be destroyed by fire, while operating in the grain fields, or in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting. This provision is in the body of the policy, and not in the long memoranda printed on the back of it, and made a part thereof, and must be considered as a leading clause in the contract, to which the attention of the parties was clearly called; and it is clear that respondent was not to be liable for any loss by fire unless it occurred while the said machine was operating, or in transit in connection with harvesting, as before stated. Indeed, this contention which appellant now makes is barely consistent with the complaint, which alleges that the loss occurred while the machine was operating in the grain fields or in transit, or with the specifications of error, which include the proposition that it was so operating, or so in transit.

The appellant took exceptions to the rulings of the court excluding certain offered evidence, by which appellant sought to show that the risk or hazard was not increased by the fact that the machine was not employed in the fields, or in transit, at the time of the fire; but those objections and that testimony were immaterial, under the view which we have taken of the contract itself. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 472

DE BAKER v. BATCHELLER et al. (No. 10,962.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1893.)

LEEVE DISTRICTS—PETITION FOR ORGANIZATION—PUBLICATION.

1. Act March 10, 1891, (St. p. 30, § 1), provides for the organization of levee districts for the protection of lands, when desired by "a majority of freeholders owning land injuriously affected, or liable to be injuriously affected, by overflow from any innavigable running stream." For such organization, section 2 provides that a petition shall be presented to the board of supervisors, "signed by the required number of freeholders of such proposed district." Held, that such petition need not be signed by a majority of the landowners liable to be affected by the overflow of the stream, but only those within a proposed levee district.

2. Under Act March 10, 1891, (St. p. 30, § 2), which provides for the publication of the petition for the organization of a levee district to protect lands from the overflow of a stream, where the petition described the land within the proposed district, and referred to a plat of such district, the publication is not void because such plat, submitted with the petition, was not also published.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Arcadia B. De Baker against J. W. Batcheller and others to restrain the issuance and sale of certain bonds. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wells, Monroe & Lee, for appellant. Wilson & Lamme and Chas. L. Batcheller, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. April 6, 1891, certain persons presented to the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county a petition for the formation of a levee district under the act of March 10, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the organization and government of levee districts created for the protection of lands from overflow of innavigable running streams of water," etc., (St. 1891, p. 30,) to be called the "Fruitland Levee District." Such proceedings were afterwards had that the board of supervisors declared such district organized; and, after other steps provided for by the act had been taken, the defendants were elected as the board of directors of said district; and they were about to issue and sell certain bonds of said district when the plaintiff commenced this action to restrain them from so doing. A portion of plaintiff's complaint was stricken out, against her objection, and, the defendants having answered, the case was heard by the trial court, and judgment rendered for defendants. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

1. The lands included in the district lie along the Los Angeles river, and the main contention of appellant is that the petition failed to give the supervisors jurisdiction because it was signed only by a majority of freeholders owning lands within the proposed district, whereas it is contended by appellant that it should have been signed by a majority of freeholders owning land injuriously affected by overflow from said Los Angeles river, throughout its entire course. If the contention of appellant be true, then no levee district under the act could be legally created along any of the rivers of the state,—not even along the San Joaquin or Sacramento,—except upon a petition signed by a majority of all the freeholders of lands liable to be injuriously affected by overflow, from the foothills to the bay. We do not think that appellant's position is tenable. The whole contention rests upon the language of the first few lines of the bill, to wit, "a majority of freeholders owning land injuriously affected, or liable to be injuriously affected, by overflow from any innavigable running stream," etc.; and it is contended that this language necessarily means a majority of all the freeholders who own land at any point on the stream which might be injuriously affected by overflow. But, when the entire act is looked at, it clearly means a majority of such freeholders within the proposed district. The second section expressly provides that the petition shall be "signed by the required number of freeholders of such proposed district." It also provides that the board of supervisors "may make such changes in the proposed boundaries as they may find to be proper, and shall establish and define such boundaries;" also "that no lands already embraced in * * * levee * * * district shall be included in such boundaries;" and that the board of supervisors shall not "allow another district to be formed, including any of the lands in such district, without the consent of the board of directors thereof." From these and other provisions of the act, it is apparent that the legislature contemplated the possible creation of several districts along the same stream, and that, when the act speaks of a "majority of freeholders," it means a majority of the freeholders of the proposed district. Appellant admits that there may be a district created which does not include all the lands subject to overflow along the river,—indeed, she says that it may be as small as "two acres;" but she contends that in order to organize a district, however small, there must be a petition signed by a majority of all the freeholders owning lands subject to overflow along the entire course of the stream, and that such a petition, so signed, is requisite to establish the first district, or any subsequent district. Such a construction is unreasonable, and destructive of the respective rights of districts and freeholders along the stream. We think, therefore, that the court below was right in holding that the petition in the case at bar was sufficient, independent of the question whether or not the action of the board of supervisors in determining the boundaries of a district is final, and beyond review.

2. The act provides that "said petition shall be published" in a certain prescribed way, and appellant contends that the board of supervisors did not acquire jurisdiction because in this case the petition was not so published. It is admitted that the body of the petition itself was published as required by the act, but it contains this provision: "The said proposed boundaries of said district are shown, approximately, by the plat thereof heretofore annexed." And, as no plat was published with the petition, it is claimed that the publication was defective. But we do not think so. In the body of the petition the boundaries of the proposed district are fully stated, with minute detail. The plat referred to is not expressly made a part of the petition, purports to show the boundaries only approximately, and is not at all a necessary part of the petition. If the petitioners had been unusually wise or cautious, they would have avoided the possibility of the point now under review being made, by either leaving out any reference to the plat, or by publishing it after having made such reference; but we think that the publication of the body of the petition in this instance was a substantial compliance with the provision of the act on the subject.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

3 Cal. Unrep. 811

HOOPER v. PATTERSON et al. (No. 14,394.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1893.)

ACTION ON INJUNCTION BOND—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—ATTORNEYS' FEES PAID—RECOVERY BY ADMINISTRATOR.

1. An appeal from a judgment should be dismissed, where it is not taken until more than two years after the entry thereof.

2. In an action by an administrator on an injunction bond, the amount of attorneys' fees paid by the intestate in procuring a dissolution of the injunction cannot be recovered, when such fees have not been paid, and no claim for them had been filed against the estate, at the time of filing the complaint.

3. In such action, it is error to allow interest on the damages from the date of filing the complaint, as such damages are unliquidated and uncertain until settled by process of law, or by the parties.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. Rearden, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by W. N. Hooper, as administrator of Terence Burke, deceased, against James Patterson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from the judgment dismissed. Order denying a new trial reversed.

Wm. H. H. Hart, for appellants. T. V. O'Brien, O'Brien & Morrison, and O'Brien & Dangerfield, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action upon two injunction bonds to recover $5,000 damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff's intestate, by reason of the injunctions. The plaintiff had judgment for $500, with interest thereon from February 29, 1884, (the date of filing original complaint,) until the date of judgment, May 4, 1889, and costs, taxed at $188.20. The defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The appeal from the judgment should be dismissed, as it was not taken until September 23, 1891,—more than two years after the entry of the judgment.

The two injunction bonds were given in the same action. The first injunction having been dissolved on demurrer to the complaint, the second, to the same effect, was granted upon an amended complaint and a second bond. A demurrer to the amended complaint, upon which the second injunction was issued, was also sustained, and thereupon final judgment, dismissing the complaint and dissolving the injunction, was rendered. From this judgment an appeal was taken, whereupon the judgment and order dissolving the injunction were affirmed. See 61 Cal. 525, 527. The injunction restrained plaintiff's intestate and the sheriff of El Dorado county, pendente lite, from selling, on execution in favor of the former, certain mining claims, and improvements thereon. The findings of the court negative all alleged damages by reason of the injunction, except as follows: (1) "That said Burke (plaintiff's intestate) was necessarily put to costs and expenses, in the amount of $500, for attorneys' fees in procuring the dissolution of said injunctions, and expended said sum." (2) "That said Burke was necessarily put to cost and expense, in the amount of $200, for attorneys' fees in the supreme court of the state of California, in procuring an affirmation of said judgment dissolving said injunctions."

1. It is contended for appellant that neither of these findings is justified by the evidence. I think this point should be sustained. The evidence not only fails to show that Burke or his administrator ever paid any attorneys' fees for services in procuring a dissolution of either injunction, but positively shows that no such fees were ever paid, and, furthermore, shows that the estate of Burke was not liable for any such fees at the time the amended complaint, on which the case was tried, was filed, for the reason that no claim for any such fees was ever presented for allowance to the administrator of Burke, or to the probate judge. The plaintiff was appointed and qualified as administrator of Burke more than four months prior to the filing of the original complaint herein, and nearly two years before the filing of the last amended complaint; and it appears that notice to the creditors had been duly published by the administrator. Substantially all this appears from the testimony of Thomas V. O'Brien, a witness for plaintiff, who appears to have been the leading attorney for Burke in the action in which the injunctions were issued, and also in this action; and there was no other evidence on the trial, touching attorneys' fees for services in procuring a dissolution of the injunctions, than this testimony. In the late case of Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 Pac. Rep. 833, this court said: "The allowance of counsel fees in suits on injunction bonds, and in one or two other actions of a kindred character, is exceptional; and it should not be carried beyond the point to which former decisions have taken it." By former decisions in this state, it seems to have been well settled that in cases of this kind attorneys' fees cannot be recovered as damages sustained by reason of the injunction, unless they have been paid. The principal former decisions to this effect are to be found in the following cases: Wilson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 170; Prader v. Grimm, 28 Cal. 11; Roussin v. Stewart, 33 Cal. 208; Bustamente v. Stewart, 55 Cal. 115.

2. Appellant also makes the point that the court erred in allowing interest on the damages, and I think this point is well taken. The liability of the defendants, if any, arose from a contract; but the amount of the damages could not have been estimated or ascertained by means of the contract; nor does the contract furnish any data useful as a factor in estimating the damages. Therefore, the damages were unliquidated and uncertain, and could only be made certain by proof and adjudication on the trial, or by a settlement between the parties. Coburn v. Goodall, 72 Cal. 509, 14 Pac. Rep. 190; Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 632, 27 Pac. Rep. 67.

I think the appeal from the judgment should be dismissed; but that the order denying a new trial should be reversed, and a new trial granted. But inasmuch as it appears that the attorneys for defendants refused to accept an offer of plaintiff's attorneys to consent to an order granting a new trial, made at the time notice of defendants' motion for a new trial was served, I think the appellant should pay the costs of the appeal.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order denying a new trial is reversed, and a new trial granted. Costs of appeal to be paid by appellant.

97 Cal. 422

MARSHALL v. TAYLOR. (No. 19,073.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1893.)

ENTRY OF JUDGMENT—FAILURE OF CLERK TO MAKE—EFFECT—MOTION TO DISMISS.

1. Where judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and on the same day she gave to the clerk a form thereof, and paid costs of the action, and he neglected to enter the judgment, a motion by defendant to dismiss the action because the judgment was not entered within six months after rendition, as provided by Code Civil Proc. § 581, providing that an action may be dismissed where, after verdict, the successful party neglects to demand entry of judgment thereon for more than six months, was properly denied, the provisions of such section not being mandatory. Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 Pac. Rep. 121.

2. Even if such statute were mandatory, such motion could not be sustained, since there was no "neglect" on the part of plaintiff, she having a right to assume that the clerk would perform his duty as required by Code Civil Proc. § 664, providing that judgment must be entered by the clerk in conformity with the verdict within 24 hours thereafter, unless the court order the case reserved for argument or further consideration, or grant a stay of proceedings.

3. A certificate by the clerk that no judgment had ever been entered, attached to the transcript on appeal served on plaintiff, did not affect her with notice that such judgment had not been entered.

4. If such certificate were evidence of notice, under any circumstance, defendant could not use it for such purpose when he stated in his bill of exceptions that, immediately after the rendition of the verdict, "judgment was rendered and entered in said case in accordance with said verdict," and he also stated in his notice of appeal that the appeal was from the judgment entered in favor of plaintiff.

5. Where the court has actually rendered a judgment, but it has not been entered on the record, through neglect of the clerk, an order may be made that it be entered nunc pro tunc, though the six months allowed for entering judgment have elapsed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Jessie N. Marshall against Jacob S. Taylor. There was judgment for plaintiff, and from an order overruling a motion by defendant to dismiss the action because the judgment was not entered within six months after rendition thereof, and from an order directing the clerk to enter the judgment nunc pro tunc, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. C. Stephens, for appellant. W. W. Holcomb, W. T. Williams, and J. W. Cochran, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant in the court below, for the sum of $25,000 damages, on December 18, 1890. On that day her counsel gave to the clerk the form of judgment, and paid him the costs of the action. The verdict was duly recorded, and the judgment was filed, but was not entered. In due time the defendant moved for a new trial. The motion was denied, and the defendant appealed on June 26, 1891. The notice of appeal served upon the plaintiff states that the defendant appeals to the supreme court from the final judgment given, made, rendered, and entered in the cause on December 18, 1890, and also from the order of June 12, 1891, denying defendant's motion for a new trial therein. The transcript on appeal was served upon respondent on August 25, 1891, and contains a certificate of the clerk which states that no judgment has ever been rendered or entered in the action. On December 9, 1891, the appellant served upon respondent a notice of motion to dismiss the action upon the ground that the plaintiff had neglected for more than six months after the rendition of the verdict to demand, or have entered, a judgment thereon. About the same time, plaintiff served the defendant with notice of motion to have judgment entered "as of the date, the 18th day of January, 1890." The motions were heard together. The motion of the defendant, for a dismissal of the action, was denied; and the motion of plaintiff, "for an order directing the clerk to enter judgment nunc pro tunc as of January 18, 1890, was granted. From these orders the defendant has appealed.

We think the court properly denied the motion to dismiss the action. The application was based upon section 581, Code Civil Proc., which provides that "an action may be dismissed * * * in the following cases: * * * (6) By the court, when, after verdict or final submission, the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have the same entered for more than six months." This section is not mandatory. (Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 Pac. Rep. 121,) and, if it were, would not authorize a dismissal of the action, under the circumstances shown in this case, because there was no "neglect" on the part of the plaintiff. When plaintiff paid to the clerk the costs of the action after verdict, and presented him with a form of the judgment which she desired to have entered, she had a right to rely upon the assumption that the clerk would perform the duty required of him by the statute. Section 664, Code Civil Proc., provides that "When trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the verdict, within twenty-four hours after the rendition of the verdict, unless the court order the case to be reserved for argument or further consideration, or grant a stay of proceedings."

It is claimed that the clerk's certificate to the transcript was notice to the respondent that no judgment had ever been entered, and she having neglected thereafter, until the notice of motion to dismiss as served, to take any steps to have the judgment entered, it was an abuse of discretion in the court below to refuse to dismiss the action. But the certificate of the clerk cannot be used, and never was intended to be used, for any such purpose. If it were evidence of notice, under any circumstance, the appellant ought not be allowed to use it for such a purpose after having incorporated into his bill of exceptions a statement that immediately after the rendition of the verdict, "on the 18th day of December, 1890, judgment was rendered and entered in said case in accordance with said verdict," and also a certificate of the judge to the effect that on the hearing of the motion for a new trial, among other documents introduced in evidence, was the judgment, and having also stated in his notice of appeal served upon respondent that the appeal was from the judgment entered on the 18th day of December, 1890, in favor of plaintiff, and against the defendant.

It is contended that a judgment nunc pro tunc can be entered only when the delay has arisen from the act of the court, and that there is nothing in the record upon which to base an order of entry nunc pro tunc. Neither of these contentions is sound. The pleadings, the minutes of the court, and the verdict were sufficient record evidence to sustain the action of the court. The verdict is equivalent to findings of fact and conclusions of law; and section 664, supra, is equivalent to an express direction by the court to the clerk to enter judgment in accordance with the verdict. The rights of the parties were fully determined, there was no question as to the form or substance of the judgment, and nothing remained to be done but the mere ministerial duty, to be performed by the clerk, of entering the judgment as required by the statute. Casement v. Ringgold, 28 Cal. 339; Gray v. Palmer, Id. 416. The rule is that where the court has actually rendered a judgment, but the same has not been entered on the record, whether in consequence of the neglect of the court, or neglect or misprision of the clerk, an order may be made that the judgment rendered be entered nunc pro tunc, and this may be done after the expiration of the term—in this state, after the expiration of six months. Such an order was made in a case, although nearly eight years had elapsed, it appearing that third persons would not be injured thereby. In such a case the effect of the order is simply to supply matters of evidence. The record is merely amended by inserting in the memorial of the proceedings that which has been improperly omitted therefrom. 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 128-133. The appellant's rights on appeal will not be effected by the action of the court below, because the order relates back to the time the proceedings of the court actually took place, and the nunc pro tunc entry of the judgment becomes a part of the entry of that date, the same as if it had actually been entered then. "There can be no doubt that such an entry may operate so as to save proceedings which have been had before it is made." 1 Black, Judgm. § 136.

To protect the rights of the parties, however, it is necessary that the order of the court granting the plaintiff's motion should be corrected in one respect. It directs the clerk "to enter a judgment nunc pro tunc as of January 18, 1890." The word "January" is a palpable mistake as to the month. The action was not commenced until March 22, 1890, and the record shows beyond question that the judgment ought to have been entered December 18, 1890. The order denying the defendant's motion to dismiss the action is affirmed, and the court below is directed to amend the order granting the plaintiff's motion by striking out the word "January," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "December." As so modified, the last-named order will stand affirmed; and, there being no merit in the appeal, the appellant will not recover the costs thereof.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

(97 Cal. 428)

In re WOODS' ESTATE. (No. 18,051.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1893.)

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION—TO WHOM GRANTED—MINOR CHILDREN OF DECEASED—GUARDIAN'S RIGHT TO NAME ADMINISTRATOR.

Code Civil Proc. § 1365, names the persons to whom letters of administration shall be granted, but does not name the guardian of a minor. Section 1369 declares that a minor is not competent to serve as administrator. Section 1379 provides that administration may be granted to one or more competent persons, though not otherwise entitled to the same, at the written request of the person entitled. Section 1368 provides that, if any person entitled to administer is a minor, letters must be granted to his or her guardian, or to any other person entitled to letters of administration, in the discretion of the court. Held, that a written request by a guardian of the minor children of deceased that letters be granted to appellant did not confer on the latter the right to administer.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. Van Fleet, Judge.

C. M. West and George F. Bronner, public administrator, were contestants for letters of administration on the estate of James A. Woods, deceased. From an order denying the application of West, and granting letters to Bronner, the former appeals. Affirmed.

Hall & Dunn, for appellant. Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. C. M. West and George F. Bronner, public administrator, were contestants for letters of administration of the estate of James A. Woods, deceased.

The court made an order denying the application of West, and granting letters to Bronner, and West appeals from the order. The only heirs of said Woods, deceased, were three minor children, and appellant offered to prove that Susan Sherwood was their only appointed guardian, and that said guardian had made a written request for the appointment of said West as administrator. An objection to this evidence was sustained by the court, and appellant excepted. West founded his claim to be appointed administrator solely upon said request of said guardian. We think that the court was right in its ruling. Section 1365, Code Civil Proc., declares that administration upon estates shall be granted to some person belonging to one of ten specified classes, who shall be entitled in the order named, and the guardian of a minor is not one of the persons therein named. Section 1369 declares that a minor is not competent, or entitled, to serve as administrator. Section 1379 provides that "administration may be granted to one or more competent persons, although not otherwise entitled to the same, at the written request of the person entitled." Section 1368 provides: "If any person entitled to administration is a minor, letters must be granted to his or her guardian, or any other person entitled to letters of administration, in the discretion of the court." No doubt these sections are somewhat confusing as to the point whether a minor is a "person entitled," and therefore as to whether the guardian of a minor may be granted letters. But assuming, for the purposes of this case, that the guardian herself had some right to letters, still she had such right merely as representative, or in place, of the minor. She does not come within any one of the classes of persons enumerated in section 1365 as persons to whom administration must be granted, and therefore her written request could not confer upon appellant the right to administer. The order appealed from is affirmed.

(97 Cal. 433)

SAN DIEGO SCHOOL DIST. OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (No. 19,173.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1893.)

APPEAL—WHEN LIES—SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENT.

Where, in a proceeding by a school district against county supervisors to compel defendants to levy a tax for the use of plaintiff, the court gave judgment for plaintiff, and ordered defendants to levy the tax, and they thereupon complied and made the levy, defendants cannot thereafter appeal from such judgment, as it was satisfied, and its force exhausted, by defendants' compliance, and a reversal could not set aside the levy; Code Civil Proc. § 957, providing that in case of reversal the appellate court may make restitution of all rights and property lost by the erroneous judgment, so far as consistent with certain rights acquired thereunder.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by the San Diego school district of San Diego county against the board of supervisors of San Diego county. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Wm. F. Herrin, Johnson & Jones, J. E. Deakin, and Mr. Kelly, for appellant. Parrish, Mossholder & Lewis, A. G. Watson, and J. O. W. Paine, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. The board of education of the city of San Diego presented an estimate to the board of supervisors of the county of San Diego of the amount of money needed to be raised by taxation for school purposes of the school district of the city of San Diego, and requested said board of supervisors to levy a tax upon all the taxable property in the city sufficient to raise the amount of said estimate. Whereafter the board of supervisors notified the board of education in writing that it would not levy such tax, whereupon the plaintiff herein brought this action to compel its levy. Upon the hearing the court rendered its judgment, September 26, 1892, directing the supervisors that at the time of levying the county tax of the county they levy a tax upon all the taxable property in said San Diego school district, sufficient to raise the amount required by said school district for school purposes during the year next ensuing after the first Monday in January, 1893. Upon the service of this judgment upon the board of supervisors they on the same day complied therewith, and levied the tax, as directed by the mandate of the court. On the 6th of October, 1892, the board of supervisors took an appeal to this court from the judgment that had been entered against them, and the respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the judgment was satisfied before the appeal was taken, by a compliance therewith, and a levy of the tax directed by the judgment.

We are of the opinion that the motion must be granted. The defendant voluntarily complied with the mandate of the court, and the judgment was thereupon satisfied, and its force exhausted. After it had thus been satisfied, there was nothing in the judgment which the court had rendered of which the defendant could complain, or about which it could say that it was aggrieved. A reversal of the judgment would not of itself set aside the levy of the tax which had been made, nor did the appellant by its compliance with the judgment lose any property or rights of which restitution could be made in case of a reversal. Code Civil Proc. § 957.¹ The proceeding was for the purpose of compelling the defendant to perform an official duty, and not one in which it had any personal rights to be affected. By reason of ¹Code Civil Proc. § 957: "When the judgment or order is reversed or modified, the appellate court may make complete restitution of all property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order, so far as the restitution is consistent with protection of a purchaser of property at a sale ordered by the judgment, or had under process issued upon the judgment, on the appeal from which the proceedings were not stayed."

its levy of the tax in obedience to the judgment, rights and interests of other parties have supervened, and it would be unjust to those who have acquired or lost such rights by reason of its compliance with the judgment if the appellant should now be permitted to seek a reversal of the judgment under which, by reason of its own acts, those rights and interests have been acquired. The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 440

CITY OF CORONADO et al. v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al. (No. 19,115.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1893.)

TAXATION—LEVY—WRIT OF PROHIBITION.

A writ of prohibition will not lie, on the petition of one city, to restrain the levy of taxes for the municipal purposes of another city, from which the former has been severed, since the levy of a tax is not a judicial act.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Petition by the city of Coronado and others against the city of San Diego and others for a writ of prohibition to prevent the levy by the latter city, within the limits of the former city, of certain taxes. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

O. A. McConoughey and A. M. McConoughey, for appellants. William H. Fuller, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent respondents from levying a tax for municipal purposes upon property situated within the corporate limits of petitioner. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained by the trial court, and the legal sufficiency of the petition is the only matter before us. After alleging the corporate existence of the city of San Diego; that the territory forming the city of Coronado was originally a portion of the city of San Diego, but had been set off, and the city of Coronado created therefrom in accordance with the requirements of the law,—the petitioner further alleged “that the city of San Diego, ever since said exclusion of said territory from its corporate limits, has without warrant of law, charter, or grant exercised the franchise of assessing, levying, and collecting taxes on and from all the territory within said city of Coronado, so excluded, for the municipal uses of the city of San Diego, and has finished the assessment for the year 1892 on the property in the said city of Coronado, and is threatening and has expressed its intention to levy taxes thereon for the municipal uses of said city of San Diego, which franchise is not conferred upon it by statute, charter, or grant; and there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law,” etc. The foregoing facts form no basis for the issuance of a writ of prohibition. Prohibition is essentially jurisdictional, and therefore judicial; mandamus is purely ministerial; and when the Code of Civil Procedure declares that the writ of prohibition is the counterpart of the writ of mandate, the declaration cannot be true in its broadest sense, and to that extent it is misleading. These two writs are the counterpart of each other to the extent that one is prohibitory and the other mandatory; one acts upon the person, the other acts upon the tribunal; but beyond that they have nothing in common. Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 289. It is recognized as a universal rule that the writ of mandate will issue to compel the levy of a tax, and it will issue for the reason that the act of making the levy is purely ministerial. If mandamus will issue to compel a levy because the act is ministerial, it must be conceded that prohibition will not run to restrain the levy, for it can only be invoked to restrain threatened acts which are judicial in their character. It was held in Maurer v. Mitchell, supra, that the writ of prohibition to which reference is made in the constitution and the statute is the common-law writ, and that it would not run to prohibit the tax collector from selling property under an alleged void assessment. In Le Conte v. Town of Berkeley, 57 Cal. 269, a writ was refused to restrain the collection of a street assessment upon the ground that it was not the proper remedy. In People v. Election Commissioners, 54 Cal. 404, it was declared that the writ would not lie to restrain a board of election commissioners from calling an election, their action not being judicial in its nature, the court further saying that whether it was legislative or ministerial was not necessary to determine. There are numerous other authorities in this state to the same effect. The levy of the tax is not a judicial act, and for the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 445

HAAREN v. HIGH. (No. 19,041.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1893.)

TAX SALE—VALIDITY—TIME FOR REDEMPTION—NOTICE OF EXPIRATION—DEED—EFFECT AS EVIDENCE—REGULARITY OF PROCEEDINGS.

1. In an action for land, the court found that plaintiff's land was sold for delinquent taxes for 1883, but the proceedings did not show that defendant, the purchaser, 30 days before the year for redemption expired, served on plaintiff a notice that the land had been sold for taxes, the amount due, and the time when the right of redemption would expire, as required by Pol. Code, § 3785, as amended by Act March 12, 1885. Held, that the findings showed that the right of redemption expired before the amendment requiring the notice took effect, 60 days after its passage, since the taxes referred to must be taxes payable in 1883, and since, under Pol. Code, §§ 3763-3765, 3772, requiring the first publication of the delinquent tax list to be made on or before the first Monday of February, and the sale to be completed within three weeks from the beginning of the sale, and within 28 days of the first publication, the land could not have been sold later than March, 1884.

2. In such case it was not necessary for defendant to give the notice required by the law as amended.

3. Where, in such case, the tax collector filed with the county recorder and county clerk the affidavit of the publication of the tax list as required by Pol. Code, § 3769, it is immaterial whether the affidavit was signed by the tax collector, or by the printer of the newspaper, as required by Code Civil Proc. § 2010, since, under Pol. Code, § 3787, the deed of the tax collector is conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings from the assessment to the execution of the deed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Claus Haaren against J. E. High. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Works, Gibson & Titus, for appellant. Sylvester Kipp, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. Defendant appeals upon the judgment roll. The action was brought to recover possession of land. Defendant denies plaintiff's title, claims title and right of possession in himself, and pleads the statute of limitations. The case was tried without a jury, and the court found, as facts, that plaintiff acquired title to the demanded premises in June, 1882; that on the 7th day of July, 1885, the tax collector of San Diego county, where said property is situated, executed to defendant four tax deeds, being one for each lot described in the complaint. The deeds were executed in the proceedings for the collection of delinquent state and county taxes for the year 1883, under the provisions of the Political Code, but did not show that any notice of redemption was given, as required by section 3785 of the Political Code,¹ as amended in 1885. The deeds were recorded by defendant on the day of their execution, and defendant has ever since claimed to be the owner of the lots, has paid all taxes levied upon them, and in 1886 inclosed the entire property by a fence.

It is contended by plaintiff and respondent that the deeds are void because no notice was given as required by the section above cited. To this it is replied that the time for redemption had expired before section 3785 was amended so as to require notice. Therefore, no such notice was required in this case. Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 Pac. Rep. 58.

But it is again contended that it does not appear that the full year allowed for redemption had expired, for the reason that the finding does not state when the sale was made for taxes. Admitting that in such case the burden would be on defendant to show that such notice was not required, I think the fact is made to appear by unavoidable inference from the facts which are stated. The amendment was made to the Political Code, so as to require that such notice be given, March 12, 1885. The property was sold by the tax collector in the proceedings for the collection of the taxes for 1883. There is no such fiscal year, but the finding must be understood as referring to the taxes levied, for which assessment is made and which are payable in that year, and which became a lien upon property on the first Monday of March, 1883. The tax collector was required to publish the delinquent tax list on or before the first Monday in February. Sections 3764, 3765, Pol. Code. The sale of property delinquent for taxes must commence not later than 28 days after the first publication, (section 3768, Pol. Code,) and be completed within three weeks after the day first named for the commencement of the sale, (section 3772, Pol. Code.) The sale, therefore, as is shown by the facts found, could not have been later than March, 1884. Section 3785 was amended so as to require the notice March 12, 1885, and took effect 60 days thereafter, to wit, April 15th. The time of redemption, therefore, had fully expired before the law took effect as amended.

It is claimed that the deed is void because the tax collector did not file with the clerk and recorder of the county the affidavit required by section 3769 of the Political Code. The findings show that an affidavit in full accord with the provisions of that section was filed, but it was the affidavit of the tax collector. This is objected to because section 2010, Code Civil Proc., provides that evidence of the publication of a notice required by law to be published in a newspaper may be furnished by the affidavit of the publisher, or his principal clerk. It is not necessary to determine which is the proper mode of proving the publication, for the reason that the deed is conclusive that the proper proof was made. Section 3787, Pol. Code; Rollins v. Wright, supra. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the lower court directed to set aside the judgment entered, and to enter judgment for the defendant on the findings.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCILIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to set aside the judgment entered, and to enter judgment for the defendant on the findings.

97 Cal. 454

OWENS et al. v. COLGAN, Comptroller, et al. (No. 18,055.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1893.)
ISSUANCE OF MANDAMUS — SUBSEQUENT APPLICATION FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE.

Where, on petition, a writ of mandate has issued compelling the state comptroller to draw a warrant on the state treasurer in favor of petitioners for a sum of money, which has been done, and the amount paid, a motion subsequently made by a third person to set aside the judgment and allow a complaint of intervention to be filed will be denied, because as ¹This section provides that the purchaser of a tax title shall, 30 days previous to the expiration of the time for redemption, or 30 days before he applies for a deed, serve on the owner or occupant of the land a written notice that the land has been sold for taxes, the amount due, and the time when the right of redemption will expire, or when the purchaser will apply for a deed, and providing, further, that till such notice is given the owner shall have the right of redemption, indefinitely.

rule interventions cannot be allowed after final judgment, and also because, after the money has been paid, an intervention could not benefit the intervener.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; A. P. Catlin Judge.

Petition by one Owens and others against one Colgan, comptroller, for a writ of mandate. The writ was issued and the money paid, and afterwards J. M. Wood moved to set aside the judgment, and for leave to file a complaint of intervention. From an order denying his motion, said Wood appeals. Affirmed.

Clinton L. White, for appellant. Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for petitioners. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Owens Bros. filed a petition in the superior court for a writ of mandate to compel Colgan, as state comptroller, to draw a warrant in their favor upon the state treasurer for a certain sum of money. An alternative writ was issued, and on the return day, July 31, 1891, Colgan filed a demurrer to the petition, which having been overruled, the court made its findings, and ordered judgment for petitioners as prayed for. On the next day, August 1, 1891, judgment was entered, and a peremptory writ was issued, and on that day the amount of the warrant was paid to petitioners by the state treasurer. Afterwards, on August 29, 1891, Wood served on petitioners and respondent a notice of motion to set aside the judgment, and for leave to file a complaint of intervention. The motion was afterwards heard, and the court made an order denying it, and from that order Wood appeals.

Appellant complains that he was seduced into delaying his application to intervene in the mandamus proceeding by the representation of Hart, attorney for respondent, that it would not be heard as soon as it was; and it is difficult to see how the petitioners for the writ of mandate could be bound in any way by the representations of the attorney of respondent. But, however that may be, the order must be affirmed. In the first place, the general rule is that an intervention cannot be allowed after final judgment. Section 887, Code Civil Proc.; Carey v. Brown, 58 Cal. 180; Laugenour v. Shanklin, 57 Cal. 70. In the second place, since the comptroller has obeyed the writ, and the warrant issued by him has been paid, it would be a vain thing to vacate the judgment, or allow appellant now to intervene; and such a proceeding would not benefit him in the least. The order appealed from is affirmed.

97 Cal. 448

PEOPLE v. SAMONSET. (No. 20,932.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1893.)

SEDUCTION—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—CHARACTER OF PROSECUTRIX—EVIDENCE—PROMISE OF MARRIAGE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. In a prosecution for seduction, testimony of a witness that the prosecutrix had lived with her for two years, and during that time was a woman of good character and good repute, was admissible as tending to establish the previous chaste character of the prosecutrix.

2. In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 268, providing for the punishment of "every person who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character," defendant's good faith in making the promise of marriage at the time of committing the offense is immaterial.

3. On the cross-examination of defendant it was proper to read in evidence an affidavit made by him in support of a motion for a new trial in a civil action formerly brought against him by prosecutrix, when such affidavit tends to contradict his testimony on his examination in chief.

4. Defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that, if they found that prior to the alleged seduction the prosecutrix committed lewd and immodest acts, and did not deport herself as a virtuous woman should, she was not at the time of the alleged seduction a female of previous chaste character, even though it should appear that she did not actually have illicit intercourse. Held, that this was properly refused, as being a charge on matters of fact, which the judges are forbidden to give by Const. art. 6, § 19.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Miguel Samonset was convicted of seduction, and appeals. Affirmed.

Stephen M. White and F. H. Howard, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BELCHER, C. The defendant was charged with the crime of seducing an unmarried female of previous chaste character under promise of marriage. He was tried and convicted, and the judgment was that he pay a fine of $1,000, and, if not paid, that he be imprisoned in the county jail one day for every $2 thereof until it is satisfied. The appeal is from this judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. It is argued for appellant that the court below committed several prejudicial errors in its rulings upon the admission of evidence, and also in its refusal to give to the jury certain instructions asked, and hence that the judgment should be reversed.

The prosecutrix testified, in substance, that she first became acquainted with defendant in March, 1890, and that on the 16th of October following he promised to marry her, and to have the marriage ceremony performed on the 5th of November; that immediately after the engagement he went to the church, and spoke to the priest about it, and had the bans published three times, the first publication being on the 19th of October; that, on the 22d of October, defendant called to see her, and then told her that he was like her husband and she was like his wife, and that he loved her and no one else, and was certainly going to marry her on the 5th of November, and had a right to do everything he wanted with her; that she loved him, and believed everything he said, and then allowed him to have sexual intercourse with her, and that but for his promises and persuasions she would not have done so; that on the 5th of November he postponed the marriage until the 15th of the same month, and then failed to appear, and went off to France, and was gone till August of the next year. She also testified that she had never been married, and had never had sexual intercourse with any other man, and never with the defendant except upon the one occasion above mentioned. One Slatrì was next called as a witness by the prosecution, and testified that he had known the prosecutrix for one or two years, and had roomed in the house where she was employed, and had never known of any improper conduct on her part. This evidence was objected to by the defendant as immaterial and irrelevant, and it is urged that it did not appear that the witness had had opportunities for observation sufficient to qualify him to testify. The objection was overruled, and, we think, properly. The prosecution next offered to prove by a Mrs. Maxwell that the prosecutrix had lived with her for two years, and during all that time was a woman of good character and good repute. This evidence was objected to by the defendant, so far as it related to the prosecutrix's good reputation, upon the ground that it did not tend to establish her "previous chaste character." The objection was overruled, and in this ruling we see no prejudicial error. It was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that the prosecutrix was a woman of previous chaste character, and the offered evidence, in connection with her own testimony, seems clearly to tend in that direction.

In making his defense, the defendant claimed and offered to prove that at the time of his engagement to marry the prosecutrix he was sick and suffering from chronic liver complaint, and in such a condition as to inhibit him from marrying with safety; that he was advised by his physicians to take a sea voyage, and in pursuance of their advice he left and went to France, his native country; that the prosecutrix knew of his condition, and that all his actions with her were in good faith; and hence his failure to carry out his engagement was excusable. And in support of this theory he asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, as testified by her, and that at the time he had such intercourse he intended to marry her, and stated to her in good faith what he believed to be true, and made no representations of any kind, directly or indirectly, to her which he did not then and there in good faith believe to be true, and did not in any way deceive her, and intended at such time to fully carry out all his promises, then the court charges you that no offense was committed." The court refused to admit most of the offered evidence, and refused to give the instruction asked, and these rulings are assigned as error. The promise to marry, and the intercourse, at the time and under the circumstances stated by the prosecutrix, were practically admitted by the defendant, and he simply sought to escape the consequences by proving that when he made the promise he intended in good faith to carry it out. The offense charged is defined in section 268 of the Penal Code as follows: "Every person who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character, is punishable," etc. And the next section provides: "The intermarriage of the parties subsequent to the commission of the offense is a bar to a prosecution for a violation of the last section; provided, such marriage take place prior to the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information charging such offense." Under these sections we do not think that defendant's good faith was a matter of any consequence in determining as to his guilt or innocence. If under and by means of his promise of marriage he induced the prosecutrix to surrender her chastity to him, and then refused to fulfill his promise, the offense was committed, whatever his intentions may have been when such promise was made; and a subsequent marriage would not have prevented a conviction, unless it took place before the information was filed. There was no error, therefore, in the rulings complained of under this head.

In connection with the cross-examination of defendant, the prosecution read in evidence an affidavit made and used by him upon a motion for new trial in a civil action instituted against him by the prosecutrix. This affidavit referred to accompanying affidavits made by Patrick O'Neal and Web Smith. The defendant objected to his affidavit being read, and the objection was overruled. He then offered to read the affidavits of O'Neal and Smith, but, on objection by the prosecution, they were excluded. It is argued that both of these rulings were erroneous, but we think them proper. The affidavit of defendant tended to contradict in some respects his statements on his examination in chief, and the affidavits of O'Neal and Smith were clearly inadmissible for any purpose. But, if otherwise, the makers of them were both in court, and were called and examined by defendant as witnesses.

To prove that the prosecutrix was not a woman of previous chaste character, the defendant testified that he had sexual intercourse with her several times prior to his engagement to marry her, and he also called other witnesses to testify that in the summer and fall of 1890 she lived in a house of bad repute, and to which prostitutes resorted at night, and that she had on several occasions committed immodest acts, and deported herself as a lewd woman. This testimony was all objected to by the prosecution, so far as it related to acts subsequent to the alleged seduction, and excluded; and in rebuttal the prosecutrix positively denied that she ever had sexual intercourse with the defendant prior to October 22d, and also denied most of the statements of the other witnesses as to her immodest acts. In support of his theory upon this point the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence that immediately before and up to the time of the alleged seduction the prosecutrix resided in a house of bad character, and which was then habitually resorted to by lewd and lascivious people, you have a right to take such facts into consideration, as tending in some degree to show that the prosecutrix was not at such time a person of chaste character." "If you find from the evidence that prior to the alleged seduction the prosecutrix committed lewd and immodest acts, and did not deport herself as a virtuous woman should, then the court instructs you that, in that event, she was not at the time of the alleged seduction a female of previous chaste character, even though it should appear that she did not actually have illicit sexual intercourse; and if you so find, the defendant must be acquitted." The first of these instructions was given, and the last refused, and this refusal is assigned as error. The constitution declares that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." Article 6, § 19. The instruction refused was clearly upon matters of fact, and, if given, it would have been in contravention of this provision of the constitution. Courts have no right to instruct juries on controverted facts, nor on the weight of evidence. The refusal was, therefore, not error.

The defendant also asked the court to give this instruction: "You should remember that all presumptions in this case are in favor of the innocence of the defendant, and that there are no presumptions in favor of the innocence of the prosecutrix." The instruction was refused, but the court had already in another instruction, asked by defendant, stated to the jury very clearly and fully the law upon this subject. There was no error, therefore, in refusing to state it a second time.

Some other minor points are made, but they do not, in our opinion, require special notice. After carefully going over the record, we find no prejudicial error calling for a reversal, and therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 814)

WILEY v. CALIFORNIA HOSIERY CO.
(No. 14,386.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1893.)

CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—EVIDENCE—TRAVELING SALESMAN—DISCHARGE—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—JUSTIFICATION—CUTTING PRICES—USAGE.

1. A written proposition by defendant to plaintiff recited that "we will pay you a commission of 7½ per cent. on all orders taken by you and shipped by us between this date and October 31, 1887. You are not to pay out any money or contract any obligation of whatever nature for us, nor represent us in any legal proceeding of any kind or in any place, unless specially authorized in writing so to do. Your duty to us is to take orders for our goods. We reserve the right to decline such orders as we may not want to fill;" and the same was orally accepted by plaintiff. Held, in an action by plaintiff for a wrongful discharge, that oral evidence was inadmissible to change or enlarge the terms of the contract thus made, except as to matters necessarily implied in it or necessary to its performance.

2. In such action plaintiff is not entitled to recover the specified commission on the amount of goods sold by other salesmen for defendant in territory in which plaintiff claimed the exclusive right to sell for it, since he had not such privilege under the contract.

3. The fact that plaintiff, for three years preceding such contract, had solicited orders for defendant in such territory, would not entitle him to such privilege, and evidence of such fact is inadmissible.

4. In such action plaintiff admitted that he took orders at prices below those given to him by defendant, and without its express permission, and that, when he told defendant's secretary that he could not get such prices of certain persons, he said, "You have got to get these prices for the goods, or else not sell them, and the goods have to bring that price this year." The evidence showed that defendant wrote plaintiff several times protesting against his taking orders at cut prices, and finally wrote him that "we will have no man working for us in any manner who will not take our instructions. Because you have been with us a long time, we again give you your choice of doing as we want you to do, or return our samples and reference book;" and that plaintiff replied that "you have been the only violators of the contract, and I defy you to show a point wherein I have not fulfilled it to the letter. In your letter of July 7th, you state I may consider myself no longer in the employ of your company. I consider a full discharge." Held, that plaintiff voluntarily quit defendant's employ, rather than comply with reasonable instructions, and the evidence did not support a verdict for plaintiff.

5. An instruction in such case that, if the jury found for plaintiff, they should find the amount of defendant's goods plaintiff would have sold during the remainder of his term of employment, and allow 7½ per cent. thereon, is erroneous, since it fails to take into account plaintiff's expenses, which should be deducted therefrom.

6. In such action plaintiff testified that he told defendant's secretary that he could not sell their goods alone for less than 10 per cent., and the former promised him a side line of flannels; that "I said that is just what I wanted, and on the strength of that we entered into this contract. I told him I was to have a line of gloves in connection with defendant's goods." Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for commissions that he would have made on the sale of gloves during the remainder of his term of employment, in the absence of any other evidence of a contract with defendant in relation thereto.

7. In such action evidence of a usage by which plaintiff was allowed, in his discretion, to make reductions within certain limits from the list price, in so far as the same was inconsistent with the written agreement and positive instructions of defendant, was inadmissible.

8. In such case the rule for estimating the amount of sales plaintiff would have made during the remainder of his term of employment should be based on the sales made during the part of the term which had expired at the time of the discharge, modified by the facts as to whether the sales would be greater or less during the early or later period.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene Garber, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by Thomas Wiley against the California Hosiery Company to recover damages for a wrongful discharge of plaintiff as defendant's traveling salesman.

From a judgment entered on the verdict of a jury in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

P. Reddy and W. H. Metson, for appellant. S. H. Regensburger and P. F. Dunne, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. A jury trial was had, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict and judgment for \$1,000 damages. The appeal is from this judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The complaint alleged that on February 10, 1887, plaintiff and the defendant (a corporation) mutually agreed that plaintiff should serve the defendant from that date until October 31, 1887, as a traveling salesman to sell and take orders for defendant's goods, for which plaintiff was to receive a commission of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum, and pay his own expenses; that, as a further inducement, defendant was to give plaintiff the exclusive right to sell its goods in Utah, Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Kansas; and, as breaches of this agreement, plaintiff alleged that in May, 1887, defendant, while plaintiff was faithfully discharging his duties, sent another salesman to Salt Lake City and Ogden, in Utah, who made sales in those places amounting to \$2,500, and that on July 1, 1887, the defendant wrongfully discharged plaintiff; that thereby he was prevented from selling at least \$20,000 of defendant's goods; and, as another element of damage, plaintiff alleged that, as part of his said agreement and of the consideration thereof, defendant agreed that plaintiff should have the privilege of carrying for sale a line of gloves manufactured by another house, upon which he was to receive 10 per centum commission, he paying his own expenses, but that he could not carry the gloves alone to make a profit or cover expenses; and that by his discharge he was prevented from selling gloves to the amount of \$3,000, and demanded judgment for his commission on the \$2,500 sold by another in Utah, and upon the \$20,000 of defendant's goods he could have sold during the remainder of his term of service, at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum, and upon the prospective sale of gloves, at 10 per centum,—in all \$1,987.50. The answer of defendant specifically denied each material averment of the complaint, and for a further answer set out the written proposal of defendant to plaintiff for his employment, and under which he entered defendant's service, and which is as follows: "Oakland, California, Feb. 10, 1887. Thomas Wiley: We will pay you a commission of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on all orders taken by you and shipped by us between this date and October 31, 1887. You are not to pay out any money or contract any obligations of whatever nature for us, nor represent us in any legal proceeding of any kind or in any place, unless specially authorized in writing so to do. Your duty to us is to take orders for our goods. We reserve the right to decline such orders as we may not want to fill. California Hosiery Co. John Williams, Secretary."

The answer further alleged that plaintiff accepted the proposal and entered upon said employment the same day, and was furnished by defendant with samples and a list of the prices at which he should sell defendant's goods; that in May and June, 1887, plaintiff took orders at reduced prices, whereupon defendant notified him that, unless he would promise in writing to be governed by the price lists, he should quit defendant's service; that he did not inform defendant that he would be governed by such price lists, but, on the contrary, notified defendant that he would quit its service; and that the contract between them was ended July 17, 1887. A great many exceptions were taken by defendant to adverse rulings upon the admission of testimony, and to instructions to the jury given and refused; and it is also specified that the verdict is not justified by the evidence in several particulars. It is not necessary to notice these specifications in detail. The discussion of some of the controlling questions must suffice.

The verdict in favor of plaintiff must have been based on a finding that plaintiff was wrongfully discharged. It is true that it is alleged in the complaint that defendant violated the agreement by sending another man into his territory, and taking orders to the amount of $2,500. This occurred in May, and plaintiff's letter to defendant dated May 21st showed that he then had knowledge of the sales made by Deane in Utah, but plaintiff continued in the service of defendant after the knowledge of this alleged violation of the agreement until July. Besides, this violation of the agreement, if it were such, was capable of exact compensation; and, as it was not alleged or claimed that such violation was continued or threatened to be continued, it could form no just excuse for the abandonment of the contract by plaintiff. But we do not find in the record any evidence which would justify a finding that plaintiff was to have the exclusive right to sell in the states and territories named. It is conceded by plaintiff that nothing was said upon that subject at the time the agreement was made, but it is said that, for three years preceding, plaintiff had solicited orders in those states and territories for defendant, and it seems to have been assumed by plaintiff that he was to have the exclusive right in those states and territories in 1887. The evidence, however, in relation to this matter could only be material as tending to support the charge that defendant had violated its agreement. As this agreement was in writing, we think no oral testimony could be received to change or enlarge its terms, at least in matters not necessarily implied in it, or necessary to its performance by either party. The verdict of the jury must therefore be sustained, if at all, upon the assumption that plaintiff was wrongfully discharged by defendant; and upon this point it is clear the verdict of the jury cannot be sustained. It is admitted by plaintiff that he took orders at prices below those given to him, and without express permission from the defendant. He claims, however, that the reductions made upon certain orders were made under and in accordance with a usage of defendant by which he was allowed to use his discretion, within certain limits, to make reductions from the list prices upon certain orders for more than a specified quantity of particular kinds of goods. He testified that he knew, as matter of fact, in 1887, when A 1, six of the same kind in a box, were sold, the course of business was to give the buyer 50 cents reduction; but he testified that at the time of the agreement of February 10th he said to Williams, "I won't be able to sell these goods in Wyoming to B. Hellman & Co. at the advanced figures." Mr. Williams said: "You have got to get these prices for the goods, or else not sell them, and the goods have to bring that price this year." He further testified "that it meant the price of every article to be sold by him,—for which he should sell it only as modified in writing or some way in a proper communication." The witness further testified that all he had stated concerning usage was based upon a memorandum in writing, written by Mr. Williams in a little book which he received in 1885. Shortly after plaintiff entered upon defendant's employment he was expressly authorized, in writing, to cut prices within certain specified limits on two classes of goods; but plaintiff conceded that he had no instructions to cut on other goods. The instruction was: "When strictly necessary, you may cut A 1 and 1,995 to $18.00; but the twenty gauge must be held where they are, at $16.50." He admitted that he cut A 1 to $18, 2-12 in a box, and to $17.50, 6-12 in a box, (six of one size in a box;) that the writing was in English, and that he understood it to cut to $18, and regarded it as the positive instruction of his employer to cut to $18, and no more; that he had no instructions to cut on 1,995, but that he cut that number from $16.50 to $16, 6-12 in a box, but admitted he did not know of 1,995 ever being out in 6-12 boxes. We can see from the testimony of plaintiff no evidence of usage justifying a departure from the list prices given him by defendant. Indeed, his own testimony showed that he was never at any time authorized to make changes in prices because of any usage. The very fact upon which he relies to establish a usage was based upon a written instruction in 1885. This instruction was not renewed in 1887, but, on the contrary, he admits that he was informed at the time of his employment that the goods that year must bring the prices marked, and these instructions he admits were positive and clearly understood. We therefore conclude that there was no evidence of usage or otherwise which justified the defendant in cutting prices upon any of these goods, except as to the two classes named in defendant's letter of March 24th, which specified distinctly the extent to which, as well as the circumstances under which, such reductions might be made.

On June 11th defendant wrote plaintiff, among other things saying: "Where is your authority for cutting prices? We have written to B. Hellman that we will not fill his order except at regular prices. You are the only salesman who finds it necessary to cut. If you cannot get an order without cutting, do not hurt yourself and us by cutting the price, and then having us to reject the orders for that reason. * * * You must get full prices, or else you must give up. We will not send you any more samples until you notify us that you will not cut prices without authority. If you do not do that, please send us our samples by freight at once." In another letter, written the same day by defendant to plaintiff, it was said: "You cut prices again to J. E. Miller and to Myers & Nessly, of Lincoln, Nebraska. We will not fill the orders except at the regular prices given you. We must reiterate, prices must not be cut. Our goods can be sold in your territory without cutting. If you do not sell them we will do it ourselves, but we will do nothing until you have had an opportunity to decide whether you will return the samples or not. July 1st will be the end of our limit." On July 7th defendant wrote plaintiff acknowledging receipt of five orders, and calling plaintiff's attention to the fact that he had not answered defendant's letters of June 11th, and added: "We wrote you then that you would have until July 1st to decide whether you would return our samples, or promise to stop cutting prices. You have neither returned the samples nor written a line in answer to the letters. We do not, therefore, consider that you are now in any manner in our service." Following these letters we find in the record a letter from plaintiff to defendant, bearing date Salt Lake City, July 11, 1887, but evidently written at a much later date, saying: "Your letters of June 11th and also letters of July 7th were received, and contents noted. To answer them fully and satisfactorily to you and myself, it would, according to my judgment, require a personal interview, which I trust will take place on early date. * * * I shall not, in opposition to your wishes, take any orders here until I fully hear from you." On July 15th defendant wrote plaintiff, in reply to plaintiff's letter above mentioned, advising him that it was not necessary to have a personal interview, and again saying that he had been cutting prices without authority, and that, when written to about it, had not said a word one way or the other, and added: "For such an offense as this, we would discharge any man working on a salary. It is something that we cannot permit, and we know that it is not necessary. * * * We do not like this uncertainty, and it puts us to a great deal of trouble to make new arrangements. We will have no man working for us in any manner who will not take our instructions. Because you have been with us a long time, we again give you your choice of either doing as we want you to do, or return our samples and reference book." To this letter plaintiff replied under date of August 2nd, and, after discussing the matter of cutting prices, and the sales made by Deane at Salt Lake City and Ogden, said: "You have been the only violators of the contract, and I defy you to show a point wherein I have not fulfilled it to the letter. In your letter of July 7th you state I may consider myself no longer in the employ of your company. I consider a full discharge." It is perhaps immaterial, so far as the merits of the case are concerned, whether plaintiff was discharged by defendant, or he preferred to quit defendant's employment, rather than to give any assurance that he would not disobey their positive instructions. We think it is clear, however, that the circumstances fully justified the defendant in discharging plaintiff; but that, notwithstanding the defendant's language in its letter of July 7th, that "defendant did not consider himself longer in their employ," the subsequent letter again renewed the offer to continue in their service upon his complying with their request. That request being reasonable, under the circumstances, we are led to conclude that the plaintiff voluntarily, and without sufficient reason, quit the defendant's employment. We conclude that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict, and that the motion for a new trial should have been granted. We also think the verdict was against the instructions of the court, as given in the 3d, 4th, 6th, 8th, and 9th instructions given at defendant's request.

As we cannot assume that upon a new trial the evidence will be the same upon the question of defendant's liability, it is necessary to notice briefly the question of damages. The court instructed the jury as to the measure of damages substantially that, if they found for the plaintiff, they should find the amount of the defendant's goods plaintiff would have sold during the remainder of his term of employment, and also the amount of gloves he would have sold during the same time, and allow $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum on the former and 10 per centum on the latter. These instructions, as given, were clearly erroneous. Under the terms of his employment, plaintiff was to pay his own expenses. What he would have earned, therefore, would have been the amount of his commission upon the sale of defendant's goods effected by him, so far as the same were accepted and shipped by defendant, less the amount of his expenses incurred in securing orders. No reference is made anywhere in the charge of the court to these expenses. If the plaintiff voluntarily quit the defendant's employ, under circumstances justifying such course, or was wrongfully discharged, he would have been entitled to the same compensation for the remainder of his term of employment that he would have realized if he had continued in their employment, and no more. We cannot assume that he continued to incur expenses, and charge the defendant therewith, after he had quit soliciting orders. To do so would virtually change the terms of the employment to a commission of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum and all expenses paid by the defendant.

In relation to the commission charged upon the prospective sale of gloves during the remainder of his term of employment, we do not think defendant can be charged therewith. Plaintiff agreed to sell defendant's goods for the commission named in the memorandum of agreement. There is no stipulation that he should represent others, nor that plaintiff made that a condition of entering the service of defendant. Plaintiff testified: "I told him [Williams] that I could not sell his goods for less than ten per centum,—not his goods alone; but, if he would give me a side line of flannels, I could perhaps do it for seven and one half per centum. He would not give me ten per centum, and he promised me a side line of flannels, besides their knit goods, for that territory, which I carried the year previous. Mr. Williams replied, 'We are going to sell California flannels in Colorado this year.' I said that is just what I wanted, and on the strength of that we entered into this contract. I told him I was to have a line of gloves in connection with defendant's goods." This last remark is all that appears to have been said by either party in relation to gloves, and it clearly appears that, as defendant agreed to furnish him with a side line of flannels, which they had not theretofore sold, he was satisfied with the amount of commission to be paid to plaintiff. That it was to plaintiff's advantage to carry this additional line of gloves there is no question; but, clearly, the defendant is not liable to the plaintiff for profits the plaintiff might have realized in serving others, when such extra service did not enter into the contract between the parties. We think the testimony in relation to the gloves, as well as that in relation to the amount of sales made in former years, and as to usage, so far as such usage was inconsistent with the written agreement and positive instructions given plaintiff by defendant, was improperly received. We further think that the true rule for estimating the amount of sales which would have been made of defendant's goods during the remainder of the term of employment should be based upon the sales made during that portion of the period of employment prior to the termination of it, modified, if the facts justified it, by evidence as to whether ordinarily the sales would be greater or less during the early or later period of employment. We think the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VAN-CLIEF, C.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 824)

WEYERS v. ESPITTALIER et al. (No. 19,010.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1893.)

APPEAL—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

A verdict will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence is conflicting.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by Wilhelmine Weyers against Joseph Espittaller and Martin G. Aguirre to enjoin a sale under execution. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order refusing a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. T. Williams, for appellants. Guthrie & Guthrie, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. Appeal from the judgment, and an order refusing a new trial. This action was brought to enjoin a sale under an execution against one Elise Deste, the daughter and grantor of the plaintiff. Espittaller, the judgment creditor, is made defendant with the sheriff. The answer justifies the attempted sale on the ground that the deed to plaintiff was without consideration, and was made to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of Elise Deste, and particularly the defendant Espittaller. The case was tried with a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The question raised on the motion for a new trial is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. There was evidence which plainly tended to sustain it in every respect. Appellants contend that the evidence shows a state of things which would either make the plaintiff, her son-in-law, and her daughter partners in the transactions in which the indebtedness of Elise Deste was incurred, or that Elise Deste transacted the business for and as the general agent of plaintiff, and therefore plaintiff is herself directly responsible for the indebtedness. Conceding that such an issue is tendered in the answer, and that such facts would constitute a defense to this action, the most that can be claimed for it is that there is much evidence which tends to support such defense. But there is also much which tends to support the other theory, that a large portion of the money invested by Elise Deste was received from her mother as a loan, and that the investments were made by the daughter in her own name and on her own account. The jury found in favor of the latter hypothesis, and we cannot disturb the verdict. A careful examination of the alleged errors occurring at the trial discloses none injurious to appellant. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

I concur: BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 825)

PEOPLE v. HAMILTON. (No. 14,636.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1893.)

PUBLIC OFFICER—REFUSAL TO PAY OVER MONEY TO SUCCESSOR—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

1. Pen. Code, § 950, provides that an information must contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Held, that an information, which alleged that defendant, "having theretofore" been a county clerk, and "charged with the receipt, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of public moneys, in his official capacity as such clerk and officer, and his official term * * * having expired, * * * and there then and there remaining in his hands certain public moneys theretofore received by him in his official capacity as such clerk," he willfully omitted to pay them over to his successor, the demand therefor "having then and there been made of" defendant by his successor, sufficiently charged that defendant, as county clerk, received money as such officer, and failed to pay it over to his successor; and the use of the participle instead of the past tense of the verb did not make the allegations mere recitals.

2. Pen. Code, § 426, declares that the phrase "public moneys" includes all money received or held by county officers in their official capacity. Held, that an allegation that moneys were received by defendant "in his official capacity" was the allegation of a fact which fixed their character as "public moneys."

3. The allegation that defendant received the money in his official capacity was sufficient, without referring to the statute under which the information was drawn, or to any statute which created a duty, the antecedent existence of which constituted a factor connected with the offense; the general conclusion of the information, "contra formam statuti," being sufficient.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

M. D. Hamilton was convicted of omitting and refusing to pay over to his successor in office moneys received by him as county clerk. From an order arresting the judgment, the people appeal. Reversed.

Wm. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People. Johnstone Jones, Dist. Atty., E. W. Hendricks, and Copeland & Daney, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The respondent was tried and found guilty of omitting and refusing to pay over to his successor in office moneys received by him as county clerk. On the day fixed for passing sentence, the defendant moved for a new trial, and also in arrest of judgment. The motion for a new trial was heard, but not disposed of, and the court granted an order arresting the judgment; and from this order the people appeal.

The information was drawn under subdivision 10 of section 424 of the Penal Code, which provides: "Each officer of this state, or of any county, * * * and every other person charged with the receipt, safe-keeping, transfer, or disbursement of public moneys, who willfully omits or refuses to pay over to any officer or person authorized by law to receive the same any money received by him under any duty imposed by law to pay over the same, is punishable," etc. The information, omitting the title and conclusion, is as follows: "M. D. Hamilton is accused by the district attorney of the said county, by this information, of the crime of omitting and refusing to pay over money received by him under duty imposed by law to pay over the same. Committed as follows: The said M. D. Hamilton, on the 5th day of January, A. D. 1891, at the said county of San Diego, and before the filing of this information, having theretofore, for the two years immediately preceding, been an officer of said county, to wit, the clerk of the county of San Diego, and an officer charged with the receipt, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of public moneys in his official capacity as such clerk and officer, and his official term as such clerk and officer having expired by limitation of law, and there then and there remaining in his hands certain public moneys theretofore received by him in his official capacity, as such clerk, during the said official term as aforesaid, the sum of four thousand four hundred and twenty-two and thirty-six one hundredths dollars, money of the United States of America, and it being his duty imposed by law to transfer and pay over to his successor in office in the office of county clerk of said county, one W. M. Gassaway, he, the said M. D. Hamilton, did willfully, unlawfully, fraudulently, and feloniously omit and refuse, neglect, and fail to pay over the said sum of money to the said W. M. Gassaway, he, the said Gassaway, being then and there the clerk of said county as aforesaid, and being the officer and person authorized by law to demand and receive the same as the successor in the office of said county clerk to said M. D. Hamilton; the demand for the transfer and payment of the said sum of money having then and there been made of the said M. D. Hamilton by the said W. M. Gassaway, clerk of said county and successor in the said office as aforesaid; the said omitting and refusing, neglecting, and failing to transfer and pay over the said money and moneys being contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California." The ground relied upon by the defendant, and upon which the court arrested the judgment, is that the information does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950-952 of the Penal Code. It is contended that the information is not "direct and certain, as it regards the party charged, the offense charged, and the particular circumstances of the offense charged;" this being, it is argued, one of the cases where the particular circumstances of the offense must be set forth by allegations that are direct and certain. The points urged are that there is no definite or certain allegation that the defendant was county clerk during the time named, nor that moneys remained in his hands, nor that the moneys were public moneys; that these matters are not allegations of fact, but mere recitals.

It may be conceded that the mode adopted by the pleader in stating these facts is not the best that could have been devised, but that is not required by the Code, nor is there any standard by which the degree of certainty in criminal pleading is to be measured, save that provided by the Code. Section 950 of the Penal Code provides that the information must contain: "(2) A statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." We think that no one of common understanding could fail to know what was intended by the language used, and, besides, it would seem to be the natural and ordinary mode of expressing the fact intended. No better illustration of this can be given than that furnished by the learned counsel for respondent in the opening sentence of their brief, in giving a statement of the case for the information of this court. It is as follows: "The respondent having been the county clerk of the county of San Diego, and his term of office having expired, and he having failed to turn over certain moneys," etc. Besides, the fact that he was clerk of the county, and had received money which it was his duty to turn over to his successor, was not an offense, nor any part of the offense. The offense consisted of the omission or refusal to turn it over to his successor; and though without the pre-existence of the fact that he was such clerk, and had received such money, he could not commit the offense, such pre-existing facts are matters of inducement, which, though required to be distinctly stated, need not be charged with the directness of the specific act which converts the innocent person into a criminal one.

The objections to the information upon which the learned judge sustained the motion in arrest of judgment were that the facts that the defendant was an officer, and had received and had in his hands the moneys mentioned, were not positively alleged, but were merely recitals, and that the statement that the money so in his hands were "public moneys," was a conclusion of law. The first of these objections seems to have been based upon the use of the past participle instead of the past tense of the verb. Bishop, on Criminal Procedure, (volume 1, § 556,) says: "Where the direct averment is required, as in laying the main charge, it is usually made with the verb. But any other part of speech which reasonably conveys the idea is adequate, as the participle, and even the adverb." An illustration given by the same author is, in substance, as follows: Lawley, being found guilty of attempting to persuade one not to appear as a witness against Crooke, moved in arrest of judgment because it was not positively averred that Crooke was indicted. It was only said that "she, knowing that Crooke had been indicted, and was to be tried," did so and so; but the court held that it was sufficient. So, in an indictment, under an English statute which made punishable any one "above the age of fourteen" who should steal an heiress, charging that the defendant, "being above the age of fourteen years," did the act, was held to contain a sufficient averment of his age. Id. § 557. The Code requirement clearly permits, if it does not enjoin, the use of "ordinary" language in charging offenses; and the test of the sufficiency is that a person of common understanding shall be enabled to know what is intended. If, therefore, criminal pleading must be framed in the technical language which formerly prevailed, these Code provisions are vain and useless; for it would require us to resort to the same technical system of pleading abolished or rendered unnecessary by the Code in order to determine whether a fact is so alleged as to enable "a person of common understanding to know what is intended." We think it is sufficiently charged that the defendant was county clerk during the time named; that he received the money specified as such officer, and failed to pay it over to his successor.

It was further held by the learned judge that the allegation that there was remaining in his hands certain public moneys theretofore received by him in his official capacity is a conclusion of law; that the facts should have been stated which would show that they were in fact public moneys.

The fact is clearly alleged that these moneys were received by the defendant "in his official capacity." Section 426 of the Penal Code is as follows: "The phrase 'public moneys,' as used in the two preceding sections, includes all bonds and evidences of indebtedness, and all moneys, belonging to the state, or any city, county, or town, or district therein, and all moneys, bonds, and evidences of indebtedness, received or held by state, county, district, city, or town officers, in their official capacity." The allegation that these moneys were received by the defendant "in his official capacity" is the allegation of a fact which conclusively fixes their character as "public moneys." It is the official character in which the moneys are received, and not the ultimate ownership of the money, which, under the last clause of the section, makes them public moneys. The words "public moneys" might have been omitted without affecting the sufficiency of the information; but there is no inconsistency in the averment, since the kind or character of the public moneys charged to have been withheld is defined by the accompanying statement. At the most, it was surplusage, which does not vitiate. Nor could there be any difficulty in pleading an acquittal or conviction under this information in bar of a subsequent prosecution. The defendant is charged with all moneys remaining in his hands, which were received by him as clerk during his incumbency of that office. The offense is single, whether the amount be great or small; and a conviction or acquittal of that single offense must, of necessity, bar a second prosecution, even though it be afterwards ascertained that the amount in his hands was larger than that alleged in the first information.

Respondent further contends that, if the facts hereinbefore referred to were sufficiently pleaded, still the information does not state sufficient facts, because there was no law authorizing the clerk to receive deposits from litigants, and that, therefore, deposits received by him were illegally collected, and belonged to the depositors. But this question is not before us. This appeal involves only the sufficiency of the information, and the jurisdiction of the court, while this contention assumes facts which may have been given in evidence, but which could not properly be considered upon this appeal, if they were. The allegation that defendant received these moneys in his official capacity was sufficient, without referring, by title or otherwise, either to the statute under which the information was drawn, or to any statute which created a right, duty, or obligation, the antecedent existence of which may constitute a factor more or less intimately connected with the offense. As to all these, the general conclusion of the information, "contra formam statuti," is sufficient. We therefore conclude that the information is sufficient, and that the court below erred in arresting the judgment, and advise that the order arresting the judgment in said cause be reversed, and the court be directed to vacate its order directing the district attorney to prepare and file a new information in said cause, and to take such further proceedings therein as the law requires.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order arresting the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to vacate its order directing the district attorney to prepare and file a new information in said cause, and to take such further proceedings therein as the law requires.

97 Cal. 464

HEALY v. WOODRUFF et al. (No. 18,042.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1893.)

IRRIGATION—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—RIPARIAN OWNERS.

The fact that one who has appropriated, for irrigation purposes, a certain quantity of water, is a riparian owner on the stream from which the water is taken, cannot be urged against his right afterwards to take a greater quantity, where no other rights were in existence at the time, or for years afterwards.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

Action by Mathew Healy against B. C. Woodruff and others to quiet title to certain water. From a judgment quieting title to a less amount than claimed, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Spencer & Raker, for appellant. A. L. Shinn and R. L. Shinn, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet plaintiff's title to certain waters of a stream called "Cedar Creek," and to a ditch leading therefrom, and for an injunction, etc. The court rendered judgment for plaintiff against the defendants Harrison Smith and Edward Bonyman as prayed for in the complaint; but, as against the defendants James and John A. Smith and B. C. Woodruff, the judgment quieted plaintiff's title to only 180 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and contends that the court's conclusions of law were erroneous, and that, upon the findings of fact, his title should have been quieted to 360 inches.

The court finds, in brief, these facts: In April, 1873, plaintiff's grantor, Frank Thomas, entered upon said Cedar creek, and constructed the ditch described in the complaint. He completed it before the 4th of November, 1873, and diverted 180 inches of water, and used it for irrigating certain lands described in the findings, for watering stock, and for domestic purposes to the amount of 180 inches; that being then the capacity of the ditch. In the winter of 1873-74, the ditch became so enlarged "through the action of water running to the head thereof, and into the same," that it was afterwards capable of carrying 360 inches. "Ever since said ditch was so enlarged, and up to the time of the commencement of this action, plaintiff and his grantors did divert and use from said Cedar creek the waters of said creek to the full capacity of said ditch, as so enlarged, whenever sufficient water came down to the same, and that said waters have been used during all said time for irrigating the lands described in finding 5, as well as other lands of plaintiff described in the complaint herein, and for watering stock, and for general household purposes." Plaintiff's lands require for irrigating at least 360 inches of water. Plaintiff acquired from said Thomas the said ditch and water rights and certain lands in September, 1874, and has ever since been the owner of the same. Many years afterwards the various defendants began to assert rights to the waters of said creek as riparian owners, or as appropriators, and to divert the same from plaintiff's ditch; but none of such rights had any origin within five years after the said enlargement of the said ditch. Most of them originated 10 or 15 years afterwards. Between the time when the ditch was first constructed, with the capacity of 180 inches, and the winter of 1873-74, when it was enlarged to 360 inches, the said Frank Thomas, plaintiff's grantor, acquired title from the United States to a piece of land, through a small portion of which the said Cedar creek runs. Before that the entire stream ran through public lands, and it continued afterwards to run through public lands for many years, throughout its course, except where it ran through said land acquired by said Thomas in 1873, as aforesaid.

Upon these findings of fact the court below made the conclusion of law that plaintiff should have his title quieted to only 180 inches. The record does not show upon its face upon what theory this conclusion was reached, but we discover the theory from the brief of respondents. It appeared that the court held that because the plaintiff's grantor acquired the title to some land on the stream, and thus became a riparian owner, he could not afterwards acquire any more water by appropriation, and that, therefore, his enlargement of the ditch in the winter of 1873-74 did not give him any right to an increased flow of water in his ditch as against any one who years afterwards might assert riparian rights on the stream above the ditch. But this position is clearly untenable. The fact that plaintiff or his grantor was a riparian owner does not warrant the conclusion that he could not be an appropriator. There is, as is said in a play, "no consonancy in the sequel." The notion seems to be that becoming a riparian owner estops one, in some sort of a way, from being an appropriator of water, although there be no one in existence in whose favor the estoppel can be invoked. When the ditch was enlarged, there was no person having any rights on the stream, except plaintiff's grantor himself, and therefore the enlargement of the ditch encroached upon nobody's vested or prior rights. Respondents argue that if appellant's position be correct the first riparian owner could monopolize all the waters of the stream. But they admit that an appropriator who is not a riparian owner can take all the water of a stream on the public lands, if he be the prior or first appropriator; and it would certainly be strange if the first comer to a stream, who acquired title to some land upon it, has less rights in the water of the stream than one who owns no land there at all. At the time of the enlargement of the ditch, there was no riparian owner on the stream, except plaintiff's grantor. If some other person had been the riparian owner instead of plaintiff's grantor, the latter, with the consent of such riparian owner, or by adverse user, could have diverted the waters of the stream, and held them against all subsequent comers; and certainly his own consent to the appropriation was equal, at least, to the consent of another person, who might have occupied his position. Counsel for respondents seem to think that because plaintiff's grantor, as a riparian owner, could have prevented subsequent appropriators from diverting the water above his land, and away from it, therefore he could not divert the water himself; but that is a confusion of the distinction between meum and tuum. Counsel complain that this view gives great advantage to the first possessor and appropriator of the water of a stream. This is no doubt true; but it is the advantage which the law gives, and which necessarily follows prior occupancy and appropriation. We think, therefore, that the third and fourth conclusions of law made by the court below, to the effect that plaintiff has the first right, by prior appropriation, to 180 inches of the waters of said Cedar creek, are erroneous, and that the court should have found, as a conclusion of law, that plaintiff has such right to 360 inches of said water; and, as the facts found show what the judgment should have been, there is no necessity for another trial.

v.32p.no.6—34

The judgment, as to respondents and defendants B. C. Woodruff, John A. Smith, and James M. Smith is reversed, with directions to the superior court to amend its conclusions of law as indicated in this opinion, and to enter judgment in due form quieting plaintiff's title as against said respondents to said ditch, and to said waters of Cedar creek, to the extent and in the amount of 360 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, and enjoining said respondents from diverting water from said ditch or interfering therewith, while there are not more than such 360 inches running in said ditch, with costs, etc., as in the former judgment.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

97 Cal. 461

NYE v. MARYSVILLE & Y. C. ST. R. CO.
(No. 18,000.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1893.)

NEW TRIAL — SUFFICIENCY OF APPLICATION — STREET-CAR COMPANIES — EJECTMENT OF PAS-SENGER — REFUSAL TO PAY FARE.

1. Where the notice of intention to move for a new trial "on a statement of the case," in which the errors were specified, was not incorporated into the statement, the motion was properly denied, as Code Civil Proc. § 659, provides that, "if no such specifications be made, the statement shall be disregarded on the hearing of the motion."

2. In an action against a street-car company for ejecting a passenger it appeared that defendant's rules required passengers to pay their fare on entering the car; that, after plaintiff had ridden about one and one half blocks without paying fare, his attention was called to the rule, and he was requested by the driver to pay; that plaintiff answered that the driver "was in too much of a hurry," and that he (plaintiff) "would take a little time on that;" that plaintiff was then ordered to get off of the car; that the driver undertook to eject plaintiff, but was himself put out by plaintiff; that the driver then seized an iron bar, and again ordered plaintiff to leave the car, which he did, without being struck or injured in any way. Held, that plaintiff could not recover, as his conduct amounted to a refusal to comply with a reasonable rule of defendant, and justified his removal.

3. Under Civil Code, § 2187, providing that a "common carrier may demand the fare of passengers either at starting or at any subsequent time," a rule of a street-car company, requiring passengers to deposit their fare on entering the car, is reasonable.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; John C. Gray, Judge.

Action by George Nye against the Marysville & Yuba City Street-Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Barney and Mr. Donohoe, for appellant. M. E. Sanborn, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was brought to recover damages for an alleged wrongful eviction from one of defendant's street cars. At the conclusion of the evidence offered by plaintiff defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was granted, and judgment was entered against the plaintiff, who thereafter gave notice of his intention to move for a new trial upon a statement of the case. The statement was thereafter prepared and settled, and upon the hearing the motion for a new trial was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying said motion.

Respondent makes the point that the judgment and order must be affirmed; the first, because no error appears upon the judgment roll; and the second, because there are no specifications of error of any kind, either of law or fact, in the statement on motion for a new trial. Appellant's notice of intention to move for a new trial forms no part of the judgment roll, nor is it incorporated in the statement. It is inserted in the record after the statement, but, as its insertion was improper, it is no part of the record.

Pico v. Cohn, 78 Cal. 384, 20 Pac. Rep. 706; Richardson v. City of Eureka, 92 Cal. 64, 28 Pac. Rep. 102; Bohnert v. Bohnert, 95 Cal. 445, 30 Pac. Rep. 590, and cases there cited. The statement contains no specifications of error whatever. Section 659, Code Civil Proc., provides: "If no such specifications be made, the statement shall be disregarded on the hearing of the motion." It was therefore impossible for the court below to grant the motion without violating the above provision, and, that being true, it follows that the court did not err in denying appellant's motion for a new trial. Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194, 29 Pac. Rep. 31. Waiving the question whether a statement which cannot be used on motion for a new trial, because it does not comply with the requirements of the Code, may nevertheless be used upon an appeal from the judgment, an examination of the record makes it clear that the court did not err in granting the nonsuit.

Among the rules of the respondent posted in the car was one requiring passengers to deposit their fare upon entering the car. This rule was reasonable, and necessary to prevent fraud upon the company. Plaintiff was not ignorant of the rule, as shown by his testimony; and after he had seated himself in the car, and had ample time to comply with this rule, his attention was called to it, and he was requested to pay his fare. Instead of complying, plaintiff said that he was going to Yuba City, and had plenty of time to pay. The driver insisted that he must pay then, to which plaintiff retorted that he, the driver, "was in too much of a hurry," and that he, the plaintiff, "would take a little time on that." He was then told to get off the car or he would be put off. Not complying with this request, the driver attempted to remove him from the car, but was unsuccessful; and a second attempt resulted in the driver being put out on the front platform, plaintiff remarking, "If you have any business out there on the platform, you had better attend to it." The driver then removed an iron used to open and shut the door, and went into the car, and again ordered plaintiff to leave the car, which he then did. Appellant was not struck or injured in any way. He had ridden about a block and a half before his attention was called to the payment of his fare. He had ample time and opportunity to pay, and, while not expressly refusing to pay his fare, his language and conduct amounted to a refusal to comply with a reasonable rule and proper request made by respondent, and justified respondent in removing him from the car. Civil Code, § 2188. Nor was any more force, or appearance of force, resorted to than was necessary to secure his removal. That the regulation of respondent, and the demand of payment of the fare at the time it was demanded, were reasonable and proper, see Civil Code, §§ 2186, 2187.¹ The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

¹Section 2187 provides that a common carrier may demand the fare of passengers either at starting or at any subsequent time.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment.

VON SCHMIDT v. WIDBER, Treasurer.
(No. 15,160.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1893.)

PRACTICE ON APPEAL—BOND.

An appeal from an order denying a new trial will be dismissed, where no undertaking is filed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by A. W. Von Schmidt against James H. Widber, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Dismissed.

John H. Durst, for appellant. Tilden & Tilden, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon motion of respondent, the appeal from the order denying a motion for a new trial in the above-entitled action is dismissed, upon the ground that no undertaking upon appeal has been filed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 836.)

GREGORY et al. v. GREGORY et al. (No. 18,080.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

APPEALABLE ORDERS.

Where a judgment is itself appealable, and no motion is made for a new trial, an appeal from a subsequent order refusing to set the judgment aside will not lie. Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 22 Pac. Rep. 175, 80 Cal. 400, followed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by James W. Gregory and others against John H. Gregory and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from an order refusing to set the judgment aside. Dismissed.

James Gartlan, for appellants. E. P. Tuttle and C. Tuttle, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. This case was submitted to the court below for decision upon an agreed statement of the facts, signed by the attorneys of the parties thereto, and on February 25, 1892, judgment was given and entered by the court in favor of the defendants. Thereafter, on April 6th, the plaintiffs served notice on the defendants that on the 20th of that month they would move the court to vacate the judgment, and restore the cause to the calendar for trial, upon the ground that there were no findings to support the judgment. In due time the motion was heard, and submitted upon the papers and record in the case, and upon an affidavit made by plaintiffs' attorney, in which, among other things, he stated: "No stipulation was made that said statement should constitute a part of the judgment roll in the action. Findings were not waived. No findings of fact have been signed or filed." On April 29th the court denied the motion, "for the reason that all the facts in the case had been agreed upon, and submitted to the court, and consequently that there was no issue of fact before the court to be determined, and nothing requiring, or upon which to base, separate findings of fact; the court being of the opinion that the findings of fact were, in effect, thereby waived, and no other or further findings of fact were necessary or permissible, beyond the said agreed statement." From this order denying their motion the plaintiffs appealed, and have brought the case here on a bill of exceptions.

The defendants move to dismiss the appeal, and in support of their motion cite, among other cases, Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 80 Cal. 400, 22 Pac. Rep. 175. In that case the appeal was from an order like that involved here, and on motion the appeal was dismissed. The court said: "The motion was not for a new trial, and the judgment was itself appealable. It is settled that, when a judgment or order is itself appealable, the appeal must be taken from such judgment or order, and not from a subsequent order refusing to set it aside. [Citing cases.] The plaintiff should have appealed from the judgment, with a bill of exceptions upon that appeal." Upon the authority of that case, we advise that the appeal in this case be dismissed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the appeal herein is dismissed.

(97 Cal. 459)

PEOPLE v. FICE. (No. 20,970.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW — REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS — NEW TRIAL — NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE — ADDITIONAL AFFIDAVITS.

1. Failure to instruct on any proposition deemed essential by defendant in a criminal case is not error, unless such an instruction was requested.

2. Where defendant's affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial for newly-discovered evidence are fully contradicted by affidavits of the prosecution, a new trial is properly denied.

3. A motion to be allowed to file additional affidavits is also properly denied when made after the new trial has been denied, and without production of the affidavits.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. Murphy, Judge.

Conviction of one Fice for robbery, from which, and the denial of a motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

D. A. O'Connell, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

HARRISON, J. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of robbery, and sentenced to the state prison for the term of 10 years. Thereafter he moved for a new trial upon the grounds that the court had erred in its instructions to the jury; that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; and upon newly discovered evidence. The motion was denied, and he has appealed to this court.

In support of the first ground it is urged that the defendant was not sufficiently identified as the person who committed the robbery, and that the evidence showed that at the time of the robbery he was confined to his residence by sickness. There was, however, positive evidence before the jury on the part of several witnesses that the defendant was the individual who committed the offense, and their verdict must be deemed to have determined any conflict of evidence concerning the alibi or as to his identity.

The instructions of the court are not in the record, and we cannot determine whether it committed any error. The failure of the court to instruct upon any proposition deemed essential by the defendant is not to be regarded as error unless he made a request for such instruction.

Upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence it is sufficient to say that the affidavits offered in support thereof were fully contradicted by counter affidavits on the part of the prosecution, and for that reason the court below exercised a proper discretion in refusing to grant the motion. The motion to be allowed to file an additional affidavit in support of this ground after the motion for a new trial had been denied was properly refused by the court, both for the reason that it had already denied the new trial, and also for the reason that an affidavit of the witness by whom the facts could be shown was not itself produced. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

VON SCHMIDT v. WIDBER, Treasurer.
(No. 14,935.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1893.)

APPEAL—BOND—WHEN REQUIRED.

A county officer, against whom suit has been brought, is not exempted from filing an undertaking on appeal by Code Civil Proc. § 1058, declaring that in any civil action wherein the state is plaintiff, or any state officer in his official capacity or on behalf of the state, or any county, city, or town, is plaintiff or defendant, no undertaking shall, as to such parties, be required.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by A. W. Von Schmidt against James H. Widber, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Dismissed.

John H. Durst, for appellant. Tilden & Tilden, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal from the judgment rendered in favor of respondent in the above-entitled action upon the ground that no undertaking upon appeal has ever been filed. Upon an examination of the record we find no bond upon appeal was ever filed. A county officer is not exempted from filing an undertaking on appeal by virtue of the provisions of section 1058, Code Civil Proc.¹ Let the appeal from the judgment be dismissed.

97 Cal. 476

POSACHANE WATER CO. v. STANDART
et al. (No. 18,030.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1893.)

WATER RIGHTS—CONFLICT—LEGAL TITLES—OPINION EVIDENCE—GRADE OF DITCH—REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT ON APPEAL.

1. Where acts done in diverting water from a ditch are justified by a prior right, it is immaterial, so far as the owner of the ditch is concerned, whether the strict legal title to the right is in the person claiming such right, or has been conveyed by him to a corporation.

2. The fact that there is no finding as to certain rights set up in defendants' answer will not cause the reversal of a judgment in their favor where the judgment was not based on such rights, and was sustained by other findings.

3. Opinion evidence is admissible as to the grade per mile of a ditch used in conveying water for beneficial purposes, although it may be overcome if more accurate information is obtained by the other side.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Action by the Posachane Water Company against T. W. Standart and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. D. Tupper, for appellant. Sayle & Caldwell and J. B. Campbell, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This case involves the conflicting claims of the parties to the waters of Posachane creek. It is averred in the complaint that since 1886 plaintiff and its grantors have been the owners of a certain ditch through which they have diverted and carried the waters of said creek, and used the same for beneficial purposes; and that in December, 1890, the defendants wrongfully constructed a dam near the head of said ditch, by which they completely prevented the flow of any water into the same from said creek, etc. The defendants are T. W. Standart and several other natural persons, and they aver, substantially, that said Standart constructed a ditch, and acquired the right to divert the waters of said creek through said ditch, in 1885; that said ditch and water right of said Standart were prior and superior to any right of plaintiff or its predecessors to any of the waters of said creek; and that defendants rightfully did the acts complained of in the complaint under and by virtue of said prior right of said Standart. The court found in favor of the priority of said right under which the defendants claim, and found that the ditch constructed by Standart in 1885 "was twenty-seven feet in width at the top, twenty feet in width at the bottom, and thirty inches in depth, and that by means of said ditch and canal, so constructed as aforesaid, the said T. W. Standart did, on or about the 1st day of March, 1885, appropriate and divert four hundred and twenty-seven cubic feet of water per second, flowing and to flow on a grade of seven feet to the mile." The court also found that plaintiff and its grantors had acquired and appropriated of the waters of said creek 1,000 cubic feet of water per second, but that "their said appropriation of water, and the right to the use thereof, was and is subsequent and inferior to the appropriation of the defendant T. W. Standart of four hundred and twenty-seven cubic feet of said water." Judgment was entered accordingly, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment, except that part thereof which awards plaintiff its costs of suit, and also from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

¹This section provides that in any civil action or proceeding wherein the state or the people of the state are parties plaintiff, or any state officer in his official capacity or on behalf of the state, or any county, city and county, city, or town, is a party plaintiff or defendant, no bond, written undertaking, or security can be required of the state, or the people thereof, or any officer thereof, or of any county, city and county, city, or town.

We see no errors committed by the court in arriving at the conclusion that the said T. W. Standart had a prior right to some of the waters of said creek. Appellant contends, among other things, that the court erred in holding that said Standart was the owner of said prior right, because it appeared that he had conveyed whatever right thereto which he may have had to a corporation called the Standart Ditch Company. In their original answer the defendants averred that said defendant Standart had conveyed his ditch and water right to said corporation, and that they did the acts complained of by plaintiff as officers, agents, employees, etc., of said Standart Ditch Company; but during the progress of the trial the defendants amended their answer by striking out the averment of conveyance to said corporation, thus leaving the title to the ditch and water right in said T. W. Standart. This amendment was made (and allowed by the court) upon an affidavit of said Standart that he had made a conveyance by which he intended to convey said ditch and water right to said corporation, but that he had been informed by his attorneys that said conveyance was only of the ditch, and did not carry the water right. The conveyance in question granted to the said corporation the ditch of said Standart, particularly describing it, and immediately after the description contained these words: "Together with all and singular hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof." And appellant contends that by this conveyance the water right was conveyed to the corporation as an appurtenant to the ditch. Respondents contend that such was not the effect of the deed; and the question thus presented is argued at length by counsel. Such a question might possibly be embarrassing if raised between grantor and grantee in such a conveyance, but we do not see how in the case at bar the plaintiff is at all affected by the question. The defendants defended their acts under said ditch and prior water right acquired by said T. W. Standart; and their acts were justified, whether the strict legal title to the ditch or the water right or both was in the said Standart individually or in the said corporation. With respect to this matter, therefore, we see no error committed by the court.

The defendants set up in their answer certain rights as owners or occupants of lands situated within what is called the "Posachane Sinks," and appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed because there is no finding as to that matter. But as the court does not base any of the rights of respondents upon their alleged ownership in said Posachane sinks, and entirely ignores such rights, appellant is not injured by the failure of the court to find anything upon that subject if the other facts found sustain the judgment of the court as to the priority of the water rights under which respondents claim.

Respondents asked the witness, Standart, if he knew what the grade of the ditch was at a certain point, and he answered that he thought it was about six feet to the mile, and that the usual grade of the country at that place was from six to eight feet to the mile. Appellant moved to strike out this testimony, and contends that the court erred in overruling its motion. Appellant's point as to this matter seems to be that, as the grade of the ditch may be ascertained with absolute certainty, therefore the judgment of a witness as to such grade is not admissible. This position is not tenable. The judgment of a witness as to such a matter is always admissible, subject, of course, to be overcome by the other side by more accurate information, if such can be produced.

But the finding of the court as to the amount of water diverted by the Standart ditch prior to the vesting of appellant's water rights in the creek is not sustained by the evidence. The finding that the Standart ditch, in 1885, diverted "427 cubic feet of water per second, flowing and to flow on a grade of seven feet to the mile," is rather confusing, for, if it actually diverted 427 feet, it matters not what its grade was. We suppose that the whole finding (finding 3) means that the ditch was 27 feet wide on top, 20 feet on the bottom, and 30 inches deep, and had a grade of 7 feet to the mile; and that, being of that size and grade, it carried 427 cubic feet of water per second. In the first place, there is no evidence that the ditch along its entire course was of the dimensions found by the court. The strongest evidence for respondents on the point was the testimony of T. W. Stand-art himself, and he only testified that "for a distance of a quarter to one third of a mile" the ditch was 27 feet wide "from the top of one embankment to the top of the other," that for the next half mile it was only 16 feet wide, and beyond that still smaller. Now, the general rule is that (making due allowance for evaporation, seepage, etc.) the capacity of a ditch is measured by the amount of water which it will carry from the point of diversion to the point of use, and the point of least carrying capacity fixes the general capacity of the ditch. It is true, if a ditch is intended to supply, and does supply, water for use at various points along its course, the latter part of the ditch need not be so large as the first part; but in the case at bar it does not appear that the water was intended to be used before it reached the point at which the size of the ditch was decreased, the intention apparently being to supply first the land of the homestead of Standart, which was beyond the point of contraction. We think, therefore, that Standart, under the evidence, did not acquire a prior right to the amount of water which a ditch of the dimensions described in the findings would carry. But if we assume that he did construct a ditch in 1885, which along its entire course was of the size and grade found by the court, still, under the evidence, it could not possibly have carried 427 cubic feet per second. The only definite evidence as to what amount of water a ditch of a given size and grade will carry is found in the testimony of respondent's witness Hughey, who is a civil engineer and surveyor. He testified upon the subject as follows: "Taking the width at 30 feet, the bottom at 20 feet, the depth at 3 feet, and the grade at $10\frac{1}{2}$ feet to the mile, the discharge would be in cubic feet flowing per second 426.75." A ditch with a width of 27 feet across the top, 20 feet on the bottom, with a depth of 3 feet, and a grade of $10\frac{1}{2}$ feet to the mile, the discharge of cubic feet flowing per second would be 400.44. From this testimony it is clear that such a ditch as that found by the court, to wit, 27 feet at the top, 20 feet on the bottom, 30 inches in depth, and with a grade of only 7 feet to the mile, could not possibly carry as much as 427 cubic feet of water per second. The finding of the court, therefore, as to the amount of water to which respondents had a right prior and superior to that of appellant is clearly erroneous, and for this reason the judgment must be reversed.

Counsel for respondents suggest that if the amount of water found by the court to be embraced by the prior right of respondents be too large, this court might modify the judgment by reducing that amount. But by that course this court would be making a finding for the court below, which it cannot do. And the different rights and contentions of the parties are so mixed and interlaced in the findings and judgment that we do not see how there could be a partial approval of the findings or affirmance of the judgment. The entire rights of the parties can be better readjusted and established by a retrial of the whole case. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

97 Cal. 496

GRANT v. BERONIO. (No. 19,078.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—DECREE—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

1. Where defendant agrees to convey to plaintiff certain land, free of incumbrances, upon payment of the price, and, upon tender of such price, refuses to execute a conveyance, the court, in an action for specific performance, upon ascertaining the amount of such incumbrances, and that they can be discharged by mere payment thereof, may order defendant to execute a conveyance to plaintiff, may cause the purchase money to be brought into court, and may direct its payment to the holders of the incumbrances, instead of to defendant, even though such holders are not before the court; it appearing that the incumbrances cover the whole amount of the purchase money.

2. Where defendant agreed to convey to plaintiff certain land upon the payment of the balance of the purchase price, a provision in the agreement that, in case of failure to make the conveyance, the money paid at the making of the agreement was to be returned to plaintiff, does not give defendant the option of conveying or not.

3. Where defendant agrees to convey to plaintiff certain land, which agreement recites the receipt of $1,000, the acceptance by defendant of $750 in lieu of the $1,000 is not inconsistent with or contradictory to the acknowledgment of the receipt of the $1,000, it appearing that the difference between the sum for commissions for the sale of the premises agreed upon between defendant and the broker who effected the sale.

4. Where defendant agrees to convey to plaintiff certain lands free of incumbrances, and plaintiff, in part payment, gives defendant an order payable at the delivery of the deed, the court, in an action for specific performance, may direct the payment of this order to the discharge of the incumbrances upon the land.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; W. B. Cope, Judge.

Action by one Grant against one Beronio for the specific performance of an agreement to convey land. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Wilde, for appellant. E. S. Hall and J. Hamer, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action for specific performance. The plaintiff had judgment in the court below, and the defendant has appealed upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions. The court finds that the defendant made an agreement with the plaintiff for the sale and conveyance to him of a parcel of land, of which he was the owner, in the town of San Buenaventura, for the sum of $5,500, of which he acknowledged in the agreement that he had received $1,000, and the remaining $4,500 was to be paid on delivery of a deed free of incumbrances within 60 days thereafter; and the defendant agreed that, upon receiving such payment, he would execute to the plaintiff a good and sufficient deed conveying the title to said premises. The agreement contained the clause: "In case failure to make deed, money paid to be returned." On the same day with the execution of the agreement, the plaintiff gave to the defendant an order upon certain bankers in San Buenaventura for the sum of $725, to be paid when he should deliver the deed for said premises, which the court finds was accepted by him in lieu of the cash payment of $1,000 provided by the agreement, the difference between the two sums being for certain commissions for the sale of the premises agreed upon between the defendant and the broker who had effected the sale. At the date of the execution of the agreement there were two mortgages upon the property that had been executed by the defendant, but the debts secured thereby were mature and payable. The court finds that the provision in the agreement giving 60 days to complete the transaction was to enable the defendant to procure a release of the premises from the mortgage liens, and that although those liens exceeded in amount the purchase price of the property, yet there was more than enough to satisfy the first mortgage, and that the holder of the second mortgage was willing to accept the sum that would remain out of the purchase money after deducting certain items therefrom to which the plaintiff is entitled, and to release the property therefrom; and that prior to the expiration of the 60 days, and ever since, the defendant had been able out of said purchase money to procure said releases, and convey the premises in accordance with the terms of the sale. On the day before the expiration of the 60 days the plaintiff tendered to the defendant the said sum of $4,500, together with a deed for the premises prepared for execution, and demanded of him that he accept the money and execute the deed, and, upon the defendant's refusing to comply with said demand, this action was brought. The court rendered judgment that plaintiff should pay the $4,500 to a commissioner appointed by it for that purpose; and that the defendant should deliver to the said commissioner his deed to the plaintiff conveying the premises; and that the said commissioner, out of the moneys received by him, should pay off the first mortgage lien thereon, and certain other charges in favor of the plaintiff, and pay the remaining moneys to the holder of the second mortgage, and cause the said mortgage to be discharged of record.

In an action for the specific performance of an agreement to convey land, a court of equity has power by its decree, as against the parties who are before it, to enforce all the terms of the agreement. If the vendor's agreement is that his conveyance shall transfer the title free of incumbrances, the court can direct the application of the purchase money to the satisfaction of those incumbrances, and for that purpose can cause the money to be brought into court and disbursed under its direction. If the holders of those incumbrances are before the court, they will be bound by the direction of the court, and their claims would be satisfied by a satisfaction of the judgment. If the amount of the incumbrances is ascertained, and the court finds that the liens therefor can be discharged by mere payment thereof, it can direct that the payment be made directly to the holders of the incumbrances, even though they be not before the court, instead of to the vendor. So long as the vendor incurs no liability, and is freed from any personal claim for the amount of the incumbrances, he will not be heard to object to the application of the purchase money for the purpose of making good his agreement with the vendee. The agreement between the parties hereto was an unconditional contract on the part of the defendant to convey the land to the plaintiff upon his complying with its terms. The provision therein that, in case of failure to make the deed, the money was to be returned, was for the benefit of the purchaser alone, and did not give to the vendor the option of conveying the lot or not, as he might choose. He could not refuse to make the deed, and thus, by his own act, against the will of the purchaser, relieve himself of his obligation to convey. Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 27 Pac. Rep. 429. Nor was the right to receive the money that he had paid the only right which the purchaser acquired by the contract. He had also the right to an enforcement of the vendor's agreement to make him a conveyance of the land, and, if he was willing to accept a conveyance in satisfaction of that obligation, it was not for the vendor to object that there were incumbrances upon the land or defects in the title.

The acceptance by the defendant of the order for $725, in lieu of the cash payment of $1,000, may be regarded as a contemporaneous agreement between the parties in modification of the price to be received for the conveyance, and it is not inconsistent with or contradictory to the acknowledgment in the agreement that $1,000 of the purchase price had been received by the defendant. See McCroskey v. Ladd, 96 Cal. 458, 31 Pac. Rep. 558. The defendant cannot object to the application of the money to be obtained upon this order in satisfaction of the liens upon the land which he had created. He accepted the order in lieu of the cash payment of $1,000, and is bound by its terms. As the order is in terms made payable when he should deliver a deed which should convey the land free of all incumbrances, he cannot now object to the direction of the court that it be so applied that the deed which he makes shall be in compliance with his agreement. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 429

KENNEDY, City Treasurer, v. MILLER,
County Treasurer, et al. (No. 19,032.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1893.)

SCHOOL FUND—CUSTODY—CITY DISTRICTS.

Const. art. 9, directs the establishment by the legislature of a common-school system, and a fund to be inviolably appropriated to its support. Pol. Code, § 1576, declares that every city forms a school district, unless subdivided, etc. Section 1616 declares that boards of education shall be elected in cities under the provisions of the laws governing such cities, and that their powers and duties shall be as prescribed in such laws, except as otherwise provided. Section 1617 confers substantially the same powers and duties on boards of education as on the trustees of districts, among which is the duty to pay all moneys collected for school purposes into the county treasury, to be placed to the credit of the special fund of their district. Section 1532 requires the state superintendent to apportion the school money to the several counties, and to draw his order on the comptroller, in favor of each county treasurer, for the moneys appropriated to the county. Section 1543 requires the county superintendent to apportion the school moneys of the county to each district, and, on the order of the board of trustees or board of education, to draw his requisition on the county auditor for all necessary expenses against the school fund of any city or district, and on the receipt of such requisition the auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer. Sections 1817-1820, for the purpose of raising money additional to that provided by the state fund, directs the county superintendent to furnish the supervisors, each year, an estimate of the amount needed, which is to be levied uniformly on all property in the county, and paid out of the county treasury. Held, that all moneys apportioned from the school fund, as well as those raised by a levy on the taxable property of a city, are to remain in the county treasury until withdrawn under requisition of the county superintendent, and are not subject to call by the city for deposit in the city treasury.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action by Kennedy, city treasurer of the city of San Diego, against Miller and another, as county treasurer and auditor, to obtain custody of funds apportioned for school purposes. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Fuller, for appellant. Johnston & Jones and Parrish, Mossholder & Lewis, (J. E. Deakin, of counsel,) for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The charter of the city of San Diego was framed by a board of freeholders chosen therefor, and having been adopted by the electors of the city, and approved by both houses of the legislature, (St. 1889, p. 643,) went into effect on the first Monday of May, 1889. Article 7 of the charter is entitled "Educational Department," and provides for a board of education, with certain designated powers and duties. Section 6 of this article provides for a public school fund of the city, to consist of "all moneys received from the city, county, and state school funds, of all moneys arising from taxes which shall be levied by the common council for school purposes," and certain other moneys; and further provides that "all moneys of this fund shall be deposited with the city treasurer, and the same shall be drawn only by a warrant signed by the president and clerk of the board, and duly audited by the auditor." Section 16 requires that the board of education "shall report to the common council, before the annual tax levy be made, the amount necessary to carry on the public schools for the next school year, and thereupon the common council shall levy a rate of tax for school purposes, * * * and such tax shall be in addition to all other amounts levied for city purposes." The plaintiff herein is the city treasurer of the city of San Diego, and alleges that certain moneys in the custody of the county treasurer have been apportioned by the county superintendent of schools to the school district of the city of San Diego, a portion of which were derived from the public school fund, and a portion from a tax upon the taxable property of the city of San Diego levied by the board of supervisors, in pursuance of an estimate made by the city board of education; and he seeks by this proceeding to compel the defendants, as auditor and treasurer of the county of San Diego, to deposit these moneys with him, as the treasurer of the city of San Diego.

Article 9 of the constitution makes education, and the management and control of the public schools, a matter of state care and supervision. The election of a state superintendent of public instruction, and of a county superintendent of schools for each county, is therein authorized; and a public fund for the support of schools is provided, which, it is declared in section 4, "shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the state," and, in section 6, that the revenue from this fund, as well as from the state school tax, "shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools;" and in section 8 it is further declared that no public money "shall ever be appropriated for the support of any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools." The legislature is directed, in section 5, to provide for "a system of common schools;" and section 6 declares that "the public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such other [of certain designated] schools as may be established by the legislature, or by municipal or district authority." The term "system," itself, imports a unity of purpose, as well as an entirety of operation; and the direction to the legislature to provide "a" system of common schools means one system, which shall be applicable to all the common schools within the state. In pursuance of this direction the legislature has enacted chapter 3, tit. 3, pt. 3, of the Political Code, wherein the system outlined in the constitution is amplified, and provision made for the organization of school districts, and the election of the officers thereof, as well as of the officers authorized by the constitution, and defining their powers and duties, and also providing for the proper application of the revenue from the state school fund, and for the raising of additional money, by taxation, for the support of the common schools.

Section 1576 of the Political Code declares that "every county, city, or incorporated town, unless subdivided by the legislative authority thereof, forms a school district." By virtue of this legislative authority, each school district becomes a public corporation. (Estate of Bulmer, 59 Cal. 131; Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. Rep. 1067;) and its functions and powers as such corporation are those which are given to it by the act under which it is created. The legislative declaration that every incorporated city is a school district does not import into the organization of the school district any of the provisions of the city charter, or limit the powers and functions which, as a school district, it has, by virtue of the Political Code. The city is a corporation distinct from that of the school district, even though both are designated by the same name, and embrace the same territory. The one derives its authority directly from the legislature, through the general law providing for the establishment of schools throughout the state, while the authority of the other is found in the charter under which it is organized; and, even though the charter may purport to define the powers and duties of its municipal officers in reference to the public schools in the same language as has the legislature in the Political Code, yet these powers and duties are referable to the legislative authority, and not to the charter. The constitution and laws of this state recognize three classes of cities: Those which are organized under the provisions of the general law authorizing municipal incorporations; those whose charters have been framed by a board of freeholders chosen for that purpose by the city itself; and those which were organized prior to the adoption of the constitution, but have not chosen to change their form of organization. The legislature is, by the constitution, not only prohibited from creating a municipal corporation by special law, but it has also been prohibited from passing any local or special laws with reference to the powers or duties of municipal officers, or of any matter relating to municipal government. In all matters, however, which may affect the state at large, or whenever any legislation is, in its judgment, appropriate for all parts of the state, it possesses all the legislative power of the state that has not been specifically denied to it; and, upon whatever subjects its power to pass a general law exists, such general law must be the controlling rule of action in all parts of the state, and over all its citizens. The constitution does not purport, of itself, to affect the organization of any city which had been previously incorporated, or to give to the legislature any power to affect its organization, except with its consent; but it gives to the legislature the right to pass general laws which shall be applicable to all cities within the state, by declaring (article 11, § 6) that "cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to, and controlled by, general laws."

Section 1616 of the Political Code declares that "boards of education are elected in cities under the provisions of the laws governing such cities, and their powers and duties are as prescribed in such laws, except as otherwise in this chapter provided;" and, in the municipal government act, provision has been made for boards of education in cities that may be organized under that act. By the expression, "the laws governing such cities," is meant the charter of the city, or the power under which the city acts and exercises its authority, whether such power be such as was originally conferred by special charter prior to the adoption of the present constitution, or such as has been conferred by the general law providing for the organization of cities, and accepted by the city, or such as is embraced in a charter framed by freeholders of its own selection, and ratified by the legislature. The "boards of education" thus provided for in cities is but another term for the "boards of trustees," to which the control of school districts has been given; and by section 1617 the same powers are conferred upon each, except in certain enumerated instances. It is unnecessary to determine whether it is competent for the legislature to delegate to these boards of education any of the powers which the constitution has authorized it to exercise in providing for a system of common schools, as the rights of neither party herein depend upon the exercise of such power; but conceding that, by virtue of this section of the Political Code, the charter under which a city is organized may prescribe the powers and duties of a board of education, yet the "powers and duties" authorized by section 1616 are powers and duties of the same general character as those which are enumerated in section 1617, and which, except in certain enumerated particular, are conferred alike upon boards of education and boards of trustees. The powers and duties of the board of education in a city cannot trench upon the system that the legislature has provided for the entire state, since the charter is limited in its operation by any general law that may be passed by the legislature, and in addition thereto such powers and duties are, by the terms of the section in which they are authorized to be given, limited by the provisions of the Political Code. One of these is found in the second subdivision of section 1617, by which it is made the duty, not only of the trustees of school districts, but also of boards of education in cities, "to pay all moneys collected by them, from any source whatever, for school purposes, into the county treasury, to be placed to the credit of the special fund of their district." These powers and duties relate to the management and control of the schools, for the purposes of education, and do not pertain to the custody or disbursement of the school moneys. Section 1532 of the Political Code requires the state superintendent of public instruction to apportion the school money to the several counties, and, when he has so apportioned it, to draw his order on the comptroller, "in favor of each county treasurer," for the moneys appropriated to that county; and section 1543 requires the county superintendent of schools to apportion the school moneys of the county to each school district within the county, and, on the order of the board of trustees or board of education, "to draw his requisition upon the county auditor for all necessary expenses against the school fund of any city, town, or district," and "upon the receipt of such requisition the auditor shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer, in favor of the parties, for the amount stated in such requisition." The money is to remain with the county treasurer until it is paid out by him upon the receipt of such requisition. The school moneys never lose their character of public moneys belonging to the state, and are to remain under the control of its officers for the purposes for which they have been appropriated. The fact that they have been apportioned to the several school districts does not give to those districts any proprietary right therein, or any right to their custody; but the districts, through their authorized agents, have the right merely to contract for their proper disbursement within the purposes authorized by law. If any portion of the moneys thus apportioned is not used during the school year, it is made, by section 1621, the duty of the county superintendent to reapportion the balance as other moneys are apportioned.

Section 1617 makes it the duty of the boards of education in cities to pay all moneys collected by them, from any source whatever, for school purposes, into the county treasury. As these boards do not collect the money which the superintendent apportions to the district, this provision must have reference to other moneys; but, as it requires them to pay all moneys collected from any source into the county treasury, it is corroborative of the proposition that, as a school district, the city is not an independent organization, but is correlated to the other school districts in the county, as a part of the system of public schools provided for by the legislature. For the purpose of raising money additional to that provided for from the state school fund, section 1817 directs the county superintendent to furnish to the supervisors, each year, an estimate of the amount needed for the ensuing year; and section 1818 requires the supervisors of each county having less than 100,000 inhabitants to levy a tax known as the "County School Tax," which, as all other county school taxes, must, by section 3714, be at a uniform rate, upon all taxable property within the county, and, by section 1820, must be paid into the county treasury. For certain special purposes, the supervisors are authorized to levy an additional tax within a school district, if the district has voted therefor; but, with this exception, the school tax must be uniform throughout the county. A board of education within a city has only the same right to make a requisition upon the board of supervisors to levy a tax for school purposes upon the taxable property within the city that has the board of trustees within any other school district in the county; and with the exception of a tax authorized by a vote of the district under the provisions of sections 1830-1837 of the Political Code, for the expenditure of certain moneys within that district, the supervisors are not authorized to levy any tax for school purposes that shall not be uniform upon all the taxable property within the county. Section 1837 requires that this money, when collected, shall be paid into the county treasury for the use of the district in which the tax was voted, and there is no provision of law authorizing the county treasurer to pay out any of the moneys held by him for the account or to the credit of a school district, except in the manner provided by section 1543.

The provision in the charter of the city of San Diego that all moneys belonging to the school fund of the city shall be deposited with the city treasurer cannot, as we have seen, supersede the requirements of the Political Code, that all moneys pertaining to the public school system shall be paid into the county treasury. Aside from the fact that this provision in the charter purports, in terms, to apply only to those taxes levied by the common council, and not to those levied by the board of supervisors, a consideration of the functions of the city government relative to the county government will show that the provisions of the charter cannot have the effect contended for by the appellant. The constitution has authorized the city to frame this charter "for its own government," and this limitation implies that its authority is restricted to its own officers, and the inhabitants within its territory, and that it cannot extend the authority of its officers to matters outside of its territory, or to subjects that have been placed by the constitution exclusively within the control of the legislature, or that have been confided by the legislature to the management of other officials. The county treasurer and the county auditor are elected by the county at large, and constitute a portion of the political government of the state, with duties and powers prescribed by the legislature, and, in their official positions, act for the welfare of the state; but if it should be held that the inhabitants of a city can, by means of a charter framed by themselves, prescribe the powers and duties of these officers, the charter of that city would cease to be a charter "for its own government," and we might have the spectacle of different cities within the same county prescribing different, and perhaps contradictory, duties for officers who had not been chosen by them, but had been elected by different constituencies under the general law of the state, and who were accountable for their acts to the citizens by whom they had been elected. We hold, therefore, that the appellant is not entitled to the custody of the moneys referred to in his petition, and the judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

(97 Cal. 442)

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. DAUER et al.
(No. 19,063.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1893.)

SCHOOLS—AUTHORITY OF CITY BOARD—SALARY OF SUPERINTENDENT.

A city cannot enjoin the payment of a warrant drawn on account of the city school district against the county treasurer for an amount fixed by the board of education as salary of the city superintendent, since the city and city school district are distinct corporations, and since, under Pol. Code, § 1793, as amended, (St. 1891, p. 164,) authorizing the board of education to elect a superintendent, and to fix the salary of its employees, the matter of the superintendent's salary is under the control of the board.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action for injunction by the city of San Diego against C. R. Dauer and others. Order dissolving a preliminary injunction. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William H. Fuller, for appellant. Parrish, Mossholder & Lewis and Johnstone Jones, (J. E. Deakin, of counsel,) for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The appellant sought by this action to enjoin the respondent Dauer, as treasurer of the county of San Diego, from paying a warrant drawn upon him in favor of the respondent De Burn for his salary as superintendent of public schools of the city of San Diego. By the charter of the city of San Diego, the salary of the superintendent of schools was originally fixed at $1,500 a year; and chapter 9 of the charter directs the common council to readjust and fix anew, in the month of January, 1891, and every four years thereafter, the amount of all official salaries provided for in the chapter. In pursuance of this direction, the common council, on the 31st day of January, 1891, passed an ordinance fixing the salary of the superintendent of schools at $900 a year. The respondent De Burn was elected superintendent of the public schools of the city of San Diego on the 4th day of May, 1891, and on December 17, 1891, the board of education of that city passed a resolution fixing his salary at $125 per month, to take effect January 1, 1892. Thereafter the president and clerk of the board of education gave an order on the county superintendent of schools, directing him to draw a requisition on the county auditor, against the county school fund, in favor of De Burn, for $125, as his salary for the month of January, 1892; and, upon the presentation thereof to the county superintendent, he gave to De Burn his requisition upon the county auditor, and upon its receipt the county auditor drew his warrant upon the county treasurer, in favor of De Burn, for its payment. This action was brought by the plaintiff to restrain the county treasurer from paying the warrant, and also to restrain the president and clerk of the board of education from thereafter drawing any similar orders. A preliminary injunction, that had been granted by the judge upon the complaint of the plaintiff, was dissolved, upon the motion of the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed from the order dissolving that injunction.

In Kennedy v. Miller, (Cal., No. 19,032,) 32 Pac. Rep. 558, we have held that the city of San Diego is a corporation distinct from the corporation known as the "School District of the City of San Diego," and that the rights and obligations of the school-district corporation are to be determined by the provisions of the Political Code, and not by those of the charter of the city of San Diego, and also that the powers and duties of boards of education in cities are the same as those of boards of trustees in other school districts. We also held in that case that all the moneys which are apportioned from the school fund, as well as those which are raised by means of a tax for school purposes, levied by the board of supervisors, are to be paid into the county treasury, and to remain there until they are paid out upon a warrant drawn by the county auditor under a requisition from the county superintendent of schools. Section 1793 of the Political Code, as amended in 1891, (St. 1891, p. 164,) authorizes the board of education of a city to elect a city superintendent of schools, and also to fix the salary of its employees. Assuming, therefore, that the superintendent of schools of the city of San Diego is an employee of the board of education of that city, whose functions pertain to the management of the public schools organized within the school district of the city of San Diego under the system established by the legislature, the fixing of his salary would pertain to the board of education, and not to the common council, and such salary would be payable out of the moneys held in the county treasury for the account of the school district of the city of San Diego. These moneys are in the treasury to the credit of the school district, and the city of San Diego, as a municipal corporation, has no interest therein. It therefore appeared upon the face of the complaint that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction sought for, and the order dissolving the same is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 456

THOMAS v. PARKER et al. (No. 14,890.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1893.)

MORTGAGE BY ADMINISTRATOR—RECITALS—ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE—GUARDIAN FOR MINORS.

1. Where a mortgage by an administrator of his intestate's land, after referring to the order of the court authorizing its execution, recited that "now, therefore, the said mortgagor, pursuant to the order last aforesaid, * * * mortgages to the mortgagee, * * *" such recital, with other similar recitals, sufficiently showed that the mortgage was executed by the mortgagor as administrator in pursuance of law and the court's order, and not in a personal capacity; Code Civil Proc. §§ 1577, 1578, authorizing the execution of mortgages by administrators under proper order of court.

2. Code Civil Proc. § 1578, subd. 3, provides that the order to show cause required to be issued before an administrator can mortgage his decedent's real estate must be served on all parties interested either in person or by publication. Held, where the order was properly served by publication, that it was sufficient even though it appeared from the order that there were certain infant defendants under the age of 14 years.

3. Code Civil Proc. §§ 1577, 1578, under which administrators are authorized to mortgage an intestate's real estate, does not require the appointment of a guardian ad litem for infants, and provides that no irregularity in the proceedings shall invalidate the mortgage given in pursuance thereof. Held, where the court had jurisdiction to make the order for the execution of a mortgage by an administrator, that the nonappointment of a guardian for minors was an "irregularity," and did not invalidate the mortgage.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Henry Thomas against J. L. Parker, administrator, and others, to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. W. Ready and A. W. Blair, for appellants. James A. Thomas and D. P. Hatch, for respondent.

PERCURIAM. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage executed in favor of the plaintiff by the administrator of Mary E. Parker, deceased. The purpose for which the mortgage was given seems to have been to borrow money with which to pay certain debts of the decedent contracted in her lifetime, and to pay expenses of administration, family allowance, etc. The defendants are the husband, who is also the administrator of Mrs. Parker's estate, and her minor children. Demurrers were filed to the complaint, and overruled. The defendants then answered the complaint, and upon evidence given in the premises, findings being waived, the trial court entered a decree of foreclosure in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. From the judgment thus made, this appeal is taken on the judgment roll and bill of exceptions.

One of the grounds upon which a reversal of the judgment is demanded is that the petition which was filed by the administrator when seeking to obtain the order of the probate court to mortgage the real estate of his decedent was insufficient, and did not therefore give that court jurisdiction to make the order. The law under which this proceeding can be had is to be found in the Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 1577, 1578. A critical examination of the petition and of the language of the statute makes it clear that the petition is sufficient.

The further contention of appellants that the mortgage sought to be foreclosed was not executed by J. L. Parker in his character as administrator of the estate of Mary E. Parker, and is therefore only a personal mortgage of said Parker, is clearly without merit. The mortgage, after referring to the order of the superior court authorizing its execution, proceeds to recite: "Now, therefore, the said mortgagor, pursuant to the order last aforesaid, * * * mortgages to the mortgagee," etc. This, with the other recitals, is sufficient to show that the mortgage was intended as a mortgage of property belonging to the estate of which the mortgagor was administrator, and was executed by him in his character as administrator, in pursuance of law and the order of the superior court directing its execution.

It is further argued that the order to show cause required by the second subdivision of section 1578 of the Code of Civil Procedure is insufficient, because it does not comply with the provisions of that subdivision, and for the further reason "that the same does not direct or require the personal services thereof to be made upon the infant defendants herein and minor heirs in said proceedings, it appearing therein that each and all of them were under the age of fourteen years." The court refused, on the objection of the defendants, to rule out the order above adverted to and offered in evidence. The objection as made is general, with the exception of the matter last specified, with reference to the want of personal service on the minors, and therefore the trial court had only that matter called to its attention in a proper way. In relation to this objection it is sufficient to say that subdivision 3 of section 1578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the order to show cause was made, provides that service of such order may be made personally, "or it may be published for five successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation published in the county;" and the order was so published, and in accordance with the directions contained in such order. There is therefore nothing in the exception taken. The appellant further claims that, in order to validate the proceedings, it was necessary for a guardian ad litem to be appointed to represent the minors. The act under which this proceeding is taken does not require any guardian ad litem to be appointed, and provides that, if the court has jurisdiction to administer the estate of the decedent, (about which there is no question here,) it has jurisdiction to make the order for the mortgage; and it further provides that "no irregularity in the proceedings shall impair or invalidate the same or the mortgage given in pursuance thereof," etc. Code Civil Proc. § 1578, subd. 6. The non-appointment of the guardian ad litem is an irregularity, (Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 600, 2 Pac. Rep. 418;) hence there is no merit in the point last made.

Judgment affirmed.

97 Cal. 490

ELDER v. KUTNER et al. (No. 18,027.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT—DAMAGES—LIABILITY OF SURETIES—ACTION ON BOND—PLEADING.

1. Under Civil Code, § 3300, providing that for the breach of an obligation arising from contract the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all detriment "proximately" caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom, sureties on an attachment bond are not liable in damages to the person whose land is attached by reason of the impairment of his credit and his inability to sell such land because of the attachment lien thereon, in that such damages are not the "proximate," but the "remote," result of the attachment.

2. The fact that an attachment was sued out maliciously does not affect the liability for damages of the sureties on the bond, since in an action against them the questions of "motive" and "probable cause" are immaterial.

3. A complaint in an action against the sureties on an undertaking in attachment to recover attorney's fees paid out in the attachment, which fails to state that plaintiff has actually paid such fees, is demurrable.

4. Where, on striking out one paragraph of a complaint, sufficient facts remain to constitute a cause of action, a demurrer will not lie thereto.

Commissioners' decision. Department

2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by John Elder against A. Kutner and another. There was judgment for defendants on demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. P. Meux, for appellant. E. S. Heller and G. W. Jones, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This action was brought in the superior court of the county of Fresno to recover damages against the respondents, as sureties upon an undertaking in an attachment suit against the plaintiff and appellant here, which attachment suit was dismissed. The complaint contains two counts. In the first, plaintiff, after the usual averments in reference to the suing out and levy of the attachment upon his land at Fresno, as a predicate for the recovery of damages, alleges as follows, in paragraph 9: "That between the 21st day of January, 1891, and the 27th day of August, 1891, the plaintiff had need of a large sum of money for his immediate use; desired, had an opportunity, and was able to mortgage his said premises for the purpose of raising money for his immediate use and great pressing needs; and had opportunity of selling his said premises, but was not able to mortgage or sell the same on account of said attachment having been levied and remaining unsatisfied as aforesaid, and creating a cloud upon plaintiff's title to his said premises. That the plaintiff had to sacrifice other property—horses, mules, and stock—on his said premises, at greatly reduced and inadequate prices, for the purposes of meeting his immediate necessities and raising money. That by reason of his not being able to mortgage or sell his said premises and having to sell the horses, mules, and stock on his said premises, the plaintiff has been greatly damaged, to wit, in the sum of four hundred ($400) dollars, the amount of said undertaking." It is further averred that the attachment was "wrongfully and unlawfully and maliciously sued out," and that the plaintiff herein "did not owe any portion of the indebtedness sued on in said action." The second count of the complaint is based upon plaintiff's supposed right to recover attorneys' fees in the attachment suit; and the only portion thereof necessary to the points made is to the effect that plaintiff was put to great expense in defending that action, "and engaged an attorney to represent him therein, and incurred attorneys' fees, to wit, the sum of one hundred dollars." Defendants' attorneys demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and moved to strike out that portion of the first count quoted herein in reference to damages sustained by reason of the lien of the attachment upon the land. The motion to strike out was granted, and the demurrer to the complaint sustained, with leave for plaintiff to amend, upon a failure to do which, final judgment for costs was entered against him. The appeal is from such judgment.

The first question presented for determination is as to the propriety of the action of the court below in striking out paragraph 9 of plaintiff's complaint, hereinbefore quoted. An undertaking given upon the issuing of a writ of attachment, under our statute, is a contract,—a contract to indemnify the defendant for all costs that may be awarded to him, and all damages which he may sustain by reason of the attachment in the event of his recovering judgment. An action upon such undertaking being upon contract, the measure of damages "is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Civil Code, § 3300. The liability of the defendants arises under their contract, and is limited by its terms and conditions. McDonald v. Fett, 49 Cal. 354. By that contract they did not undertake to become liable for the remote and possible consequences which in some contingency might follow, but for the proximate consequences naturally and ordinarily resulting from the effect of the writ. The impairment of plaintiff's credit, his inability to sell the land levied upon or to contract a loan upon the security of such land, was not a proximate, but a remote, consequence of the attachment. The attaching creditor did not deprive plaintiff of the possession or use of his land, did not commit waste thereon, or do or cause any act to be done beyond levying upon the land in the manner prescribed by the statute for the levy of attachments upon real property. In Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. 702, it was said: "Nothing can be clearer, both on principle and authority, than the doctrine that the liability of a surety is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of his contract." Roe v. Thomas, 19 Mo. 613. The plaintiff, it is true, avers that his property was maliciously attached. If this was true, he could maintain an action on the case against his attaching creditors, in which the injury he complains of here could be redressed, provided, always, there was no probable cause for issuing the writ. Reidhar v. Berger, 8 B. Mon. 160. In an action against the sureties on the undertaking, however, the questions of motive and probable cause cut no figure. In Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 410, it was held, in an action on a bond given upon suing out an attachment against the property of a debtor who was a merchant, where the sheriff had levied upon no property except real estate, and the debtor had never been disturbed or molested in his possession, (1) that evidence as to the effect of an attachment upon the credit and reputation of merchants ought not to have been admitted, on the ground that damages resulting therefrom were too remote and contingent; (2) that evidence of depreciation of value of the real estate attached was not admissible. The case of Ah Thae v. Quan, 3 Cal. 216, overrules the case of Heath v. Lent to the extent of holding that fees paid to counsel to procure the dissolution of an injunction was a direct loss, consequent upon the wrongful issuing of an injunction, for which a recovery could be had upon the bond. Prader v. Grim, 13 Cal. 586, and later cases are to the same effect. There is a marked distinction between cases in which personal property is attached and taken into possession by the sheriff, as it must be to constitute a valid lien, and those in which real estate is taken under a like writ; and, when we say the damages sought to be recovered in that portion of the complaint stricken out are too remote for recovery on the bond, we must be understood as applying the remark to cases involving real estate only. We think there was no error in the order of the court striking out the portion of the complaint in question.

2. As to the order sustaining the demurrer. The second count of the complaint failed to state a cause of action. It has been repeatedly held by this court that counsel fees in a proper case for their recovery cannot be recovered until they have been actually paid. Wilson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 169; Prader v. Grimm, 28 Cal. 11. The fact of payment, being essential to a recovery, should be averred. We search the complaint in vain for any such allegation. The averment is that plaintiff "engaged an attorney to represent him therein, and incurred attorneys' fees, to wit, the sum of one hundred dollars." This, at most, is but an assertion that he incurred a liability. The damage accrues from the payment, and not from incurring the liability so to do. The demurrer to the first count of the complaint should have been overruled. Strike out the ninth paragraph, and we still have a consecutive and orderly statement of a set of facts which entitles the plaintiff to recover nominal damages. For this reason we recommend that the judgment be reversed, and the court below directed to overrule the demurrer to the first cause of action in plaintiff's complaint, with leave to defendants to answer the same.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to overrule the demurrer to the first cause of action in plaintiff's complaint, with leave to defendants to answer the same.

97 Cal. 482

BLACK v CLASBY, Constable, et al. (No. 18,066.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

CONVERSION—NECESSITY OF DEMAND.

Where a constable, under a writ of attachment against one person, seizes the goods of another, which at the time of the seizure are in the custody of a person other than the defendant in the writ, he becomes a trespasser ab initio, and no previous demand is necessary to authorize a recovery therefor; and if this rule is changed by the amendments taking effect May 2, 1891, to sections 549 and 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so that a written claim is necessary, this does not apply where the property was seized by the officer April 16, 1891, on which day the right of action for the conversion was complete.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; A. E. Bridgford, Judge.

Action by Mary B. Black against John Clasby, constable, and others, for the alleged conversion of personal property. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. M. Albery and K. Albery, for appellants. B. F. Howard, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendant Clasby was the constable of the first judicial township in the county of Colusa, and as such officer seized and took into his possession, under a writ of attachment issued out of the justice's court for that township, in the action of W. W. Ludy vs. Henry B. Black, certain personal property belonging to the plaintiff. At the time of its seizure a portion of the property was in the possession of the plaintiff, and another portion in the possession of one Spencer, who was holding it as bailee for the plaintiff, but none of it was in possession of the defendant in the writ. A few days after its seizure, the plaintiff orally demanded the property of the constable, and, upon his refusal to surrender it, brought this action for the value of the property alleged to have been converted, against him and the two other defendants, who were sureties upon his official bond. Judgment was rendered in her favor, and the defendants have appealed therefrom.

When the sheriff, under a writ of attachment or of execution against one person, seizes the goods of another, which at the time of seizure are in the custody either of the owner or of a person other than the defendant in the writ, he is a trespasser ab initio, and no previous demand is necessary to authorize a recovery therefor. Boulware v. Craddock, 30 Cal. 190; Murfree, Sher. §§ 270, 270a. The appellants claim that by the amendments of 1891 to sections 549 and 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure (St. 1891, p. 20) this rule has been changed, and that under the present provisions of these sections the judgment herein cannot be sustained, for the reason that the plaintiff did not present to the constable a written claim for the property in the form therein designated. We do not find it necessary, however, to pass upon the effect of these amendments, or to construe the sections as amended, as the present case must be determined without regard to them. The property of the plaintiff herein was seized by the officer on the 16th of April, 1891, and the plaintiff's right of action for its conversion was complete on that day, and was not taken away or impaired by the foregoing amendments, as these did not take effect till May 2, 1891. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 838)

CONLON v. GARDNER et al. (No. 18,008.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

CHANGE OF VENUE—REVIEW.

Where the evidence on the hearing of a motion for change of venue on the ground of change of residence is conflicting as to whether the residence had actually been changed when the action was commenced, the discretion of the trial court in denying the motion will not be reviewed on appeal.

Commissioners' decision: Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Amador county; C. B. Armstrong, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by Thomas Conlon against Eli Gardner and Eleanor T. Gardner. From an order denying their motion for a change of venue, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Eagon & Rust, for appellants. Camlinetti & McGee, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff commenced this action to recover from the defendants the sum of $3,000, alleged to be due him from them as commissions for the sale of certain mining property situate in the county of Amador. The complaint was filed in the superior court of Amador county on September 5, 1891, and the summons was duly served on defendants in that county on the 15th of the same month. In due time defendants demurred to the complaint, filed an affidavit of merits, and an affidavit that they were at the time of the commencement of the action, and were then, and had been ever since the — day of June, 1891, residents of and actually residing in the county of Alameda, and demanded that the place of trial of the action be changed to the county of Alameda. The plaintiff contested the application for a change of venue, and, when the motion came on to be heard, a large number of additional affidavits were filed and read on both sides. The court below denied the motion, and the defendants appeal from the order.

The plaintiff's affidavits were positive to the effect that defendants had resided in Amador county for a good many years, and continued to reside there until September 25, 1891. The defendants' affidavits, on the other hand, were positive to the effect that defendants left Amador county and became permanent residents of Alameda county on July 18, 1891, and that they thereafter had only gone back to the former county two or three times on business. It was, however, admitted that their household furniture and some of their children remained in their old home until September 25th. The question, then, presented for decision by the trial court was one of fact, viz. where did defendants actually reside on September 5th, the date of the commencement of the action? The evidence upon this question was clearly and squarely conflicting, and it has been held that in such a case an order like that appealed from here will not be disturbed on appeal. Creditors v. Welch, 55 Cal. 469; Hastings v. Keller, 69 Cal. 606, 11 Pac. Rep. 218. And if, as said in Tuller v. Arnold, 93 Cal. 168, 28 Pac. Rep. 863, this rule does not apply where the evidence is all documentary, still "this court will not interfere with the discretion of the trial court, except where it can plainly see that there has been an abuse of such discretion." Here we do not think it can be said that the court plainly abused its discretion in denying the defendants' motion.

The order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 843)

WOLTERS v. THOMAS. (No. 18,007.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1893.)

NOVATION—LIMITATIONS—PLEADING.

1. S., being indebted to plaintiff, gave him a written order on defendant, who was indebted to S.; and plaintiff presented the order to defendant's foreman, who accepted it. Defendant afterwards denied the foreman's authority to accept it, but, on being shown it, and told the circumstances, agreed to pay plaintiff whatever should be due S. from him. Held to constitute a novation.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. § 458, providing that, "in pleading the statute of limitations, it is not necessary to state the facts showing the defense, but it may be stated, generally, that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section, (giving the number of the section and subdivision thereof, if it is so divided, relied upon)," a plea of the statute of limitations, alleging that a cause of action is barred by Code Civil Proc. § 339, is insufficient, since such statute contains several subdivisions.

3. The objection to the answer need not be taken by special demurrer for uncertainty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by J. C. Wolters against J. H. Thomas to recover a claim against defendant, alleged to have been assigned to him. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellant. C. E. McLaughlin, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from a judgment, and was taken within 60 days after its rendition. The question presented is whether the trial court erred in overruling defendant's motion for nonsuit. It does not appear that any further evidence was introduced after the motion was made. The complaint shows, by proper averment, that on the 19th day of July, 1887, the defendant was indebted to Sing Lee Co in the sum of $432.37, and that Sing Lee Co was indebted to plaintiff in the same amount; that plaintiff agreed with Sing Lee Co to release him from such indebtedness if he would give an order upon defendant for that amount, provided defendant would accept such order; that thereupon Sing Lee Co gave him an order upon defendant, in writing, whereby he requested defendant to pay the amount to plaintiff; that the order was presented to defendant's foreman, who accepted the same, in writing, and thereupon plaintiff gave Sing Lee Co credit for that sum on his books; that, shortly afterwards, plaintiff met defendant, and showed him the order, and explained to him all the facts; that defendant said that his foreman had no authority to accept the order, but that it was all right, for whatever sum he owed Sing Lee Co; that subsequently, upon a settlement between defendant and Sing Lee Co, it was found that defendant was indebted to Sing Lee Co in the full amount of the order, and that sum was charged up against Sing Lee Co on account of the order, and is retained by defendant, who has never paid any part of it to Sing Lee Co or to plaintiff, though plaintiff has often demanded the same. The complaint contains many other averments not essential to the determination of this appeal. On the trial the evidence failed to show that the foreman had any authority to accept the order for defendant, and did show that the amount of defendant's indebtedness to Sing Lee Co was only $371.25, instead of $432.37 as alleged. In other respects, the allegations of the complaint were substantially proven, so far as set out above. It also appeared that, before receiving the order from Sing Lee Co, plaintiff called upon defendant's foreman, to ascertain the amount due Sing Lee Co, and was informed that the sum was $432.37, and therefore the order was drawn for that sum. The intent was to include whatever was due from defendant to Sing Lee Co. Two points are made by the appellant: The first is that the cause of action alleged is upon a written order, and the evidence does not sustain the allegation. The cause of action proved, if any, is upon an assignment of an open account. The second, that the action is barred by the statute of limitations.

1. While the complaint sets out a written order, and avers that it was duly accepted by the defendant, it also shows that defendant was at the time indebted to Sing Lee Co, and, upon being shown the order, and told the circumstances, agreed to pay plaintiff whatever should be found due Sing Lee Co. I think a cause of action is stated, aside from the alleged acceptance. The facts would certainly show a contract of novation, if not a cause of action upon the order. See Joyce v. Wing Yet Lung, 87 Cal. 424, 25 Pac. Rep. 545.

2. The plea of the statute of limitations is in the following words: "And, as further defense to said action, alleges that the same is barred by the provisions of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California." That section reads as follows: "Within two years: (1) An action upon a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded upon an instrument of writing, or founded upon an instrument of writing executed out of the state. (2) An action against a sheriff, coroner, or constable upon a liability incurred by the doing of an act in his official capacity, and in virtue of his office, or by the omission of an official duty, including the non-payment of money collected upon an execution. But this subdivision does not apply to an action for an escape. (3) An action to recover damages for the death of one, caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another." Section 458, Code Civil Proc., provides: "In pleading the statute of limitations, is not necessary to state the facts showing the defense, but it may be stated, generally, that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section, (giving the number of the section and subdivision thereof, if it is so divided, relied upon,)" etc. It is manifest that the answer does not comply with this section. Counsel say that the answer is equivalent to saying that the cause of action is barred by each of the subdivisions contained in the section referred to. But, if this is the effect, it clearly is not a compliance with the statute. Tested by ordinary rules of pleading, the absurdity of this claim is very obvious. It would be an averment, not only in the same defense, but in the same sentence, that the cause of action is founded upon a contract not in writing, upon a liability incurred by an officer, and that it is an action to recover damages for the death of one, caused by the wrongful act of another. The substituted mode of pleading was allowed to avoid useless prolixity, but was so conditioned as to secure all necessary definiteness in pleading. The rule contended for would nullify these conditions.

Counsel further contend that the objection should have been made by special demurrer, on the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity. But the objection is not that there is uncertainty in the statement of facts, but that no facts are stated. It is only by a compliance with the statute that such a defense can be made without stating facts. That there must be strict compliance, in such cases, has often been held. Manning v. Dallas, 73 Cal. 421, 15 Pac. Rep. 34; Young v. Wright, 52 Cal. 407; Judah v. Fredericks, 57 Cal. 339.

Counsel say that there are numerous cases in which such pleas have passed here without challenge. The only case cited is Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317, 30 Pac. Rep. 545. That case discloses no such plea, nor does it contain any language to justify such assertion. An examination of the record in that case shows that the section and subdivision thereof were pleaded. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 832)

In re HARVEY.

Appeal of CHAMPLIN. (No. 18,004.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1893.)

INSOLVENCY—SECURED CLAIMS—ALLOWANCE—COSTS—WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT.

1. On a contest of a claim against an insolvent's estate, it appeared that the insolvent had become indebted to claimant's assignor, B., for the price of certain land and merchandise, and gave him the notes constituting the claim in question. As part of the same transaction, B. gave a bond conditioned to convey the land to the insolvent on payment of the amount of the notes. Held, that the title to the land was reserved to secure the entire debt, and that the claim was properly rejected where claimant attempted to prove the full amount of the notes, without either deducting the value of the land, as required by section 44 of the insolvency act, or conveying his interest in it to the assignee.

2. Costs incurred in wrongful attachment against the estate of an insolvent cannot be recovered, under section 65 of the insolvency act, as said section applies only to costs which would have been a legal charge.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county; G. G. Clough, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Proceedings in the matter of the insolvency of T. M. Harvey. Certain orders were made refusing claims presented by George Champlin, and settling the assignee's account, from which Champlin appeals. Affirmed.

M. P. Chipman and D. W. Jenks, for appellant. W. Rigby and J. J. May, for assignee. E. E. Copeland, for insolvent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from two orders made in the proceedings in the matter of the insolvency of T. M. Harvey. By one order the court refused to allow two claims presented by the appellant against the estate of the insolvent. By the order it settled the final account of the assignee, and distributed the proceeds of the estate, without considering the objections of appellant to the account or the proposed order. As appellant had no interest in the insolvent's estate after his two claims were rejected, it is obvious that, if the first order was correctly made, appellant was not injured by the second. It does not appear when the proceedings in insolvency were commenced, but the adjudication was made at the instance of the creditors of T. M. Harvey, September 19, 1890. On the 2d of November, 1890, Champlin filed his claims, verified by his affidavit, as required by the insolvent act. Upon notice given by the assignee that he would contest the claims, the matter was submitted upon affidavits, and the claims were held not provable against the insolvent and rejected. Among others, the affidavit of T. M. Harvey, the insolvent, was read, from which it appeared that the insolvent and J. L. Harvey became indebted to one J. H. Beecher on the 27th day of September, 1889, in the sum of $4,110, for certain merchandise and for a lot in the town of Adin, county of Modoc. For this sum the debtors gave three notes, each payable to the order of the makers, and then indorsed by them and delivered to said Beecher. They were all payable one day after date. At the same time, and as part of the same transaction, and as part consideration for the notes, Beecher executed and delivered to them his bond, conditioned "that, if the above bounden obligor shall on or before the 1st day of August, 1891, make, execute, and deliver unto said T. M. Harvey and James L. Harvey (provided that the said T. M. Harvey and James L. Harvey shall on or before that day have paid to the said obligor the sum of four thousand one hundred and ten dollars gold coin of the United States of America) a good and sufficient conveyance," etc. Beecher, of course, retained the title to the land, and, so far as shown, still retains it. In June, 1890, affiant states, Beecher transferred the notes to Champlin, who is his brother-in-law, and who took the notes with full notice of all the facts. On the 18th of July, 1890, Champlin commenced a suit upon the notes in the superior court of Tehama county, and caused an attachment to be issued, which was levied upon the property of the insolvent in the county of Modoc. Just two months afterwards T. M. Harvey was adjudged an insolvent. A motion was made in the court in which the attachment suit was pending to dissolve the attachment on three grounds: (1) The indebtedness was secured; (2) was not due; and (3) T. M. Harvey had been adjudged an insolvent. When the motion was made does not appear, but it must have been after the adjudication. It was granted November 12, 1890. The order dissolving the attachment does not state upon what ground it was dissolved, but it is evident that the attachment was improperly sued out, for the land was held in trust as security for the debt even in the hands of Beecher's assignee. Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 24 Pac. Rep. 608, and 26 Pac. Rep. 789. Besides, if the insolvency proceedings had been commenced within one month after the attachment, the adjudication would have ipso facto operated as a dissolution, and no such motion would have been required.

Appellant's affidavit denies that appellant knew of the existence of the supposed security when he purchased the notes, and he contends that the value of the lot is much less than the debt, and that the purchase price of the land formed an inconsiderable part of the consideration for the notes. By the terms of the bond, however, which may be considered a declaration of a trust by Beecher, it is evident that the Harveys would be compelled to pay the entire debt before they could demand a deed. If, therefore, the bond constituted security for the payment of the notes, in the hands of the assignee, at all, it was for the full amount. Appellant did not attempt to prove his claim for the balance of the debt after deducting the value of the security, as provided in section 44 of the insolvent act. Indeed, he could not do this unless he could agree with the assignee as to the value of the security. But he made no effort in that direction, for he claimed that he had no security, and was entitled to prove his full debt. Of course, for the same reason, he did not convey his claim upon the property to the assignee, and permit the property to be sold under the order of the court. The claim, therefore, was properly rejected by the court.

The second claim presented by Champlin against the estate of the insolvent was for $713.33, being the costs incurred in the attachment proceedings. It is evident that the attachment was wrongfully sued out. Under such circumstances appellant could not have recovered such costs from the defendant if he had not been adjudged an insolvent. As the proceedings in insolvency are for the purpose of appropriating the property of the insolvent to the payment of his debts, it must follow that such costs could not be allowed against his estate. The provisions of section 65 of the insolvency act can only apply to costs which would have been a legal charge against the insolvent. I think the order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the orders are affirmed.

97 Cal. 527

In re MULHOLLAND. (No. 21,000.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1893.)

FINES—IMPRISONMENT UNTIL PAYMENT.

1. Pen. Code, § 1446, relating to proceedings in police courts, provides that a judgment that defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine is satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine. Section 1205, which was a similar provision, till amended by St. 1891, p. 52, provides that the imprisonment "must not exceed one day for every two dollars of the fine." Held, that section 1446 was not affected by the amendment to section 1205, which is a limitation on the powers of superior courts.

2. The fact that the law provides different degrees of punishment by different courts for the same offense does not render it invalid.

At chambers.

Petition by one Mulholland for a writ of habeas corpus. Denied.

N. S. Wirt, for petitioner.

PATERSON, J. The petitioner was convicted in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, January 16, 1893, of the crime of battery, and sentenced to pay a fine of $100, or, in default of the payment thereof, to be imprisoned at the rate of one day for each dollar of said fine remaining unpaid. The petitioner claims that the court below had no authority to imprison him for more than 50 days; that the sentence ought to have been no greater than one day for each two dollars of the fine. In support of this contention he relies upon section 1205 of the Penal Code, as amended March 10, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 52.) That section, as originally incorporated into the Code, provided that the judgment should specify the extent of imprisonment, "which could not exceed one day for every two dollars of the fine." Section 1446, Pen. Code, relating to proceedings in justices' and police courts, provided that a judgment that the defendant pay a fine might also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine is satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every two dollars of the fine. Both of these sections were amended in 1874 by inserting the words "one dollar" in lieu of the words "two dollars," as used in each section. Section 1446 has remained the same as thus amended. The amendment to section 1205, approved March 10, 1891, provides that the imprisonment "must not exceed one day for every two dollars of the fine, nor extend in any case beyond the term for which the defendant might be sentenced to imprisonment for the offense of which he has been convicted." In my judgment, the recent amendment to section 1205 in no way affected the operation of section 1446. I think that the legislature intended that the justices' and police courts should remain clothed with the discretion which they have exercised under section 1446 ever since its adoption. The amendment to section 1205 is a limitation upon the powers of the superior courts, which alone have jurisdiction of misdemeanors, with one or two exceptions, (section 115, Code Civil Proc.) for which the punishment may be greater than six months' imprisonment or $500 fine, or both. In certain cases the superior court may impose as a penalty for a misdemeanor several years' imprisonment in the county jail, or $5,000, or both such fine and imprisonment. It is altogether likely that the members of the legislature had observed in some instances an abuse of discretion in the exercise of this authority by the superior courts under the provisions of the statute, and desired to limit their power in that regard.

I do not think there is any merit in the point made by counsel for petitioner that the "punishment must be the same in all courts for the same offense." As was said in Ex parte Soto, 88 Cal. 627, 26 Pac. Rep. 531: "Section 1446 of the Penal Code does not imperatively require that the direction for imprisonment in case of nonpayment of a fine shall be at the rate or in the proportion of one day for one dollar. It is in terms permissive. The discretion of the magistrate is absolute whether or not to impose any imprisonment whatever." The justices' and police courts having this discretion, and the court being limited in the exercise thereof to the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed as a penalty or part of the penalty, there is very little danger of petty offenders being subjected to a harsher or more burdensome rule than the one which is applied to more serious offenders. It is true, a person charged with a felony may be convicted of a misdemeanor of which the justices' and police courts have jurisdiction, and be sentenced by the superior court to a greater term of imprisonment than he would have received if he had been tried before a justice of the peace for the same offense, (such a thing is possible,) but that fact does not invalidate the law. The various superior and justices' courts throughout the state are constantly trying criminal cases of the same nature and imposing different sentences. It is impossible to lay down any fixed rule by which the judges may determine the exact penalty to be imposed in each case, and the fact that criminals are subjected to different degrees of punishment for the same offense in different courts does not affect the validity of the law. Seriegrour v. State, 1 Chand. 51. The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

97 Cal. 510

BOYD v. ODDOUS. (No. 19,024.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1893.)

NEGLECTANCE—PLEADING—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. A complaint in an action to recover for personal injuries sustained through the negligence of another is not demurrable by reason of its failure to allege absence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

2. Where a party requests numerous instructions, and the court gives a general charge, purporting to cover the instructions asked, an objection to the refusal of the court to give the instructions on the ground that they were proper, and that they were not covered by the charge of the court, is too general to be noticed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by W. M. Boyd against Jacques Oddous. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. V. Biscailuz and Gould & Stanford, for appellant. Burnett & Gibbon, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action for damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff from the bite of a dog owned and kept by defendant; it being alleged that the dog was vicious and accustomed to bite mankind, of which defendant had notice, and that plaintiff was bitten in consequence of the negligent manner in which defendant kept the dog. The answer admits that defendant owned and kept the dog, but denies all other material averments of the complaint; and, as an affirmative defense, alleges "that, if the plaintiff had used ordinary caution," he could have avoided coming in contact with the dog. This seems to have been intended as an averment of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff, assessing the damages at $450, according to which judgment was rendered. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial.

1. The first and principal point urged here by counsel for appellant is that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, because it does not negative contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; and, therefore, that defendant's demurrer to the complaint and his motion for nonsuit should have been sustained. No authorities are cited which tend to support this point; but the contrary doctrine seems to be firmly established in this state. Robinson v. Railroad Co., 48 Cal. 409; Yik Hon v. Waterworks, 65 Cal. 619; Magee v. Railroad Co., 78 Cal. 430, 21 Pac. Rep. 114.

2. There is no foundation in the record for the point that the court permitted evidence of special damages not pleaded, as no such evidence appears; nor does it appear that any evidence of damage was objected to on the ground that the damage was not specially pleaded.

3. It is contended that the evidence does not justify a verdict of negligence on the part of the defendant, and, if it does, that the jury should have found contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Upon both of these issues the evidence was conflicting, and therefore the verdict as to neither should be disturbed.

4. Some very indefinite objections are made to the instructions given to the jury. Counsel for defendant requested the giving of seven distinct instructions, which appear in the record. The plaintiff also asked instructions which do not appear. As to the instructions asked, the court said: "I have been requested, by both plaintiff and defendant, to give certain instructions, and have concluded to give the instructions entire by the court, covering the points that are made in these instructions as far as possible. You can save your exceptions on both sides to the refusal of the instructions asked for, and I will charge the jury orally." The instructions orally given cover about 4½ pages of the transcript; and, as often happens in cases of oral instructions, they are not so perspicuous as they probably would have been had they been deliberately written; but, considering them together, they seem to be free from error prejudicial to the defendant. As to the refusal of the court to give the seven instructions requested by defendant, counsel for appellant only say: "Here it will be seen, we think, that instructions asked by appellant were proper, and that they were not covered by the court's charge to the jury." This is too general. The proper instructions said to have been asked, and not substantially given, should have been specified by counsel. Upon an ordinarily careful reading, I have discovered none such. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(97 Cal. 500)

ROGERS v. DUHART. (No. 19,095.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1893.)

TRESPASS ON LAND—ACTION BY LESSEE NOT IN POSSESSION—PLEADING.

A complaint stated that the executors of a certain estate let to plaintiff certain land of the estate for eight months from a date stated, "and thereupon plaintiff took possession of and has ever since held the same;" that defendant entered upon the described property, and drove into and kept cattle and sheep thereon, and destroyed all the grass thereon, and so kept them there for nearly four months, without plaintiff's consent. All the facts alleged were true, except that plaintiff was not in possession during the time mentioned. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover, though he could not maintain trespass quare clausum, for want of possession; since, under the Code, technical forms of action are discarded, and the allegation of possession was immaterial, and may be treated as surplusage.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by Rogers against Duhart to recover damages caused by defendant by pasturing stock on certain land. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wells, Monroe & Lee, for appellant. J. L. Murphy, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The complaint alleges that the executors of the estate of Miguel Leonis let and demised unto the plaintiff certain lands belonging to the estate for the term of eight months from and after February 1, 1891, and thereupon plaintiff took possession of and has ever since held the same; that on February 1, 1891, the defendant "entered upon the plaintiff's said described property, and drove into and kept upon the said land about 400 head of cattle, and about 3,000 head of sheep, and trod down and depastured and destroyed all the grass and herbage thereon, and so kept the said cattle and sheep upon the same continually thereafter and until on or about the 17th day of April, 1891, * * * without the consent of plaintiff, and to his damage in the sum of $2,000." The facts of the case are not disputed. They show that defendant had the right to pasture 400 head of cattle upon the lands until the 1st day of September, 1890; that, after his right expired, the executors gave him "permission to pasture upon the said lands his gentle band of cattle, consisting of 50 or 60 head, until the 31st day of December, 1890, in consideration of the said defendant watching over the place and keeping the cattle of all other parties off;" that at the time of giving said permission the executors notified the defendant "that he must remove his cattle on the 31st day of December, 1890, and that under no consideration was the defendant, Duhart, to keep or allow any sheep to run upon the said ranch, and that was the only permission given defendant, by either of the executors, to be or have his cattle upon said ranch after the 1st day of September, 1890;" that a few days after September 1st one of the executors told the defendant to remove his cattle from the ranch, and that he gave said executor "to understand that he had removed them, though he did not state so in so many words, (he stated that he had sold them, or was about to sell them;) that the defendant permitted 2,000 head of sheep, 300 head of cattle, and 25 head of horses belonging to him to graze upon the land in question from January 1, 1891, until April 17, 1891; that neither the plaintiff nor the executors had knowledge of the fact that plaintiff's sheep, cattle, and horses were upon the lands subsequent to December 31, 1890, but supposed that he had removed them from the premises, in accordance with his instructions, and that they did not know that he had abused the privilege granted to him on or about September 1, 1890; that the lands described in the complaint were uninclosed pasture lands, and neither plaintiff nor any one on his behalf took possession of the land or any part thereof until about the 12th day of April, 1891; that plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of $900 by reason of the wrongful act of the defendant, as charged in the complaint.

The briefs are devoted chiefly to a discussion of the question whether an action trespass quare clausum fregit can be maintained by one who was not in the actual possession of the land at the time the acts complained of were performed. The respondent refers to cases showing that actual possession is not in all cases essential, and the appellant insists that the exceptions are confined to cases in which the plaintiffs were the owners,—where the title draws to it the possession for the purpose of redressing injuries to the estate. It would be a useless thing to attempt to reconcile the cases on this subject. Decisions adhering to the common-law rules of pleading are seldom of any value in determining the sufficiency of a pleading under the Code, and sometimes lead to serious departures from its letter and spirit. With us mere forms of action are cast aside. Every action is now in effect a special action on the case, (Jones v. Cortes, 17 Cal. 487; Goulet v. Asseler, 22 N. Y. 225; Matthews v. McPherson, 65 N. C. 189; Brown v. Bridges, 31 Iowa, 145;) and the rigid formalism and subtle distinctions found in the rules governing the common-law forms of action are as inapplicable and inane under the modern plan of procedure as the highly dramatic speech, senseless repetitions, and symbolic gestures of the formulae prescribed for the five forms of civil actions by the decemvirs of ancient Rome. Does the complaint state in ordinary and concise language facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? That is the question, and not whether it is sufficient to show trespass quare clausum, trespass vi et armis, or any other technical form of action, ex delicto or ex contractu. The common-law rule is that, if plaintiff declare in trespass quare clausum where the action should be case, he will be nonsuited at the trial; but under our system, if the facts alleged and proved are such as would have entitled the plaintiff to relief under any of the recognized forms of action at common law, they are sufficient as the basis of relied, whatever it may be. The bill of exceptions herein states facts which would entitle plaintiff to relief in an action on the case, which includes torts not committed with force, actual or implied, injuries committed to property of which plaintiff has the reversion only, and in fact all injuries not provided for in other forms of action. The fact that the plaintiff alleges he was in possession is immaterial. The allegation may be treated as surplusage. "Superfluity does not vitiate." "The nature of the right of action has not been changed, nor has the amount of damages recoverable been affected; but the special and technical rules which govern the use of the two common-law actions mentioned [trespass and case] have certainly been abrogated." Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 232. The damages recoverable in the common-law action of trespass quare clausum are for the wrong done to the plaintiff's possession as well as to the inheritance, and, where the entry is with actual force, treble damages are frequently allowed. While the plaintiff is not permitted to recover such damages under the facts proved in the case, he is certainly entitled to recover such damages as would have been recoverable if the action were the common-law "action of case." To hold that the plaintiff could not recover would be to restore the old distinctions between these technical actions. Section 232, supra, note 2. There is nothing decided in any of the cases upon which the appellant relied opposed to the views which we have expressed. The statements upon this subject in Holman v. Taylor, 31 Cal. 340, and Pollock v. Cummings, 38 Cal. 685, are dicta. In Uttendorfer v. Saegers, 50 Cal. 497, it was alleged that the defendant forcibly entered upon the premises, and tore down the buildings, etc. It was claimed by the appellant that the action was trespass quare clausum. Respondent denied this, asserting that it was an action by the owner for damages done to the inheritance. The court held with the appellant, but did not hold that the action could not be maintained unless the plaintiff was in possession. The case simply holds that evidence of the possession of the tenant was material on the question of damages. The question of the sufficiency of the complaint or of the facts found to constitute a cause of action in case was not considered in any of the cases referred to. In Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 371, 14 Pac. Rep. 22, the court held that the defendants were entitled to show that at the time of the acts charged in the complaint they were in quiet and peaceable possession of the land, claiming the same under certificates of purchase and patents, and had continuously used and occupied it for 10 or 11 years prior to the commencement of the action. The decision followed the doctrine announced in Page v. Fowler, 37 Cal. 100, viz. that a personal action cannot be made the means of litigating and determining the rights to the possession of real property, as between conflicting claimants. In Bank v. Turman, (Cal.) 30 Pac. Rep. 966, it appeared that the plaintiff did not have title, and he neither had possession nor the right of possession. In the case at bar there is no pretense that the defendant was claiming adversely to any one. He vacated the premises promptly upon receiving a written notice on behalf of plaintiff demanding possession, and so states in his answer. He was never at any time after September 1, 1890, a tenant. Admitting that, when a tenancy is shown, the presumption from his continued possession is that he holds in the same capacity, there is here shown an express agreement by the terms of which he was simply to have the privilege of pasturing 50 or 60 head of cattle on the land, in consideration of his services in caring for the property, and seeing that other stock did not trespass on the land. The presumption is therefore overcome. Bertie v. Beaumont, 16 East, 33. Defendant contends that he was a tenant at sufferance after December 31, 1891, but this is a mistake. He was a mere servant. Haywood v. Miller, 3 Hill, 90; Robertson v. Georgia, 7 N. H. 308. His possession was the possession of his employer. He could not have maintained an action against any one for trespass, nor would he have been a necessary party plaintiff with the owner in a suit to recover damages for injury to the property. Ogden v. Gibbons, 5 N. J. Law, 599. Whether he be regarded as a servant or licensee, the result is the same. He was there for a particular purpose, and the moment he abused the privilege, or committed any act hostile to the interests of his employer or licensor, he became a trespasser. Lyford v. Putnam, 35 N. H. 563; Looram v. Burlingame, 16 La. Ann. 199; People v. Fields, 1 Lans. 222; Haskin v. Record, 32 Vt. 575.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

SIVERS v. SIVERS et al. (No. 15,145.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 11, 1893.)

CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—TIME OF PERFORMANCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—RES JUDICATA.

1. A contract recited that defendants, husband and wife, jointly and severally agree to pay plaintiff a certain sum "advanced or loaned to us, or any further sum of money which he may loan to us at such time as circumstances may occur,—that is to say, that, if in any event either of us should die, then the survivor shall assume the debt, and pay it as if both were living; and we further agree that if the money * * * is not paid before the expiration of five years from the first day of January, 1889, last past, then we jointly or severally agree to give a mortgage to" plaintiff on land described. Held, that no time of payment was fixed by the contract.

2. In an action on such contract it was competent for plaintiff to show by oral testimony when such contract was agreed to be performed.

3. Where the evidence shows that the money was agreed to be paid when defendants sold the land described in the contract, and that the land was sold prior to plaintiff's demand and the commencement of the action, a finding that the money became payable on demand was proper.

4. In such case it appeared that plaintiff sued on such contract in justice's court, and that a demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the justice, whereupon plaintiff dismissed the action. Held, that such action was no bar to the subsequent action in the superior court.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; E. R. Garber, Judge.

Action by John H. Sivers against John A. Sivers and Eliza Sivers on a contract for the payment of money. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rogers & Chilstrom, for appellants. F. D. Brandon, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendants executed to the plaintiff the following instrument, in consideration of the loan to them by the plaintiff of the sum of $300: "San Francisco, January 26, 1889. The undersigned agreement entered into between J. H. Sivers, of San Francisco, and John Sivers and Eliza Sivers, his wife, that the said John Sivers and Eliza Sivers do jointly and severally agree to pay to the said John H. Sivers the sum of three hundred ($300) dollars advanced or loaned to us, or any further sum of money which he may loan to us at such time as circumstances may occur,—that is to say, that, if in any event either of us should die, then the survivor shall assume the debt, and pay it as if both were living; and we further agree that if the money or loan or moneys so advanced is not paid before the expiration of five years from the first day of January, 1889, last past, then we jointly or severally agree to give a mortgage to the said J. H. Sivers upon the land or property which we own or occupy, described as follows: Southeast quarter of section 4 in township 27 north, of range 6 west, Tehama county, California. [Signed] John Sivers, Eliza Sivers." The court finds as a conclusion of law "that, no time of payment being specified in the obligation herein sued upon, the same became payable immediately upon the demand made by plaintiff for the payment thereof," and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

It is also alleged in the complaint and found by the court that at the time of the execution of the instrument it was agreed between the parties that the defendants should pay the sum named in the instrument whenever they should sell the real estate therein described, and that such sale had been made prior to the plaintiff's demand and the commencement of the action. This finding of the court was made upon oral testimony thereof, and the appellants contend that it was incompetent to show such agreement by such testimony, for the reason that the written instrument must be held to embrace all the terms of the agreement between the parties. The instrument executed by the parties does not by any specific terms designate the time for its performance. That the provision for payment by the survivor in case one of the makers should die did not postpone the time for payment until that event is shown by the clause providing that in that event it is to be paid "as if both were living," thus indicating that at some time both were liable to pay it; and the agreement for a mortgage, if it was not paid within five years, did not give to the makers five years in which to make payment, but created an additional obligation in favor of the plaintiff, which ceased to be operative upon their sale of the property to be mortgaged. The instrument, therefore, being silent in respect to the time for the payment of the money, it was competent for the plaintiff to show that a period or event had been agreed upon between the parties thereto at which the payment should be made, and such agreement could be shown by oral testimony. This evidence did not contradict or vary any of the terms contained in the instrument. The rule which excludes evidence affecting the terms of a written instrument does not apply when the parties have not incorporated into the instrument all of the terms of their agreement, and when the evidence offered or the agreement sought to be proved is not inconsistent with the terms embodied in the instrument. Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement as to any matter upon which the instrument is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, cannot be said to contradict or vary the terms of the written instrument. Whart. Ev. §§ 1015, 1026; Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. Rep. 786. Inasmuch, however, as the instrument does not specify any time for its performance, the finding of the court that the money therein named became payable immediately upon the demand therefor was correct, (Civil Code, § 1657;) and the further findings respecting the foregoing oral agreement did not prejudice the appellants. If the money was payable immediately upon demand, they were not prejudiced by the fact that the demand was not made until after they had sold the property, or by the fact that it had been agreed that a demand should not be made until after such sale.

The proceedings in the justice's court did not constitute a bar to this action. After the plaintiff had brought his action in the justice's court upon the foregoing instrument, the defendants demurred thereto, and in sustaining their demurrer the justice "filed" his decision in the action as follows: "The case came on to be heard before me on the 20th day of October, 1891, on defendants' demurrer to the amended complaint, and submitted to the court without argument, and was taken under advisement until the 21st inst., at which time the court rendered judgment sustaining defendants' demurrer to the amended complaint. Stay two days." And thereafter, November 10, 1891, the plaintiff filed a dismissal of the action in that court. This action of the justice did not constitute a judgment of the court. There had been no trial upon the merits, and his action in sustaining the demurrer was but an order in regard to the sufficiency of the complaint, and not a judgment. A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding, whereas an order upon a demurrer is only a decision upon the correctness or sufficiency of practice in seeking to tain a judgment. It may form the basis for rendering a judgment, but it is not itself a judgment. If a judgment had thereafter been entered upon that order, it must have been that the action be dismissed without prejudice to a new action. Code Civil Proc. § 890, subd. 3.

The position of the appellants that the suit in the justice's court is still pending, for the reason that no judgment of dismissal was entered therein, cannot be considered, since this defense was not presented in the court below.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 530

DAMMON v. BEECHER et al. (No. 18,021.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1893.)

LIABILITIES OF PARTNERSHIP.

Where money is deposited with the managing member of a partnership, a receipt given therefor in the partnership name, and the money is used in purchasing for partnership purposes, the firm will be liable therefor though one of the partners was absent at the time of the deposit, and was not informed of such transaction.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county; Edward Sweeney, Judge.

Action by S. D. Dammon against J. S. Beecher and Peter Crumbaugh for money had and received. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant Crumbaugh appeals. Affirmed.

L. V. Hitchcock, for appellant. C. P. Sprague, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendants were partners doing a general merchandise business. Beecher was the general manager thereof, Crumbaugh living at a distance, and being seldom at the place of business. While defendants were so engaged as partners, on the 31st of July, 1886, plaintiff deposited with the firm the sum of $1,050. The defendant Crumbaugh was absent, as he usually was, from his place of business at the time the deposit was made. The money was handed to defendant Beecher as a member of the firm, who deposited it with the firm funds, giving a receipt therefor in the name of the firm, and it was thereupon used in the business of Beecher & Crumbaugh, Beecher failing to inform Crumbaugh of the transaction. This action was brought to recover from the partnership the amount of money so deposited. The only question involved in this appeal is as to the liability of the appellant, Crumbaugh, upon the foregoing state of facts. If Beecher had used the money for his individual purposes, with some reason it might be urged that no liability was created against Crumbaugh, for the transaction of the receipt of the money was outside of the regular business of the partnership. But here the money was used for the purchase of partnership goods and the payment of partnership debts. It was directly applied to the satisfaction of Crumbaugh's liabilities, and this was all done by the partner who received the money in the name of the partnership, and who had the entire charge and control of the business. Beecher had full power to borrow money for the use of the firm, and sign notes in the name of the firm, and thus bind his partner. Looking at this transaction in its most favorable light for the appellant, he should not be placed in a better position towards the plaintiff than if Beecher had given a firm note for the money, rather than a firm receipt. Beecher and the plaintiff, Dammon, both testified that the money was left with the firm, and the receipt so indicates. The fact that one partner was not present at the moment the money passed from plaintiff into the safe of the firm is immaterial. Under all the circumstances of the case, we are bound to hold that when the managing partner used this money for the benefit of the partnership, the partnership was liable for money had and received. It may be conceded that the act of a partner, who, being a trustee, improperly employs the money of his cestui que trust in the partnership business, does not of itself create a liability in favor of the beneficiary against the firm; but the present case is much broader in its facts. This entire question is exhaustively discussed in the case of In re Ketchum, 1 Fed. Rep. 815, and the doctrine there declared goes to much greater length than is necessary to support the plaintiff's claims in the present case. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment and order be affirmed.

Cal.Rep. 32-34 P.—9

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 513

SCOTT v. GLENN. (No. 18,094.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 11, 1893.)

RENDITION OF JUDGMENT—NOTICE.

In an action wherein defendant has filed a cross complaint, making plaintiff and others parties defendant thereto, a notice reciting "that the court has rendered its decision and findings and judgment" therein, directed "to the plaintiff" and his attorneys of record, service of which is accepted by one of the attorneys, who indorses the acknowledgment of service as "attorney for plaintiff and defendants to cross complaint," is a notice of the rendition of the decision to all of the losing parties. Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 29 Pac. Rep. 332, 94 Cal. 33, distinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by A. E. D. Scott against G. R. G. Glenn for money had and received. Defendant filed a cross complaint, making plaintiff and others parties defendants. There was a judgment for defendant. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants in the cross complaint appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. B. Graham, for appellants. J. P. Meux, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was commenced to recover a sum of money alleged to have been received by the defendant for the use and benefit of certain parties, who had sold and assigned the indebtedness to the plaintiff. The defendant answered, and also filed a cross complaint, making the plaintiff and his alleged assignors parties defendant and asking for affirmative relief against them. The defendants named in the cross complaint answered thereto, denying most of its averments. The case was tried by the court upon the issues raised by the pleadings, and the findings and judgment were that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the defendant have and recover the relief demanded in his cross complaint. The findings and judgment were filed on September 17, 1891, and on the next day the attorney for defendant served upon the attorneys for the plaintiff and defendants to the cross complaint a notice reading as follows: "[Title of Court and Cause.] To the plaintiff, and Messrs. T. P. Ryan and G. B. Graham, attorneys of record: You will take notice that the court has rendered its decision and findings and judgment, and defendant's memorandum of costs have been this day filed in the above-entitled action. Dated September 17, 1891. J. P. Meux, Attorney for G. R. G. Glenn." On this notice was indorsed an acknowledgment of service, as follows: "Service of the within notice is hereby admitted, this 18th day of September, 1891. Geo. B. Graham, attorney for plaintiff and defendants to cross complaint." On March 21, 1892, the defendants in the cross complaint served upon Glenn and filed in the court a notice of their intention to move for a new trial of the action, stating that the motion would be made upon a statement of the case to be settled and allowed by the court. Subsequently the moving parties presented to the court their statement of the case, and asked that it be settled and allowed; but the defendant Glenn appeared by his attorney, and objected to the settlement and allowance, upon the sole ground that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served in time. The motion was submitted upon the above-mentioned notices, and the court, after hearing the arguments of counsel, "found that the said statement of the case and bill of exceptions was in all respects true and correct, but that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served in time, and thereupon and for that reason denied the motion of said defendants to said cross complaint." From the order thus entered, this appeal is prosecuted by all of the defendants to the cross complaint.

The Code provides that the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after notice of the decision of the court, file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention. Section 659, Code Civil Proc. It is, however, argued for the appellant—and this is the only point made—that the notice of decision served here, when properly construed, was a notice to the plaintiff and his attorney alone, and that "no notice of the rendition of the decision was ever given to the defendants in the cross complaint." We do not think the notice can be thus limited, particularly in view of the acceptance of service which was indorsed upon it. In our opinion, it must be treated as a notice to and accepted by all of the losing parties. The case does not fall within the rule declared in Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. Rep. 332. There it was held that the settlement of a bill of exceptions was a "proceeding" in an action, within the meaning of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the court had power to relieve against the objection that the bill was not served in time, when it appeared that the default in the service resulted solely from excusable mistake or neglect. Here no claim for relief, under the section of the Code cited in that case, was made, and we fail to see how any such claim could be made. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

97 Cal. 516

FOLEY v. BULLARD et al. (No. 15,305.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 11, 1893.)

NOTICE OF APPEAL—PARTIES.

In an action to foreclose a street assessment on land of several defendants, wherein judgment is rendered for plaintiff, from which some of the defendants appeal, the nonappealing defendants need not be served with notice of appeal, as they are not adverse parties, within Code Civil Proc. § 940, since there is no personal liability, but the judgment must be satisfied out of the land. Millikin v. Houghton, 17 Pac. Rep. 641, 75 Cal. 539, distinguished.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by John Foley against James A. Bullard and others on a street assessment. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and some of the defendants appeal. Plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal because notice thereof was not served on the nonappealing defendants. Motion denied.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellants. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Foley recovered a judgment foreclosing a street assessment upon certain realty of defendants. Some of the defendants appealed from the judgment, but did not serve notice of appeal upon their codefendants. Respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal for that reason. The motion should be denied. The nonappealing defendants are not adverse parties, within the meaning of the statute.¹ Their rights will not be adversely affected by a reversal of the judgment. Under the authority of Robinson v. Merrill, 87 Cal. 11, 25 Pac. Rep. 162, it may be that the practical effect of a reversal of a judgment in this case will be a reversal as to all the defendants. If such is the result, then these codefendants certainly are not adverse parties. If a judgment of reversal leaves them in statu quo, then this appeal does not affect their rights, and they are not entitled to notice. If a judgment of reversal as to defendant appellants has not the practical effect of a reversal as to all the defendants, then these defendants not appealing are left in statu quo by such reversal. In this character of action, there is no personal liability, but the realty alone must be looked to for the satisfaction of the judgment. For these reasons, so far as the subject-matter of this litigation is concerned, it is of no interest to the defendants not appealing what may be the final result of the pending appeal. In Millikin v. Houghton, 75 Cal. 539, 17 Pac. Rep. 641, plaintiff appealed from the order setting aside an execution issued against all the defendants. It is very apparent that all the defendants had an interest in sustaining the order, and therefore should have been served with notice of the appeal. Let the motion to dismiss be denied.

¹Code Civil Proc. § 940, provides that a notice of appeal must be served on the adverse party, or his attorney.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

97 Cal. 523

JONES v. JUSTICE'S COURT OF LOS ANGELES CITY. (No. 19,027.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1893.)

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—NOTICE OF TRIAL.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 850, provides "that when all the parties to an action in a justice's court served with process shall have appeared, or some of them have appeared, and the remaining defendants have made default, the justice must fix a day for the trial of said cause, and notify the plaintiff and the defendants who have appeared thereof." Held, that the provision requiring such notice of the day of trial is imperative, and a judgment entered without it will be vacated on a writ of review.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. § 873, providing that the trial must commence at the expiration of one hour from the time specified in the notice mentioned in section 850, the notice must be given in writing, and, with proof of service, must form a part of the record.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Petition by Ellen Jones against the justice's court of Los Angeles city. Petition granted, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Willis & Appel, for appellant. Horace Bell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner herein applied to the court below for a writ of review, and judgment was entered in her favor, directing the appellant to vacate and set aside a judgment entered in the justice's court of Los Angeles city, on the 4th day of June, 1891, in favor of one Broseau, and against petitioner, Ellen Jones. The ground upon which the petitioner herein asked for the writ was that neither she nor her attorney ever had any notice that the case pending in the justice's court had been set for trial, and the learned judge of the court below sustained the petitioner's contention in that regard, and granted the writ prayed for. Section 850, Code Civil Proc., provides that "when all the parties served with process shall have appeared, or some of them have appeared, and the remaining defendants have made default, the justice must fix a day for the trial of said cause, and notify the plaintiff and the defendants who have appeared thereof." Appellant contends that, the justice having acquired jurisdiction, the failure to notify the defendant of the time fixed for trial was mere error, which could have been corrected only upon appeal. We do not think the contention a sound one. Justices' courts have peculiar and limited jurisdiction, and the powers conferred upon them by the statute must be strictly pursued. The statute requiring notice of the day fixed for trial to be given is imperative, and it is just and right that it should be strictly enforced, because no man should be deprived of his property without notice and opportunity to be heard. It was the intention of the legislature to relieve parties to actions in a justice's court from the necessity of making daily inquiry at the justice's office to learn when the case is to be tried. We do not think the cases cited by the appellant are opposed to the views we have expressed. Clark v. Superior Court, 55 Cal. 199, was an application for a writ of prohibition to annul an order of the superior court, dated April 13, 1880, directing the clerk of the court to file a decision and judgment, made by the judge of the district court on December 26, 1879. All the case decides is that, where the superior court has acquired jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, a judgment based upon findings made by the district court after a trial therein, but not filed until after the district judge went out of office, is merely erroneous. Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. Rep. 849, decides that a justice's court has no power to review its own judgment, unless statutory authority therefor is given, and that, under section 859, Code Civil Proc., it can review no judgment except a judgment by default. In Reagan v. Justice's Court, 75 Cal. 253, 17 Pac. Rep. 195, it appeared that the defendant, who had been duly examined, failed to appear within the time required by law, but filed a demurrer one day too late. This demurrer was stricken out, and judgment entered against him by default. A motion was made, under section 859, Code Civil Proc., to have the default set aside, and this motion was denied. We held that the justice had regularly pursued the authority conferred upon him, and, if error intervened, it could not be corrected upon certiorari. Powelson v. Lockwood, 82 Cal. 613, 23 Pac. Rep. 143, simply holds that it is mere error for a justice to proceed to trial in a misdemeanor case without a jury; and Heinlen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 559, 26 Pac. Rep. 366, holds that the provision of section 892 requiring the justice's court to render judgment at the close of the trial is merely directory.

It is claimed by appellant that it appears from the justice's return to the writ that he had evidence before him prior to entering upon the trial that notice had been given to the defendant, and that his decision upon such evidence, even if erroneous, cannot be reviewed in this proceeding. The return shows that, on the 27th of May, the justice set the case for trial June 4, 1891, at 2 P. M., and, by the entry in his docket, that June 4th, "at this 2 P. M., Willis and Appel in court as attorneys for plaintiff. No one appears for defendant. Counsel for appellant stated that notice of trial had been served on counsel for defendant, and that he would produce same. After waiting until 3:30 P. M., the court proceeds to try the case. Neither the defendant nor her attorney appears in court." It is also claimed that because it appears from the return to the writ that at a subsequent day, when a motion was made by the defendant to vacate the judgment, an affidavit of the service of a notice of trial was filed, the denial by the justice of this motion to vacate the judgment is a conclusive determination that the defendant had a proper notice of the time fixed for the trial. This portion of the return is as follows: "Sept. 12. Willis and Appel filed affidavits of service of notice of trial." The provision in section 873, Code Civil Proc., that the trial must commence at the expiration of one hour from the time specified in the notice mentioned in section 850 implies that this notice should be given in writing, and form a part of the record, and that there should be an entry thereof, and also of the mode in which it was given, in the justice's docket, so that there may be affirmative evidence of his authority to render a judgment. This notice and the proof thereof are as essential to the authority of the justice to proceed upon the trial of the case as is the summons and return of service thereof to his entering a judgment of default. The giving of the notice is a duty which the statute imposes upon the justice before he has any authority to proceed with the trial; and, while it is not necessary that he serve the notice himself, he ought not to accept the verbal statement of the plaintiff that the notice had been served upon the defendant. The justice did not embody in his return the affidavit of service of the notice, and the superior court was not required to accept the above memorandum in his docket as any evidence that the affidavit contained proof that the notice had been given. If, however, it be conceded that the affidavit was itself before the superior court, inasmuch as all intendments upon this appeal are in support of its judgment, we must presume that upon looking into the affidavit the court was satisfied that it did not show that any notice had been given. The return did not, moreover, purport to show that the justice had given any notice, nor did it contain or refer to the service of any notice given by him; and, as all notices are required to be in writing, (Code Civil Proc. § 1010,) such notice, if it had existed, would have formed a part of the return by the justice. As it is not there, the superior court was justified in finding that it had not been given, and, consequently, that the judgment of the justice was rendered without authority.

There are objections made to the form of the proceedings, and to the judgment of the superior court, but we think they are immaterial; that the appellant could not have been prejudiced thereby; and they should therefore be disregarded.

Judgment affirmed.

97 Cal. 532

GOULD v. WISE et al. (No. 19,021.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1893.)

MORTGAGES—PRIORITIES—DELIVERY.

1. Defendant agreed with A. to sell him certain land, part cash, and balance secured by mortgage. Defendant went with A. to a notary's office, where a deed was executed. While the mortgage was being prepared, A. said, "Let me see that deed," and took it from the table, and went, without defendant's knowledge, to plaintiff, from whom he negotiated a loan. A. then returned to defendant, paid him the money, and executed the mortgage, which defendant at once recorded. Prior to this time plaintiff had the deed and A.'s mortgage to her recorded. Held, that defendant's mortgage was entitled to priority, as there had been no delivery of the deed to A. at the time he negotiated the loan from plaintiff.

2. Defendant's negligence in allowing the deed to be removed from the room was not such as would justify an estoppel against a plea of nondelivery of the deed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by Frederick S. Gould, executor of Julia S. Gould, deceased, against John Wise and others, to foreclose a mortgage. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant Wise appeals. Reversed.

Willis & Appel and Houghton, Silent & Campbell, for appellant. Richards & Carrier and Del Valle & Munday, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Upon the 6th day of March, 1888, appellant, Wise, entered into an agreement with Charles O. and Asa Adams to convey to them certain land. Upon March 12, 1889, Charles Adams, one of the parties to the agreement, transferred his interest in the property to his copurchaser, Asa Adams. On the same day Asa Adams, having procured the deed from his copurchaser, applied to appellant Wise for a deed of the premises contracted for, representing to him that he would pay $1,000 cash, which, together with $500 which had been paid at the date of the execution of the contract, would amount to $1,500 paid on the purchase price, and that he would execute the mortgage provided for in the agreement aforesaid for the balance. Appellant at the time was weak and infirm from old age and sickness, and was conveyed by Asa Adams in a vehicle to the office of a notary, and there the deed and the notes and mortgage set forth in the cross complaint herein were executed in the manner hereinafter stated. Before the payment of the $1,000, Adams, without the consent of Wise, took the deed from the notary's office, presented it to R. W. Poindexter, a real-estate agent who was loaning money for the deceased, Julia F. Gould, and there executed the note and mortgage set forth in plaintiff's complaint. He thereupon returned to the notary's office, where Wise was awaiting him, executed the notes and mortgage to Wise, and gave him a check for the cash payment, and Wise thereupon had his mortgage recorded. Prior to this time Poindexter went to the recorder's office, recorded the deed from appellant to Adams, and also the mortgage given to plaintiff. Appellant was ignorant of the transaction between Adams and Poindexter, and had no notice whatever concerning plaintiff's mortgage. When respondent's mortgage became due he commenced this action, and impleaded therein appellant, Wise, who answered, and filed his cross complaint, seeking to foreclose his mortgage, and claiming that it was prior and superior to plaintiff's mortgage.

The sole question involved in this case arises as to the relative priority of these respective mortgages. Upon the trial judgment went for the respondent, and this appeal is prosecuted from that judgment, and from the order denying a new trial. We will not enter into a discussion of the question whether the contract of sale constituted an equitable mortgage lien, of which the respondent had constructive notice, and which continued down to and merged in the mortgage made to Wise under the provisions of his contract. The case can be disposed of, and therefore should be disposed of, upon much more simple grounds. At the time respondent loaned the money and took the mortgage as security for the loan, Adams had no title to the land, and, as a necessary consequence, respondent got no security for the money loaned. This view of the matter is not directly presented in appellant's argument, but it goes to the heart of the case, and is so apparent from a reading of the evidence that we cannot avoid its consideration. Appellant gave the only evidence bearing upon this branch of the case, and his testimony was as follows: "I am eighty-three years old. I was sick on the 12th of March, and Adams came to my house in a buggy. He had a deed for my property with him, ready. He got me to sign it in the wagon. Then he took me to a place to give a mortgage. He was to give me one thousand dollars, and a mortgage and notes for the balance. He hurried me up so that he could get the money out of the bank before it was closed. A man came out of a door with a pen and ink, and swore me, and I signed the deed. Then Adams drove off, and took me to another place. He had spoke to a man to make out the mortgage, and he stayed there a little bit, and the man was making out the mortgage and writing it up. I thought I was to have the first mortgage. He says, 'Let me see that deed.' He got the deed, and cleared out with it. I didn't like it very good. I hadn't got no mortgage yet, and he left the mortgage and these notes laying there. He was not gone more than half an hour. He didn't leave the notes and mortgage with anybody; left them laying where the man was writing them. When he came back we drove to the courthouse, and I recorded my mortgage. He gave me a check for seven hundred dollars, and paid me most of the balance of the one thousand dollars afterwards in small sums. The deed laid on the table, and he says, 'Let me see that deed.' He reached over and pulled it away. I did not think he was going away, but he was gone. He signed the mortgage and notes when he came back, and gave me the check then." This evidence, sifted of immaterial matters, discloses that after the deed was signed and acknowledged, and while lying upon the table in the presence of both parties, it was taken therefrom by Adams, who thereupon left the room with the deed in his possession. At that moment the conveyancer was engaged in preparing the notes and mortgage which formed the principal consideration for the deed, and which were to be delivered contemporaneously with the deed. Upon this state of facts it is apparent that no delivery occurred at the time Adams obtained possession of it, and that, as a consequence, no title was in him at the time he negotiated the loan, and no mortgage lien was secured upon the realty by the mortgagee at that date as against the grantor, Wise. Delivery is the force that vitalizes the instrument. Here there was no life in the instrument, because there was no delivery. Delivery is dependent upon the intention—the consent—of the grantor, and here there was an entire absence of intention to make a delivery until the notes and mortgage were also delivered. The respective acts of the grantee and grantor as to the delivery of the deed and the securities were to be concurrent. The delivery of the deed was dependent upon the assent of the grantor, and his assent was dependent upon the performance of acts by the grantee. The grantee's possession of the deed upon any other terms or conditions was against the assent of the grantor, and for that reason the instrument had no life. This principle is elementary, but is fully discussed in Everts v. Agnes, 4 Wis. 343; Henry v. Carson, 96 Ind. 412; Fitzgerald v. Goff, 99 Ind. 28; Jones v. Loveless, Id. 317.

Again, it has been repeatedly held that the fraudulent procurement of a deed deposited as an escrow from the depository by the grantee named therein will not operate to pass the title, and the subsequent purchaser from such grantee, without notice, and for a valuable consideration, derives no title thereby, and will not be protected. Everts v. Agnes, 6 Wis. 453; Shirley v. Ayres, 14 Ohio, 308; Stanley v. Valentine, 79 Ill. 544; Harkreader v. Clayton, 56 Miss. 383; Henry v. Carson, supra; Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55. The foregoing cases are conclusive to the effect that, if a grantee secure possession of a deed clandestinely, or in any manner without a fulfillment of the agreed conditions, there has been no delivery with the assent of the grantor, and therefore no title has passed. These principles of law being established, there is nothing remaining to defeat appellant's rights in the premises, unless he was guilty of such negligence in allowing the deed to be taken from his presence and from the room as to create an estoppel against him in favor of respondent, as an innocent third party; and we think no such state of facts is disclosed by this record. The principle of equity that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who has enabled such third person to cause the loss must bear it, is entirely too broad in its scope to be invoked in this character of action. That principle is specially applicable where the loss has been occasioned by reason of a trust or confidential relation having existed, to some extent at least, towards the third party. But we have failed to find a case where an estoppel has been successfully pleaded under the circumstances here presented. To create an estoppel against the grantor in this character of action, if one can be created, requires the proof of that degree of negligence upon his part which could only result from the want of ordinary care. As was said in the case of Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 417, in discussing this principle with reference to the delivery of a promissory note: "The maker, therefore, cannot be held responsible for any negligence. There was nothing to prove negligence, unless he was bound to suspect and treat as a knave, a thief, or a criminal the man who came to his house, apparently on business, because he afterwards proved himself to be such. This we think would be preposterous." In Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55, Chief Justice Dixon, in speaking to this subject, said: "It might possibly be that a case of that kind could be presented where the negligence of the supposed grantor in this respect was so great, and his inattention and carelessness to the rights of others so marked, that the law would on that account estop him from setting up his title as against a bona fide purchaser for value under such a deed." Even conceding some negligence upon the part of the grantor, Wise, in allowing the deed to be removed from the room, it certainly does not reach that degree of negligence which would justify an estoppel against a plea of nondelivery of the deed. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 590

COYNE v. RENNIE. (No. 19,088.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1893.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SALARY OF CHIEF OF POLICE—REDUCTION.

1. Const. art. 11, § 8, provides that a city charter can be amended only on the vote of electors of the city, and the approval of the legislature. Charter San Diego, c. 9, art. 3, § 1, fixing the salary of the chief of police, provides that "the common council, in the month of January, 1891, and every four years thereafter, shall readjust and fix anew the amount of all official salaries." Held, that a reduction of the salaries was not an amendment of the charter, but was the execution of a power conferred on the common council by the charter itself.

2. The chief of police was not bound to hold office, and, after the salary was reduced, having voluntarily held it and accepted the reduced salary, until the expiration of his term, a demand for additional salary, made eight months afterwards, was properly refused.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Application by Joseph Coyne for a writ of mandamus to compel Gilbert Rennie, as auditor of the city of San Diego, to issue a warrant for certain salary. From a judgment dismissing the proceeding, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Parrish, Mossholder & Lewis, for appellant. William H. Fuller, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding for a writ of mandate to the respondent in his official character as auditor of the city of San Diego, commanding him to issue his warrant for an unpaid portion of plaintiff's salary as chief of police. The respondent demurred to the petition for the writ. The court sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the proceeding. Plaintiff brings this appeal from the judgment of dismissal, and contends that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

The petition shows that since May, 1889, the city of San Diego has been a municipal corporation by virtue of a charter generally known as a "Freeholders' Charter;" that from the date of the organization of the corporation until June 1, 1891, the petitioner held the office of chief of police; that by section 1, c. 9, art. 3, of the city charter, the salary of the chief of police was fixed at $1,800 per annum; that for the last four months of his official term, viz. February, March, April, and May, 1891, petitioner had been paid for salary only $100 per month, by reason of an ordinance of the city adopted January 31, 1891, by which the salary of chief of police was reduced to $1,200 per annum; and that after the expiration of his term of office, to wit, on February 24, 1892, the petitioner demanded of the auditor warrants upon the treasurer of the city for the unpaid portions of his salary for said four months, amounting to $200, which the auditor (respondent) refused to issue, for the alleged reason that the salary of the chief of police had been reduced, as aforesaid, by ordinance. Section 1, c. 9, art. 3, of the charter of San Diego, after fixing the salaries to be paid to certain city officers, including the chief of police, provides: "The common council, in the month of January, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and every four years thereafter, shall readjust and fix anew the amount of all official salaries provided for in this charter." It is contended by appellant that, notwithstanding this provision in the charter, the city had no power to reduce his salary, inasmuch as such reduction would be equivalent to an amendment of that clause in the charter fixing his salary; and under the provisions of section 8, art. 11, of the constitution, the charter can be amended only upon the vote of electors of the city and the approval of the legislature. The vice of this argument, however, rests in the assumption that the reduction of the salaries is an amendment of the charter. Instead thereof, it is the execution of a power conferred upon the common council by the charter itself, and is within the direct lines of the authority conferred by the people in the adoption of that instrument, as much as would be the redistricting of the city into wards in the year 1892, and every five years thereafter, which is authorized in section 12, c. 2, art. 1, of the same charter. The section is to be construed as if it was a direct provision that the salaries of the city officials shall be fixed in the month of January, 1891, and every four years thereafter, but that, until so fixed, they shall be at the amounts specified therein. It is well settled that the mere appointment or election of a municipal officer for a specified time and salary creates no contractual relation, if such officer is at liberty to resign whenever he may elect to do so. "Neither acts of the legislature nor ordinances of city councils or boards naming terms and salaries are in the nature of contracts with officers. Although the term and salary may be named in the charter, yet there is no contract for a stipulated time or price that is binding on the public." Love v. Jersey City, 40 N. J. Law, 458; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 231, 265. The appellant was not bound to hold the office, or to perform the duties thereof; and, after the salary was reduced, having voluntarily held the office and accepted the reduced salary until the expiration of his term, his demand upon the auditor for additional salary, made eight months afterwards, was properly refused.

The judgment is affirmed.

(97 Cal. 575)

RILEY v. MARTINELLI et al. (No. 18,084.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1893.)

EXECUTION SALE—TITLE ACQUIRED—UNRECORDED DEED—EVIDENCE OF NOTICE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where a judgment creditor bids in at a sheriff's sale and is given a deed of land, recorded in the name of the judgment debtor, but held in trust by such debtor for his wife, she having paid the purchase price, and permitted title to be taken in the husband's name, under an agreement that he was to convey it to her, such creditor acquires a good title thereto, where he had no notice of the wife's equity; Civil Code, § 1107, providing that grants of estates in land are conclusive against the grantor and every one subsequently claiming under him, except a purchaser or incumbrancer who in good faith acquires title by an instrument first duly recorded. Breeze v. Brooks, 9 Pac. Rep. 670, 11 Pac. Rep. 885, and 71 Cal. 169, and Id., 31 Pac. Rep. 742, distinguished.

2. In an action by such wife against the judgment creditor to obtain a judgment decreeing her to be the owner of such land, evidence of a witness as to declarations made to him by her as to her ownership of such land was properly refused, where it was not offered for the purpose of showing defendant's knowledge of such declarations.

3. Where, in an equity case, one issue is submitted to a jury, and the court afterwards adopts their verdict, and finds on all the issues of the case, errors in refusing instructions asked are immaterial. Hewlett v. Pilcher, 24 Pac. Rep. 782, 85 Cal. 545, followed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by Ellen L. Riley against F. Martinelli and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Eugene Aram and Craig & Hawkins, for appellant. F. E. Baker and R. Clark, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This action is brought to obtain a judgment decreeing Ellen L. Riley, the appellant, to be the owner of certain premises situate in Woodland, Yolo county; that a sheriff's sale thereof to defendant F. Martinelli be declared null and void, etc. J. T. Riley, one of the defendants, and Ellen L. Riley, the plaintiff, were at the several dates herein mentioned husband and wife. About January, 1880, plaintiff and her husband negotiated for the purchase of the premises in question, which negotiations culminated in the purchase and paying for the same by the plaintiff, who took a deed of conveyance therefor in the name of her husband, which deed was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of Yolo. The purchase price of the land was $375, and was paid by the plaintiff from her separate property. She also, according to her testimony, built a dwelling house upon the land, at an expense of $1,000, which was also paid for by her out of her separate property. Plaintiff and her husband, J. T. Riley, occupied the premises as a family residence up to the time of the levy of the execution hereinafter mentioned, and subsequent thereto, which was known to defendant Martinelli, but there was nothing in the manner or method of the residence or occupation or use of the property which imparted or tended to impart notice to any person that plaintiff had or claimed to have any separate property interest or estate in or to said premises. There was a private understanding between plaintiff and her husband, before the conveyance, that the title to the premises should be conveyed to the latter, and that thereafter, when plaintiff desired him to do so, he would convey to her. Plaintiff often requested her said husband to make such conveyance, but he failed and neglected so to do. Plaintiff stated to her friends that she claimed said premises as her property, but such claim was not openly proclaimed, was not known by the defendant Martinelli or by the public generally. Defendant Martinelli held a mortgage against property of the husband, J. T. Riley, other than the premises in question, which he foreclosed, and under which he sold; and, there being a deficiency, judgment was docketed in his favor and against J. T. Riley, upon which judgment execution issued to the sheriff, who levied upon the premises in question in this action and in due time, and, after proper notice, sold the same as by law required, said Martinelli, the judgment creditor, becoming the purchaser for $1,265.73, the amount of his judgment and costs. A certificate of sale was issued to him as purchaser, and a duplicate thereof recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of Yolo. The time for redemption expired July 10, 1891, and no redemption was made or had. Before purchasing the property, Martinelli examined the records of the county, and found it stood in the name of the husband, J. T. Riley, and that there was a mortgage thereon executed by the latter. The findings show that Martinelli, up to the time of his purchase, had no notice of any equitable claim of plaintiff in or to the premises. Martinelli received a sheriff's deed of the premises after the filing of the original complaint herein, but before the amended complaint was filed, viz. August 5, 1891. As between the plaintiff, who is appellant here, and her husband, there is no question but that the latter held the legal title to the premises in trust for the former.

The doctrine is well established that where land is purchased in the name of one person, and the consideration is paid by another, the land will be held by the grantee in trust for the person furnishing the consideration. Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 575; Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 92; Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119; Currey v. Allen, 34 Cal. 254. The doctrine is well established, also, that the lien of a judgment and execution attaches to the real, instead of the apparent, interest of the judgment debtor in and to his property; and that, under ordinary circumstances, a sale made under such lien transfers no interest beyond that in fact held by the defendant when the lien attached, or acquired by him subsequently thereto, and before the sale. Freem. Ex'ns, § 335; Freem. Judgm. §§ 356, 357; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 Pac. Rep. 820. "The purchaser at an execution sale takes his title subject to such liens, easements, and equities as it was subject to in the hands of the defendant in execution, unless he can show that he is a purchaser in good faith and without any notice, actual or constructive, of the existence of such lien, easement, or equity." Freem. Ex'ns, § 336. This doctrine does not, however, reach the point under consideration in this case. We may concede that the rule enunciated above applies to a third party purchasing at a sale under execution, and the question still remains, does the judgment creditor, who purchases at his own sale, and pays no money, but credits the amount of his bid on his judgment, stand in the same position as a third party who has purchased at a like sale and paid a money consideration? In other words, is the judgment creditor who bids at his own sale, and, as the effect thereof, satisfies his judgment in whole or in part, a purchaser for value in that sense which entitles him to protection? The authorities are by no means uniform on the question. In Iowa, in Gower v. Doheney, 33 Iowa, 36, a case in which the judgment debtor held lands under an implied trust in pursuance of which, subsequent to the judgment, he conveyed to the cestui que trust, the latter failed to record his deed, and the lands were purchased by the judgment creditor at execution sale without notice of the deed or of the equitable estate, and it was held that the execution creditor took his title freed from the equity. The decision was based upon the equitable theory that, where one of two innocent parties must suffer, the loss should fall upon that party who has been guilty of the first negligence. Other cases in Iowa hold that when a creditor merges his judgment into a title, without notice, actual or constructive, of private equities, he becomes a purchaser, and is entitled to protection equally with any subsequent bona fide purchaser. In Indiana the court held both ways on the question. See Vitito v. Hamilton, 86 Ind. 197, and Carnahan v. Yerkes, 87 Ind. 62. In the latter case it was held that "an execution creditor who bids off property at a sale upon his own execution, and applies the bid to the payment of his own judgment, is not regarded as a bona fide or innocent purchaser." It is sufficient to say that a large number of cases to like effect are to be found, holding with more or less uniformity that a plaintiff purchasing at a sale under his own writ takes subject to all equities against the defendant in execution, whether he has notice of them or not. This view is founded upon the theory that to constitute a person a "bona fide purchaser," within the meaning of the law, he must, upon the faith of the purchase of the property, have advanced for it a valuable consideration, and that a creditor antecedent to his purchase, who pays for the purchase by a credit on his own demand, has parted with no consideration on the faith of the purchase, and is not such a bona fide purchaser as is entitled to protection against equities of which he has no notice. It is believed, however, that the current of modern authority tends to the doctrine that a judgment creditor purchasing at his own sale, equally with a third party making a purchase under the execution, is protected against latent equities of which he had no notice; and we can see no good reason for the distinction to which we have alluded. If A. advances money to B., which is not paid, and he obtains judgment, issues execution, levies upon the property of B., attends the sale, and, being the highest bidder, purchases the property, it is difficult to see why he is in a different position from any other purchaser. In such a case, the law seizes the property and sells it to the highest bidder, and the judgment creditor takes it, not in his capacity as creditor, but as purchaser. The law of this state, with a view no doubt of benefiting the debtor, by causing his property to bring the best attainable price, permits and encourages the creditor, alike with others, to purchase at sales under execution, and, having done so, the fact that he advanced the purchase price last month or last year should not militate against his rights, or alter his status in the eye of the law. It has repeatedly been held in this court that a conveyance in consideration of the cancellation of a pre-existing indebtedness is a conveyance for a valuable consideration, within the meaning of section 1214 of our Civil Code. Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. Rep. 680; Gassen v. Hendrick, 74 Cal. 444, 16 Pac. Rep. 242; Schluter v. Harvey, 65 Cal. 158, 3 Pac. Rep. 659; Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335. In this state we think the question has been settled in consonance with this view. In Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 377, (Baldwin, J., delivering the opinion of the court, Field, J., concurring,) it was said: "But a judgment creditor purchasing at his own sale, without notice, is a 'bona fide purchaser,' within the act. The cases are not agreed upon this subject, but the weight of authority and the reason of the rule are as we have stated it." The act referred to in the foregoing quotation was the recordation act of 1850. Section 1107 of our Civil Code is as follows: "Every grant of an estate in real property is conclusive against the grantor, also against every one subsequently claiming under him, except a purchaser or incumbrancer who in good faith and for a valuable consideration acquires a title or lien by an instrument that is first duly recorded." In Forman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. Rep. 680, it was held that a sheriff's certificate of sale of real property "is the evidence of the equitable interest which the purchaser has in the land, and is an 'instrument,' whereby an interest is created, within the meaning of section 1107 of the Civil Code," and in favor of the proposition Page v. Rogers, 31 Cal. 301, was cited. Forman v. Wallace held also that the filing and recording of the certificate of sale imparted constructive notice to all the world, and that the right acquired thereunder was prior and paramount to the title of a prior unrecorded deed, of which the holder of the sheriff's certificate had no notice at the date of recordation.

The plaintiff here cannot be said to be in a better position than she would have been had she held an unrecorded conveyance of the property. It was in her power for many years to have enforced her equitable right to the property; but having failed to do so until a sale thereof, and the recording of the evidence of such sale under an execution against her husband, who was the ostensible owner thereof, and in whose name the title was recorded, she comes too late to ask for relief against one clothed with the legal title and an equal equity. There is nothing in the views herein expressed in conflict with either of the decisions in Breeze v. Brooks, 71 Cal. 169, 9 Pac. Rep. 670, and 11 Pac. Rep. 885; Id., 31 Pac. Rep. 742. In that case Patrick Brooks was the equitable owner of land the legal title to which stood in the name of John Brooks. The latter obtained credit from the plaintiffs in the cause, who believed him to be the owner. John Brooks conveyed the legal title to Patrick, the owner of the equity, who caused his deed to be recorded. Subsequently the plaintiffs brought suit against John on their demand, obtained judgment, sold the land under execution, became the purchasers, and in due time obtained a sheriff's deed, under which they sought to subject the land to their claim. There they sought to show that Patrick Brooks was estopped by his acts in the premises from asserting title; here the estoppel comes from the effect of our recording act, which establishes what the court has held to be a salutary and binding rule.

At the trial the court submitted to a jury the following single issue and question, against plaintiff's objection and exception, to wit: "Did Martinelli, on January 10, 1891, have notice that the property belonged to Mrs. Riley?" To which the jury answered, "No." Counsel for plaintiff asked the court to submit to the jury the questions, in substance, (1) whether at the date of his purchase Martinelli had actual notice that plaintiff claimed the property, etc., which was substantially submitted; (2) whether at the said date he had constructive notice of such fact, which was refused by the court. Counsel then asked certain instructions in reference to actual and constructive notice, substantially as defined in sections 18 and 19 of the Civil Code, which were refused by the court, and the refusal excepted to. We think the court, on its own motion, instructed the jury as to the question submitted, as far as was necessary. It was an equity case, and the court adopted the answer of the jury, it is true, in its findings of fact, but it proceeded at length to find upon all the issues in the case. This being so, the refusal to give instructions is not cause for a reversal of the case. Hewlett v. Pilcher, 85 Cal. 545, 24 Pac. Rep. 781. The evidence was sufficient to warrant the findings.

There was no error in striking out the testimony of the witness Balzari as to declarations made to him by the plaintiff in reference to her ownership of the property, because it was not proposed to bring knowledge of such declarations home to defendant Martinelli. Again, the finding of the court as to plaintiff's ownership of the property cured the error, if any there was. Upon a review of the whole record, it is believed the cause was fairly tried and properly decided, and that the order overruling the motion for a new trial and the judgment should be affirmed; and we so advise.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VAN-CLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

99 Cal. 593

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. BALLERINO
et al. (No. 19,036.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

DELINQUENT TAXES—COLLECTION—PENALTY—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. Under St. 1880, p. 136, providing that "any county, or city and county," where taxes are delinquent, may sue in its own name for the recovery thereof, "whether the same be for county or city, or city and county and state purposes or taxes, or either of them," a county may sue for delinquent taxes levied for county purposes only; and defendant cannot claim that it ought also to have sued for delinquent state taxes, levied in the same year, and not to have split its demand, thus subjecting defendant to two actions, when it is not alleged in the answer that another action to recover the state taxes is pending, or has been prosecuted to judgment.

2. An action to recover delinquent taxes is not within Code Civil Proc. § 339, providing that an action "upon a contract obligation or liability not founded on an instrument in writing" must be brought within two years after the cause of action accrues, but it is within section 338, providing that an action on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture, must be brought within three years.

3. Pol. Code, § 3770, directs that 5 per cent. on the amount of the delinquent tax be collected in addition to such delinquent tax. Held, that the added per cent. is not such a penalty or forfeiture as is excepted from the operation of Code Civil Proc. § 338, or as falls within section 340, requiring an action "upon a statute for penalty or forfeiture when the action is given to an individual and the state" to be brought within one year after the cause of action accrues; but the statute contemplates that it shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the delinquent tax, and the right to recover it is not lost until the cause of action on the delinquent tax is barred.

4. Where a party defends an action for delinquent taxes on the ground that his property was fraudulently assessed in excess of its real value, he must show by his answer that he has paid or tendered the amount which would have been due if his property had been assessed at a fair valuation, and he must offer to pay what the court shall find equitable and just; otherwise evidence cannot be admitted as to matters alleged in the answer in regard to the unjust discriminations made against him in the assessment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by the county of Los Angeles against one Ballerino and others to recover delinquent taxes. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Horace Allen, for appellants. James McLachlan, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an action by the county of Los Angeles to recover from the defendant Ballerino taxes levied for county purposes in the year 1888 upon certain real property and improvements owned by him in that county. The prayer of the complaint is for judgment against that defendant for the amount of the tax, "with five per cent. thereon for delinquencies, and two per cent. per month interest thereon from the last Monday of December, 1888, * * * and for a decree * * * that said real estate be sold, as provided by law," etc. The superior court gave judgment for plaintiff in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. The defendant appeals.

1. The act of April 23, 1880, (St. 1880, p. 136,) authorizing the bringing of suits to recover delinquent taxes, and prescribing the form of complaint therefor, provides in its first section that "any county or city and county, where such taxes are delinquent, may sue in its own name for the recovery of delinquent taxes, whether the same be for county or city, or city and county and state purposes or taxes, or either of them." This statute gives to plaintiff the right to maintain this action. County of San Luis Obispo v. White, 91 Cal. 432, 24 Pac. Rep. 864, and 27 Pac. Rep. 756. It is claimed by defendant that the plaintiff ought also to have sued in this action for the delinquent state taxes for the year 1888; that, having authority to sue for both state and county taxes, it ought not to have split its demand, thus subjecting the defendant to two actions, when the whole matter in controversy could have been settled in one suit. But the question the defendant thus presents in argument does not arise upon this record, as it is not alleged in the answer that any other action is pending to recover the state taxes, or that any such action has been prosecuted to judgment; and the defendant is certainly not injured because the plaintiff did not sue for all that it was entitled to demand.

2. The action was not commenced until more than two years after it accrued, and defendant contends that it is barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an action "upon a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded upon an instrument in writing," must be brought within two years after the cause of action accrues. This, however, is not such an action, but is one which arises upon a liability created by statute other than a penalty or forfeiture within the meaning of section 338 of the same Code. San Francisco v. Luning, 73 Cal. 610, 15 Pac. Rep. 311; San Francisco v. Jones, 20 Fed. Rep. 188; Lewis v. Rothchild, 92 Cal. 625, 23 Pac. Rep. 805; State v. Mining Co., 14 Nev. 226. The 5 per cent. upon the amount of the delinquent tax, which, under section 3770 of the Political Code, the tax collector is directed to collect in addition to such delinquent tax, and which additional sum is included in the amount sued for in this action, is not such a penalty or forfeiture as is excepted from the operation of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or as falls within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 340 of the same Code, requiring "an action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture when the action is given to an individual or to an individual and the state" to be brought within one year after the cause of action accrues. The statutory penalty there referred to is one which an individual is allowed to recover against a wrongdoer as a satisfaction for the wrong or injury suffered, and without reference to the actual damages sustained, or one which is given to the individual and the state as a punishment for some act which is in the nature of a public wrong. The action to recover such a penalty is a penal action, founded upon a statute, and is the action which, under section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, must be brought within one year. But this is not such an action. Even in so far as the plaintiff seeks to recover the additional percentage which defendant has incurred by reason of his delinquency, the statute contemplates that the added per cent. sued for here shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the delinquent tax, and the right to recover is not lost until the cause of action upon such delinquent tax is barred. It is not, in terms, imposed as a penalty or punishment by section 3770 of the Political Code, (High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363,) and is only a mere incident to the cause of action arising upon the statutory liability to pay the taxes duly levied upon property which has been assessed in accordance with law.

3. As one defense to the action, the defendant alleged in his answer that the assessor fraudulently and corruptly assessed his real estate at the exorbitant valuation of $120,000, an excess of $101,400 over and above its cash value; and in this connection the answer further alleged "that the said assessor did willfully and fraudulently and corruptly discriminate against this defendant in making his assessments; for instance, that while he imposed an assessment on his parcel of real property at more than $800 per acre, he at the same time assessed the adjoining farm at $200 per acre, and other farms of better land at $50 per acre; that such exorbitant assessment on this parcel of real property was not from error of judgment on the part of said assessor, but it was done from corrupt and fraudulent motives, as aforesaid." Upon the trial the defendant offered to show by witnesses that the cash value of his property upon which the assessment in question was made in the year 1888 did not exceed $50 per acre, and he offered to show by the assessment roll for that year that 67 acres of adjoining land belonging to another person was assessed at only $15,000, or about one fourth the amount for which the land of defendant was assessed the same year. This offered evidence was excluded by the court, and we see no error in the ruling. It is undoubtedly true that a taxpayer may enjoin the collection of a tax founded upon an assessment fraudulently and corruptly made with the intention of discriminating against him, and for the purpose of causing him to pay more than his share of the public taxes, (Merrill v. Humphrey, 24 Mich. 170; Leferts v. Board of Supervisors, 21 Wis. 688; Iron Co. v. Hubbard, 29 Wis. 51;) and it is equally true that the fact of such a fraudulent assessment would be available to the taxpayer as an equitable defense in an action brought to enforce the collection of a tax founded upon an assessment of that character. But in appealing to a court of equity for relief by way of injunction against such fraudulent assessment, the plaintiff must show by his complaint that he has paid or tendered the amount of taxes which would have been due from him if his property had been assessed at what he concedes would have been a fair valuation, and he must, in addition, offer to pay what the court shall find to be equitable and just, (Merrill v. Humphrey, 24 Mich. 170; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 616; Huntington v. Palmer, 7 Sawy. 355;¹ Bank v. Kimball, 103 U. S. 732; Montgomery v. Sayre, 65 Ala. 564; 1 High, Inj. § 491;) and we think the same facts should appear in an answer which seeks to defend against the collection of a tax upon the ground of a fraudulent assessment. Tested by this requirement, the answer of defendant fails to state facts sufficient to constitute an equitable defense to this action growing out of such alleged fraudulent assessment. It contains no allegation that defendant ever paid or offered to pay what would have been right for him to pay upon what he concedes would have been a fair valuation of his property, nor does he offer to pay what the court shall ascertain to be just; and for this reason there was no error in excluding the evidence offered by him tending to prove the matters alleged in his answer as to the value of his land and the discrimination made against him in his assessment. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

97 Cal. 507

LA SOCIETE FRANCAISE DE BIENFAISANCE MUTUELLE DE LOS ANGELES v. WEIDEMANN et al. (No. 19,105.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1893.)

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—DEFICIENCY DECREE—PARTIES—TENANTS IN COMMON.

1. Where a complaint in foreclosure names a partnership as a party defendant, and an amended complaint is filed, naming each member of the partnership individually as defendants, a judgment for a deficiency cannot be rendered against the partnership; the fact that service of summons and the original complaint was made on the partnership being immaterial.

2. A complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage alleged that defendant W. executed a conveyance of the land on which the mortgage is sought to be foreclosed to defendants A., S., and R., forming the copartnership of R. & Co., which mortgage the grantees in such conveyance agreed to pay; that defendants A. and S. and the representatives of R., deceased, claim an interest in such land. The prayer was for judgment against defendants. Held, that the complaint shows that the title was in A., S., and R. as tenants in common, and not as a firm.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. Clark, Judge.

Action by La Societe Francaise de Bienfaisance Mutuelle de Los Angeles against Henry Weidemann and others to foreclose a mortgage. There was judgment of foreclosure, and that defendants Roth & Co. pay any deficiency if the sale of the land failed to satisfy the mortgage, and they appeal. Reversed.

Rosenbaum & Sheeline and Reymert & Orfilia, for appellants. Bicknell & Denis, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an appeal by Roth & Co. from that portion of the decree of foreclosure and order of sale which adjudges and decrees that, if the moneys arising from the sale shall be insufficient to pay the amount found due to the plaintiff, together with the costs and expenses of sale, the clerk shall docket a judgment for the balance against Roth & Co., a copartnership, together with interest on such deficiency judgment at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; and also from the deficiency judgment against defendant entered by the clerk upon the return of the sheriff. The action was commenced on October 22, 1890, and summons was issued on the same day. The defendants named in the original complaint were Henry Weidemann and Roth & Co., a copartnership composed of A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Joseph Roth. The note and mortgage upon which the action was based were executed and delivered by defendant Weidemann to the plaintiff March 29, 1888. It was alleged in the complaint "that the defendants Roth &

Co., a copartnership composed of A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Joseph Roth, have or claim to have some interest in or claim upon said premises, or some part thereof, as purchasers, mortgagees, and judgment creditors, or otherwise, which interest or claims are subsequent to and subject to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage." A decree in the usual form was prayed for, including a deficiency judgment against Henry Weidemann in case the property should be sold for less than the amount of the judgment. Summons was duly served upon the defendants, but no appearance was made by any of them. On November 12, 1891, plaintiff filed an amended complaint in which the defendants named were "Henry Weidemann, A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Bertha Roth, A. F. Benard, and O. Bozio, executrix and executors, respectively, of the last will of Joseph Roth, deceased." In this amended complaint it was alleged that on January 22, 1890, Weidemann sold and conveyed the property to "A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Joseph Roth, they—the said Roos, Scheeline and Roth—then constituting the firm of Roth & Co., of the city of San Francisco;" that the deed contained the following provision: "Subject, however, to a certain mortgage of $2,000 held by the French Benevolent Society of Los Angeles, California, which payment the grantees herein hereby assume and agree to pay." This amended complaint was served upon all of the defendants, none of whom appeared. The court heard the evidence offered by the plaintiff, and thereupon rendered the decree which includes the deficiency judgment against Roth & Co. above referred to. The property was sold by the sheriff, who reported to the court that he had sold the land at public auction to the plaintiff, who was the highest bidder therefor, for the sum of $2,000. After deducting his fees and expenses, amounting to the sum of $54.50, there remained a balance due and unsatisfied of $1,265.75. Thereupon the clerk made the proper entries in the judgment docket for a deficiency judgment against the appellants and in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $1,265.75.

It is claimed by the appellant that there is nothing in the complaint upon which to base the deficiency judgment against Roth & Co., and we think the contention is sound. The partnership was not named as a party defendant in the amended complaint. When the amended complaint was filed and served, the original ceased to perform any other function as a pleading, and the fact that service of the summons and the original complaint was made upon Roth & Co. is immaterial. It is claimed by respondent that "after the amendment of the complaint the action retained its identity, whatever the title given in the amended complaint, and each member of the firm being sued, the firm was sued." This proposition as to the effect of an amended complaint adding or dropping parties defendant is palpably erroneous, but the amended complaint shows very clearly that the conveyance by Weidemann was not to the firm of Roth & Co., but to Roos, Scheeline, and Roth, as tenants in common. It is alleged in the complaint that "said A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Joseph Roth, did thereby assume and agree to pay," etc.; also, "that the defendants A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Bertha Roth, A. F. Benard and O. Bozio, executrix and executors of the estate of said Joseph Roth, have, or claim to have, some interest in or claim upon said premises." The prayer of the complaint is for judgment against "the said defendants Henry Weidemann, A. Roos, S. Scheeline, and Bertha Roth, A. F. Benard, and O. Bozio," and for judgment and execution against the defendants for any deficiency. Conceding that a partnership as such can take a conveyance of land, the language of the deed itself cannot be construed as a grant to the copartnership. It is as follows: "That the said party of the first part [Weidemann] for and in consideration of the sum of $4,000 * * * does by these presents grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto the said party of the second part, and to their heirs and assigns forever, * * * subject, however, to a certain mortgage of $2,000, * * * which payment the grantees herein hereby assume and agree to pay, * * * to have and to hold all and singular the said premises * * * unto the said parties of the second part, and to their heirs and assigns forever." That portion of the decree described in the notice of appeal, and the deficiency judgment entered by the clerk against Roth & Co., are reversed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

97 Cal. 484

GUTZEIT v. PENNIE et al. (No. 15,261.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—BOND ON APPEAL—STAY OF EXECUTION—RIGHTS OF JUNIOR MORTGAGEE.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 945, provides that, if a judgment direct the sale of land, the execution cannot be stayed, unless the undertaking on the part of appellant provides against waste, and when the judgment is for the sale of mortgaged premises, and the payment of any deficiency, the undertaking must provide for such payment. Held, that where a judgment in mortgage foreclosure directs the payment of a junior mortgage out of the surplus after payment of the prior mortgage, and, if the surplus be not sufficient, then that appellant, one of defendants, be made personally liable for the remainder, an undertaking to stay the execution is insufficient, in which the sureties are liable only in case of waste, and no provision is made for payment of the deficiency.

2. Where a junior mortgagee, who is made one of defendants in foreclosure proceedings by the prior mortgagee, by suitable pleadings between himself and the mortgagor, has the amount of his mortgage determined, and provision is made in the judgment for the sale of the premises, he has the same right to have the judgment executed as though he had instituted the action, and he did not waive his right to the enforcement of the judgment by not objecting to the insufficiency of the undertaking to stay execution at the time such undertaking was given.

Department 1.

Action by one Gutzeit against J. C. Pennie and others, Bozo Radovich, and Elia

Chielovich, for the foreclosure of a mortgage. From the judgment defendant Radovich appealed. Afterwards an order of sale was issued, and placed in the hands of the sheriff for execution. Appellant moves for a writ of supersedeas. Denied.

Eugene N. Deuprey, for petitioner. J. R. Patton, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Motion for a writ of supersedeas. The plaintiff brought this action for the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by one Palmer upon certain lands in Santa Clara county. After the execution of the mortgage, Palmer conveyed the property, and thereafter died. The defendants in the action are persons who have acquired an interest in the mortgaged premises, under Palmer, subsequent to the date of the mortgage. Palmer's grantee made an agreement with the appellant, Radovich, for a conveyance of a portion of the mortgaged premises, under which Radovich entered into possession, and thereafter made a mortgage of said premises to the respondent Chielovich. Chielovich, in addition to his answer to the plaintiff's complaint, set up this mortgage by way of a cross complaint against Radovich, and issue was joined thereon by Radovich. The court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of his claim and for a sale of the premises, and also in favor of Chielovich for the amount of his claim against Radovich, and directed that out of the proceeds of said sale the sheriff, after paying the claims of the plaintiff, and certain other prior liens,—amounting in the aggregate to about $33,000,—should, if there were any surplus proceeds in his hands therefor, pay to Chielovich the amount of his claim against Radovich, and, if the surplus proceeds therefor were insufficient to make such payment, judgment should be docketed in his favor against Radovich for the deficiency. Radovich appealed from the whole of the said judgment, making both the plaintiff and Chielovich respondents, and gave an undertaking in the sum of $300 for the costs of appeal, and also an undertaking in the sum of $10,000 against waste; that amount having been fixed by the judge of the court. The undertaking against committing waste, after reciting the order of the judge fixing the amount, is that the surety, "in consideration thereof and of the premises, does undertake and promise, and does acknowledge itself bound in the sum of ten thousand dollars, that, during the possession of such real property by the appellant, he will not commit, or suffer to be committed, any waste thereon, and does undertake and promise that this undertaking for a stay of proceedings herein is given in compliance with the provisions of section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California, and in conformity to the order of court in this connection, as aforesaid." After the appeal had been taken, Chielovich caused an order of sale to be issued upon the judgment, and placed it in the hands of the sheriff for execution, and, the sheriff being about to sell the premises under said order of sale, Radovich applied to this court for a writ of supersedeas pending the appeal, and urges in support thereof that the undertaking given by him is sufficient to stay the execution of the judgment.

Section 942, Code Civil Proc., provides that an appeal from a judgment directing the payment of money does not stay the execution of the judgment unless an undertaking be given on behalf of the appellant, in double the amount of the judgment for the payment of the judgment in case it be affirmed. And section 945 provides that, "if the judgment or order appealed from direct the sale or delivery of possession of real property, the execution of the same cannot be stayed unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the appellant, with two or more sureties, to the effect that, during the possession of such property by the appellant, he will not commit, or suffer to be committed, any waste thereon;" and the same section further provides that "when the judgment is for the sale of mortgaged premises, and the payment of a deficiency arising upon the sale, the undertaking must also provide for the payment of such deficiency." In Johnson v. King, 91 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. Rep. 644, it was held that, if the appellant from a decree of foreclosure which provides for the payment of a deficiency upon the sale would stay the execution of the judgment, he must give an undertaking for the payment of such deficiency, even though he is not the party against whom the deficiency judgment was rendered; and this rule was affirmed in Spence v. Scott, 95 Cal. 152, 30 Pac. Rep. 202.

The judgment in the present case, after providing for the sale of the mortgaged premises, and the payment of the claims whose lien is prior to that of Chielovich, provides that, if any surplus proceeds shall thereafter remain, the sheriff shall pay therefrom to Chielovich the sum of $3,849.40, with interest from the date of the decree to the date of sale, or so much thereof as such surplus proceeds will pay, and that, if the surplus moneys shall be insufficient to pay said amount to defendant Chielovich, "the judgment of this court shall be docketed for such balance against the defendant Bozo Radovich in favor of said Elia Chielovich, and that the defendant Bozo Radovich, who is personally liable for the payment of the debt secured by the said defendant's mortgage, pay to the said defendant Elia Chielovich the amount of such deficiency and judgment, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the date of said last-mentioned return and judgment, and that the defendant Elia Chielovich have execution therefor against Bozo Radovich." This provision in the judgment brings the case within the express language of the statute, and upon the authority of the foregoing cases the undertaking must be held insufficient to stay the execution of the judgment. The clause in the undertaking, that it is given in compliance with the provisions of section 945 in the Code of Civil Procedure, does not extend its effect beyond the condition for which it was executed. The order of the court limits the condition of the undertaking to the commission of waste on the part of the appellant, and in any action upon the undertaking the surety could be held liable only upon proof that waste had been committed on the part of the appellant. In any attempt to recover from the surety the amount of any deficiency in the judgment, he would have a perfect defense in the fact that his undertaking made no provision therefor. The provision of section 945, requiring the judge to fix the amount of the undertaking against waste, is distinct from the clause which requires that the undertaking must also provide for the payment of a deficiency; and the authority of the judge to fix the penalty of the undertaking is limited to the object named in the clause in which it is granted. For the purpose of staying the execution of the judgment the appellant must give an undertaking against waste, and also an undertaking to pay the deficiency; the former in the amount that may be fixed by the judge, and the latter for the entire deficiency, whatever that amount may prove to be.

It was competent for Chielovich to cause the clerk of the court to issue the order of sale upon the judgment, and place it in the hands of the sheriff for execution. By virtue of his cross complaint against Radovich, he was the plaintiff, as against Radovich, for the purpose of foreclosing his mortgage, and the judgment thereon, although rendered in the same action with that of the plaintiff, Gutzeit, was a judgment in his favor against Radovich, which he had the right to enforce. In any sale of the premises under such judgment, he could receive no portion of the proceeds until after the satisfaction of the prior liens, but, unless the execution of the same was stayed, he had the right to have the premises sold for the purpose either of receiving therefrom the amount of his judgment against Radovich, or, if there should be a deficiency, of ascertaining the amount of such deficiency, and collecting the same from other property of Radovich. The plaintiff could not either capriciously, or by any arrangement with the appellant, allow the judgment in his favor to remain unexecuted, and the amount of its lien upon the mortgaged premises thereby to increase, to the detriment of the junior mortgagee; but, after the entry of the judgment by which the amount and priority of the several liens upon the premises was determined, either party to the judgment had the right to its execution. A junior mortgagee has a right, in an action to foreclose his mortgage, to bring before the court the holder of a prior mortgage, which has matured, and obtain a decree for the sale of the premises and the satisfaction of his own mortgage, after payment of the amount of the prior mortgage; and when, in an action brought by the holder of the prior mortgage, a junior mortgagee, by suitable pleadings, as between himself and the mortgagor, has the amount of his mortgage determined, and provision made in the judgment for its sale, he has the same right to have the judgment executed as though he had himself instituted the action.

Chielovich did not waive his right to the enforcement of the judgment by reason of not objecting to the insufficiency of the undertaking at the time it was given. He had obtained a judgment in his favor, and there remained nothing more for him to do in order to entitle him to its enforcement. He was at liberty to enforce it at any time during its life. If the appellant would stay its execution, it was incumbent upon him to give such an undertaking as the statute requires, and he assumed the burden of a compliance with the statute. If he omitted to take such steps as would constitute a compliance, it was his fault, rather than that of Chielovich. The motion for a writ is denied, and the temporary restraining order heretofore made herein is discharged.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTT^{SR} J.

97 Cal. 542

PEOPLE v. GILLIS. (No. 20,944.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—RECORD.

1. In a prosecution by the state, a question to the prosecuting witness as to whether he employed the attorney who was assisting the district attorney in the prosecution was competent, as tending to show whether the witness was interested in the proceedings to the prejudice of defendant.

2. Where the record is so incomplete that the appellate court is unable to form an opinion as to the propriety of a ruling of the court below which was excepted to, the ruling will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

William Gillis was convicted of simple assault, and appeals. Reversed.

M. L. Rawson and H. E. Doolittle, for appellant. W. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., and Johnstone Jones, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SEARLS, C. The defendant, William Gillis, was prosecuted by information for an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one Till Vasquez, and upon trial by a jury was convicted of "simple assault." Judgment was rendered upon the verdict, imposing a fine of $200. From the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, this appeal is taken. Two errors are assigned by the appellant.

1. At the trial the prosecution was conducted by District Attorney Johnstone Jones and J. L. Copeland, Esq., as associate counsel. Upon cross-examination, counsel for defendant asked Till Vasquez, the prosecuting witness, the following question: "Have you employed Mr. Copeland in this case?" The question was objected to as immaterial and irrelevant. Counsel for appellant insisted the question was intended to show the interest of the witness. The court sustained the objection, remarking: "It is presumed the prosecuting witness has interest. I do not think it necessary." This ruling is assigned as error. It is a well-settled doctrine that in determining the guilt or innocence of one charged with crime it is proper to inquire of a witness for the prosecution, on cross-examination, whether he has not expressed feelings of hostility towards the prisoner. Questions of like character, tending to show animus, are equally proper. It has been contended that in the case of a prosecuting witness who has been directly injured by the alleged offense, bias and feeling are to be presumed by the jury, and the propriety of permitting or refusing questions of this character should be confined to the discretion of the trial court, and that error assigned upon its action should not be upheld. In the light of the former rulings of this court, I am not at liberty to consider this distinction. In People v. Blackwell, 27 Cal. 66, which was a criminal action, the prosecutrix was asked by defendant's counsel, on cross-examination, "if she had employed Budd & Carr and Heslep & Jenkins to assist the district attorney in the prosecution?" The district attorney objected to the question on the ground that the proof was incompetent. The objection was sustained, and the defendant excepted. This court, in its opinion, reversing the judgment, said: "We cannot determine, nor is it either necessary or proper for us to inquire, what, if any, effect an affirmative answer to the question would have had on the minds of the jury. The defendant had a right to ask the question. If a witness retain counsel in a case to which he is not a party, and in the result of which he has no interest, it is a fact going to the credibility of the witness. The witness may have thus interposed on considerations of humanity, or of public justice, or he may have been influenced by private grudge; but the party against whom the witness is produced is always entitled to inquire of the witness as to the fact, and, if admitted, it goes to the jury for whatever it is worth; and such explanation of motives as the witness may give for his action goes with it." Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173, and 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 449, 450, are cited in support of the opinion. People v. Lee Ah Chuck, 66 Cal. 662, 6 Pac. Rep. 859, and the late case of People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 28 Pac. Rep. 589, are to the same effect. In the case last cited a witness for the prosecution in a case of homicide testified, on cross-examination, that "shortly after the shooting he went to the scene of the homicide, and took his rifle with him. Question. What did you take your rifle with you for?" An objection to this question was sustained, and the ruling was held erroneous. I am of opinion a like conclusion should be reached upon the error assigned in this case.

2. The second error assigned is based upon the action of the court in ruling out the answer contained in a deposition taken on behalf of the defendant. At the taking of the deposition, counsel for defendant asked the following question: "Do you know what the reputation of William Gillis, the defendant in this action, is; that is, what his general reputation is for peace and quiet, and as a law-abiding citizen?" It does not appear that any objection was made to the question at the time and place of taking the deposition. It was objected to, however, at the trial, as not being in statutory form, and as incompetent; the objection was sustained by the court, and the ruling excepted to. The position taken by counsel for defendant in their brief seems to be and is that the deposition in question was taken by stipulation of counsel before a notary public, in the presence of counsel for the people and for defendant; that no objection was taken to the question at the time or previous to the hearing, and that it was then too late. The record is searched in vain for light on this subject. It nowhere appears when or where or before whom the deposition was taken, whether within or out of the state, whether in the presence or absence of counsel for the people. In short, there is an entire absence of such a statement as will enable us to form an opinion as to the propriety of the action of the court below. As error will not be assumed, but must be shown by the record, it must be held that the second error urged is without foundation. For the reasons given relating to the first error it is advised that the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 839)

AUBURN OPERA-HOUSE & PAVILION ASS'N v. HILL. (No. 18,097.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1893.)

CORPORATIONS—SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—LIABILITY OF SUBSCRIBER—WAIVER OF CONDITIONS.

1. In an action by an opera house company to recover a subscription to its capital stock, it appeared that a "prospectus" recited in detail the objects of the intended corporation, the amount of stock, etc., and that the subscriptions were to be called in on installments; that defendant signed the prospectus for a certain number of shares; that four calls had been ordered by the board of directors, and payment demanded; and that defendant had failed to pay. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover.

2. Such prospectus stated that the building was "to be built by a corporation with a capital stock of $20,000, consisting of one thousand shares at twenty dollars per share." Held, that it was not a condition precedent to defendant's liability that $20,000 of plaintiff's stock should be first subscribed for.

3. It appeared that defendant was one of plaintiff's directors for two months, during which time he signed the articles of incorporation, was present at meetings of the board when the calls for the first two installments were ordered, and voted in favor of accepting the building lot, and that he served as a member of the building committee, prepared several plans for building, and consulted various architects and contractors about the same. Held, that, though the subscription for the full amount of stock mentioned in such contract was a condition precedent to defendant's liability, he had waived any objection on the ground that such amount was not subscribed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

(Not to be published in California Reports.)

Action by the Auburn Opera-House & Pavilion Association against George M. Hill on a contract of subscription to stock in such corporation. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

The complaint set out the prospectus in full, which constitutes the alleged contract signed by defendant, as follows: "Object: To build an opera house and pavilion, combined, in Auburn, Placer county, California. To be built by a corporation with a capital stock of $20,000, consisting of one thousand shares at twenty dollars per share. The property to be owned by the shareholders, and controlled and managed by a board of trustees. The building to be used for opera-house purposes, balls, large assemblies, reunions, and conventions, and with the pavilion annex for district fair exhibits, circus exhibits, celebrations, and drill hall. The revenues to pay dividends on stock will be derived from rentals of storerooms below and offices above on street front, and theatric-als, balls, fairs, etc., etc., from rear portions of building. The location of the building, and the selection of the trustees, to be determined by the subscribers of the majority of the stock. As the district fair is again approaching, the above suggestions, if carried out, will solve the vexed question of a permanent exhibit hall for our district fair, besides furnishing a much-needed public building for Auburn. The subscriptions to be called in on installments, as needed to purchase a site, and erect and furnish the building." The names of subscribers, with the number of shares and the amount subscribed, follow. It was also stated in the complaint that, when stock to the amount of $17,660 was subscribed, it was agreed among all the subscribers—defendant being one—that such sum was sufficient for the purpose intended, and waived the procuring of subscriptions to the full amount; that defendant was actively promoting said corporation; that the subscribers selected five trustees, among whom was defendant; that they purchased ground selected by such shareholders, and paid the money therefor, and also for the building erected thereon; and that plaintiff, by its board of directors, made calls and demands for installments on the several subscribers as follows: One fourth of each subscription, May 2, 1890; one fourth, July 6, 1890; one fourth, August 26, 1890; and one fourth, October 2, 1890,—at which times such calls and demands were made on defendant, but he failed and refused to pay the same, or any part thereof. It appeared that defendant was elected a director May 2, 1890, and remained such until July 6, 1890, when his resignation was accepted; that while a director he signed and acknowledged the articles of incorporation, served as a member of the building committee, prepared several drafts and plans for building, and consulted various architects and contractors about such building; and that as such director he was present at the meeting when the first call for an installment was ordered, and voted in favor of accepting the building lot which had been previously reported; also, that the second call, made while defendant was still a director, was ordered by a unanimous vote. It was contended by defendant that the prospectus was too indefinite and uncertain to constitute a contract; that, if it did constitute a contract, it required that stock should be subscribed for to the amount of $20,000 before it became binding on any of the subscribers; and that defendant had not waived such condition.

J. O. Hamilton and G. W. Hamilton, for appellant. Johnson, Johnson & Johnson and John M. Fulweiler, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. 1. Under defendant's contract of subscription for the stock of plaintiff, as contained in the prospectus signed by defendant, and upon the facts alleged in the complaint as to plaintiff's calls or demand for the amount agreed to be paid for such subscribed stock, the plaintiff is entitled to maintain this action. Light Co. v. Johnson, 93 Cal. 546, 29 Pac. Rep. 126; Hotel Co. v. Callender, 94 Cal. 120, 29 Pac. Rep. 859.

2. It was not a condition precedent to defendant's liability that $20,000 of plaintiff's stock should be first subscribed for; but, were it otherwise, the defendant has waived the objection which he now makes upon this ground. Hotel Co. v. Callender, supra. Indeed, the acts of defendant constituting such waiver are stronger than those held to have that effect in the case cited. Judgment and order reversed.

(97 Cal. 475)

SUTTON v. SYMONS et al. (No. 18,163.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1893.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING—RECORD.

1. An order striking out the statement on motion for a new trial being an order after final judgment, an appeal therefrom must be taken within 60 days.

2. A preliminary motion to strike out a portion of the transcript on the ground that it is no part of the record will not be granted, because, if the matters objected to form no part of the record, they will not be considered when the case is under consideration on the merits.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; Joseph Budd, Judge.

Action by Fred Sutton against William Symons and others. From the judgment entered, defendants appealed. Plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal, and to strike out a part of transcript. Appeal dismissed, and motion to strike denied.

Moses G. Cobb and J. B. Curtain, for appellants. F. W. Street, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal from an order of the superior court of Tuolumne county striking out appellants' statement on motion for a new trial, upon the ground that it was not taken in time. Such an order is an order made after final judgment, and an appeal therefrom must be taken within 60 days. The appeal in this case was taken too late, and must be dismissed.

Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 110; Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 633.

Respondent also makes a motion to strike out certain portions of the transcript upon the ground that they are no part of the record. The motion will be denied. Such a practice is not recognized in this court. If the matters to which counsel object form no part of the record, they will not be considered by the court when the merits of the appeal are before us for determination. The motion to dismiss the appeal will be granted. The motion to strike out will be denied.

97 Cal. 546

HARRIS et al. v. BARNHART. (No. 18,086.) (Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1893.)

RECORD ON APPEAL—RES JUDICATA—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—STAY.

1. A claim that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict will be disregarded when the evidence is not in the record.

2. Error cannot be predicated on instructions when the evidence on which they are based is not brought up; and when the record states that the court gave certain other and additional instructions it will be assumed that the law of the case was properly presented.

3. Code Civil Proc. § 1049, provides that an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination on appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed. Held, that where a former judgment is pleaded in bar to another action within the year allowed for appeal, but no objection is taken to the sufficiency of the pleading on the ground that a year has not elapsed, it is proper on the trial, which occurs more than a year after the entry of the judgment, to admit the evidence of the former judgment in bar of the action.

4. The pendency of a motion for a new trial does not stay proceedings under the judgment, and is no objection to the introduction of the judgment in evidence in bar of another action for the same cause during the pendency of such motion.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action by B. C. Harris and Hannorah Harris against Henry Barnhart to have an absolute deed, executed by plaintiffs, declared a mortgage, on the ground that it was given merely as security. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. B. Webster, L. W. Elliott, and Thompson & Paulsell, for appellants. F. T. Baldwin and W. N. Rutherford, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, brought this action to recover $3,600. According to the allegations of the complaint, the plaintiffs, on the 15th day of December, 1884, were indebted to defendant in the sum of about $4,374, a balance due upon a promissory note of $8,000, made by them to the latter. That on said date, and as security for the payment of such balance, they executed, acknowledged, and delivered to defendant an absolute deed of certain premises, consisting of 10 acres of land, with the improvements thereon, known as the "Stockton House," situated near Stockton. The complaint avers that it was intended by all the parties to the transaction that the deed should be taken as security, etc. It further avers that defendant, in February, 1885, sold the premises for $8,000, and the action is brought to recover the excess received by him over and above his demand against plaintiffs. The action was commenced August 26, 1889. The answer denies that the deed was executed and delivered as security, and avers that it was an absolute conveyance, in consideration of the indebtedness of plaintiffs to him, amounting to $6,000, and was not intended or received as security, etc. Defendant, as a further answer, and as a bar to the action under the statute of limitations, sets up subdivision 4 of section 338, and subdivision 1 of section 339, of the Code of Civil Procedure, as defenses to the action. As a further answer, defendant alleges that on the ——— day of July, 1889, in an action then pending in the same court between the same parties, and for the same cause of action, judgment was rendered in his favor and against the plaintiffs, wherein it was adjudged "that said plaintiffs are not entitled to recover in this action, and that defendant is entitled to a judgment for his costs." It is further averred in the usual form that such judgment has not been reversed, vacated, or set aside, and remains in full force and effect. The cause was tried before a jury. Defendant had a verdict, upon which judgment was rendered in his favor for costs of suit. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial, based upon the minutes of the court, and from an order denying the motion and from the judgment this appeal is taken.

Plaintiffs, in their notice of motion for a new trial, specified several particulars in which it was claimed the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, but the evidence in support thereof is not to be found in the record, and they must therefore be disregarded. Like considerations apply to the instructions given at the request of the defendant, except that marked "2," in relation to the effect of the former judgment. Also to those asked on behalf of plaintiffs and refused. Not having the testimony before us upon which they are predicated, it is impossible to say whether or not the court erred. Another reason for not disturbing the judgment on account of the instructions given and refused is that it appears from the record "that the court, at the request of the plaintiffs and the defendant, and on the court's own motion, gave certain other, further, and additional instructions to the jury." As these additional instructions are not embodied in the record, it must be assumed that, taken with those given and refused, the law of the case was properly presented to the jury. At the trial defendant was permitted by the court, against the objection of plaintiffs, to introduce in evidence the judgment roll in the case of B. C. Harris et al. vs. H. Barnhart, No. 3,635; the object being evidently to support the defense of a former adjudication of the same subject-matter set out in the answer. Plaintiffs excepted to the ruling of the court admitting the judgment roll, and later to the instruction No. 2, given by the court at the request of the defendant, holding that the facts and issues passed upon in the former case were conclusive in the present action, and these rulings are assigned as error. The verdict in this case was rendered February 28, 1891. At the date of the trial, and when the judgment roll in the former cause was admitted in evidence, a motion for a new trial in such former cause was pending and undetermined. I am satisfied that if the record was properly admitted it proves the subject-matter of this action to be res adjudicata. The parties in each action are the same; the same conveyance of the same property is set out in each action. Plaintiffs in the former as in this action claim that the instrument was given merely as security for a pre-existing debt. Defendant in each case claims that the conveyance was intended to be just what on its face it purported to be, and was executed in consideration of a debt due and owing to him from the plaintiffs. The only perceptible difference is apparent, rather than real. In the former case plaintiffs alleged that they were illiterate, and were induced to sign the conveyance upon the representations of defendant that it was a power of attorney under which he would sell the premises, and when so sold would pay them $3,000, and cancel their note. The court found against plaintiffs on this proposition, and to the effect that the deed of conveyance was fully explained to and understood by plaintiffs, and was not represented to them to be a power of attorney. The very gist of that action, as well as of this, was as to whether a conveyance, admitted to be absolute on its face, was signed, sealed, and delivered as an absolute conveyance of the property described therein, or merely as security. When its character was once put in issue, tried, and determined, and such determination crystallized by a final judgment, it became a finality as between the same parties, provided such judgment was not suspended and rendered inoperative by the pending motion for a new trial, or by section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The only question remaining is, was the judgment offered in evidence suspended by the pendency of a motion for a new trial, or from other cause? It has been repeatedly held by this court that the operation of a final judgment is suspended by an appeal therefrom, and that pending such appeal the judgment is not admissible in another case as evidence even between the same parties. Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 635; McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 75; Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569; Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363, 28 Pac. Rep. 118; Freem. Judgm. § 323. The contention of appellants is that the judgment was not a final one, for the reason that a motion for a new trial was pending, and by reason of the fact that one year had not expired since entry of judgment. A motion for a new trial does not operate as a stay of proceedings under the judgment. People v. Loucks, 28 Cal. 69. Section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "an action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied." If it be held that during the period of one year next after the entry of a judgment, during which period, under our law, an appeal may be taken, the action is to be deemed as pending, and the judgment is so far in abeyance as not to be a bar to another action for the same cause, and it must be conceded there seems good reason for so holding, still it is not apparent that appellants are gainers thereby. The former judgment was rendered, as before stated, July 16, 1889. It was offered in evidence on or about February 28, 1891,—a period of more than one year after entry. It is true that at the date of the plea of the judgment, viz. November 30, 1889, one year had not elapsed since the entry of the judgment. The evidence, when offered, was admissible, and sufficient to constitute a defense to the action, and it is not perceived that an inherent defect at a former period could be urged against it after the infirmity ceased. The vice, if any, was in the answer, which showed upon its face that the judgment had been rendered within one year. No objection having at any time or place been urged against this pleading, it was proper for the court below to admit the evidence, and enter judgment upon the verdict. Objection was made to the introduction in evidence of the record in the former cause, it is true, but it was based upon its supposed defects in not showing a former adjudication of the same cause of action, that a motion for a new trial was pending, and that one year had not elapsed since the rendition of the judgment. If, as hereinbefore, we still assume the position of appellants that a judgment is ineffectual as evidence in a plea of former adjudication until the time for an appeal therefrom has expired, the true course of a defendant in such a case would be to plead the pendency of the former action in abatement until the judgment therein became final, when a supplemental answer averring the proper facts, in bar of the action, would be in order.

In conclusion, I am of opinion: (1) That a motion for a new trial, in the absence of an order of the court to that effect, does not stay or suspend the operation of a final judgment in the cause. (2) That where an appeal is pending, and until the time therefor has expired, a final judgment, unless satisfied, is not evidence in bar of recovery, in another action for the same cause. (3) That until the time for an appeal has expired, if the judgment has not been sooner satisfied, the action is, under section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to be deemed as pending, and the proceedings therein are admissible under proper pleadings in abatement of a subsequent action for the same cause. (4) That in this cause, the time for an appeal having expired before the judgment was offered in evidence, it was admissible in support of a plea in bar of the action, and, no objection having been urged upon the ground of the insufficiency of the answer pleading such judgment, it was properly admitted in evidence. (5) That defects in the answer were waived by acquiescence and by failure to object thereto. It must not be understood that any reflection is cast upon the diligence or acumen of counsel for appellants in the assertion that they waived the rights of their clients by failure to object to the answer. Doubtless they were aware of the fact that, if they did so, it would simply involve, as a consequence, the filing of a supplemental answer, and no gain would have accrued to their clients. It is recommended that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

97 Cal. 553

DRISCOLL v. MARKET ST. CABLE RY. CO. (No. 14,232.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1893.)

STREET RAILWAYS—INJURY TO PERSONS ON TRACK.

In an action against a street-railway company for causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, it appeared that, on a dark night, deceased approached a street occupied by defendant's tracks, and, when a car going east had passed, started to cross the street, when a car going west ran over him, and killed him. There was slight evidence that the car was moving faster than the statutory eight miles an hour, and it was admitted that the persons in charge of the car wholly failed to ring the bell, as required by the ordinance, from a point 25 feet from the crossing till the same was passed. Held, that there was no such absence of substantial evidence to support a verdict for plaintiff as would warrant the court in setting it aside.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Margaret Driscoll, administratrix of Alexander Driscoll, deceased, against the Market-Street Cable Railway Company, for causing the death of the deceased. There was judgment for plaintiff, and, its motion for a new trial being overruled, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Shay, for appellant. Frank Sullivan, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. On December 10, 1884, Alexander Driscoll was struck and killed by a car of defendant at the intersection of McAllister and Larkin streets, in San Francisco; and his widow, as administratrix, brought this action to recover damages for his death. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $7,775, for which judgment was rendered. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The only point urged by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict; the positions of appellant being that the evidence does not show that the accident was the result of any negligence of appellant, and does show that it was the result of the negligence of the deceased.

The question presented is certainly one of some difficulty. The rule is well established that this court will not disturb a verdict where there is a conflict of evidence on material points, and where there is evidence to support the verdict; but such conflict and such evidence must be real and substantial. When a jury catches at a mere semblance or pretense of evidence for the purpose of somewhat equalizing financial conditions, by taking money from one party, and giving it to the other, without legal cause, the trial judge should, without hesitation, set the verdict aside; and, in the event of his not doing so, this court will grant a new trial. Street railroads are an established feature of modern city life. They are a convenience and a necessity to all classes of people, and are desired by all. But their operation on crowded streets is necessarily attended with considerable danger to pedestrians,—a danger which all people are bound to know, and against which they should protect themselves by the use of at least reasonable caution. While, therefore, the owners of these railroads are to be held to due care in the management of their lines, they, when exercising such care, are not responsible in damages to a person who, in a careless or reckless or absent-minded way, walks suddenly in front of a moving car, and is injured before there is time to stop it. The person in charge of a car, with a clear track before him, has a right to assume that people will not suddenly undertake to cross in front of it; otherwise, he could not make any headway, and no street-car line could be successfully operated, either for the profit of the owner, or the convenience of the public. And the general rule is that, where the negligence of the injured party is a contributing proximate cause of the accident, he cannot recover damages. But whether or not his negligence did so contribute, in any particular case, is generally a question around which conflicting evidence will be gathered; and in such case a railroad company, which was itself guilty of negligence at the time of the accident, cannot often expect to be relieved from an unfavorable verdict.

Section 501 of the Civil Code provides that the speed of a street car shall not exceed eight miles an hour; and an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco provides, substantially, that every car shall have attached to it a bell or gong of sufficient size and weight to be distinctly heard, when rung or sounded, at a distance of at least 100 feet, and that the persons in charge of a car must keep the bell ringing, or the gong sounding, from a point 25 feet from a street crossing until the crossing shall have been passed.

In the case at bar the deceased, at the time the car struck him, was walking northerly along the easterly crossing of McAllister street, where it intersects Larkin. On McAllister street the appellant has two parallel tracks, on the northerly of which the cars going west run, and on the southerly the cars going east. The deceased was struck by a car going west, on the northerly track; and, according to the custom of appellant, a car thus going comes to a standstill at a certain point, called "Stop," which is 37 feet east of the center of the said crossing. After starting again, it goes to a point called "Let Go," about five or six feet east of the crossing; and at the point "Let Go" the gripman suddenly releases the grip from the cable, and the car runs along Larkin street from the impetus given by the cable, and without being attached to the latter. This is necessary because the cable is crossed by another cable running along Larkin street. The custom above stated was followed by the gripman of the car by which the deceased was killed. There was some evidence that the car, at the time of the accident, was running faster than eight miles an hour, though such evidence was exceedingly slight. It is admitted that the rate of speed at which the cable itself ran was only eight miles; but two of the witnesses testified that, after the car was released from the cable at the point "Let Go," it ran faster than the cable. The position of appellant, that it was physically impossible for the car, after it was detached from the cable, to have run faster than the cable, is hardly tenable; for there was a slight artificial down grade at that point for a few yards,—1 7-8 inches from the "Let Go" to the center of Larkin street. But the testimony of the witnesses who swore to the increased speed was so unsatisfactory, and the increased speed itself so improbable, that a verdict founded on such speed alone, as constituting negligence on the part of appellant, could hardly be sustained. But it is clear that the employee of appellant in charge of the car failed to ring the bell as provided by said ordinance, and as due care required. There was a conflict of evidence as to whether or not the bell was rung at all until after the deceased was struck. Witnesses differed about it having been rung once just before or at the time the car started from the point "Stop," thirty-seven feet away; but the evidence is uncontradicted, and the fact is admitted, that the bell was not rung after leaving said point until after the deceased had been struck. This was clearly negligence, because it was in violation of a reasonable ordinance, and also because the omission was in itself, under the circumstances, careless. Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; Higgins v. Deeney, 78 Cal. 578, 21 Pac. Rep. 428; Orcutt v. Railroad Co., 85 Cal. 291, 24 Pac. Rep. 661; Shear. & R. Neg. § 13. It is true that failure to ring a bell, or to comply with some other statutory requirement, will not make a railroad company liable, if such failure is not the proximate cause of the accident, or if it was caused by the negligence of the injured party; and in the case at bar it is contended by appellant that it was the negligence of the deceased, and not the failure to ring the bell, that caused the injury. The contention is that, upon the evidence, we must hold, as a matter of law, that the negligence of the deceased was the proximate cause of the injury; but, after a thorough examination of the record, we do not think that such contention can be maintained.

There is a conflict of evidence as to the actual conduct of the deceased, and the circumstances under which he acted, at the time of the accident. He was crossing McAllister street from the south side,—going north. It is beyond dispute that about that time another car of appellant came down McAllister street, going east, and crossed said street on the south track, and stopped a few yards east of the crossing, although there is a conflict in the evidence as to the precise point which said car had reached when deceased started across the street. It was, however, clearly at a point where it was, to a greater or less extent, (as it was further east or west,) an obstruction to the observation of the deceased. The jury had warrant in the evidence to find that he started as soon as the east-bound car had passed the crossing; that the time was after daylight; and that the night was "dark and foggy," although there was a headlight on the car. The two tracks are about $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet apart, and the deceased had nearly crossed the second or north track when the north side of the car struck him. One or two persons shouted to him to get out of the way, but it does not appear that he heard the warning. Under these circumstances, the appellant being in default for not giving the proper warning, we think that the question whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence was a proper one for the jury; that deceased cannot be held, as a matter of law, to have been so guilty; and that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that he was not. Counsel for appellant, in his very thorough and able brief, has cited a number of cases in which it was held that the plaintiff could not recover because he had not exercised sufficient caution in attempting to cross a railroad track. Those were cases, however, where the accidents occurred on ordinary steam railroads running through the country at comparatively long intervals of time; and the rule there laid down can hardly be applied in all its strictness to street railroads in crowded cities, where a car that can be speedily stopped passes a crossing every two or three minutes, and where people necessarily cross the streets frequently and hurriedly. Shea v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 414; Swain v. Railroad Co., 93 Cal. 183, 28 Pac. Rep. 829; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 396, and cases there cited. Of course, if all people exercised the greatest care and caution in approaching and crossing railroad tracks, such accidents as the one here involved would rarely, if ever, occur; but the law does not expect or require such extreme care. Ordinary care is all that is required; and ordinary care is that degree of care which people of ordinarily prudent habits—"people in general"—could be reasonably expected to exercise under the circumstances of a given case. And considering all the evidence and circumstances in the case at bar, and particularly the fact that the deceased had a right to rely upon the usual and required signal of bell ringing when a car is approaching a crossing, we cannot say that the jury abused its power in holding that the deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence. The judgment of the learned judge of the court below, who heard all the evidence, and refused a new trial, is also entitled to great consideration. It is, no doubt, what is sometimes called a "close case;" but, in our opinion, there is no such absence of substantial evidence to support the verdict as would warrant us in setting it aside.

There is nothing in the point that the gripman could not have rung the bell because his hands were necessarily otherwise engaged. If it was not convenient for him to have performed that duty, the conductor should have done it; and it was no excuse that the conductor was temporarily absent from his post. Neither is there anything in the point that the ordinance requires, in terms, that the persons immediately in charge of the car, and not the company, shall give the warning. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

97 Cal. 586

GORDON v. BOOKER. (No. 18,083.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1893.)

BOUNDARIES—SECTION CORNERS—EVIDENCE—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. In an action to quiet title, it appeared that plaintiff's land was north, and defendant's land was south, of a half-section line, the location of which depended on the location of the half-section corner on the east line of the section. The surveyor who ran the half-section line found a stake on the east line of the section, which he assumed to be the half-section corner. Three surveyors, and two other persons, testified that the stake found was the government corner. There was no evidence that a corner had been found at a different place in that vicinity. Measurements from a known corner, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of the half-section line, would place the corner 24 feet north of the stake found, but a line due west from such point would locate the west half-section corner 20 feet north of its known location. Held, that the court erred in holding the half-section corner to be 24 feet north of the stake found, since evidence based on courses and distances from other known points is inadmissible to change the location of an original corner, when found.

2. A finding that defendant had been for five years in possession of the strip in dispute is not sustained by evidence that the strip has been lying open and unoccupied, and that defendant only claimed the land lying south of the half-section line.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by Alexander Gordon, administrator of James H. Hamilton, deceased, against Jane E. Booker, to quiet title. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Firman Church, J. P. Meux, and Garber, Roalt & Bishop, for appellant. Geo. L. Hood and W. S. Crawford, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action is brought by plaintiff to quiet title to certain lots in the Central addition to the city of Fresno. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The half-section line running east and west through section 4 is the north boundary line of the city of Fresno. Plaintiff's lots lie on the north side of this line, and defendant's on the south side. The point in controversy is the location of this half-section line, and upon the trial that point turned upon the location of the half-section corner on the east line of section 4. Teilman surveyed and platted Central addition, and ran the half-section line, and plaintiff claims to this line. The court found the line to be 24 feet north of the line so surveyed. In making this survey, Teilman found a stake which he assumed and believed to be the half-section corner. Five other witnesses—at least three of them being professional surveyors—testified that the corner from which Teilman made his survey was a "charcoal" or "government" corner; and there was no evidence tending to show that a stake or corner had ever been seen at a different place in that vicinity. This testimony was prima facie sufficient to establish it as a government corner, and to justify a finding to that effect. The finding of the court was based on a survey and measurement from the southeast corner of section 9, a distance of a mile and a half south of the stake in question. A ditch or canal had been dug on the south line of section 9, and for several miles east of that section. Defendant's witness, who dug this canal, testified that he took up the stakes, and set them on the south side of the canal, but the distance they were removed is not definitely shown. But, assuming that the southeast corner of section 9 was definitely established, a survey from that point could be used but for one purpose, viz. to show that the half-section corner in question was not in fact a government corner. It could not be used to show that the government surveyor made an error in placing it there. In Hall v. Tauner, 4 Pa. St. 244, it was said: "It has ever been held that the marks on the ground constitute the survey. The courses and distances are only evidences of the survey." This court, in Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 629, said, "preference is given to monuments, because they are least liable to mistake;" and in the same case, quoting from Fulwood v. Graham, 1 Rich. Law, 497, said: "That in locating lands we are to resort—First, to natural boundaries; second, to artificial marks; third, to adjacent boundaries; fourth, to courses and distances; but it has never been said that each of these occupied an inflexible position. It sometimes might occur that an inferior means of location might control a higher, when it was plain there was a mistake." Evidence based upon courses and distances from other known points is admissible to fix a corner where no corner is found, but never to change the location of an original corner when found. It seems to have been considered that, because townships are subdivided by commencing at the south and east sides, therefore points to the south are more reliable than those on the north; but such is not the case. A survey by courses and distances from the nearest established corner is least liable to error. The northeast corner of section 4 is upon the north line of the township, and that corner is not disputed. Several measurements from that corner to the half-section corner in question made the distance 2,623 feet, while the government field notes call for 2,624.8 feet,—a difference of only 1.8 feet from the corner found by Teilman. The conflict of testimony cannot be said to be material. The evidence of defendant, based on course and distance, being of a lower order, because of its greater uncertainty, cannot be said to raise a material conflict with the higher order of proof unless it demonstrates to a reasonable probability that the corner as found now upon the ground is not the corner established by the government, and this it fails to do.

The line found by the court is erroneous in another particular. The half-section corner on the west line of section 4 is not disputed, and that corner is shown to be 2,619 feet south of the northwest corner of the section. Assuming that the north line of the township is a due east and west line, as we must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the half-section line found by the court, starting from a point 24 feet north of the stake in the east line, and running "due west," would intersect the west line of the section 20 feet north of the half-section corner, while that line should be drawn from one corner to the other, regardless of a variation from the due east and west course.

If the sixth and seventh findings are to be understood as finding that defendant had been for more than five years in possession up to the line fixed by the court, such finding cannot be sustained. Defendant testified that "all this strip of land in controversy has been lying out, open, unfenced, and uncultivated." And again: "I never claimed anything except what was actually embraced in fractional block 340. That is all I ever claimed, or claim now." It does not appear that either party had actual possession of the strip in controversy, while the constructive possession of each extended only to the true line.

I think the findings discussed herein are not justified by the evidence, and that the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

REYBURN v. BOOKER. (No. 18,082.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1893.)

Commissioners' decision, Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by J. J. Reyburn against Jane E. Booker to quiet title. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Firman Church, J. P. Meux, and Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellant. Geo. L. Hood and W. S. Crawford, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This cause was submitted and decided in the court below upon the evidence heard in No. 18,083, Gordon, Adm'r, v. Jane E. Booker, under stipulation of counsel, and is submitted here upon the same briefs by appellant; no brief for respondent. The judgment was for defendant, and this appeal is from the judgment and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. Upon the authority of Gordon v. Booker, 32 Pac. Rep. 593, (No. 18,083, this day filed,) I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons above given the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial granted.

97 Cal. 600

ORANGE COUNTY v. HARRIS. (No. 14,645.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1893.)

COUNTY OFFICERS—COMPENSATION—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. St. 1883, p. 361, (County Government Act,) § 164, providing that "the salaries and fees provided for in this act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, their deputies and assistants," operates as a repeal of that provision of Pol. Code, § 3770, which gives one half of certain additional fees collected on delinquent tax lists to the collector for preparing the list.

2. St. 1883, p. 300, (County Government Act,) § 8, provides that whenever a board of supervisors shall, without authority of law, order any money paid as salary or fees, and such money shall have been actually paid, it may be recovered back in a suit in the name of the county against the person to whom it was paid, together with 20 per cent. damages for the use thereof. Held, that the provision for the recovery of such damages is not unconstitutional, as taking property without due process of law.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Orange county; J. W. Towner, Judge.

Action by the county of Orange against one Harris. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. S. McKelvey and W. L. Campbell, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., and F. W. Sanborn, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action to recover from the defendant, who is sheriff and tax collector of Orange county, the sum of $657, together with 20 per cent. damages. The action is based upon the provisions of section 8 of the county government act, which provides, in substance, that whenever any board of supervisors shall without authority of law order any money paid as salary or fees, and such money shall have been actually paid, it shall be the duty of the district attorney to commence suit in the name of the county against the person to whom the money was paid to recover the same and 20 per cent. damages for the use thereof. Appellant's claim to the money is based upon section 3770 of the Political Code, which provides that the tax collector must collect, in addition to the taxes due on the delinquent list and 5 per centum added thereto, 50 cents on each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed, and on each assessment of personal property, one half of which must go to the county, and the other to the collector for preparing the list. It appears that the defendant advertised 2,628 items of delinquent property, and collected, under the section referred to, $1,314, one half of which he claimed the right to hold under the statute. Section 211 of the county government act, as amended in 1887, provides that "the salaries and fees provided in this act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, either as officers or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this act otherwise provided; and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries hereinbefore provided, unless in this act otherwise provided." St. 1887, p. 207. Following this provision in the section are certain provisos, which are referred to and commented upon in Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 608, 28 Pac. Rep. 834, and 29 Pac. Rep. 1092. It was held in that case that the provisions for extra compensation and employment of additional deputies at the expense of the county were unconstitutional; and it may be admitted that all parts of the section fell together, the various provisions with respect to salaries being so interlaced and mutually connected with and dependent upon each other as to warrant the belief that the legislature intended the section to stand as a whole, and if it had been believed that all of the provisions could not be carried into effect, no part of the act would have been passed. Cooley, Const. Lim. 211. This being the case, the enactment of section 211 of the amendatory act did not operate to repeal section 3770 of the Political Code. An act, unconstitutional in itself, may contain a valid clause repealing another act, but the intention of the legislature to wipe out the previous enactment, at all events, must be clearly and unequivocally expressed. No repeal by implication can result from a provision in a subsequent statute when that provision is itself devoid of constitutional force, and it is not sufficient to effect a repeal to say in an unconstitutional act that all acts inconsistent therewith are thereby repealed. Enl. Interp. St. § 192; Campau v. Detroit, 14 Mich. 276; Tims v. State, 26 Ala. 170; People v. Fleming, 7 Colo. 236, 3 Pac. Rep. 70; Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa, 272. But, conceding the contention of the appellant in this regard to be sound, id est, that section 211, being unconstitutional, did not repeal, section 3770 is not saved by the concession. The county government act, as originally passed, contained a section which provided that "the salaries and fees provided for in this act shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, their deputies and assistants; and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries hereinbefore provided." St. 1883, p. 361, § 164. This section did not contain the objectionable provisions found in the amendment of 1887, and, being a valid enactment, it operated to repeal the provisions of section 3770 of the Political Code. It did contain a provision that the assessor might retain 15 per cent. of all amounts collected by him for poll taxes, and it is claimed that by reason of this provision the act was unconstitutional and void. We do not deem it necessary to consider the question whether or not the legislature has the constitutional right to authorize the retention by the assessor of any portion of the poll taxes collected by him. It may be conceded, and still section 164 is good, so far as it affects the compensation of officers other than assessors.

There is no merit in the contention that the provision for 20 per cent. damages, if enforced, is unconstitutional, because it deprives a defendant of property without due process of law. It is no more obnoxious to such a criticism than the provisions of the Code relating to costs and damages in cases of delinquent taxes. As was said by Chief Justice Beatty in State v. Huffer, 11 Nev. 303, in speaking of an act prescribing an additional penalty for nonpayment of taxes in certain cases after suit. "We think the penalty is to be regarded not only as a punishment to the delinquent, but also and principally as a compensation to the state and county for the delay of payment, and the consequent derangement of their finances."

The contention of the appellant that the money was paid under "authority of law" is equally unsound. It is the legislature, and not the board of supervisors, which is charged with the duty of fixing the compensation due to the county officers, and Miller v. Dunn, 72 Cal. 462, 14 Pac. Rep. 27, is not in point. The other points raised by appellant, viz. that the subject-matter of this section is not expressed in the title of the county government act as required by section 24, art. 4, of the constitution, and that the act is not uniform in its operation, because the supervisors of certain counties are given powers not given to others, do not require notice.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; GAROUTTE, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; HARRISON, J.

67 Cal. 670

ESHLEMAN v. HENRIETTA VINEYARD CO. et al. (No. 18,096.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1893.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — TERMINATION OF CONTRACT — TENDER OF PERFORMANCE BY VENDOR.

In a suit for specific performance, it appeared that plaintiff agreed to purchase the land within a reasonable time after defendant perfected its title thereto; that, after the title was perfected, defendant tendered a conveyance, but plaintiff declined to accept, for reasons given, which did not relate to the title; that defendant afterwards conveyed the land to another party. Held, that plaintiff could not recover, as his refusal to accept the conveyance when tendered terminated the contract.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by I. S. Eshleman against the Henrietta Vineyard Company and others for the specific performance of a land contract. Defendants had judgment, from which, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Lynch, for appellant. W. D. Tupper, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Appeal from a final judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The action was brought to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land based upon the following agreement: "This agreement, made the twenty-first day of January, 1886, between the Henrietta Vineyard Company, a corporation, party of the first part, and I. S. Eshleman, of the county of Alameda, state of California, party of the second part, witnesseth: Whereas, the party of the second part has this day purchased certain lands of the party of the first part, situate in section 16, township 14 south, range 21 east, amounting to about one hundred acres; and, whereas, part of said section 16, to wit, the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section, is in dispute; that is to say, the party of the first part insists that he owns said quarter of said quarter section, and the party of the second part is in doubt: Now, therefore, it is agreed and understood that if the party of the first part is the owner of said quarter of said quarter section, and the same can be demonstrated by the records of the county of Fresno, state of California, then the said party of the second part hereby covenants, promises, and agrees to and with the party of the first part that he, the said party of the second part, will purchase said quarter of said quarter section, and the party of the first part covenants and agrees that he will sell and convey, by good and sufficient deed, to said party of the second part, the said southeast quarter of said northwest quarter of section 16, comprising about forty acres of land, at and for the price of $41.66% per acre, and that he will accept said conveyance when tendered to him within a reasonable time after it shall be ascertained that the party of the first part is the owner of said quarter of said quarter section of land. In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seal this 21st day of January, 1886. Henrietta Vineyard Co. G. H. Malter, Pres. I. S. Eshleman. Witness: Minnie D. Eshleman." The theory of the complaint is that at the date of the foregoing agreement the corporation defendant claimed to own the land agreed to be conveyed, but that at that time, and for a long time subsequent thereto, several other persons also claimed, or appeared of record to claim, interests, estates, and liens in and to and upon said land, adversely to the corporation; that on the 28th day of October, 1887, the corporation could have conveyed the land free and clear of incumbrance, and offered to do so; that on or about November 5, 1887, plaintiff accepted the offer of a conveyance, tendered the price agreed to be paid, and demanded a deed; that on the 25th day of January, 1888, the corporation defendant refused, and has since refused, to convey the land. The further allegations of the complaint are mainly ancillary to this general statement. The answer negatives many of the allegations of the complaint, and avers, in substance, that as early as February, 1886, it was able and willing to convey the land, by good title, free from incumbrance, and thenceforth, and up to November 5, 1887, repeatedly offered to convey, but that the plaintiff refused to accept a conveyance and pay for the land. The defendant corporation admits an allegation of the complaint, that on the 14th of November, 1887, it conveyed the land to one Karl Sheffler, but denies that it was so conveyed to defeat plaintiff's claim. The agreement and evidence, taken together, show that the corporation defendant had previously sold to plaintiff and his daughter a very considerable tract of land, in which the 40-acre tract involved in this action was included, but which was not conveyed by reason of the title being in doubt. Thereupon the agreement in this case was made. In selling another tract of land by the corporation defendant to one E. R. Holton, a mistake had been made in the deed, and this 40 acres described, instead of the land actually sold, and a mortgage had been given back by Holton, containing the same mistaken description. This mistake was remedied on the 13th of February, 1886, by a reconveyance of the land in question here; and on the same day satisfaction of the mortgage by the corporation defendant, by its president, was acknowledged on the margin of the record of said mortgage. A regular release of the same mortgage, dated April 28, 1887, was recorded January 11, 1888.

2. The land in question had also been sold for taxes levied upon an assessment against George H. Malter, individually, (but who was president of the corporation defendant,) for the fiscal year 1884 and 1885, and the tax certificate at the date of the agreement was held by one Henry Horstman. There was evidence tending to show that this tax matter, which related as well to other lands sold to plaintiff, was adjusted about the time of the execution of the agreement of January 21, 1886, but in what precise manner is not clear. On September 26, 1883, the sheriff of Fresno county levied a writ of attachment on the land in question in an action in which the Llewellyn Steam Condenser Manufacturing Company was plaintiff, and George H. Malter et al., copartners under the name of Malter, Lind & Co., were defendants, which attachment was not released until November 22, 1888. The cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury. The findings were in favor of the defendants.

It is objected that the evidence is insufficient to support the third finding of the court, which is in the following language: "That on the 21st day of January, 1886, said corporation was the owner of the land described in said agreement." If by this finding the court meant to say that on that day the corporation was vested with the legal title, it is not technically correct. The title on that day, and until February 13, 1886, stood in Holton, under the deed to him, in which, by mistake, the tract of land in question was described, instead of that which had actually been sold to him. On the last-named day it was conveyed by Holton to the corporation, as hereinbefore stated, and at the same time the Bolton mortgage was satisfied on the margin of the record. There was also evidence tending to show that the Horstman tax lien, which covered other land purchased by plaintiff from the corporation defendant, was cleared up, and the tax certificate assigned to plaintiff, or a deed given to him by Horstman, at or about the date of the execution of the agreement. The levy of the attachment against Malter, Lind & Co. upon this land, the title to which was in the corporation, created no cloud upon the title. The levy of an attachment against A. upon the land of B. gives no lien thereon, and creates no cloud upon the title of B. Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 135. When a deed from the corporation defendant was tendered to the plaintiff by the witness McPike, it appears that he made no objections on the score of title, but declined to accept the deed upon the ground that the land was "hogwallow land, and that he would not take it. Had made up his mind that he had land enough down there," etc. Similar expressions are shown to have been used when, at a later period, the witness Ashdown tendered the deed to plaintiff. Indeed, it is apparent from plaintiff's own testimony that he did not, at the date of the contract, want the land in question, and only agreed to take it on a compromise, and to have peace. As the title to the land was perfected before a tender of the deed was made, it is not regarded as important that it was at a date later than that mentioned in the finding. The right to have the title when he received the deed was the substance of what he could claim. We may, however, admit that the earlier efforts of the corporation defendant to convey the property to plaintiff were futile, by reason of defects in the title which would have prevented a complete title vesting in the latter. It is admitted in the complaint that on the 28th day of October, 1887, the corporation defendant was the owner of the land, and was able and could have freed it from all adverse claims, and could have conveyed it free from incumbrance, and that at said date it notified plaintiff that it was ready and willing to do so, etc. The complaint then proceeds to aver that within a reasonable time thereafter, to wit, on or about November 5, 1887, plaintiff offered to perform, and demanded a deed, etc. The finding of the court negatives the offer of performance on the part of plaintiff, and is supported by evidence. This seems conclusive of the whole case. In this view, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations need not be discussed. A finding upon the offer of plaintiff made January 25, 1888, to take the land, and pay for it, was immaterial. Having been requested to do so in October, 1887, and having neglected so to do, the defendant had a right to consider the contract terminated. That it did so consider is evidenced by its conveyance of the land to another on the 14th day of November, 1887, for the purpose of raising money thereon.

The rulings of the court on the admission and rejection of evidence are not of sufficient importance to vary the result, and, as the judgment and order must be affirmed, what might be said as to the rulings is not important. It is only where a new trial is granted that the views of this court upon questions of law, of no general interest to the profession, become important, as serving to guide the lower court in a retrial of the cause. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(37 Cal. 568)

DOUGHERTY et al. v. MILES et al. (No. 19,029.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1893.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

In an action to quiet title, it appeared that J. died, seized of the land in dispute, in 1857, and his administrator conveyed the land to R., under whom defendants held, though neither R. nor defendants ever occupied the land. Plaintiffs were administrators of a brother of the original owner, who took possession of the land in 1860, and for nearly 20 years before the suit claimed the whole tract, paid the taxes, and occupied a part of the tract, on which he lived, without interference by defendants or their ancestor. Held, that plaintiffs had acquired a title to the whole tract by prescription.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Dougherty and another, administrators of Edward Hayes, deceased, against Mary C. Miles and others, to quiet title to a certain tract of land. There was judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Works, Gibson & Titus and S. W. & E. B. Holladay, for appellants. McNealy, Trippett & Neale, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet title to a certain tract of land, described in the complaint by metes and bounds, and generally called the "Hayes Ranch." Judgment went for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The action was commenced by Edward Hayes, who died during its pendency, and it was prosecuted to judgment by his administrators. Both parties claim through John Hayes, who died intestate, and seised of the land in contest, on May 20, 1857. His next of kin and only heirs were two brothers,—Edward, who commenced this action, and Robert Hayes; and Edward acquired the title and interest of Robert in the estate. At the time of the death of John, the two surviving brothers, Edward and Robert, lived in New Brunswick. A few days after the death of said John Hayes, one Gitchell was appointed special administrator of his estate, and sold the personal property for $696.41. Afterwards he applied for letters of general administration; and on August 3, 1857, the probate court made an order that such letters issue to him upon his giving a bond in a certain named sum. There is no evidence that he ever gave any bond, or that said general letters were ever issued to him. Neither is there any evidence that he ever made application to sell the real property of the estate, other than the recital of the court hereinafter mentioned. No bond or letters of administration or application to sell said property were among the papers on file, nor was there any evidence that either of them was ever in existence. But on November 23, 1857, the court made an order that the said real property be sold, and the order recited that there had been due publication of an application for such sale, and declared that the sale of the real property of the estate was necessary. Gitchell returned that, pursuant to said order, he had sold the Hayes ranch to George R. Ringgold for $975. On December 28, 1857, the court approved the sale to Ringgold. On August 27, 1858, Gitchell made a deed of the Hayes ranch to Lucius B. Northrop, which recited that Northrop was the bidder at the sale. Afterwards, on January 14, 1859, Northrop made a conveyance of said ranch to said George R. Ringgold. Defendants and appellants claim title through the above proceedings as heirs and representatives of said Ringgold, who died before the commencement of this action. Neither Ringgold nor either of the defendants, nor any grantee or representative of Ringgold, was ever in possession of any part of the land. About 1860 Edward Hayes came to California to look after the estate. He found that Gitchell had sold, or attempted to sell, all the property; and, upon demand for settlement, Gitchell paid him $173, and no more. Edward then sued him, averring that he was administrator, (whether special or general, not stated,) and that he had fraudulently, and without authority of law, sold all the property, real and personal, and appropriated the proceeds to his own use. Gitchell answered, denying that he was general administrator, and also denying some of the other averments. Judgment was rendered against Gitchell for something over $3,000; and, the court having found fraud, he was imprisoned, but was released because Edward did not advance the cost of imprisonment. No part of the judgment was paid.

We have briefly recited the foregoing facts because they seem to be necessary to an understanding of the case; but we do not deem it necessary to determine the many questions discussed by counsel as to the validity of the probate sale,—whether Edward was estopped by his judgment against Gitchell; what should be presumed from the recitals of the order of sale, and from the lapse of a long period of time; whether the sale authorized a deed to Northrop; the effect of the discharge of Gitchell from imprisonment, etc. Waiving all of these questions, we will assume, for the purposes of this decision, that the sale could not be attacked after three years from its date, under section 190 of the probate act. Wood, Dig. p. 410; Harlan v. Peck, 33 Cal. 515; Reed v. Ring, 93 Cal. 108, 28 Pac. Rep. 851. But we think it clear that, as found by the court, Edward Hayes, at the time of the commencement of the action, had acquired a title to the land in contest by prescription. As before stated, the alleged probate sale was made in 1857; and neither Ringgold nor any of his successors ever took possession of any part of the land in contest, although 30 years elapsed before the commencement of this action, and although Edward Hayes, for nearly 20 years of the time, was in the actual possession of part of the land, and claiming the whole. The land being unoccupied, Edward entered upon it in 1870, and inclosed and cultivated about five acres, and built a small house, and lived in it, claiming the whole tract. In 1872 he filed a petition for letters of administration of the estate of John Hayes, in which he stated that Gitchell had died, leaving the estate finally unadministered. He was regularly appointed general administrator, and duly qualified as such; and such proceedings were regularly had that in 1876 the administration was closed, and there was a final decree of distribution distributing the land to said Edward. After 1876, for some years, he did not live personally on the land, but was represented by others. Afterwards he made it his permanent home, and in 1886 or 1887 he built a new house on the land, costing about $4,000, and lived in it until his death. He always claimed the whole tract, which was well known as the "Hayes Ranch" or "Farm," and paid all taxes on it from at least 1872; and no protest was made by any representative of Ringgold. There was no interference with Edward's possession, nor any attempt by any other person to take possession of any part of the ranch. Upon the foregoing facts, we think that the adverse possession of Edward Hayes extended to the boundaries of the Hayes ranch, as held by his ancestor John Hayes, and described in the decree of distribution.

There is one alleged error in ruling to be noticed. The complaint, after describing the land in contest by metes and bounds, has these words: "As per map made by Chas. H. Poole, July 5, 1853, and on file in the office of the trustees." Appellants offered this map in evidence, and respondents objected to it, so far as it was offered for the purpose of identifying the land sold by Gitchell as administrator, and of adding to or aiding in the description of the land sought to be described in the order of sale under which Gitchell acted. The objection was sustained, but the map was "admitted for all other purposes." This ruling is entirely immaterial, for there was no real question about the identity of the ranch sold under the probate order. We assume that it was the tract of land described in the complaint, and which had been distributed to Edward Hayes. It was a piece of land well known since before the death of John Hayes as the "Hayes Ranch." There was also an exception to a ruling about the testimony of the witness Dougherty, to which the foregoing remarks apply. We see no reason for disturbing the judgment. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

97 Cal. 572

SHIPMAN v. FORBES et al. (No. 15,094.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1893.)

STREET ASSESSMENTS—WARRANT—DATE.

1. St. 1872, p. 813, § 10, which requires a date to be affixed to the warrant issued by the superintendent of streets of the county of San Francisco authorizing the collection of street assessments by the contractor doing the work, is not complied with by simply affixing the year; and a warrant so insufficiently dated cannot serve as the foundation of legal proceedings for the collection of the assessment, since section 11 requires the contractor to return the warrants to the superintendent "within 10 days after its date" to preserve the lien of the assessment, and section 13 prohibits an action from being brought on the assessment until "after the period of 15 days from the day of the date of the warrant."

2. The fact that the county auditor, on countersigning the warrant, affixed a date to his signature, does not cure the omission of the date from the warrant, since the auditor's function is limited merely to approval, and whatever is essential to the issuance and validity of the assessment must be done before it reaches him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; William T. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Shipman against Forbes and others to foreclose the lien of a street assessment. From a judgment in defendant's favor, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Wood, for appellant. Cope, Boyd, Fifield & Hoburg and Stanly, Stoney & Hayes, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Action to foreclose a street assessment in San Francisco. The plaintiff offered in evidence the original assessment, diagram, warrant, and affidavit of demand and nonpayment, to which defendants objected upon the ground that the warrant was not dated. The warrant is in the following form: "By virtue hereof, I, C. S. Ruggles, superintendent of public streets, highways, and squares of the city and county of San Francisco and state of California, by virtue of the authority vested in me as said superintendent of public streets, highways, and squares, do authorize and empower Jas. S. Dyer, his agents or assigns, to demand and receive the several assessments upon the assessment and diagram hereto attached, and this shall be his warrant for the same. San Francisco, 1885. C. S. Ruggles, Superintendent of Public Streets, Highways, and Squares. Countersigned by Fleet F. Strother, Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco, September 7, 1888." The court excluded the evidence, and rendered judgment for the defendants, and this ruling is now assigned as error.

Section 10 of the act of 1872, (St. 1872, p. 813,) under which the proceedings were had, directs the superintendent of public streets, highways, and squares to attach to the assessment a warrant, which shall be signed by him and countersigned by the auditor, and prescribes the form of the warrant. In this form, after giving the body of the warrant, its date and authentication are prescribed as follows: "San Francisco, (date,) eighteen hundred and _____. (Name of Superintendent,) Superintendent of Public Streets, Highways and Squares. Countersigned by (Name of Auditor,) Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco." The warrant issued in the present case follows the prescribed form, except in the matter of its date. The words "San Francisco, 1885," cannot be considered as a compliance with the statutory requirement that the warrant be dated. Other portions of the statute show that the "date" which the warrant is to contain includes the month and the day of the month as well as the year. Section 11 requires the contractor to return the warrant to the superintendent of streets "within ten days after its date," in order to preserve the lien of the assessment; and by section 13 an action upon the assessment cannot be brought until "after the period of fifteen days from the day of the date of the warrant." The form prescribed by the statute makes the date as much a part of the warrant as it does the signature of the officer, and in matters of this character, in which the property of a citizen is to be taken in invitum, it cannot be said that any requirement of the statute is to be disregarded. Every requisite having the semblance of benefit to the owner must be complied with, and, where the form of a statutory proceeding is prescribed, its observance becomes essential to the validity of the proceedings. Smith v. Davis, 30 Cal. 537; Taylor v. Donner, 31 Cal. 483; Hewes v. Reis, 40 Cal. 263; Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522. It is conceded on the part of the appellant that these words did not amount to the dating of the warrant, but it is contended by him that when the auditor countersigned the warrant over the date of September 7, 1888, the warrant itself took that date, and therefore was dated. The function of the auditor, however, being merely that of approval, and limited to countersigning the warrant, is not called into exercise until after the warrant has been completed. Whatever is essential to the issuance and validity of the warrant must be done before it reaches the auditor, and no act of his can supply any defect or cure any irregularity in the prior proceedings. The position of the date, September 7, 1888, after the countersigning by the auditor, shows that it was a part of his act, and not a part of the warrant itself.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATTERSON, J.

97 Cal. 604

WHITE v. WHITE. (No. 15,043.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1893.)

DIVORCE—PAYMENT OF COSTS—ORDER AUTHORIZING MORTGAGE.

A decree of divorce having been rendered in favor of the wife, a referee was appointed to take testimony, and report on the character and value of the husband's property, preliminary to final judgment; the decree requiring the latter to pay referee's costs and expenses. The referee having petitioned for an order directing the husband to pay a certain sum into court to be used for payment of such costs and expenses, the wife objected to the court granting the husband permission to mortgage his property to secure money to comply with such order. The evidence was conflicting as to whether he could procure the money from any other source, and the court granted an order authorizing such mortgage, and set aside the injunction and lis pendens in the case to that extent, and for that purpose, alone. Held, that the order was properly issued.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by George E. White against Frankie White. From an order authorizing plaintiff to mortgage his property to obtain funds for the payment of referee's costs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry E. Highton, H. C. McPike, and J. A. Cooper, for appellant. Barclay Henley and E. D. Wheeler, (Henley, MacSherry & Herrmann, of counsel,) for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. In this action a decree of divorce was rendered in favor of appellant, and H. T. Cresswell was appointed a referee by the court to take testimony, and report thereon as to the character, condition, and value of the property of respondent, preliminary to a rendition of final judgment. The decree required that the costs and expenses of the referee should be paid by respondent. The referee filed a petition asking the court to make an order directing respondent to forthwith pay into court the sum of $2,500, to be used in the payment of the costs and expenses of such reference. The appellant in this proceeding appeared at the hearing of the said petition, joined with the referee in asking for the order, but objected to the court granting respondent permission to mortgage his property for the purpose of securing the money wherewith to comply with the order; and the consideration of appellant's objection was the matter of contest before the court. If we understand appellant's affidavits, it was contended by her that respondent was able to procure the money from other sources, but the affidavits and oral evidence placed before the court at the hearing are sharply conflicting upon this issue, and therefore we will not discuss the evidence. The court made an order that respondent be allowed to mortgage his realty for the purpose of securing the money upon terms to be approved by the court, and set aside the injunction and lis pendens in the case to that extent, and for that purpose alone. The order of the court meets with our entire approval. No final decree in the action could be entered until the referee made his report. The referee could not make his report until the money was forthcoming to enable him to do his work. The money could not be advanced unless a mortgage was given to obtain it. Hence the further progress of the trial was completely blocked unless the court made the order here contested. We see no reason why the court did not possess the power to make the order, and, if it did not possess such power, we see no reason why appellant should complain of that fact. Let the order be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

97 Cal. 610

EX-MISSION LAND & WATER CO. v.FLASH et al. (No. 14,731.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1893.)

FORECLOSURE—JUDGMENT—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—FRAUDULENT ORGANIZATION OF CORPORATION—LACHES.

1. Defendants, having a contract for land at $5 an acre, employed agents to organize a corporation to purchase it at $25. It was represented to the subscribers for stock in such corporation that the contract held by defendants was for the purchase of the land at $25 an acre, the lowest price at which it could be obtained; and it was concealed from them that one of defendants, a large subscriber to the corporation, was interested in the contract, and that the organizers were defendants' agents. The corporation gave a mortgage for part of the price, which was foreclosed, defendants buying in the land and obtaining a deficiency judgment. Held, in an action to set aside the foreclosure decree and the judgment, and to cancel the notes and mortgage, that the corporation was the proper plaintiff, rather than the individual subscribers to stock.

2. In such case, as adequate relief necessarily embraced the cancellation of the notes and mortgage, the remedy by motion to set aside the foreclosure and for leave to answer was not exclusive.

3. The decree of foreclosure was rendered April 5th, the stockholders first obtained notice of the fraud June 5th, and the action was begun in December. Held that, as defendants were in control of the corporation till the last of September, and the delay in beginning the action had not prejudiced defendants, plaintiff's right of action was not barred.

4. Code Civil Proc. § 473, limiting the time within which one can obtain relief from a judgment or order taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or neglect, has no application to such a case.

5. The fact that defendants purchased the land before they put themselves in a position of trust towards the corporation by its organization did not prevent it from recovering the secret profits made by them.

6. The fact that rescission of the sale and restoration of the land to defendants was a practicable mode of relief does not exclude the relief actually sought.

7. That the decree asked for by plaintiff was more disadvantageous to defendants than to the actual organizers of the corporation, who had received cash commissions for their services, does not affect plaintiff's right to such relief.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by Ex-Mission Land & Water Company against H. L. Flash and A. D. Childress to set aside a decree of foreclosure and a judgment, and to cancel notes and a mortgage on which the decree was based. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Gibbon & Creighton, A. W. Hutton, and Welborn, Parker & Stevens, for appellants. Conklin & Hughes, Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, J. G. Garrison, and Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendants, having foreclosed a mortgage on the land of the plaintiff, purchased the land at the foreclosure sale for a sum less than the amount due on the mortgage, and caused a judgment to be docketed against the plaintiff for the deficiency. The plaintiff brought this action to set aside and annul the decree of foreclosure and the judgment for the deficiency, and also to cancel the notes and mortgage on which the decree was founded, on the alleged ground of fraud in procuring the notes and mortgage. The judgment of the court below was in favor of the plaintiff, granting all the relief prayed for. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The facts, as found by the court, relevant to the questions presented, are substantially as follows:

In March, 1887, the administrator of the estate of Augustine Olvera offered for sale at public auction a tract of land situated in the county of San Diego, containing 4,500 acres, pursuant to order of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, in which said estate was then being administered. One Charles H. Forbes requested the defendants to join him in the purchase of the land, and to furnish the money to make a payment of 10 per cent. of the purchase money required to be paid at the time of the bid, which they did. On March 19, 1887, Forbes bid in the land at the price of $5.05 per acre, and paid 10 per cent. of the purchase money, furnished by defendants, amounting to $2,272.50, it being understood that Forbes, Flash, and Childress should be equally interested in the purchase. On April 15, 1887, the sale was confirmed by the court as a sale to Forbes alone. A copy of the order of confirmation was delivered to Forbes on April 15, but was not recorded in San Diego county until June 6, 1887. In the latter part of April, 1887, the defendants and Forbes employed H. T. D. Wilson and N. D. Coleman to sell the land, and for that purpose to organize a corporation to make the purchase from the estate of Olvera, at the price of $25 per acre, amounting to $112,500, for which, in case of such sale, Wilson and Coleman were to be paid a commission of $5 per acre, amounting to $22,500.

On May 8, 1887, a written agreement was signed between Forbes, Flash, and Childress of the first part, and Wilson of the second part, witnessing "that the said parties of the first part, in consideration of the covenants and agreements on the part of the said party of the second part hereinafter contained, agree to sell and convey unto the said party of the second part, and said second party agree to buy, all that certain lot or parcel of land, situated in the county of San Diego and state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: "All that portion of that certain rancho situated in the county of San Diego, state of California, known as the "Rancho Ex-Mission of San Diego," described as follows, * * * containing about 4,500 acres, for the sum of one hundred and twelve thousand, five hundred dollars, gold coin of the United States; and the said party of the second part, in consideration of the premises, agrees to pay said sum to the said parties of the first part, the said sum of $112,500 to be paid as follows, to wit, $10,000 on or before May 20, 1887, $27,500 within sixty days, $20,000 within six months, $20,000 within twelve months, $20,000 within eighteen months, $15,000 within twenty-four months. Deferred payments to be secured by mortgage on said land, and to bear eight per cent. interest per annum from date. The parties of the first part agree to release land under above agreement at the rate of fifty dollars per acre outside of town sites, and at rate of one hundred and fifty dollars per acre in town sites. And the said party of the second part agrees to pay all state and county taxes or assessments of whatsoever nature, which are or may become due on the premises above described. It is further agreed that time is of the essence of this contract, and in the event of a failure to comply with the terms hereof by the said party of the second part the said parties of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or in equity to convey said property, and said party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto, and to moneys heretofore paid under this contract, and their interest in or to said moneys or said property shall thereupon immediately cease, as fully as if said moneys had never been paid or this agreement entered into. And the said parties of the first part, on receiving such payment, at the time and in the manner above mentioned, agree to execute and deliver to the said party of the second part, or to his assigns, a good and sufficient deed of grant, bargain, and sale. And it is understood that the stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties. In witness whereof, the said parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals, the day and year first above written. Chas. H. Forbes, H. L. Flash, A. D. Childress, Harvey T. D. Wilson, per N. D. Coleman." This agreement was prepared by Childress, and signed by Coleman for Wilson during Wilson's absence; and the court finds that it was a sham, and not intended to be binding upon either party.

On May 20, 1887, the following agreement, called the "Subscription Contract," (plaintiff's Exhibit A,) was drawn, and subscribed by all the parties thereto at or within a few days after its date: "Los Angeles, California, May 20, 1887. We, the undersigned, hereby agree to pay for the proportion of property hereinafter described as is set opposite our signatures, according to the terms stipulated in this writing. We agree to buy forty-five hundred acres of land in San Diego county, lying north of the city of San Diego about six miles, to wit: 'All that portion of that certain rancho situate in the county of San Diego, state of California, known as the "Rancho Ex-Mission of San Diego," described as follows, to wit, * * * "containing about forty-five hundred acres. For the foregoing land the sum of one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred dollars in legal money of the United States is to be paid on the following terms, —the same being twenty-five dollars per acre: Ten thousand dollars down, to bind the trade; twenty-seven thousand five hundred dollars within sixty days, without interest; thirty-seven thousand five hundred dollars in one year; and the balance, thirty-seven thousand five hundred dollars, in two years, from date of purchase. Deferred payments to be secured by mortgage on said land, and to bear eight per cent. (8%) interest per annum, from date. The parties buying being guaranteed a release on any part they may sell, upon their paying for the part so released at the rate of fifty dollars per acre, outside of town sites, and at the rate of one hundred and fifty dollars per acre in town sites. It is further agreed that parties selling shall furnish satisfactory abstracts fifteen days prior to the second payment, ($27,500.00,) and that the ten thousand dollars, first payment, shall remain in the Childress Safe-Deposit Bank of Los Angeles, Cal., in trust, until said abstract or title papers are presented. C. E. Mackey, one tenth; J. H. Outhwaite, per N. D. Coleman, one tenth; A. D. Childress, two tenths; P. C. Baker, one tenth; J. W. Montgomery, one tenth; Harvey T. D. Wilson, one tenth; Nicholas D. Coleman, one tenth; Flower, Jones & Co., one tenth; R. A. Thomas, one twentieth." La Tourette, who took one twentieth, did not sign this contract, but authorized Coleman to take that share for him, and there is no question that he was a party to the contract.

On May 26, 1887, Forbes and the defendants executed to Wilson and Coleman the following instrument: "Los Angeles, Cal., May 26, 1887. Having entered into an agreement with H. T. D. Wilson and N. D. Coleman, of Los Angeles, California, for the sale of a certain tract of land, about forty-five hundred acres, lying in San Diego county, California, known as a part of lot seventy (70) of the Ex-Mission grant, for the sum of one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred dollars, on terms as shown by a bond or agreement held by them, which expires on May 21, 1887, we hereby set forth the terms of the commission we obligate ourselves to pay to said Coleman and said Wilson. We agree they shall receive the sum of twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars, as follows: Out of the first ten thousand dollars cash payment that shall be made in the purchase of said land said Coleman and Wilson shall receive three thousand dollars; out of the next payment of twenty-seven thousand five hundred dollars they shall receive the sum of seven thousand dollars. The balance of said commission shall be paid, six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars in one year, and six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars in two years, from date of sale, with 8% interest per annum from date, by the surrender to said parties four notes of thirty-one hundred and twenty-five dollars each, signed by the company purchasing, two of said notes due in one year, and two of said notes to be due in two years, from date of purchase. This agreement, however, is subject to the consummation of sale as set forth in agreement of sale made this day. [Signed] Chas. H. Forbes. H. L. Flash. A. D. Childress."

On the 4th day of June, 1887, according to the verbal agreement and understanding of all the parties at the time the subscription agreement of May 20th was signed, the plaintiff corporation was organized with a capital stock of $500,000, divided into 500 shares, 450 of which were subscribed for as follows: R. A. Thomas, 25; J. W. Montgomery, 50; C. E. Mackey, 50; J. H. Outhwaite, 50; P. C. Baker, 50; A. D. Childress, 100; N. D. Coleman, 50; H. T. D. Wilson, 50; and J. R. La Tourette, 25. Between the time of the execution of the subscription agreement (May 20th) and the 16th day of July, 1887, Thomas, La Tourette, Montgomery, Mackey, Outhwaite, Flower, Jones & Co., and Baker paid to the defendant Childress, as trustee, to be applied to the purchase of the land by the corporation, the sum of $26,700, about one fifth part of which had been so paid before the organization of the corporation. Out of the money so paid to him by the persons last above named, Childress, on July 16, 1887, paid to the administrator of the estate of Olvera the balance of the purchase price of the land ($20,452.50) and caused a deed for the land to be executed by the administrator to Forbes, in pursuance of the order confirming the sale. After making this payment there remained in his hands, of moneys paid him as aforesaid by the persons last above named, $6,247.50. Deducting from this the 10 per cent. originally paid by defendants on Forbes' bid, there remained in Childress' hands $3,975 after paying the whole purchase price of the land.

On July 19th, Flash and Childress entered into a written agreement, reciting their several relations to the transactions above stated, and agreeing, among other things, that Childress should act as trustee for Flash in all matters pertaining to the land transactions until all the purchase money should be paid by the corporation; and should also act as trustee for the corporation. On July 20th, Forbes conveyed the land to Childress, as trustee for the corporation, and on the same day the corporation made its promissory notes for the unpaid balance of the purchase money, ($75,000,) payable in one and two years, to "A. D. Childress, trustee, or order," with interest at 8 per cent. per annum; and to secure these notes the corporation on the same day executed a mortgage on the land to "A. D. Childress, trustee." The notes were antedated to May 31st. It does not appear on the face of the mortgage or notes for whom Childress was trustee, but the court found that he held the notes and mortgage for himself and Flash, Forbes having theretofore assigned all his interest to them. On January 28, 1889, on his own motion, Childress conveyed the legal title of the land to the corporation, and about the same time assigned the notes and mortgage to Flash, but to the extent of his interest in trust for himself. On February 18, 1889, Flash commenced the action to foreclose the mortgage; and on April 5, 1889, a decree of foreclosure was entered by default for the sum of $88,875.61, including $2,500 for attorneys' fees. On May 4, 1889, the mortgaged land was sold by the sheriff, under the decree of foreclosure, to Flash, for the sum of $31,500, leaving a deficiency of $58,126.14, for which a judgment was docketed in favor of Flash against the corporation. The sheriff executed a deed to Flash November 8, 1889.

The fraudulent acts by which the corporation was induced to purchase the land and to execute the notes and mortgage, as found by the court, are substantially as follows: That the defendants, by their agents, Wilson and Coleman, for the purpose of inducing Mackey, Montgomery, Thomas, La Tourette, and Flower, Jones & Co. to subscribe the agreement of May 20th, and to subscribe for stock in the corporation, represented to them that Forbes and Flash held a contract for the purchase of 4,500 acres of land from the estate of Olvera, deceased, at the price of $25 per acre, which price was the lowest figures for which the land could be purchased. That those who would subscribe the agreement of May 20th would get in "on the ground floor at bed rock figures." That a corporation was to be immediately formed for the completion of the purchase under the said contract held by Forbes and Flash, and, upon the organization of the corporation, shares of the capital stock would be issued to the subscribers of the agreement in proportion to their subscription; and that all such representations were willfully false, except that Forbes and Flash held a contract for the purchase of the land. That defendants, by their said agents, fraudulently concealed from the subscribers last above named that the contract price of said land was only $5.05 per acre, and also concealed the facts that Childress was interested with Forbes and Flash in said contract of purchase from the estate of Olvera, that Forbes and Flash were interested with Childress in his subscription to the agreement of May 20th, and that Wilson and Coleman were agents of defendants and Forbes to make the sale to the corporation, for which they were to be paid a commission. That, although the subscriber Outhwaite was informed by Coleman that Childress was interested with Forbes and Flash in the contract to purchase the land from the estate of Olvera at $5.05 per acre, defendants, by their said agents, fraudulently concealed from him the facts that Wilson and Coleman were agents for the real sellers, and were to be paid said commission; and falsely represented to him that he was being admitted to the company on an equal footing with all other members thereof. While no express misrepresentations were made to the subscriber Baker, defendants fraudulently concealed from him the facts that Childress was interested with Forbes and Flash, as a seller of the land to the corporation, and that Wilson and Coleman were agents of defendants, and as such were to be paid said commission. That each of the above-named subscribers, to wit, Mackey, Montgomery, Thomas, La Tourette, Flower, Jones & Co., Outhwaite, and Baker, believed all the false representations made to him, and none of them had any notice of the facts concealed as aforesaid, nor of the falsity of said representations, until long after the foreclosure sale; and that by reason of said false representations and concealment of facts each of them was induced to subscribe the agreement of May 20th, and to join in the organization of the corporation. That the directors of the corporation were five in number, and from the organization of the corporation until September 28, 1889, consisted of Childress, Wilson, Coleman, Thomas, and Mackey, and during all that period the corporation was under the control of Childress, Wilson, and Coleman, who, with notice of all the aforesaid fraudulent acts and concealments, willfully and fraudulently permitted said judgment of foreclosure to be taken by default. This action was commenced on December 17, 1889, one month and nine days after the execution of the sheriff's deed to Flash.

1. Counsel for appellants contend that the findings of fact show no cause of action in favor of plaintiff, for the reason that the frauds found were committed, not against the corporation, but only against the individual subscribers to the agreement of May 20, 1887, who, by virtue of that agreement, became the purchasers of the land, and subsequently conveyed it to the plaintiff, but did not assign to the plaintiff their rights of action for fraud in the sale of the land to them. I think counsel are mistaken in contending that the agreement of May 20th is a contract of purchase in any proper sense of the term. No party to it purports to be seller or agrees to sell. All are represented as agreeing with each other to purchase the land, but from whom they propose to purchase is not expressed or implied in the written agreement. The agreement as written imposes no obligation upon the owner of the land in favor of the subscribers, nor upon the subscribers in favor of such owner. From other evidence than the subscription agreement, however, the court found that it was never the intention of the subscribers, or any of them, to purchase the land, but merely to take stock in a corporation thereafter to be organized by the subscribers, which should purchase the land from the estate of Olvera, or complete a purchase thereof under the contract held by Forbes and Flash, such stock to be issued to them in proportion to their subscriptions, it being an expressed and well-understood condition of their subscriptions that such corporation should be organized to make the purchase. Childress, who represented Flash, demanded this condition, as he would not personally sign the notes and mortgage for the deferred payments. Nor would Thomas subscribe without this condition. All the subscribers were informed by Wilson and Coleman, before they subscribed, that a corporation would immediately be organized to make the purchase of the land, and that they would receive shares of the capital stock for their subscriptions. Indeed, their subscriptions were intended to be, and were, substantially, subscriptions for stock of the corporation, though more formally repeated on June 4th, when the corporation came to be organized. At the time the corporation was organized, Childress, Flash, and Forbes were still the owners of the contract to purchase from the administrator of the estate of Olvera, made in the name of Forbes; and two days thereafter (June 5th) Forbes, who was not then known, except to defendants and their agents, to be interested in the transaction, recorded the order of the probate court confirming the administrator's sale to him. On July 16th the administrator's deed was executed to Forbes, for the use of Childress, Flash, and himself. On July 20th the purchase of the land by the corporation, ostensibly from Forbes, but really from Childress, Forbes, and Flash, was consummated by a conveyance from Forbes to Childress, trustee for the corporation, in consideration of $37,500 in cash, and the notes of the corporation then made to Flash, as trustee for Forbes, Flash, and Childress, for $75,000, secured by the mortgage of the corporation, as above stated. The $37,000 cash paid was the money of the corporation, theretofore advanced by the subscribers, as aforesaid, through Childress, their trustee, in payment for their stock in the corporation. Such having been the real nature of the transactions, dressed in gauzy disguise, no doubt the corporation purchased immediately from the defendants and Forbes. That the defendants so understood it is further evinced by the agreement between them of July 19, 1887, and the letter of Childress to the corporation dated January 5, 1889.

The defendants, by their agents, Wilson and Coleman, and otherwise, were evidently promoters of the corporation to purchase their own property. A "promoter of a corporation" is defined by Mr. Morawitz (section 545) to be "a person who, by his active endeavors, assists in procuring the formation of a company and the subscription of its shares. * * * The word 'promoter' has no technical legal meaning, and applies to any person who takes an active part in inducing the formation of a company, whether he afterwards becomes connected with the company or not." The definition given in Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, (section 651,) is as follows: "A promoter is one who brings about the incorporation and organization of a corporation. He brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise, aids in procuring subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which looks to the formation of a corporation. A promoter is considered in law as occupying a fiduciary relationship towards the corporation." "The subscriptions of the shareholders are made upon the trust that the promoters are men of rectitude and business sagacity, who will use their knowledge and exercise their control over the enterprise for the benefit of the company. * * * Justice demands that the promoters of a company should not abuse the confidence placed in them by the subscribers for shares, or derive any unjust advantage through their control over the organization or management of the company." Mor. Corp. § 545. Again, at section 546, the same author says: "Accordingly it has been held that, if persons start a company, and induce others to subscribe for shares for the purpose of selling property to the company when organized, they must faithfully disclose all facts relating to the property which would influence those who form the company in deciding upon the judiciousness of the purchase. If the promoters are guilty of any misrepresentation of facts or suppression of truth in relation to the character and value of the property, or their personal interest in the proposed sale, the company will be entitled to set aside the transaction, or recover compensation for any loss which it has suffered." The above quotations are well supported by authority, the principal and leading case being that of Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 5 Ch. Div. 73, affirmed by the house of lords in 1878, 3 App. Cas. 1218, a synopsis of which is given in Mor. Corp. at section 291. See, also, In re British Seamless Paper Box Co., 17 Ch. Div. 471; Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Hartmont, 5 Ch. Div. 394; McElhenny's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 188; Simons v. Vulcan O. & M. Co., Id. 202; Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403; Mining Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307, 42 N. W. Rep. 259, 17 Amer. St. Rep. 149, with notes. It therefore appears that the corporation was the party directly injured by the fraud, and was the proper party to bring this action.

2. While admitting that Wilson and Coleman were promoters of the corporation, counsel for appellants contend that the finding that they were authorized by the defendants to promote the corporation is not justified by the evidence. That Wilson and Coleman were the authorized agents of defendants and Forbes to sell the land, and were to be paid a large commission for their services, there is no doubt. The agreement of May 26th as to the amount and manner of payment of their commission would be nonsense on any other supposition. A large portion of the commission ($12,500) was to be paid in notes of "the company purchasing," which notes were understood to be the notes of an incorporated company, and not the notes of the persons who subscribed the agreement of May 20th; since Childress, who subscribed that agreement for himself and Flash, had made it a condition of his subscription that he was not individually to sign notes for the deferred payments of the purchase money; but that a corporation should be formed to purchase the land and to make the notes for the purchase money. The reason he assigned for this was that, being a banker, his credit might be injured by signing such notes individually. The evidence certainly tends to prove that the promotion of the corporation was an essential part of the scheme designed by and for the benefit of all the conspirators, including the defendants, and that Wilson and Coleman were authorized to execute the scheme. Childress, for himself and Flash, subscribed for one fifth of the capital stock of the contemplated corporation two weeks in advance of its organization. If the authority of Wilson and Coleman to sell to the particular corporation to be promoted by them for the benefit of defendants did not imply authority from the defendants to promote the corporation, it had sufficient tendency, in connection with other evidence, to prove it, to justify the finding of such authority by the court. Under this head counsel also contend that the agreement of May 8, 1887, was a contract of sale of the land from Forbes, Flash, and Childress to Wilson, but the finding of the court that it was not is fully justified by the evidence. Coleman testified that when it was presented to him by Childress, in the absence of Wilson, he protested against signing it for Wilson, for the reason that he had no specific authority to do so; and that he would not have signed Wilson's name if he had not understood that it would not be enforced against Wilson. Wilson testified that he was dissatisfied with it, and withdrew it. Besides, it is inconsistent with the agreement of May 26, 1887, in regard to the commission to be paid to Wilson and Coleman. It was evidently prepared by Childress for the purpose of concealing his interest as a seller to the contemplated corporation. Again, counsel have made extracts from the findings and complaint in which the subscribers of the agreement of May 20, 1887, are carelessly designated as "purchasers;" but, read in connection with their context, these expressions cannot be understood to mean that the subscribers of the agreement of May 20th purchased the land, except in the sense that their purchase of capital stock of the corporation gave them an interest in the land purchased by the corporation.

Appellants have specified more than 20 particulars in which they claim that the findings are not justified by the evidence, none of which are material, except such as relate to the agency of Wilson and Coleman, and to the contract of May 8, 1887, which have been answered. If the evidence justifies the finding that in promoting the corporation Wilson and Coleman represented the defendants as well as themselves, and the finding that the alleged agreement of May 8th was a sham, then the finding of all other facts herein stated are fully justified.

3. There is nothing worthy of special consideration in the points to the effect that the court erred in admitting evidence objected to by defendants' counsel, except to say that Wilson and Coleman, having represented the defendants in promoting the corporation, what they said to induce subscriptions to the agreement of May 20th was competent evidence against their co-conspirators.

4. Appellants contend that the plaintiff is barred by its own laches, especially in that it neglected to move the court in which the foreclosure was had to set aside the judgment of foreclosure within six months after its rendition, upon which motion, it is claimed, the plaintiff could have obtained all the relief to which it is entitled in this action. But I think this point is not maintainable, even on the facts as claimed by appellants, viz. that the defrauded stockholders had general notice of the fraud on June 5, 1889,—one month after the foreclosure sale,—and within the month of June consulted a lawyer as to their rights and remedies, and thence had more than four months within which to make their motion under section 473, Code Civil Proc., to set aside the judgment. While it may be true that they had notice on June 5th that they had been defrauded, and generally of the mode and means by which the fraud had been perpetrated, yet it does not appear that they were then sufficiently informed as to the particulars, nor as to the evidence by which the fraud might be proved in a court of justice. As yet few, if any, of them, knew how many of the stockholders had participated in the fraud, or where to apply for reliable information. Three of them resided in Los Angeles and three in San Diego, and it necessarily required considerable time to bring about unanimity and concert of action. It does not appear when they were first advised that the corporation was the proper party to sue, but it must have been after they were so advised that they determined to get control of the corporation at the next ensuing annual stockholders' meeting, to be held September 28, 1889, by electing a new board of directors. There was no reasonable prospect of their getting control of the corporation before the regular annual meeting by means of a called special meeting of the stockholders under section 310 of the Civil Code, since no director could have been ousted at such special meeting except by a vote of the stockholders owning two thirds of the capital stock, and the fraudulent stockholders held four tenths of the stock. In answer to this, counsel for appellants say Wilson would have voted with the innocent stockholders, but this is only an inference of counsel, drawn from the facts that Wilson consulted with plaintiff's counsel in the latter part of June, and testified on the trial to the facts constituting the fraud. It does not appear when Wilson first fully disclosed to the innocent stockholders the facts to which he testified on the trial; and, admitting that he did so in the latter part of June, 1889, it does not follow that the innocent stockholders could then have relied upon his voting with them to oust from the office of director his co-conspirators in the fraud. At the annual meeting of September 28, 1889, a new board of directors was elected, constituted of Thomas, Montgomery, Mackey, La Tourette, and Wilson,—the first four of whom were of the victimized stockholders; and on the same day the new board adopted a resolution authorizing and directing the commencement of this action, which was commenced two months and nineteen days thereafter. The new board of directors was elected only seven days before the expiration of the six months, within which it is contended a motion to set aside the judgment of foreclosure must have been made under section 473 of Code Civil Proc.

But a more conclusive answer to appellants' contention as to the six-months limitation is that none of the grounds upon which a party may be relieved from a judgment under section 473, Code Civil Proc., appear to have existed in this case. The judgment was not taken against the corporation through its "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," but through the fraud of its directors, in aid of the original fraud by which the notes and mortgage were procured. Having notice of the original fraud constituting a meritorious defense to the foreclosure action, a majority of the directors—Childress, Wilson, and Coleman—purposely, willfully, and fraudulently permitted the judgment to be taken by default. There was no mistake, no inadvertence, no surprise, and no excusable neglect. Therefore, conceding as I do, that the judgment and default might have been set aside, and leave to answer obtained on motion, on the ground of fraud, independently of section 473 of Code Civil Proc., yet such motion was not subject to the six-months limitation prescribed by that section of the Code. Nor was the remedy by motion, on the ground of fraud, exclusive of the remedy by regular suit in equity, unless it was perfectly adequate. Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. 368, 4 Pac. Rep. 232. The only relief to which the corporation would have been entitled on such motion was the setting aside of the judgment and default with leave to answer, which would have been but one step, circuitously leading to the same equitable relief which has been directly obtained by this suit. The very next step must have been the commencement of a distinct suit in equity, which, though called a cross suit, commenced by a cross complaint, would have been in fact and substance the same as this suit; and I am unable to perceive why, on the score of equitable jurisdiction, such cross suit would have been less objectionable than this suit. Should it be claimed that the corporation might have obtained complete and adequate relief in the foreclosure suit by simple answer without a cross complaint, the answer is that adequate and complete relief embraced the cancellation of the notes and mortgage, and possibly more, which is affirmative equitable relief that could not have been obtained without a cross complaint in the foreclosure suit, or a separate suit in equity.

It only remains, under this head, to consider the effect of the delay of the commencement of this action independently of the six-months limitation prescribed by section 473, Code Civil Proc. Was such delay, under the circumstances of the case, sufficient to bar the remedy? The mere lapse of time less than the statutory period of limitation will not bar an action for equitable relief unless the delay, under the circumstances, has been such as to justify the presumption that the defendant may have been prejudiced thereby. The bar of an equitable remedy in such cases is not imposed upon the plaintiff as a penalty for his negligence, but is intended merely to protect the defendant from such consequences of the delay as may be prejudicial to his rights. In the Case of the New Sombrero Phosphate Co., supra, it was contended that the remedy was barred by laches of the complainant, similar to such as claimed in this case, but the delay was held to be insufficient. Speaking to this point, Lord Penzance said: "The nearest approach to a definition of the equitable doctrine upon this head which is to be found amongst the cases cited is the statement made in the case of Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221. Delay is there said to be 'material where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy, either because the party has by his conduct done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or where, by his conduct and neglect, he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were to be afterwards asserted.' * * * It conduces, I think, to clearness and to the exclusion of a certain vagueness which is apt to hang about this doctrine of delay as a bar to relief to keep these two different aspects of it separate and distinct when the consequences of delay come to be considered in connection with the circumstances of an individual case."

Nothing of the facts or circumstances of this case indicates acquiescence of the defrauded stockholders in the wrongs complained of or a waiver of their rights. Nor was the situation of the defendants or the condition of the property so changed during or in consequence of the delay as to cause the judgment rendered against them to be more onerous than it should have been if the action had been commenced in June instead of December, 1889. Nor can the presumption be indulged that evidence which would have been beneficial to defendants might have been lost in consequence of the delay, since all persons who participated in, or appear to have had any knowledge of, the transactions, were living and testified at the trial; and all documents claimed to be material for the defense were produced. Another important circumstance in this connection is that during the first six months after the rendition of the judgment the plaintiff corporation was under the control of the defendants and their associates in the fraud, and therefore, to say the least, it would seem unjust that they should be heard to complain of laches of the plaintiff during that period, or of delay on the part of the defrauded stockholders in ousting them from the position of trust which they had taken and held for the purposes of promoting the fraud and obstructing any remedy therefor. Considering all the facts and circumstances, I think it does not appear that the trial court erred in holding the suit not barred by laches of the plaintiff.

5. Counsel for appellants further contend "that the findings do not support the judgment, for the reason that Childress and Flash bought the land for themselves and on their own account before the corporation was formed or any steps taken towards its formation." It is not claimed, however, that for this reason there was no fraud, nor that the corporation was not entitled to some species of relief, but only that "the remedy allowed by the court—'secret profits'—is inapplicable, because Childress and Flash, even conceding them to have been promoters of the corporation from the time the first steps were taken towards its formation, were not promoters at the time of the original purchase from the Olvera estate." Counsel say under this head: "The point is this: Conceding misrepresentations as to the price paid the Olvera estate, as well as concealment of Childress' ownership, and that these things were fraudulent and actionable, still, inasmuch as there was no agency when defendants and Forbes bought from the Olvera estate, the recovery of 'secret profits' was not authorized or appropriate relief." By this I understood counsel to mean that there was no confidential or fiduciary relation between the defendants and the corporation in respect to the contract of purchase from the estate at the time it was made. Conceding this, it is found by the court, and for the purpose of this point is admitted by counsel, that the defendants afterwards placed themselves in a fiduciary relation to the corporation by promoting it; and while in that relation, by means of the fraudulent representations and concealments found, induced the corporation to purchase their land, whereby they made "secret profits" exceeding $75,000. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that the relief granted (the canceling of the notes and mortgage) was equivalent to a recovery of secret profits fraudulently made, in what respect is the relief inappropriate? Surely it does no injustice to defendants, since it appears that the amount recovered is nearly $4,000 less than their cash profits, besides one fifth of the stock of the corporation, which they still retain, for which they paid nothing. Their co-conspirators, Wilson and Coleman, also retain one fifth of the stock which is a part of the fraudulent profits, while the defrauded stockholders have only three fifths of the stock for the $37,500 paid by them. Assuming that the price for which the land sold at the foreclosure sale ($31,500) was equal to its value, and that the corporation has no other property than the land, the innocent stockholders have lost $18,600 by the transaction, while the defendants and their co-conspirators have gained $12,600, notwithstanding the relief granted to the corporation. These results may be accounted for by the facts (1) that the relief granted to the corporation was not equivalent to a recovery of all the fraudulent profits; and (2) that the relief granted to the corporation necessarily operated in favor of all the stockholders equally. Yet it does not follow from these results that the corporation was not entitled to the relief granted; nor that it was not entitled to all the fraudulent profits. An objection to the recovery of secret fraudulent profits, similar to the objection under consideration, was answered in the case of Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 412. In that case the subscribers to a paper agreed jointly, and for their mutual benefit, to purchase certain lands for a specified price. The court said: "No one of the subscribers could, after this, purchase the lands for a less price, and compel his associates to allow him more than he paid. His purchase would inure to the benefit of all the subscribers. That this is so is so thoroughly settled, both upon principle and authority, that it will not be disputed. * * * If this be so as to a purchase made after the subscriptions are written, why should not the same rule be applied to a purchase made before? The wrong and breach of faith is just as great, and every reason and authority showing that the rule should be applied in one case would show that it should be applied in the other. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75, is an authority quite in point." I think this is a satisfactory answer to appellants' point, grounded on the fact that defendants purchased the land from the estate of Olvera before the date of the subscription agreement of May 20th.

It is suggested that just and appropriate relief could have been granted only by a rescission of the sale and restoration of the land to the defendants, as in the Sombrero Case, supra. Conceding that such rescission would have been a practicable mode of relief, I do not think it exclusive of any other appropriate mode by which a court of equity might have given appropriate relief, doing no injustice to the defendants. But it does not appear that such rescission and restoration of the parties to their original status were practicable, or desired by the defendants; nor does it appear that it would have been less onerous upon the defendants, as above shown. The land should not have been restored to defendants unless they were able to refund all the money which they and their associates in the fraud had wrongfully obtained from the corporation, and caused it to expend, with interest, which must have amounted to more than $40,000. Were the defendants solvent independently of the land? If not, could $40,000 have been realized from the land? These, and perhaps other, difficult questions must have been solved before it could have been determined whether rescission was the proper or even practicable mode of relief. Had the defendants requested that mode, and tendered payment of the requisite sum of money in the court below, they would be in a more favorable position to advocate this point here.

6. The point is made that the effect of the decree is more favorable to Wilson and Coleman than to defendants, since they retain both their stock in the corporation and their large commissions. In answer to this it is enough to say that it is a matter that does not concern the corporation. It concerns only the defendants and their co-conspirators in the fraud, and must be adjusted, if at all, among themselves. As before remarked, the relief granted to the corporation is equally favorable to all the stockholders. The grievances of individual stockholders, suffered from the wrongs of other stockholders, could not have been redressed in this action. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 606

MARION v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF OAKLAND et al. (No. 15,056.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1893.)

SCHOOL TEACHER — TERM OF EMPLOYMENT — DISMISSAL.

1. Pol. Code, § 1793, provides that school teachers, "when elected, shall be dismissed only for violation of the rules of the board of education, or for incompetency, unprofessional or immoral conduct." Held, that where a teacher was elected in 1886 "for the ensuing year," and continued in her position for the two succeeding years without further act of the board, she was not elected for life, subject to removal only for cause, but could be dismissed at the end of the year. Kennedy v. Board, etc., 22 Pac. Rep. 1042, 82 Cal. 483, distinguished.

2. If the board had no power to elect for a year, then the election was void, and the teacher was employed at the pleasure of the board, subject to be discharged, as any other employe, without a fixed term of employment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Application by Eunice D. Marion for a writ of mandamus to compel the board of education of the city of Oakland and others to draw a warrant for the payment of certain salary alleged to be due her as a school teacher. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. E. Snook, Geo. W. Reed, and E. Nusbaumer, for appellant. Wm. R. Davis and Jas. A. Johnson, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondents herein to approve and allow the demand of appellant, Eunice D. Marion, as a teacher of the school department of the city of Oakland, for salary from July 31, 1889, to and including the 28th day of February, 1890, for the sum of $700, and to compel the defendants to draw a warrant for the payment of said claim. Petitioner was nonsuited in the trial court upon the grounds, among others, that she was employed or elected by respondents as a teacher for a certain definite time, and that period had expired prior to the time for which she now claims salary, and upon which claim she attempts to support this proceeding. The motion for a nonsuit was properly granted upon the ground stated. Petitioner was an applicant before the board of education for a position as teacher in the public schools of Oakland, and the records of the board of May 29, 1886, disclose the following: "The board then went into executive session for the election of teachers for the ensuing year," and thereupon certain teachers were declared elected, among others the petitioner. Under this order of the board she began teaching, and continued in the same position during the years 1887 and 1888. In 1889 the board elected another teacher to fill the position she had previously occupied, and this proceeding resulted. At the trial she introduced no evidence indicating her employment or election by the board as a teacher for the years 1887 and 1888 other than the action of the board already stated, but insisted that her election in the year 1886 was an election for life, subject to removal for cause, as specified in section 1793 of the Political Code.¹ The case of Kennedy v. Board, etc., 82 Cal. 483, 22 Pac. Rep. 1042, is the leading authority in this state bearing upon this question, and it is there decided that the election of a teacher for no specified period of time, under section 1793, is an election for life, subject to dismissal for any of the causes mentioned in said section. That case goes quite far enough, and the principle here insisted upon carries the doctrine away beyond anything there declared. In the Kennedy Case the election of the teacher was for no stated, definite time, and it was not held in that case that the board had no power to elect for a certain definite period. Under its general powers the board of education is authorized to enter into contracts with teachers, and fix their compensation and term of employment. If the board should employ a teacher for one year, it would be absurd to say that it could not dispense with the services of such teacher at the end of the year. In the present case, whatever doubt may surround other elements of the transaction between these parties, the time for which petitioner's services were secured was fixed and definite. The board so understood it, for its record so discloses the fact. She taught under that authorization of the board. She entered the schoolroom, performed her duties, and drew her salary under that resolution, for there was no other. And, even conceding that she labored under a resolution, not knowing some of its terms, and honestly supposing she held a life position, her mistake in this regard could avail her nothing in the present proceeding.

While the statute, as construed in the Kennedy Case, gives the teacher a life tenure when elected without specifying the term of service, we see no reason why a board of education has not the power to elect a teacher for a month or for a year. Conceding an election to presuppose an office, and that a teacher's position after an election is an office, the statute does not fix the term of such office; and while there might possibly be valid objections to fixing the tenure for a long period of time, there would seem to be no want of power in the board to fix the term for a period of time of as short duration as it might see fit. Under the Kennedy Case the board of education of Oakland had the power to elect petitioner for life, but its power was not exercised to that extent, and her election by explicit terms was confined to a period of one year. We find nothing in the law denying the right of the board to exercise such a power. Again, we see no necessity of indulging in fine distinctions between the hiring of a teacher by special contract and the election of a teacher under this provision of the Code. There appears to be no reason in saying that, if a board of education desires to secure the services of a teacher for a month or a year, ¹Pol. Code, § 1793, provides that school teachers, "when elected, shall be dismissed only for violation of the rules of the board of education, or for incompetency, unprofessional or immoral conduct."

such teacher must be hired by a special contract, and cannot be elected, for, if elected, a life tenure is created, even against the intentions and wishes of all parties concerned. We think the law was not enacted with such ends in view. If we concede petitioner's position to be true, that the board had no power to elect for a year, then her cause still remains without merit, for the action of the board in electing her was void, and no election whatever was had. Consequently she was teaching at the mere pleasure of the board, subject to be discharged, as any other employee, without a fixed term of employment. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

MARION v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF OAKLAND et al. (No. 15,055.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1893.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Application by Eunice D. Marion for a writ of mandamus to compel the board of education of the city of Oakland and others to reinstate plaintiff as principal of a certain school. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. E. Snook, Geo. W. Reed, and E. Nusbaumer, for appellant. Wm. R. Davis and Jas. A. Johnson, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a mandamus to compel the board of education of the city of Oakland to reinstate the plaintiff, Eunice D. Marion, in the position claimed by her as principal of the Swett grammar school in Oakland. The judgment of the trial court went against her, and she is now before this court upon appeal from that judgment. For the reasons given in case No. 15,056, between the same parties, and filed on the same date herewith, (32 Pac. Rep. 643,) the judgment and order are affirmed.

97 Cal. 594

SAN DIEGO COUNTY v. SIEFERT. (No. 19,039.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 23, 1893.)

PLEADINGS—WAIVER OF DEFECTS.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. § 475, providing that defects in pleadings, not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, shall be disregarded, it is too late, after answering to the merits, decision, and judgment, to raise an objection that the complaint is insufficient.

2. Deer. Supp. p. 192, § 19, provides that the records and minutes of the board of county supervisors must be signed by the chairman and clerk. Held, that where it was contended that a regular meeting, held January 6th, was not regularly continued from day to day until January 22d, because the minutes of two of the intervening meetings were not attested by the clerk, and those of another meeting were not signed by the chairman nor attested by the clerk, it was competent to show by the handwriting of the entries, their contemporaneous character, and the official custody from which the book was produced, that the board met and adjourned at the times therein stated, and that the meeting of January 22d was a regular one. 3. Deer. Supp. p. 192, § 21, provides that the county board of supervisors must cause to be kept an ordinance book, in which must be entered all ordinances duly passed by the board. Held, that the record of an ordinance, with proof of proper publication, was sufficient to entitle it to be admitted in evidence, and is prima facie proof that the ordinance was passed, signed, and attested in the form in which it appears in the record, and the burden of showing its invalidity was on defendant.

4. Where it appears that there was a difference between the ordinance as recorded and as published, but the error did not affect the provisions of the ordinance touching defendant's liability, such error should be held immaterial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by the county of San Diego against John R. Siefert to recover a license tax. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Welborn, Stevens & Welborn, for appellant. Johnstone Jones and John R. Aitken, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action is to recover from the defendant, Siefert, the sum of $120, the amount of a license tax imposed upon his business as a saloon keeper for a period of 12 months, under an ordinance of the board of supervisors. The cause was tried by the court, and findings and judgment passed in favor of plaintiff, and the defendant appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that (1) facts are not alleged showing the existence of the ordinance; and (2) that the complaint fails to show a violation of the ordinance upon which the action is founded. Upon this ground defendant objected in proper time to the introduction of any evidence. Neither of these points is well taken. The complaint alleges "that under and by virtue of the provisions of an ordinance of the board of supervisors of said county, duly passed and approved at a regular meeting of the board held on the 22d day of January, A. D. 1890, and thereafter duly published as required by law, said ordinance being known as 'Ordinance No. 48 of the Ordinances of the County of San Diego,' and entitled," etc., "the defendant was required to procure a license from the tax collector, * * * and to pay for such license the sum of ten dollars per month." This allegation might not have stood as against a demurrer for uncertainty, but no demurrer was filed. Furthermore, the defendant, in his answer, alleged that he had no information or belief as to the truth of the allegation above quoted, and therefore denied that the board of supervisors had duly or at all passed or approved ordinance No. 48, as in said allegation referred to. The complaint alleged that the defendant "failed, refused, and neglected, and still does fail, refuse, and neglect, to pay such license tax, contrary to and in violation of the provisions of said ordinance." There is no allegation in the complaint that he failed to take out a license, but in his answer the defendant, "further answering, denies that he, during the times mentioned in said complaint, or at any other time or times, has or had neglected, failed or refused, or still neglects, fails, or refuses, to take out any license, as required by said ordinance." It is too late now, after answering to the merits, decision, and judgment, to raise the objections referred to. Section 475, Code Civil Proc.;¹ Harkness v. McClain, (Utah,) 29 Pac. Rep. 964. The findings support the judgment. There is a general finding that all the allegations of the complaint are true, and the denials and allegations of the answer are untrue. Several questions were made upon the trial and discussed in the briefs, which will necessarily arise upon a new trial.

1. It is contended that ordinance 48 was not adopted at a regular meeting of the board. For the purpose of proving that the meeting of the board at which this ordinance was passed was a regular meeting, plaintiff introduced in evidence ordinance No. 42, adopted January 11, 1889, declaring that the regular meetings of the board should be held monthly on the first Monday of each month. It is contended that plaintiff is required to show that ordinance 42 was adopted at a regular meeting also; that, without such evidence, it cannot be shown that the meeting at which ordinance 48 was adopted was a regular one. In People v. Dunn, 89 Cal. 228, 26 Pac. Rep. 761, it was held that an ordinance fixing rates of county licenses must be passed at a regular meeting, or at a special meeting called for that purpose. That the board must be regularly convened to perform any official act is true; but the legality of ordinance 42 was not put in issue by the pleadings, and the presumption arising from its existence upon the record of ordinances was quite sufficient to entitle it to be received in evidence without further proof. Code Civil Proc. § 1963, subd. 15; Id. § 1918, subd. 5; Id. § 1920. The presumption is, of course, a disputable one, but the burden of showing its invalidity was upon the defendant. But upon this point appellant further contends that the meeting at which ordinance No. 48 was passed was not a regular meeting, even if ordinance No. 42 was valid, for the reason that the regular meeting held January 6, 1890, was not regularly continued from day to day until January 22d, upon which last-named day it is claimed the ordinance was passed. This objection is based upon the fact that the minutes of two of the intervening meetings were not attested by the clerk, and that the minutes of another meeting were not signed by the chairman nor attested by the clerk. Section 19 of the county government act (Deer. Supp. p. 192) provides: "The records and minutes of the board must be signed by the chairman and clerk."

Substantially the same provision existed in the sixth section of the "Act to create a board of supervisors," (Hitt. Gen. Laws, § 6975,) and that provision was considered by this court in People v. Eureka, L. & Y. C. Co., 48 Cal. 145. In that case the court said: "The action recorded is not the action of the chairman or clerk. They sign the minutes, not as certifying to their own official action, but as witnesses that the record is the record made by the clerk under the direction of the board. * * * The statute does not declare that the record shall not be proof of the action of the board if not signed by the officers named, but the effect is only to make their signatures evidence, identifying the minutes. The failure of the chairman and the clerk to discharge their particular duty simply imposed on the party desiring to prove the official action of the board some additional trouble in establishing the handwriting of the entries, their contemporaneous character, and the official custody from which the book was produced." Upon this authority, the minutes of the meetings, if proved as there indicated, were competent to show that the board met and adjourned at the times therein stated, for the purpose of showing the continuity of the session, and that the meeting of the board on the 22d of January was a regular one. The custom of the chairman, as to the time and circumstances under which he signed the minutes, could be material only so far as it tended to explain the omission to sign them.

2. The question whether the ordinance was signed by the chairman and attested by the clerk, as required by the county government act, was seriously controverted. That the signing and attesting are necessary to the passage and validity of the ordinance is clear. The statute conferring upon the board the power of enacting ordinances specifies the manner in which it shall be exercised. Deer. Supp. p. 197, § 26. "When the mode of enacting ordinances is prescribed, it must be pursued." Dill. Mun. Corp. § 309. This signing by the chairman and attesting by the clerk is intended by the statute to be upon the original ordinance. Section 20, subd. 9, of the same act, makes it the duty of the clerk to "authenticate with his signature and the seal of the board all ordinances or laws passed by the board, and to record the same at length in the ordinance book." Section 21 provides: "The board must cause to be kept: * * * (6) An ordinance book, in which must be entered all ordinances or laws duly passed by the board." The question whether the ordinance was passed, signed, and attested is one of fact, which need not be considered upon this appeal. The record of the ordinance, accompanied with proof of proper publication, is sufficient to entitle it to be admitted in evidence, and is prima facie proof that the ordinance was passed, signed, and attested in the form in which it appears in the record, and casts the burden on the defendant of producing evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the record, at least as to some particular essential to its validity. The principal question, therefore, is one of fact

¹Code Civil Proc. § 475, provides that "the court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings * * * which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties; and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect."

to be found by the court or jury upon legal evidence, as in other cases.

3. It was developed upon the trial that there was a difference between the ordinance as recorded and as published; but what the defect was, further than that "section 16 is different," was not disclosed. The object of publication is to impart notice to those who are or may be affected by its provisions. If an error occurs in the publication, which does not affect the provisions of the ordinance affecting the defendant's liability or his defense against such liability, it should be held immaterial. More cannot be said in the absence of definite knowledge of the defect in the published ordinance. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

98 Cal. 13

DAVIS v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (No. 14,844.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1893.)

NEW TRIAL—CONDITIONS.

It is within the discretion of the trial court, after a verdict awarding excessive damages, to make an order denying a motion for a new trial on the condition that plaintiff will remit a certain part of the amount found by the jury.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John F. Finn, Judge.

Action by William Davis against the Southern Pacific Company to recover damages for personal injuries. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. L. Barnes and Frank Shay, for appellant. George A. Rankin, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been received by plaintiff on a passenger train of defendant. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff of $15,300. Defendant moved for a new trial upon various statutory grounds, including excessive damages. The trial court made an order that, if the plaintiff should consent that the judgment be reduced to $9,000, the new trial would be denied, and that otherwise it would be granted. Plaintiff filed a written consent to such reduction, and the motion was thereupon denied. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

The main proposition argued by counsel for appellant is that the denial of the motion for a new trial, upon condition that respondent remit part of the amount found by the jury, was unauthorized by law; and that, if the court thought the verdict excessive, its duty was to have granted a new trial. This position is undoubtedly, upon principle, a very strong one, and counsel have defended it very ably. They have also cited authorities from other states, which support the proposition, although we are disposed to think that the weight of authority in other states is the other way. But, whatever might be considered the weight of reason and foreign authority on the question above stated, if it were res integra here, the right of a court to do what is complained of in the case at bar is too firmly established in this state by a long line of decisions to be now questioned. The following are some of the cases in which the practice of denying a new trial when the plaintiff remits a part of the verdict has been established and recognized: George v. Law, 1 Cal. 363; Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381; Chapin v. Bourne, 8 Cal. 294; Clark v. Huber, 20 Cal. 196; Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160; Tarbell v. Railroad Co., 34 Cal. 616; Harrison v. Peabody, Id. 178; Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 462; Russell v. Dennison, 50 Cal. 243; Atherton v. Fowler, 46 Cal. 323; Dreyfous v. Adams, 48 Cal. 131; Gregg v. Railroad Co., 59 Cal. 312; Clanton v. Coward, 67 Cal. 373, 7 Pac. Rep. 787; Phelps v. Cogswell, 70 Cal. 201, 11 Pac. Rep. 628; Durfee v. Garvey, 78 Cal. 546, 21 Pac. Rep. 302; Id., 84 Cal. 590, 24 Pac. Rep. 929; Loveland v. Gardner, 79 Cal. 317, 21 Pac. Rep. 766; Gardner v. Tatum, 81 Cal. 370, 22 Pac. Rep. 880. It is argued that these authorities constitute a recognition of the practice without inquiry, rather than the determination of a contested point; but it will be found that in a number of the cases the point was expressly raised and argued by counsel, and definitely determined by the court. Such was the fact in the above-cited cases of Benedict v. Cozzens, Chapin v. Bourne, Dreyfous v. Adams, Clanton v. Coward. In Gregg v. Railroad Co., while the briefs of counsel do not appear in the report, the opinion of the court shows that the only point in the case was as to the power of the court to make an order similar to the one in the case at bar, and the court approves the practice as settled. Since then the practice has been frequently approved as beyond question. Moreover, this court has gone further, and has itself, on appeal, ordered a new trial, unless respondent should file a remittitur of damages. Tarbell v. Railroad Co., Kinsey v. Wallace, Atherton v. Fowler, Phelps v. Cogswell, Durfee v. Garvey, Loveland v. Gardner, all supra. It is contended that the rule should not apply to unliquidated damages,—damages for personal injuries,—but the rule was applied to just such damages in the following cases, above cited: George v. Law, Benedict v. Cozzens, Tarbell v. Railroad Co., Kinsey v. Wallace, Gregg v. Railroad Co., Phelps v. Cogswell. Considering the foregoing authorities, and others not cited, it would be almost as great a stretch of judicial authority for us to undertake to overthrow this long-established practice as it would be to undertake to dispense with a statute. We hold, therefore, that the action of the court now under review was in accordance with settled practice. Some of the cases speak of such action as within the discretion of the court, and perhaps there might be a state of facts upon which such action would be an abuse of discretion. But there was no such abuse of discretion in the case at bar. There are no other points in the case which call for special notice. As to the general liability of the appellant, the evidence, although to some extent conflicting, sustains the verdict, and, upon the evidence, we cannot pronounce the amount of the damages after the remittitur as excessive, at least in the sense that would warrant us in disturbing it. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(98 Cal. 42)

PIEPER v. PEERS et al. (No. 14,523.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1893.)

STAY OF EXECUTION — ACTION ON BOND—PLEADING.

In an action on a bond given to stay, pending appeal, execution on a justice's judgment for the return of personal property or its value, where the appeal has been dismissed by the superior court, the complaint need not allege that execution was issued and returned unsatisfied, or that notice of the dismissal of the appeal was given, or that demand was made before the action was brought, or that a delivery of the property could not be had, or that appellant has refused to obey an order of the superior court, unless a recovery is sought on such order.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; John Reynolds, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Pieper against Alexander Peers and others on a bond given to stay execution pending appeal. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. H. Campbell, for appellants. W. P. Veuve, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. This was an action against the defendants, as sureties upon an undertaking given to stay execution of judgment pending appeal. The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground of insufficiency, and the demurrer was properly overruled. They then answered, and plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendants appeal upon the judgment roll alone.

It is substantially alleged, and the court finds, that one Marie Albert obtained a judgment in a justice's court against one Lucas for the delivery of a certain lot of hay, or the value thereof in case delivery cannot be had; that Lucas thereafter filed and served notice of appeal therefrom to the superior court, and that thereupon the defendants executed and filed in the justice's court their written undertaking and justification on appeal, conditioned in pursuance of the provisions of section 973, Code Civil Proc.; that the appeal was thereafter dismissed by the superior court; that no part of the hay has ever been delivered, nor any part of its value or the costs ever been paid pursuant to the judgment, and that the judgment was duly assigned to plaintiff. It was not necessary to the sufficiency of the complaint to allege the issuance and return of the execution unsatisfied, (Nickerson v. Chatterton, 7 Cal. 573; Tissot v. Darling, 9 Cal. 285;) or that notice of the dismissal of the appeal by the superior court was given, (Murdock v. Brooks, 38 Cal. 604;) or that demand was made prior to the commencement of the action, (Coburn v. Brooks, 78 Cal. 443, 21 Pac. Rep. 2; Murdock v. Brooks, supra;) or that a delivery of the property could not be had; or that any order was made by the superior court, which the appellant in that case failed or refused to obey, unless a recovery is sought upon such order, when made, which is not the case here, for the obvious reason that the undertaking on appeal, which is the basis of this action, is an independent and absolute contract on the part of the defendants, by the terms of which they expressly promised and agreed, in consideration of a stay of the execution of the judgment appealed from, "that the appellant will pay the amount of the judgment so appealed from and all costs, and will obey the order of the court made therein if the appeal be withdrawn or dismissed." In Moffat v. Greenwalt, 90 Cal. 368, 27 Pac. Rep. 296, which was an action upon an undertaking on appeal to a superior court, it was said by Justice Harrison: "By their undertaking the defendants promised and agreed that, 'if the appeal be withdrawn or dismissed,' the appellant would pay the amount of the judgment so appealed from. This was an original and independent agreement on their part, (Tissot v. Darling, 9 Cal. 278,) and in legal effect was entered into by them with the plaintiff. By virtue of the provisions of section 979 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the filing of the undertaking staying proceedings all proceedings under the execution are to be stayed. * * * The consideration recited in the undertaking was the 'staying of the execution of the judgment appealed from,' and, as this undertaking was filed, it became an executed obligation on their part, and, whenever the contingency upon which the obligation was to depend arose, their liability became fixed. This liability could not thereafter be defeated by an act or omission on their part or on the part of their principal. Their agreement to be bound in case the appeal should be dismissed extended as well to a dismissal resulting from their failure to justify as to a dismissal resulting from a failure on the part of their principal to prosecute the appeal. * * * We do not think that it was competent for the defendants, after they had executed the undertaking, to avoid their liability thereon by any act of their own, or any failure to comply with a provision which is intended solely for the protection of the respondent." Upon the dismissal of the appeal the defendants became liable for the amount of the judgment appealed from, and all costs. To discharge themselves from this liability, they must show as a matter of defense that the judgment has been satisfied by the return of the property, or that the amount of the judgment and costs have been paid. As this does not appear to have been done, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DEHAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(98 Cal. 10)

BROWN v. JENKS. (No. 14,914.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1893.)

STREET-PAVING CONTRACT—PROVISION FOR REPAIRS BY CONTRACTOR.

1. A requirement in a street-paving contract that a contractor shall keep the street in repair for five years imposes an additional burden on the property owners, and therefore vitiates the assessment made under it, unless such requirement is authorized by the statute providing for the letting of contracts for street improvements.

2. The objection as to the additional burden is not removed by testimony of the contractor that the requirement did not enhance the amount of his bid, as others might have bid a less sum if the contract had not contained such requirement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by Gratz K. Brown against C. L. Jenks on an assessment for street paving. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. L. Jenks, for appellant. Shaw & Holland and C. T. H. Palmer, for appellee.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from the judgment, and presents two questions: (1) Whether the court properly overruled defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint; (2) whether the court properly struck out a defense from the answer. Respondent confesses error in striking out the defense, and consents that the case be reversed on that ground. He says the point made by defendant on the demurrer is radical and important, and will be argued when the case is again here in such form as to require its determination. The question as to the correctness of this ruling is properly presented on this appeal from the judgment, and the consent of respondent to a reversal on some other ground, which does not dispose of the demurrer, cannot deprive appellant of his right to have it determined. The question there raised is whether defendant can be put to the labor and expense of a trial on the merits, or not. Naturally, it is the first point to be determined, and, as the city of San Diego may have an interest in the question beyond this case, it is to be regretted that we have not the advantage of the views of its counsel upon the subject.

The action is brought upon an assessment for street work. It appears that the city council passed a resolution to the effect that it was its intention to order the following street work done: "That D street, from the east line of California street to the east line of Front street, * * * be paved with hard porphyry rock macadamizing, and cross-walked with granite and guttered with granite, all in accordance with the general specifications and the special specifications No. 1 for business streets," etc. The notices required were duly given, a resolution in due form passed, the proper time requiring the work to be done; and the work was contracted to be done, in accordance with the resolution of intention, to a contractor, who has done the work as required, which has been duly accepted by the proper officers of the city. The specifications referred to required the contractor to give a bond, with sureties, conditioned "for keeping the streets so improved in thorough repair for the term of five years from the completion of the contract. Payment in full of the contract price shall not release the contractor or sureties on said bond until five (5) years shall have expired. The necessity of such repairs shall be determined by the street commissioner and ex officio superintendent of streets and the street committee of the city of San Diego." The specifications are attached to the complaint, and make a part of it, and it is averred that the bond was given by the contractor as required. It is contended that this requirement in the contract vitiated the assessment. The work was done under the provisions of an act of the legislature passed March 18, 1885, (St. 1885, p. 147.) This act contains no grant of authority to the city council to contract for keeping a street in repair. Section 2 authorizes the council to contract for different kinds of street work. In all cases the work authorized is such as is necessary to make and complete a street, or to repair existing defects. The bond is not only unauthorized by the words of the statute, but the requirement changes, and may increase, the burdens of the property owner. It is manifest that the obligation to keep the street in repair for five years is a burden which one would not undertake for nothing. Therefore a contractor would charge a higher price for the work when he was forced to contract also for repairs. The expense undertaken is indefinite; and the property owner must pay for them in advance, whereas the statute provides for repairs after the necessity for them appears. Then, it being contingent, he will be paying for repairs which may never be required. And then they are assessed upon a different basis from that provided by the statute. Section 13 provides that needed repairs shall be made by the owners of the frontage where the repairs are required. Under the contract all the owners of frontage along the entire line are assessed in proportion to frontage. As to some of them, no repairs may ever be required, or such as would be much less costly than repairs at other places along the line covered by the contract. From the argument of appellant, I gather that it was suggested in the lower court that this requirement in the specifications was intended as a guaranty that the work would be well done, and would not require repairs for that period of time. If so, the provision is equally unauthorized. The lot owner cannot be made to pay for such a guaranty, which may become worthless before the time has elapsed. Officers are provided and vested with the power, and charged with the duty, of seeing that such work is properly done. A bond cannot be substituted for the performance of this duty. Besides, it is for all repairs, and not such as may result from defects in the work. It covers repairs for defects from unforeseen causes, or from wanton abuse of the street by individuals.

If the contractor is willing to testify that the anticipated cost of repairing did not enhance the price, such testimony would not help the matter. Others might have bid for the work a less sum, if this requirement had not been made. I think the case should be reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer.

BURNETT v. LLEWELYN. (No. 19,038.) (Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1893.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by Burnett against Llewelyn on an assessment for street paving. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for appellant. Wellborn, Stevens & Wellborn, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The court erred in striking out the second defense in the answer of the defendant. (Brown v. Jenks, 32 Pac. Rep. 701, No. 14,914, this day decided,) and upon the authority of that case the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

97 Cal. 647

PARSONS v. SMILIE. (No. 19,135.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1893.)

BREACH OF CONDITION SUBSEQUENT IN DEED — EQUITABLE RELIEF FROM FORFEITURE.

1. In an action to compel a reconveyance of land on which plaintiff had entered for breach of a condition subsequent, that defendant (plaintiff's grantee) should maintain a lumber yard on the premises conveyed, for five years, the trial court found that the conveyance was made at a time of great excitement in the real-estate market, and both plaintiff and defendant believed that large quantities of lumber would be required for building, as represented by plaintiff, but that there was little, if any, demand for lumber when defendant discontinued the lumber yard, and has not been any since. Held, that equity would not relieve defendant from the forfeiture, as the damage to plaintiff by the breach of the condition could not be ascertained, and it was immaterial whether or not the price paid by defendant for the land was its full value at the time of the conveyance.

2. Under Civil Code, § 1109, providing that, on breach of a condition subsequent in a grant, "the person otherwise entitled to hold under the grant must reconvey the property to the grantor or his successors," a grantor, on entry for breach of condition in a recorded deed, may sue to compel a reconveyance, as the record of the deed shows the legal title to be in the grantee notwithstanding the entry.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by Ephraim Parsons against Robert Smilie to compel a reconveyance of land for breach of condition subsequent. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. Metcalf & Metcalf and Chas. L. Batcheller, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. On the 21st day of November, 1887, plaintiff was the owner of four certain lots in North Pomona, Los Angeles county, and on that day executed and delivered to the defendant a deed of conveyance of the same for the consideration, therein expressed, of $1,073.60, then paid by defendant. The granting part of the deed was in the usual form, following which was this clause: "This deed is given and accepted on the following conditions, which are to be binding on the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, forever, to wit: The party of the second part shall put and maintain thereon a good lumber yard for a period of not less than five years, said yard to be opened for business within 120 days from this date. It is further stipulated that no intoxicating drinks shall ever be made or sold or given away on the above premises; and the party of the second part binds himself, his heirs, and assigns, to the above covenants, and, in case the above-described premises are transferred to other party or parties, they are to be bound by the above-named conditions, and a failure to comply with same will render this conveyance null and void, and said premises shall revert to said first party." This deed was duly recorded. Plaintiff entered for a breach of the condition to maintain a lumber yard on said premises, and notified defendant thereof, and demanded a reconveyance, and brought this action to compel such reconveyance, and remove the cloud caused by the record of defendant's deed. A general demurrer was interposed to the complaint, which was properly overruled. The defense to the action will sufficiently appear from the findings of the court. The findings were 27 in number, and can only be outlined in this opinion. The court found the condition as above recited; that defendant erected an office upon one of the lots for the sale of lumber, and maintained a lumber yard for less than a year; that plaintiff entered for condition broken, and notified defendant thereof, and demanded a reconveyance; that, at the date of said conveyance, plaintiff owned a large tract of land in the immediate vicinity of the lots conveyed to defendant; that defendant was a contractor and dealer in lumber, and was desirous of establishing a lumber yard in that locality, which plaintiff also desired, for the purpose of affording facilities to the purchasers of land, and to himself, for procuring lumber; that said lots were not at the time of the sale of the value in the market of $2,500, as alleged in the complaint, but were of the value of $1,073.60, and no more, and are now worth not exceeding $1,000. It was also alleged in the answer, and found by the court, that this transaction occurred during a period of great excitement in the real estate market regarding values and prospects of improvement, and the laying out of new towns on unoccupied land, and particularly in that vicinity; that plaintiff represented that large quantities of lumber and other materials would be required by plaintiff and others for building houses, and other purposes; that defendant relied on these representations, but that they were not false or fraudulent, as alleged in the answer, and were not intended to deceive the defendant, but they were believed to be true both by plaintiff and defendant, and both plaintiff and defendant were deceived thereby; that large quantities of lumber were not required, either by plaintiff or other persons, and that very little lumber or other materials were sold by defendant from said lumber yard; and that, at the time the lumber yard was discontinued, there was very little, if any, demand for a lumber yard on the said premises, and has not been since that time. The court further found "that defendant offered to make full compensation to plaintiff for whatever detriment had been occasioned to plaintiff by reason of the failure, if any, of defendant to comply with the provisions of said deed," but that no detriment had been occasioned to plaintiff by reason of such failure, and "that the defendant has not committed any grossly negligent or negligent or willful or fraudulent, breach of duty, nor any breach of duty," and "that he had fulfilled and performed all of the conditions in said deed, except as in these findings stated;" that on the 23d day of March, 1891, the defendant offered to reconvey to the plaintiff the said premises upon the repayment by the plaintiff of the sum of $1,073.60, together with legal interest thereon from the date of the deed; that defendant also offered to compensate plaintiff for any detriment he had sustained, but that plaintiff had not been injured by the breach of the condition. Many of these findings are immaterial, unless, as respondent contends, the defendant, under the facts so found, is entitled, in equity, to be relieved from the consequence of his breach of the condition upon which the property was conveyed to him.

Near the close of his brief, respondent states the case as follows: "In the present case, defendant has not asked to be excused from performing on account of difficulty or expense or hardship, or because he was deceived by the plaintiff, but practically admits the breach at least of the condition that he shall maintain a lumber yard for five years, and, in case the court thinks that the complaint and conditions are sufficient, asks the court to relieve him by allowing him to make compensation for any injury he has caused." The complaint is clearly sufficient, nor can there be any doubt or room for construction as to the condition in question. Counsel say the expression, "a good lumber yard," is ambiguous and indefinite; but that question is not involved. If defendant had maintained a lumber yard of some kind for the whole period, that question might have arisen; but, if he did not keep any, he did not keep a good one.

I do not in the least controvert the general doctrine that equity will not render its aid to enforce a forfeiture for breach of condition subsequent in a deed, but the question presented is how far equity shall interfere to defeat a forfeiture for the violation of such condition. At common law, two things were required to revest the estate in the grantor, viz. a breach of the condition, and an entry for condition broken. Here both of these things occurred. It is conceded by defendant that he failed to perform the condition, and it is found by the court that plaintiff entered upon the premises, notified the defendant of the breach, and that he claimed the premises, and demanded a reconveyance. If it be true, therefore, that a re-entry after condition broken revests the estate in the grantor, it would be necessary to show, in order to sustain respondent's contention, that equity has the power to defeat the operation of the law and the acts of the parties, and take away from the plaintiff the estate which has become revested in him, and again vest it in the defendant. The conveyance upon condition was voluntarily accepted by the defendant; it was not unlawful, nor impossible of performance; and, in case of a contract thus entered into, equity would not relieve him from his obligation to perform it. There are cases in which equity has relieved against a forfeiture of the estate, but none, I think, under the circumstances, nor of the character, here involved. In the case of Bethlehem v. Annis, 40 N. H. 39, the principle is stated that wherever a conveyance of land upon a condition which is in equity regarded as a mortgage, or as a security for a loan of money, equity may relieve, and that this doctrine applies to cases generally where conditional deeds are made as security for the performance of a contract. After stating these general principles the court in that case said: "But, upon consideration, it will be seen that this principle, though generally true, can have no application to any other contracts than such as by their nonperformance create a debt, or a demand in the nature of a debt, against the delinquent party. Wherever the condition, when broken, gives rise to no claim for damages whatever, or to a claim for liquidated damages, the deed is not to be regarded as a mortgage in equity, but as a conditional deed at common law." In Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358, it was said, (syllabus): "A court of equity may grant relief from forfeiture of an estate conditioned for the maintenance and support of the grantee, where the forfeiture was accidental and unintentional, and not attended with irreparable injury. But it rests in the sound discretion of the court when relief shall be granted in this class of cases." So there are numerous cases arising under leases, and in contracts where time is not of the essence of the contract, in which courts of equity will relieve against a forfeiture. The general doctrine is that equity will relieve where the thing may be done afterwards, or compensation can be made for it, but that unless a full compensation can be given, so as to put the party in precisely the same situation, a court of equity will not interfere, for such jurisdiction would be arbitrary. Washburn (2 Real Prop. p. 23) says: "And the only cases where equity interposes as to such conditions are where the failure of performance has been the effect of accident, and the injury is capable of compensation in damages which the court has the means of measuring, and where the grantor can be made perfectly secure and indemnified, and can be placed in the same situation as if the occurrence had not happened. This applies to cases where the condition is for the payment of money at a particular time, and compensation for the delay can be measured by the interest during that time. But where the condition is for the performance of a collateral act the rule is different, as the court has no standard by which to measure damages." Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. 415, 431; Bacon v. Huntington, 14 Conn. 92; Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 56; Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358, 372. The same author again says, (page 23): "But if the act be willfully done, or one for which the court has no certain rule by which to measure the damages, beyond their own arbitrary judgment in the matter, equity will not relieve." See, also, Descarlett v. Dennett, 9 Mod. 22; Wafer v. Mocato, Id. 112; Northcote v. Duke, 2 Eden, 322. In Elliott v. Turner, 13 Sim. 485, it is held that "willful," in such a case, is the same as a voluntary act of the party.

Counsel for respondent relies strongly upon section 3275 of the Civil Code, which is as follows: "Whenever, by the terms of an obligation, a party thereto incurs a forfeiture, or a loss in the nature of a forfeiture, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom, upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty." This section has never, so far as I have been able to find, been construed by this court. Appellant contends that it has no application to conditions either precedent or subsequent, but applies to covenants or other obligations capable of direct enforcement by action. I do not think it necessary to determine that question. Assuming that it applies to cases of forfeiture for breach of conditions subsequent, it closely follows the principles stated in the cases above cited. Compensation will only be made where there is some measure or standard by which it can be estimated; nor can I see anything in this section requiring the word "willful" to be given a different meaning from that expressed in the cases upon the subject of relief from forfeiture, which is the ordinary meaning of the word. In Elliott v. Turner, supra, the chancellor said it meant the same as "spontaneous" or "voluntary." Lord Eldon, in Hill v. Barclay, supra, does not define the word, but uses it in connection with the words "neglect" and "omission," as well as in connection with acts performed. Redfield, C. J., in Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt., at page 373, said: "In cases where the condition is for the payment of money, or for the performing of a certain value of services expressed in currency, as one hundred dollars of necessary repairs upon buildings leased, it has been, I think, the more general practice of the court to grant relief as matter of right, without reference to the inquiry whether the default was accidental or willful; but in all cases where the thing to be done was something collateral, where the issue, quantum damnificatus, must be sent either to a jury or masters before the court could grant relief, they have pretty generally, I think, required to be satisfied that the omission to perform was not willful, but accidental and by surprise, and it has been held, always, in such cases, to depend very much upon the circumstances of the particular case." Black's Law Dictionary defines the word "willful" as follows: "Proceeding from a conscious motion of the will; intending the result which actually comes to pass; designed; intentional; malicious." The court, however, made a finding that the breach of the condition by defendant was not "grossly negligent or willful or fraudulent." Unless the word "willful" was understood by the court, in that connection, to mean "malicious," or with intent to injure the plaintiff, the finding cannot be sustained from the evidence. For a period of about two months defendant kept a man in charge of the lumber yard, afterwards left it in care of the railroad station agent for some time, and, within a year from the time it was started, removed the lumber remaining unsold to his lumber yard at the town of Pomona, two miles or more from the premises in question. It is impossible to conclude that his removal of the lumber yard was not intentional or voluntary, or that it was not the act of his will to do so; nor can I conceive of any possible measure of damages, or mode of estimating or determining the extent of the injury to plaintiff, by defendant's breach of this condition, even if it were material to do so. The authorities clearly show that the cases where compensation has been allowed were of an entirely different class from the case at bar, and where, as was said by Chief Justice Redfield, it would not be necessary to send the issue of the amount of damages either to a jury or masters before the court could grant relief. In Wafer v. Mocato, 9 Mod. 112, it was said: "For this court never relieves but in such cases where it can give some compensation in damages, and where there is some rule to be the measure of such damages, to avoid being arbitrary." And in a note to Descarlett v. Dennett, Id. 22, it was said "that the court of chancery will not relieve against a covenant where on the performance or nonperformance of the act to be done, if omitted, the party is to pay a sum by way of liquidated damages." The court found that plaintiff had not sustained any injury from defendant's breach of the condition, and that the price paid by the defendant for the lots was the then market value. I do not think it material whether it was or not. The plaintiff may have been unwilling to sell, even at the fair market value, except for the purpose of having a lumber yard conducted upon these lots. There must have been a purpose on the part of the grantor in inserting that condition in the deed, and this purpose must have been understood and considered by defendant in accepting the condition. That the establishment and maintenance of such business was beneficial to the plaintiff is beyond question, but the quantum of such benefit in dollars and cents is absolutely incapable of computation or estimation, and for that reason the injury sustained by the breach in question cannot be ascertained by any rule or measure of damages known to the law.

While not undertaking to decide what exceptions there may be to the general rules stated by the authorities upon the subject of relief against forfeiture, I think it clear that this case is not an exception to those rules, and that the circumstances insisted upon by respondent will not justify this court in affirming the judgment. A court of equity cannot undertake to set aside the deliberate contracts or obligations of parties, fairly and freely assumed, because time may show that the obligation was onerous or unprofitable. Equity was not intended to subvert the law, nor has it any authority to set aside or disregard the positive, legal obligations voluntarily assumed by parties, except under those special circumstances recognized, though not always clearly defined, by the authorities. If it be said that the plaintiff has come into a court of equity, and that the judgment is right because equity will not enforce a forfeiture, the reply is that the Civil Code permits it. The deed from plaintiff to defendant is shown to have been recorded by the record, and under our recording acts the legal title to the premises, notwithstanding the entry for condition broken, appears to be in the defendant. Section 1109 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "Where a grant is made upon conditions subsequent, and is subsequently defeated by the nonperformance of the condition, the person otherwise entitled to hold under the grant must reconvey the property to the grantor or his successors by grant duly acknowledged for record." In Liebrand v. Otto, 56 Cal. 248, the action was to remove a cloud from plaintiff's title. The defendant had never been in possession. The action there, as here, was based upon a forfeiture. The court there said that the case thus far had been treated as a proceeding in equity to remove a cloud from plaintiff's title, but that it might also be considered as a suit brought under section 1109 of the Civil Code; that, if the grantee had failed to perform the conditions upon which the grant was made, it was its duty, under that section of the Code, to reconvey the property to the grantor. This being a duty required and enjoined by the statute, and one essential to show plaintiff's title upon the record, the case is taken out of the ordinary proceedings in equity, and the action is one based upon a statutory right. The plaintiff, if he were not in possession, might have brought ejectment, and recovered, but that would not have cured the defect apparent upon the record in his title; and our Code procedure will not require, even if the plaintiff be not in possession, that he should bring two actions,—one to establish his title at law, and the other to compel a conveyance. The form of action is, I think, proper, showing the facts which establish the plaintiff's legal title, and at the same time compelling the conveyance under the Code provision. In the view I take of the case, the finding that the plaintiff is not now the owner in fee, or at all, of said premises, is not sustained by the evidence, nor do the findings support the judgment, and the judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and I so advise.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

98 Cal. 1

WILMINGTON TRANSP. CO. v. O'NIEL.
(No. 14,872.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1893.)
CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES —VALIDITY OF STIPULATION.

1. In an action on a contract the complaint alleged that defendant hired plaintiff's lighter, and agreed to return the same in good condition, and, if lost or damaged to the extent that it could not be put in the same good condition as when received, to pay $3,500 for the lighter; and that while in his use it was lost, whereby defendant became indebted to plaintiff for $3,500. Defendant answered that the lighter was destroyed by the act of God and the elements; that the actual worth of the lighter was only $1,800, and that he has been and is now willing to pay plaintiff $2,500. Held, that the answer failed to set up any defense, the cause of the loss being immaterial.

2. The $3,500 mentioned in the contract should be regarded as liquidated damages, and not as a penalty.

3. Under Civil Code, §§ 1670, 1671, providing that every contract which determines in advance the amount of damages to be paid in case of a breach shall to that extent be void, except where it would be extremely difficult from the nature of the case to fix the actual damages, the contract set out in the complaint is void so far as it attempts to fix such amount.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Action by the Wilmington Transportation Company against Patrick O'Niel on a contract. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John Roberts, A. M. Carpenter, and Roberts & Robinson, for appellant. D. P. Hatch and John D. Bicknell, for respondent.

VAN CLIEF, C. On November 3, 1890, the respondent, (plaintiff,) a corporation, as party of the first part, and the appellant (defendant,) as party of the second part, executed the following agreement: "That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned to be kept and performed by said party of the second part, does covenant and agree unto the chartering and letting to hire of its coal lighter Wilmington, her anchor and chain, unto the said party of the second part for the term of one month from the date hereof; said lighter to be exclusively employed during the term of this charter party in transporting rocks from Santa Catalina island to Wilmington bay, for use on the government breakwater. The said party of the second part, in consideration of the foregoing and the use of said lighter Wilmington, does hereby covenant and agree to and with the said party of the first part to pay for the chartering and use of said lighter Wilmington, under the aforesaid conditions, at the rate of fifty dollars ($50) per month, payable in advance, and to return the said lighter Wilmington to said party of the first part in the same good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear not excepted, upon twenty hours' notice being given by the said party of the first part, and to deliver said lighter alongside the Southern Pacific Co.'s wharf at San Pedro; and should said lighter Wilmington be lost or damaged to the extent that it cannot be put in the same good condition as when received, the party of the second part to pay the party of the first part the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars ($3,500) for said lighter Wilmington. Wilmington Transportation Co. By its secretary, W. G. Halstead. Patrick O'Niel." The action is based upon the agreement to pay $3,500 in case the lighter should be lost, and it is averred in the complaint that the lighter Wilmington was delivered to defendant according to the agreement; "that on or about the 12th day of November, 1890, said coal lighter Wilmington, while in the use and occupation of the defendant, was lost and damaged to the extent that it cannot be put in the same good condition as when received from plaintiff by defendant, said coal lighter Wilmington being totally lost and destroyed; that under and by virtue of the terms and conditions of said agreement the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,500, as provided in said agreement, no part of which sum has been paid; that the plaintiff demanded payment of the said defendant of the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars, but said defendant at all times, and still does, refuse and neglect to pay said sum, or any part or portion thereof." The prayer is for judgment against defendant for the sum of $3,500, "with interest thereon from November 12, 1890, (date of the loss,) until paid, with costs of this action." The complaint contains no averment as to the value of the lighter, nor as to the "twenty-hours notice" mentioned in the agreement. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the general ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled by the court, and defendant answered. The answer admits the execution of the agreement, and alleges "that the lighter was not injured, lost, or destroyed by any act, negligence, or default of the defendant, but by act of God and the elements," and proceeds to state particularly the manner and causes of the loss during a storm; further alleges that the value of the lighter at the time it was delivered to defendant, or at any time thereafter, did not exceed $1,800; and further alleges that the defendant at all times has been, and now is, willing "to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $2,500, which, he avers, is more than the value of said lighter and the damages sustained by plaintiff." In this state of the pleadings the plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings according to the prayer of the complaint, which motion was granted, the judgment being for $3,717.81, with interest thereon until paid. This includes interest on $3,500 from the date of the loss of the lighter. The defendant appeals from the judgment and contends—First, that the answer raised a material issue as to whether the lighter was lost by inevitable accident; second, that the sum to be paid ($3,500) in case the lighter should be lost or damaged, etc., was not intended to be fixed as liquidated damages, and that such intention does not appear from the agreement, properly construed; and, third, that if the sum of $3,500 was intended as liquidated damages, the agreement to that extent is made void by sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code.

1. I think the first point cannot be sustained by the authorities. The defendant expressly promised to pay in case the lighter should be lost, without any provision or qualification in the contract as to the manner or cause of such loss. Where a party has expressly undertaken without any qualification to do anything not naturally or necessarily impossible under all circumstances, and does not do it, he must make compensation in damages, though the performance was rendered impracticable, or even impossible, by some unforeseen cause over which he had no control, but against which he might have provided in his contract. Whart. Cont. §§ 311, 314, and authorities there cited, particularly, School Dist. v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530; Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99; Tomkins v. Dudley, 25 N. Y. 272. It is to be observed, however, that the contract here is not merely to return or to redeliver the lighter to plaintiff, but also to pay $3,500 in case the lighter should be lost; and that there is no pretense that such payment has been rendered impossible or impracticable by any cause, so that the alleged casus can apply only to the promise to redeliver the lighter; while the action is based solely upon the alleged breach of the promise to pay in case the lighter should be lost. If I am not mistaken in this view of the nature of the case, the issue as to the cause of the loss is wholly immaterial. The possibility of a loss was foreseen, and provided for in the agreement, whereby the defendant unqualifiedly obligated himself to pay in the event of a loss from any cause; and the only qualification or limitation of this obligation by the law is that it would not bind the defendant in case the loss had been caused by the culpable negligence or other wrongful act of the plaintiff, of which there is no pretense.

2. Is the agreement susceptible of the construction that the parties intended the $3,500 as a penalty within which the actual damages for the loss or injury might be assessed, and not as fixed liquidated damages? If such is a proper construction of the agreement, the plaintiff should have alleged and proved the actual damage; and the answer of the defendant that the value of the lighter did not exceed $1,800 would have been material as a partial defense to the action. "The weight of authority," says Mr. Field in his work on Damages, (section 136.) "seems to support the position that the sum fixed upon will be regarded as a penalty, or as liquidated damages, according to the intention of the parties, and that this intention may be gathered from the whole instrument, the subject-matter of the contract, and extraneous facts and circumstances." See, also, Sedg. Dam. § 396. The only circumstance that can be said to indicate that the parties intended the sum of $3,500 as penalty, and not as liquidated damages, is that the same sum is required to be paid in case the lighter should "be damaged to the extent that it cannot be put in the same good condition as when received," as in case the lighter should "be lost," though the damage in the former case might be less than in the latter. The rule in cases of this kind, deduced from the cases cited by Mr. Sedgwick, is stated by him at section 413 as follows: "A sum fixed as security for the performance of a contract containing a number of stipulations of widely different importance, breaches of some of which are capable of accurate valuation, for any of which the stipulated sum is an excessive compensation, is a penalty." But upon examination of the cases referred to, it will be seen that this rule has often been applied where it was admitted that the parties intended stipulated damages, and not a penalty; so that the application of the rule does not always depend upon the intention of the parties. Yet where it is otherwise doubtful whether penalty or stipulated damages was intended, the circumstances that the sum agreed upon greatly exceeds the actual damage for a breach of any one of the several stipulations tends, in a greater or less degree, according to the disparity between the stipulated sum and the actual damage, to prove that such sum was intended as a penalty, and not as stipulated damages. In this case it is not clear what extent of damage to the lighter was meant by the language used, viz. "damaged to the extent that it cannot be put in the same good condition as when received," and therefore the difference between the actual damage meant, and the stipulated compensation therefor, cannot be determined. It seems to me that the damaged condition of the lighter, intended to be expressed or described by the language employed, was nearly equivalent to a total loss. I therefore think the sum of $3,500 was not intended as a penalty, but was intended as stipulated damages, unless the agreement may be construed to be a sale of the lighter on the condition that it should be lost, which seems absurd. The agreement is certainly a contract of bailment, giving the bailee only a special property in the lighter during the agreed term of the bailment, the general property remaining in the bailor. In the case of Westcott v. Thompson, 18 N. Y. 363, the facts were that a brewer sold 67 barrels of ale to a retailer, upon an agreement that the barrels should be returned after the ale should be drawn from them, but, if any were not returned, the retailer should pay $2 apiece for them. Held, that the property in the barrels remained in the brewer, and that the agreement to pay $2 apiece for them if not returned was intended to fix the damages for the loss of such as the retailer should be unable to return. If the property in the lighter remained in the plaintiff until it "was lost and destroyed," how could it pass to the defendant after the lighter was totally lost,—sunk to the bottom of the ocean, or totally consumed by fire? If it could pass under such circumstances, I think the agreement fails to express an intention to that effect. Reading the whole instrument together, it appears to be a contract of bailment, with a stipulation on the part of the bailee to indemnify the bailor against loss of the property from any cause; and, though the stipulation to indemnify in case of loss partakes of the nature of insurance, it is not a contract of insurance in the legal or commercial sense of the word, even conceding that the defendant was authorized by the insurance commissioner to transact insurance business, as required by section 596 of the Political Code. It does not specify the rate of premium, nor the risk or peril insured against, nor the period during which the insurance is to continue, as required by section 2587 of the Civil Code. But, conceding it to be a policy of insurance, it cannot be deemed a "valued policy," since it does not state the value of the property insured, (Civil Code, § 2596,) and therefore the damages to be recovered can only be estimated by proof of the value of the property. It is not claimed, however, by counsel for respondent that the agreement contains either a contract of sale or a contract of insurance.

3. Having determined that the stipulation for the payment of $3,500 is a "contract by which the amount of damage to be paid" or "compensation to be made" for the loss of or injury to the property bailed was determined in anticipation of such damage, in the sense of section 1670 of the Civil Code, it only remains to be considered whether or not, "from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage," in the sense of section 1671 of the same Code. These sections are as follows: 1670: "Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid or other compensation to be made for a breach of an obligation is determined in anticipation thereof is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section." 1671: "The parties to a contract may agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage." Section 1671 has been construed by this court in several cases. In Eva v. McMahon, 77 Cal. 467, 19 Pac. Rep. 872, it was held that it is not impracticable nor extremely difficult to fix the actual damage sustained by the breach of a contract to deliver the possession of land; and if no actual damage is sustained none can be recovered, though a stated amount was stipulated for in the contract. In Brick Co. v. McCre, 75 Cal. 205, 16 Pac. Rep. 890, it was held that a stipulation in a building contract, by which the contractor agreed to pay the owner a certain sum as liquidated damages for each day's delay in finishing the building after the time appointed in the contract, was within the rule of section 1670, and not within the exception stated in section 1671, and therefore void. In Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 Pac. Rep. 36, there was a contract between plaintiff and defendant, whereby the defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff on demand between certain dates, 187,500 grain bags, to be sold by plaintiff on commission of 1 per cent., and not to sell said bags to any other person than plaintiff; and further agreed to pay plaintiff 3 cents for each of said number of bags which he should refuse or neglect to deliver to plaintiff, as liquidated damages. The action was to recover such liquidated damages. A breach of the contract by nondelivery of the bags being admitted by the answer, the plaintiff rested its case without other evidence of damage than the agreement to pay three cents per bag as stipulated damages. Held, that a nonsuit was properly granted on the ground that the agreement for stipulated damages was void under sections 1670 and 1671 of the Civil Code. Held, further, that an averment in the complaint that "it was understood and agreed between the plaintiff and defendant at the time of making the contract that, owing to the nature of the case, it would be impracticable and extremely difficult to fix the actual damage," was immaterial, and required no answer. I think "the nature of the case" at bar cannot be distinguished from that of the cases above cited, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover only his actual damages proximately resulting from the loss of its lighter, which should have been alleged, and, if denied, proved, since the contract fixing the damages at $3,500 is void. I therefore conclude that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the parties to amend their pleadings, if so advised.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the parties to amend their pleadings, if so advised.

98 Cal. 19

DAVES et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al. (No. 14,653.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1893.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYEE—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANT—LIABILITY OF LATTER.

1. Where the section crew of a railroad company side track a hand car with which they are working to clear the main track for an approaching train, and the section foreman, who has unlocked the switch, negligently fails to close it, and the train enters on the side track, and kills a section hand, the section foreman is personally liable in damages for his death.

2. The railroad company is not liable, though the section foreman had power to employ and discharge the men working under him, since the negligence of the foreman in leaving the switch open was, notwithstanding his superior rank, the negligence of a fellow servant, within the meaning of Civil Code, § 1970, providing that an employer is not liable to his employee for losses suffered in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless he has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Daves and her daughter against the Southern Pacific Company and one Bresnahan for causing the death of James Daves, husband and father of plaintiffs. There was judgment against both defendants, and they appeal. Reversed as to the railway company, and affirmed as to Bresnahan.

John D. Bicknell, for appellants. P. C. Tonner and Hutton & Swanwick, for respondents.

FITZGERALD, J. This action is brought by the widow and minor daughter of James Daves, deceased, to recover damages for loss suffered by his death through the alleged negligence of the defendants. The case was tried by a jury, and a general verdict rendered against the defendants, the Southern Pacific Company and Bresnahan, for $9,000. It was also specially found by the jury that the defendant Bresnahan did not close the switch after he opened it to let the hand car upon the side track. This appeal is taken by both defendants from the judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial.

It appears that the corporate defendant owns and operates a line of railroad between the cities of Los Angeles and Colton, in this state. That the defendant Bresnahan was its section foreman, and, as such, had charge of a portion of its track, with power to employ and discharge the men employed to work under him. That James Daves, the deceased, was a section hand employed by Bresnahan to work under him, and was engaged in the performance of his duty as such at the time of the accident which caused his death. That on the morning of the accident, and shortly before it occurred, Bresnahan, with eight of the section men, one of whom was Daves, placed a hand car on the main track for the purpose of going to a point on the section to make repairs. The hand car was then run by them some 300 feet to a switch, which was unlocked and thrown open by Bresnahan, and the hand car passed on to the side track to clear the main track for the west-bound passenger train, then nearly due, and in sight. That immediately thereafter Daves was engaged in doing something about the hand car, and was under the west end of it, when the train came up, and the switch being open, the train ran onto the side track, colliding with the hand car and killing Daves. Whether the switch was closed after it was opened by Bresnahan was a controverted point at the trial, and was submitted specially to the jury. The jury found that he did not close the switch, and, as there is evidence to support the verdict, it follows that the accident was caused by the negligence of Bresnahan, and the verdict against him cannot be disturbed.

As to whether the verdict will be permitted to stand as to the defendant corporation depends upon whether Bresnahan and Daves were fellow servants within the meaning of section 1970 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "An employer is not bound to indemnify his employee for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless he has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee." This section was construed by this court in Collier v. Steinhart, 51 Cal. 116, and in McLean v. Mining Co., Id. 255. In the latter case it appears that the defendant was engaged in blasting rock in its mine. Plaintiff was in its employ as a workman, and one Kegan was its "foreman of all work," with authority to employ and discharge the men working under him. Plaintiff was injured while at work by being struck with a rock thrown from a blast, through Kegan's negligence in failing to notify him that the blast was to be fired. The court, in the application of this section to these facts, say: "The injury to the plaintiff was caused by the negligence of Kegan, the foreman of defendant, who was a fellow servant with the plaintiff,—'another person employed by the same employer in the same general business,'—that is, the business of working the mine of the defendant, Kegan being in the blasting, and the plaintiff in the hydraulic, department of the 'general business.' The section of the Civil Code already cited declares that to such a case the rule of respondeat superior shall not apply, unless there has been want of ordinary care upon the part of the defendant in the selection of the culpable employee. But the fact was, as found by the court below, that there had been no such want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant; Kegan, the 'foreman' being found to be 'skillful, competent,' and a proper person to perform the duties with which he was charged. 'The law of this state respecting this subject,' as set forth in the Code referred to, recognizes no distinction growing out of the grades of employment of the respective employees; nor does it give any effect to the circumstance that the fellow servant through whose negligence the injury came was the superior of the plaintiff in the general service in which they were in common engaged; and the alleged distinction in this respect insisted upon by the appellant's counsel, founded, as he claims, on the general principles of law and the adjudged cases, requires no examination at our hands. Collier v. Steinhart, supra.

In Congrave v. Railroad Co., 88 Cal. 360, 26 Pac. Rep. 175, it was said by Justice McFarland that section 1970 "not only restates the rule first established by judicial decision as to injury received through the negligence of a fellow servant, but it clears away to a great extent the difficulties which may have existed as to the meaning of 'fellow servants.' It declares them to be those employed 'in the same general business.'" And in citing with approval McLean v. Mining Co., supra, he uses the following language: "It is clear that in deciding this case the court determined that the Code swept away the distinctions which appear in some of the 'adjudged cases' on the subject of fellow servants. Collier v. Steinhart, 51 Cal. 116, referred to in the opinion, is still stronger to the point decided. Both of these cases were approved in McDonald v. Hazeltine, 53 Cal. 35, which was also a case where an employee was injured through the carelessness of a foreman. These cases were again followed and approved in Stephens v. Doe, 73 Cal. 26, 14 Pac. Rep. 378, where it was held that 'the foreman of a mine and a miner employed to work under his directions are fellow servants; and the owner of the mine is not liable for injuries caused to the latter through the negligence of the foreman, unless he failed to use ordinary care in the selection of the foreman.' The same doctrine was announced in Brown v. Railroad Co., 72 Cal. 523, 14 Pac. Rep. 138, and Fagundes v. Railroad Co., 79 Cal. 97, 21 Pac. Rep. 437."

In the Fagundes Case, just cited, plaintiff's intestate was a laborer employed by the defendant to work on its track. The offending servants were, respectively, the conductor of a train and a track walker, whose duty it was "to see that the track was clear of obstructions, and to signal when they existed." The deceased lost his life through the track walker's negligent interference with a switch and the conductor's negligence "in not being sufficiently on the alert to prevent" such interference. In that case the court held that, as "there is nothing in the evidence tending to show any negligence on the part of the defendant in the selection of the employes whose carelessness caused the casualty," it could not be held responsible.

The principle declared in the section of the Code referred to, and upon which the decisions in the foregoing cases rested, was settled by the highest judicial authority in this country long before the adoption of the Code, but the remarkable contrariety of judicial decisions upon the subject in other states has arisen out of the great difficulty met with in the application of it to the facts of the particular case to be decided. But in the consideration and application of this principle to the case before us we do not propose to enter into a discussion of the relation which the section foreman of a railroad corporation sustains towards his employer with respect to the duties pertaining to his employment, except in so far as the subject of such relation is necessary to be considered in connection with the character of the particular act itself by which the accident was caused, for the purpose of determining whether such act was a personal duty which the defendant corporation owed to the deceased as its employe, or whether the loss caused by the act complained of was "in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business." This must be determined, not from the grade or rank of the section foreman, but from the character of the act performed by him. If the act was one which it was the duty of the employer to perform towards its servants, and one of them negligently performed it to the injury of another servant in the same common employment, then the offending servant, in the performance of such duty, acted as the representative or agent of his employer, for which the employer is responsible; if it was not, then they were fellow servants, and the offending servant is alone responsible.

The duties which a railroad corporation owes to its servants, and which it is required to perform, are to furnish suitable machinery and appliances by which the service is to be performed, and to keep them in repair and order; to exercise ordinary care in the selection and retention of sufficient and competent servants to properly conduct the business in which the servant is employed, and to make such provisions for the safety of employes as will reasonably protect them against the dangers incident to their employment. The performance of these duties cannot be shifted by it to a servant, so as to avoid responsibility for injury caused to another servant by its omission; nor is their negligent performance one of the ordinary risks of the service impliedly assumed by the employe by his contract of employment. Was, then, the act or omission which caused the injury a personal duty which the defendant corporation owed to the deceased while he was engaged in the performance of his duties as its employe? If it was, and the deceased was not at fault, then the corporate defendant is liable; otherwise not. It appears that Bresnahan, through whose negligence it is clear that Daves was killed, was the section foreman of the defendant corporation, and, as such, had charge of about eight miles of its track, including that portion of it where the accident occurred. It was his duty to keep the track and switches in repair and order, and free from obstructions, so as to practically insure the safety of trains passing over it. He had undisputed control of the section men employed to work under him, and was vested with authority to employ and discharge them. As to whether he was the representative of the employer, with respect to the performance of these duties, we are not called upon, in view of the facts, to decide, for the reason that the act which caused the injury out of which this action arises, is clearly not embraced within them. It is not claimed that the corporation did not exercise ordinary care in the selection of Bresnahan as foreman, or that the switch which he negligently left open, and by which the loss was suffered, was unsuitable or defective. But it is insisted that the corporate defendant violated a duty which it owed to Daves by not providing him with a reasonably safe place to perform his work; that the place was not safe because "a train was coming when the switch was open," in consequence of which he lost his life. The place, as we have seen, where the accident occurred, was the side track on which the hand car had been run from the main track to avoid the passenger train, then almost due, and in sight. The place was, of itself, in the first instance, a reasonably safe one, and was resorted to, under the circumstances, for that very reason. The track and switches on Bresnahan's section, in so far as anything appears to the contrary, were in good condition, and so was the hand car, with the exception of some disarrangement in the brake, which, however, had nothing to do with the injury. The servants were sufficient in number, and competent for the purposes of the employment. It is plain, therefore, that the death of Daves was not caused by the violation of any duty which the master owed to him, but by the negligent act of Bresnahan, who, with respect to the performance of that particular act, was the fellow servant of Daves. If a brakeman or trainman, who it appears were intrusted with keys to the switch, or one of the section men, had been guilty of the negligent act complained of, we do not think that it would be seriously contended here that such act was the act of the master; and such would undoubtedly be the case if a switchman had been regularly employed to attend that switch, and he negligently performed the act referred to, instead of Bresnahan, for a switchman in using and operating a switch is no more the agent of the master than is an engineer who is engaged in running a locomotive. It is the duty of the master to provide a suitable switch and competent servants for its operation. When he has done this his duty is at an end, and his liability ceases. The keeping of it in position and its use and operation is a duty belonging to the servant, the negligent performance of which, to the injury of another servant employed in the same general business, is a risk which the injured servant assumed when he took the employment, and for which the master is not liable. It is not denied that Bresnahan was a competent and experienced foreman, so that there was no neglect of duty by the master with respect to his selection. But the negligent act complained of was performed by him in the course of the work upon which they were all engaged, and by one who, so far as the particular act was concerned, was clearly not the agent of the master, but the fellow servant of Daves. The place was therefore made dangerous by the culpable negligence of a fellow servant, and this, notwithstanding the fact that his grade or rank at the time happened to be superior to that of Daves. It therefore follows that the consequences flowing from a place made unsafe under such circumstances are not chargeable to the master. The duty violated did not relate to the place of work, but to the negligent use of an appliance or instrumentality which was proper and suitable for the purpose for which it was furnished by the master, and such use of it was simply a detail of the work or management of the business; therefore a duty of the servant, which he, and not the master, was bound to perform. From these views it is clear that the negligence of Bresnahan in leaving the switch open in the manner and with the unfortunate result indicated was, notwithstanding his superior rank, the negligence of a fellow servant, within the meaning of section 1970 of the Civil Code; therefore a risk impliedly assumed by Daves when he took the employment, for which the corporate defendant cannot be held responsible. As this disposes of the controlling question in the case, the others discussed in relation to the instructions are not necessary to be considered. Let the judgment and order be affirmed as to the defendant Bresnahan, and reversed as to the corporate defendant, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DEHAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(97 Cal. 637)

McSHERRY v. PENNSYLVANIA CONSOLIDATED GOLD-MIN. CO. et al. (No. 15-113.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1893.)

CHANGE OF VENUE—APPLICATION—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS—JUSTIFICATION OF SURETIES IN INJUNCTION BOND.

1. A motion for a change of venue, on the ground that it was not brought in the proper county, will not be denied on the ground that an impartial trial could not be had in the proper county, or that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the retention of the action in the county where it was brought, as it would require a premature decision on such questions. Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 72, followed.

2. All the defendants need not join in an application for a change of venue. Rathgeb v. Tiscornia, 4 Pac. Rep. 987, 66 Cal. 96, followed.

3. On an application for a change of venue, the affidavit of merits made by one of the defendants recited that he made it for himself and for all the defendants, at their request, and that he and the other defendants fully stated the facts of the case to their attorneys, who advised them that they had a good defense on the merits, which all of them believed to be true. The affidavit was used on the hearing on behalf of all of the defendants. Held, that it was not subject to the objection that it was made by one of the defendants only.

4. The complaint in an action against a corporation alleged that the principal office was in S. county, where the action was brought. The affidavit of merits made by defendant's president, on an application for a change of venue on the ground that the action was brought in the wrong county, stated that defendant's principal office was in N. county. Plaintiff, who had been general manager, a director, and owner of a majority of the stock of defendant, in his opposing affidavit, did not notice such statement in the moving affidavit. Held, that the averment of the complaint that the principal office was in S. county would be treated as sham.

5. Code Civil Proc. § 529, provides that, when the sufficiency of sureties in an injunction bond are excepted to, the sureties, "upon notice to the defendant of not less than two nor more than five days, must justify." Held, that notice of justification must be given not less than two, nor more than five, days after filing and service of the notice of exception to the sufficiency of the sureties.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter H. Levy, Judge.

Action by William B. McSherry against the Pennsylvania Consolidated Gold-Mining Company and others. There was an order denying defendants' motion for a change of the place of trial, and an order denying their motion to dissolve an injunction, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Kitts & Bowman, for appellants. Joseph P. Kelly, (H. I. Kowalsky, of counsel,) for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. The record in this case contains two appeals: One from an order denying defendants' motion for a change of place of trial, the other from an order denying defendants' motion to dissolve an injunction. The action was for an accounting, and for the recovery of certain shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, alleged to have been illegally sold for delinquent assessments to the said corporation, who thereafter declared a stock dividend, and distributed 30 per cent. of plaintiff's stock to its stockholders, the individual defendants herein, who, it is alleged, fraudulently conspired together, and in pursuance of such conspiracy did fraudulently deprive plaintiff of his stock so sold and distributed as aforesaid. Plaintiff also obtained an order restraining and enjoining all of the defendants from disposing of any of said stock, and from levying any further assessments upon the outstanding capital stock of the defendant corporation, until the termination of this action. The application for a change of place of trial was made by each and all of the defendants at the time of filing their demurrer, and before answering, on the ground "that the county designated in the complaint, viz. the city and county of San Francisco, is not the proper county." The affidavit upon which the application was based shows that at the time of the commencement of the action, and afterwards, the principal and only place of business of the defendant corporation, and the place of residence of each of the other defendants, was in Nevada county, except the defendant Rhodes, whose place of residence was in Sacramento county. The application was resisted by opposing affidavits on the grounds (1) that an impartial trial of the case could not be had in Nevada county; (2) that the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the retention of the case; (3) that the defendant Rhodes did not join in the application for the reason that he was never served with process, and never appeared or authorized any one to appear for or represent him, in this action; (4) insufficiency of the affidavit of merits; and (5) that the complaint, which is verified, shows that the principal place of business of the corporate defendant is in the city and county of San Francisco.

The first and second grounds of objection are disposed of by the case of Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 72, in which it was held that, "independent of an express provision of the statute, the superior court ought not to be called on, before issues of fact have been joined, to decide that the convenience of witnesses will be promoted by a change of the place of trial, or that a case cannot be fairly and impartially tried in the county in which it is pending. The Code of Civil Procedure does not require a decision which, in the nature of things, must ordinarily be premature. * * *

If the motion to change the place of trial is brought to a hearing before he has answered, the plaintiff cannot by cross motion demand the retention of the action in the county where it is pending, on the ground of convenience," etc. See, also, Heald v. Hendy, 65 Cal. 321, 4 Pac. Rep. 27. With reference to the objection that Rhodes was never served with process, and that he never appeared or authorized any one to appear for him, it is sufficient to say that the record shows that the demand for a change of place of trial was signed by him, and that the attorneys herein, whether authorized to do so or not, did appear for and represent him. But, let us concede that he was never served, and that he never appeared, and that the attorneys who appeared for him did so without authority, and that these facts were shown in the proper way, which, of course, is not the case. Still the claim that, when a demand for a change of venue is made, all the defendants must join in the demand, cannot be sustained. This point was expressly decided adversely to plaintiff's contention in Rathgeb v. Tiscornia, 66 Cal. 96, 4 Pac. Rep. 987. Nor is the contention that the affidavit of merits is insufficient because it was made by one of the defendants, only, well founded. The affidavit, it is true, was made by Wilhelm, the president of the defendant corporation, and one of the individual defendants in the action. But it is expressly stated in the affidavit that he makes it for himself, and for all and each of the defendants, and at their request, and, further, that he and the other defendants have fully and fairly stated the facts of the case to their attorneys herein, who, upon such statement, advised each and all of them that they had a good and substantial defense upon the merits of the action, which each and all of them verily believed to be true. The affidavit was used at the hearing of the motion in behalf of each and all of the defendants, and was in all respects sufficient. Rowland v. Coyne, 55 Cal. 1; Palmer v. Barclay, 92 Cal. 199, 28 Pac. Rep. 226; People v. Larue, 66 Cal. 238, 5 Pac. Rep. 157.

The allegation in the complaint that "plaintiff is informed and believes that the defendant corporation has its principal office in San Francisco," is not only immaterial, but when viewed in connection with plaintiff's previous relations with the corporation, having been general manager, director, and owner of a majority of its capital stock, and the positive and direct statement to the contrary made by the president of the corporation in the affidavit of merits, of which no notice was taken by plaintiff in his opposing affidavit, entitles it to be treated as, we think it really is, a sham allegation. The claim, therefore, that there is a conflict on the question as to the place of residence is without any foundation whatever. The place of residence of a corporation is in the county where its principal place of business is situated, (Jenkins v. Stage Co., 22 Cal. 538; Cohn v. Railroad Co., 71 Cal. 488, 12 Pac. Rep. 498; Buck v. Eureka City, [Cal.] 31 Pac. Rep. 845;) and that is the proper county, within the meaning of section 395, Code Civil Proc., where actions against it of this character must be tried, subject, however, to the other grounds of this and the following section, and of the provisions of section 16, art. 12 of the constitution; also to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in the Code. Upon the showing thus made the defendants were entitled, as a matter of right, to have the place of trial changed to Nevada county, and the court erred in denying their motion to change the place of trial to that county. The order appealed from is therefore reversed, and the court below directed to make an order granting defendants' motion for a change of the place of trial of this action to Nevada county.

The motion to dissolve the injunction was made on the ground that plaintiff's sureties failed to justify within a reasonable time, or at all, after notice of exception to the sufficiency of sureties was given. It appears that the injunction was served on February 29, 1892, and the notice of exception on the 5th day of March following. But no notice of justification was served or filed up to the 20th day of the last-named month, or at all. The notice of motion to dissolve was thereafter served and filed, and on the 1st day of April the motion was heard and denied by the court. Section 529 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things, that, when the sufficiency of sureties is "excepted to, the plaintiff's sureties, upon notice to the defendant of not less than two nor more than five days, must justify before a judge or county clerk in the same manner as upon bail on arrest, and, upon failure to justify at the time and place appointed, the order granting an injunction shall be dissolved." This section, in view of the damages that may result from the improper issuance of an injunction, must be construed to mean that notice of justification must be given to the defendant of not less than two nor more than five days after the filing and serving of the notice of exception to the sufficiency of the sureties; and the plaintiff's sureties must justify within five days after said notice of exception is given, or the injunction will upon motion be dissolved. But, as it is possible that the respondent may have been misled by correspondence had between his attorney and the attorneys for appellants as to the time agreed upon between them when the sureties should justify, the order will be reversed, with directions to the court below to make an order granting the motion to dissolve the injunction unless plaintiff's sureties shall justify, upon proper notice to the defendants, within five days after the filing of the remittitur.

So ordered

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

(97 Cal. 659)

VEJAR et al. v. MOUND CITY LAND & WATER ASS'N et al. (No. 19,100.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1893.)

DESCRIPTION IN DEED — PAROL EVIDENCE—LAND CONVEYED.

1. In 1837 the Mexican government granted P. and V. a tract called the "San Jose Rancho," and in 1840 regranted the same land and an additional league to P., V., and A. In 1846 partition was made, and, in proceedings thereafter for confirmation of the grants, separate patents were issued for each tract. In 1864 V. conveyed his interest in the Rancho San Jose, the description being the "rancho known as 'San Jose,'" and referring for further description to the Mexican government grant, the confirmation thereof by the United States land commission and district court, and the government survey. In such grant the parties were declared owners of one league "in augmentation of the place called 'San Jose.'" In proceedings before the land commissioners the entire tract was called "San Jose;" and the deed of confirmation to V. declared that the land confirmed is a portion of the place called "San Jose." The record in the confirmation proceedings contained a map compiled from exhibits on file in the office of the United States surveyor general, purporting to give the boundaries of the Rancho San Jose, Rancho Azusa, and addition to Rancho San Jose as fixed by the United States surveyor. Held, that there was such ambiguity in the description of the land conveyed as to warrant the admission of extrinsic evidence to show what was intended to be conveyed by the words "Rancho San Jose."

2. On an issue as to whether V. intended to convey his interest in the additional league, it appeared that some years prior to such conveyance he had made a lease to the grantees in such conveyance, wherein the property was described as the "Rancho San Jose," being the same land conveyed to V., P., and A. by the Mexican government. In a mortgage by V. and wife the property was described as the "Rancho San Jose," being the same originally granted to V. and P., and afterwards regranted to V., P., and A., with an addition of one league. There was only one grant of land to V., P., and A. by the Mexican government. A nephew of P. testified that he had known the Rancho San Jose since the grant was made by the Mexican government, and that the two tracts were considered one rancho. Other witnesses also testified that the two tracts were known as the "Rancho San Jose." Held, that V. intended to include his interest in the additional league in such conveyance.

3. P. devised to his wife "the land of the rancho," and in the probate proceedings a decree was entered giving the widow 3,335 acres in the Rancho San Jose. Held to show that P. understood that he had an interest in only one rancho,—the "San Jose,"—and that included whatever interest he had in the additional league.

4. In 1875 separate patents were issued to the Rancho San Jose, and to the additional league, under the name of the "San Jose addition;" and in 1877 V.'s widow executed a conveyance of her interest in the "Rancho San Jose." A nephew of P. testified that, after the grant of the original league, it was always considered one rancho. Other witnesses testified that they had never heard the additional league spoken of other than San Jose addition until 1881. Held, that at the time the widow made such conveyance the two tracts were not well known by different names, and that the widow must be deemed to have included in the tract conveyed the additional league.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Walter Van Dyke, Judge.

Partition by Ramon Vejar and others against the Mound City Land & Water Association and others. There was judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. J. King, R. Dunnigan, Shirley C. Ward, and Anderson, Fitzgerald & Anderson, for appellants. Chapman & Hendrick and Walter J. Hughes, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The plaintiffs brought this action to partition a tract of land now known as the "Rancho San Jose Addition," a Mexican grant, containing one league of land. The defendant San Jose Ranch Company has succeeded to all the rights of the Mound City Land & Water Association, and the only contest herein is between it and those claiming under Ricardo Vejar and Ygnacio Palomares. On April 15, 1837, Alvarado, governor ad interim of California, granted to Palomares and Vejar a tract of land known by the name of "San Jose," and juridical possession thereof was given to them August 3, 1837. The same tract was on March 14, 1840, regranted to them and one Luis Arenas, together with a square league of land in addition to the former grant. This second grant was made in accordance with an arrangement entered into by the three grantees, upon suggestion of the governor, who had promised Palomares and Vejar that, if they would admit Arenas into partnership with them, he would give the three an additional league adjoining the San Jose. In his petition to the prefect, setting forth the understanding above stated, and praying for the additional league promised by the governor, Arenas spoke of the land as "the part called 'Azusa,' in the direction of the Mission San Gabriel." The prefect consulted Palomares and Vejar, and they replied that they had agreed to admit Arenas as a partner in the Rancho of San Jose, in consequence of the recommendation of the governor, by a letter sent to them, "offering for their so doing to grant a league or more of land in addition out of the place, towards the direction called 'Azusa,' in the direction of the Mission of San Gabriel, that being the part most proper for said extension." Juridical possession of the land was given to the three grantees on May 7, 1840. In 1846 a temporary partition of the lands covered by the two grants was had between the three parties above named. After due proceedings had before the board of land commissioners and the United States district court, for the confirmation of the grants, separate patents were issued for each tract of land. By deed dated April 30, 1864, Ricardo Vejar conveyed all his interest in the Rancho San Jose to H. Tischler and I. Schlesinger. The descriptive language of this deed is as follows: "All that certain rancho, tract, and parcel of land situate, lying, and being in the county of Los Angeles, state aforesaid, known, called, and described as the 'Rancho of San Jose,' for a more particular and accurate description reference being had to the grant of the same by the Mexican government, the confirmation thereof by the United States land commission, and the district court of the United States for the southern district of California, and the survey of the same by the government of the United States, containing two leagues, be the same more or less." It is claimed by the respondent herein,—the San Jose Ranch Company,—that this deed conveyed all of Ricardo Vejar's interest both in the San Jose ranch and in the one league additional thereto now known as the "San Jose addition." Plaintiffs and other appellants claim, however, that the deed passed only Vejar's interest in the original grant of the Rancho San Jose, and that the description named in the deed as the "Rancho of San Jose," when read in the light of the language of the documents referred to in the deed for "a more particular and accurate description," viz. the grant, the confirmation, and the survey, is certain and unambiguous, and that the court below erred in not limiting the introduction of evidence in explanation of the description to the documents referred to in the deed; that the court should not have allowed extraneous evidence to be introduced to show what was intended to be conveyed by the use of the words "Rancho San Jose." It must be conceded that, if the ambiguity of the description found in the deed is removed by the language of the documents referred to therein, the contention of the appellants is sound, for the grant, the confirmation, and the survey are as much a part of the deed as if they had been fully set forth therein. It becomes necessary, therefore, for us to look at these documents.

In their original petition to the governor, Palomares and Vejar asked him to grant the place known by the name of 'San Jose,' distant some six leagues from the Ex-Mission of San Gabriel. The committee on vacant land reported favorably, and on April 15, 1837, they were declared to be the owners "of the place called 'San Jose,'" and juridical possession of the "place or rancho called 'San Jose'" was given August 14, 1837. The three grantees were declared to be "the owners in property of the said place called 'San Jose,' with the addition of one league." Again, the governor, in directing the issuance of title to the property, stated: "Ygnacio Palomares, Ricardo Vejar, and Louis Arenas are declared owners in property of one league (de ganado mayor) as an augmentation to the place called 'San Jose,' which was adjudicated to the two first named. Let the title in property of the said place with the augmentation referred to be again issued in favor of the three individuals mentioned." The decree of confirmation to Vejar states that "the land of which confirmation is hereby made is a portion of the place called 'San Jose,' * * * and is bounded and described as follows, according to the map or diagram of the same annexed to the testimonial, showing a partition of the place called 'San Jose' between Ygnacio Palomares, Henry Dalton, and Ricardo Vejar;" and in his certificate the secretary of the board certified that the transcript of the record contained a copy of the evidence on file in case No. 338, wherein Vejar is a claimant against the United States for "the place known as 'San Jose.'" In their opinion in Dalton vs. The United States the board of land commissioners state that the claimant has presented two grants: First, one in which the property granted is designated by the name of "San Jose;" second, a grant made to Palomares, Vejar, and Arenas, dated March 14, 1840, which grant covers the land conceded by the first grant, "together with one square league more of land in addition to the former grant." In some of the proceedings the additional league granted to the three grantees named is called "Azusa." There is in the record a map compiled by Thompson in 1877, from maps and exhibits on file in the office of the United States surveyor-general, which purports to give the boundaries of the Rancho San Jose, Rancho Azusa, and addition to Rancho San Jose, as fixed by United States deputy surveyors. In the proceedings for the confirmation before the board of land commissioners the entire tract is uniformly referred to as the "Rancho San Jose." The only evidence we have of the district court decree is in the recitals of the patent, a copy of which is set forth in the transcript. These recitals refer to the petitions for confirmation, the basis thereof, the action of the land commissioners, with a description of the land, the appeal to the district court, and the decree of the latter that the decision of the board be affirmed, the further adjudication by said court that the petitioner was entitled to an equal, undivided third part of the lands granted by the governor on April 15, 1837, and regranted in March, 1840; and the patent closes with a grant to the three owners and their heirs of the tract of land known by the name of "addition to San Jose;" but this patent was issued on the 4th day of December, 1875, and we have been unable to find such a designation of the place anywhere in the proceedings from the inception of the title down to the issuance of the patent.

Now, what is meant by the terms "addition to Rancho San Jose," and "augmentation to the place called 'San Jose?'" The term "augmentation" is defined to mean "the act of increasing or making larger by addition, expansion, or dilation; the act of adding to or enlarging; the state or condition of being made larger." Cent. Dict. A thing increased is the same thing made larger, and, in speaking of the territory which augmented the San Jose rancho, no simpler language could have been used than "addition to the Rancho San Jose," and thus it is designated by the United States surveyors in their maps. Appellants contend it is shown that the "league in augmentation" did not become a portion of the Rancho San Jose as understood by the Mexican government, because after the "league in augmentation" of the grant of the Rancho San Jose had been made to the three grantees, and juridical possession given to them of it under the name of "Azusa," a grant was made to Arenas personally of another league, which used the language in "augmentation of the place called 'Azusa,'" which latter place was owned by the three; that no one would for a moment suppose the personal grant to Arenas was the same grant that was made to the three, or a portion of the same, simply because spoken of as being "in augmentation" of it. But here appellants' counsel goes beyond the bounds of legitimate argument upon the question under consideration, which is confined to a discussion of the effect of the three documents above referred to in construing the meaning of the term "Rancho of San Jose," as used in the deed. If the subsequent grant to Arenas can be used in determining the question as to what Vejar intended to convey, it must be conceded that the ruling of the court in receiving other evidence dehors the deed was correct. It was proper for the court to consider this point now made by appellants in determining upon all the evidence—the deed, the three documents referred to, and the evidence received dehors the record—what Vejar intended to convey by his deed of the Rancho San Jose, and we presume it was considered in that connection.

Appellants also claim that a conclusive reason why the two tracts "were not and cannot be treated as all a part of one grant is that the original grant of 1837 of the place called 'San Jose' was a complete and perfect grant under the Mexican law, and thereby the entire title of the government in such land had become extinguished, and therefore as to such tract of land no title whatever passed by the regrant of 1840, in connection with the grant of the additional league." It is doubtless true, as a matter of law, that the original grant to Palomares and Vejar, the confirmation by the departmental assembly, and the juridical possession which was given prior to the making of the grant of 1840, made the grant a perfect one, and no additional title was acquired by Palomares and Vejar to the land therein included; but the question is not to the legal effect of the original grant, but as to what lands Vejar intended to include within the language used in his deed of April 30, 1864, viz.: "Known, called, and described as the 'Rancho San Jose.'" A rancho made up of several grants may acquire a name, and pass by a deed under the same.

We do not think that a reference to the documents referred to in the deed removes the ambiguity of the description of the contract. The court did not err, therefore, in admitting extrinsic evidence, and we pass to a consideration of the question whether such evidence supports the finding of the court.

The names "place called 'San Jose,'" "Rancho San Jose," "place called 'Azusa,'" and "Rancho Azusa," are used very indefinitely in the proceedings. The board of land commissioners, in Dalton vs. The United States, referring to the two grants, say that neither of them designates "the land granted by the name of 'Azusa,' and that name seems to have been applied to the place occupied first by Arenas, and then by Dalton, his grantee, and to have comprised both the portion of San Jose and the additional league of land which was covered by the grant made to said Arenas alone." The defendants read in evidence a lease made by Vejar to Tischler and Schlesinger, dated April 19, 1861, (three years prior to the execution of the conveyance to them,) in which he described the property as the "Rancho San Jose, being the same that was granted to the party of the first part, Ygnacio Palomares, and to Luis Arenas, by Governor Alvarado, March 14, 1840, and confirmed by decree of the United States district court for the southern district of California, February 25, 1856." As there never was more than one grant by Gov. Alvarado to the three grantees named, it is certain that Vejar in this description included the property in controversy here,—the addition to the Rancho San Jose. On August 19, 1861, Vejar and wife executed and delivered to Tischler and Schlesinger a mortgage upon "that certain tract of land known as the 'Rancho of San Jose,' being the same that was originally granted by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of California, to Ricardo Vejar, one of the parties of the first part, and Ygnacio Palomares, on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1837, * * * and which was regrant by the said Governor Alvarado to said Vejar, Palomares, and one Luis Arenas on the 14th day of March, A. D. 1840, together with an addition of one league of land on the west, * * * and being the same land which was confirmed to Ricardo Vejar by decree of the United States district court for the southern district of California, on February 25, 1856." These two instruments we think show very clearly that Vejar understood that all the land in controversy was included within the Rancho San Jose. In their petition to the judge and first alcalde, Vejar and Dalton represented themselves as owners of the Rancho San Jose, and said "that, the property in said rancho being in three individual shares, one of which belongs to Don Ygnacio Palomares, and it being for the interest of those which we represent to make a partition of the lands of said rancho," they hope an order will be made to partition the same. The partition prayed for, however, was for the whole place, including the additional league. Palomares was notified that such an application had been made, and, "when informed of its contents, said that he was not opposed to the partition of the Rancho of San Jose, as a joint owner, he receiving the part which might belong to him," but was opposed to paying his share of the expenses, "on account of having already made greater payments in patenting the said rancho." The judge referred to the land to be partitioned as the "Rancho San Jose," and, speaking of his proceedings, said that Vejar and Dalton "were satisfied with their portions as the third part of the Rancho of San Jose, and remained in possession thereof," but Palomares "rudely and disrespectfully went away saying that he would not agree to it." One Francisco Alvarado testified on behalf of the defendants that he had known the Rancho San Jose ever since and before it was granted by the Mexican government; that Palomares was his uncle; that the two tracts of land were always considered as one ranch; that, after the grant of the additional league, they considered the ranch so much larger, and he never heard his uncle speak of the addition as being a separate ranch, but only that the ranch was larger. Ygnacio Alvarado testified that he was acquainted with the lands prior to 1837; that he lived on the Rancho San Jose in 1865, and for many years prior thereto; that he never knew of any other ranch than the Rancho San Jose. W. R. Rowland testified that he had a conversation with Vejar subsequent to his conveyance to Tischler and Schlesinger and while he lived on the Puente ranch, and that in said conversation Vejar stated that he had no other lands, and wanted to remain there during his lifetime, and the witness gave him permission to do so. J. M. Fears testified that he had known the San Jose ranch for about 25 years, and had just recently heard of the San Jose addition,—in the last year or two. Louis Phillips testified that Vejar died in 1880 or 1881; that no administration on the estate of Vejar was ever had; that Vejar left the San Jose rancho in 1864, after his conveyance to T. and S.; that he never heard Vejar speak of the San Jose addition; that neither Dalton nor Palomares, both of whom showed him the boundaries of the lands which they claimed under the whole partition, ever said anything to him about the San Jose addition. M. F. Coronel testified that he knew Vejar and Palomares in their lifetime, and the San Jose ranch on which they resided; "that the San Jose ranch included where Vejar and Palomares lived and the additional league; that it was all called 'Rancho San Jose,' but it had different names,—'San Jose de Palomares,' and 'San Jose de Penascoso,' and 'San Jose de Vejar,'" that the first he knew of the San Jose addition was when Dalton informed him about it.

It is impossible to believe that Vejar, in his straitened circumstances from 1864 down to the time of his death, would have remained away from the lands in controversy under the circumstances if he had believed that he still retained an interest therein. He had several children, but none of them ever attempted to take possession of the land, or, so far as the record shows, to claim any interest therein. Vejar was claiming land in the Nogales and Puente ranches, and, when the decision in the controversy went against him, he begged permission of Rowland to remain on the premises he had so long occupied, and stated that he wanted to remain there during his lifetime because he had no other lands. The conduct of the parties subsequent to the making of a deed is competent and often very material evidence in determining in case of an ambiguity what was intended to be conveyed. Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 88. Upon all the evidence in the case, we fail to see how the court could have found in accordance with the contention of the appellants.

It remains to be considered whether the claimants under Palomares—some of whom are plaintiffs and some defendants, and all are appellants—have been divested of their interest in the San Jose addition, as heirs of Ygnacio Palomares, one of the three original grantees. The court below, in its opinion, (a copy of which is printed in the briefs,) did not consider this question. Whether it was deemed conceded by appellants, or whether it appeared too clear for argument that there was no merit in their claim, does not appear. But the fact is that the court found against their contention. The evidence, however, on this branch of the case is not so clear and convincing as it is with respect to the claim of other appellants. Ygnacio Palomares died in 1864, and left a will in which he devised to his wife "the land of the rancho," excepting therefrom certain portions. The will was duly admitted to probate. The inventory, properly authenticated, described the real estate as 3,335 acres "of the Rancho de San Jose." No other reference is made to the Rancho San Jose, nor does the name "Rancho San Jose addition" appear anywhere in the proceedings. The final decree was entered in the matter of the estate, distributing the property under the same description, viz. 3,335 acres in the Rancho San Jose, and also any other property, to the widow, whether then known or not known. It is claimed by appellants herein that no part of the addition to the Rancho San Jose passed by said will and the proceedings had thereon. This contention cannot be sustained. The will refers to the "Rancho,"—a general term for the land held and occupied by him,—and which he desired his wife to take; and the evidence quoted above shows that he understood that he had an interest in but one rancho, viz. the San Jose; that the latter included whatever interest he had in the San Jose addition. Appellants insist that the construction which we have placed above upon the term "San Jose addition" cannot be applied to instruments which were executed and delivered after the issuance of the patent to the San Jose addition in December, 1875. It is claimed, therefore, that the deed of the widow Concepcion Palomares, of October, 1877, by which she conveyed to Francisco Palomares all her right, title, and interest in and to the "Rancho de San Jose," cannot be held to have included in the tract conveyed the San Jose addition. The determination of this contention again depends upon the solution of the question as to what the grantor (the widow) meant and intended to convey by the use of the description employed in the deed. It is true her conveyance was executed two years after the patents had issued for separate tracts, one under the name of "San Jose," and the other under the name of "San Jose addition;" but we cannot agree with counsel for appellants in saying that both tracts "were then well known by said respective names." The evidence, we think, fails to show this, and sufficiently establishes the conclusion of the court that the grantor intended to convey, not only her interest in the San Jose rancho, but in the addition thereto. Francisco Alvarado, a nephew of Ygnacio Palomares, testified that, after the grant of the additional league, it was always considered as one ranch; that his uncle never spoke of it as a separate ranch; and that he never heard that the league was a separate ranch until he came into this case. Ygnacio Palomares never heard about what is called the "addition" or "augmentation" until two or three years before the trial. Mr. Rowland, who has lived on an adjoining ranch since 1846, never heard of the San Jose addition until after Mr. Slausson had commenced suit for partition in 1881 or 1882. The witness Fears stated that he had heard of the San Jose addition—just heard it spoken of; that there was such a thing—within a year or two before the trial. The only evidence offered in rebuttal of this testimony were certain deeds and agreements between Dalton and others, and to which neither Mrs. Palomares nor her son Francisco were parties, and the testimony of the witness King, tending merely to show that Dalton always treated the San Jose as one tract, and the San Jose addition as another.

Judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

98 Cal. 117

KRUMDICK v. CRUMP, Judge. (No. 15,275.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 8, 1893.)CHANGE OF VENUE—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE.

Code Civil Proc. § 398, providing that if an action is pending, and the judge is disqualified, it must be transferred for trial to a court the parties may agree upon, or, if they do not so agree, then to the nearest court where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist, leaves the disqualified judge, in such cases, no discretion, but makes it his duty to transfer the action at once, on motion. Upton v. Upton, 29 Pac. Rep. 411, 94 Cal. 26, and Paige v. Carroll, 61 Cal. 216, distinguished.

Department 2.

Application by Jennette Krumdick, executrix, for a writ of mandamus to compel R. W. Crump, judge of the superior court of Lake county, to issue an order transferring a certain cause for trial to another court. Writ granted.

J. H. Seawell, Thos. B. Bond, and A. Yell, for petitioner. Clay W. Taylor and J. Chadbourne, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an original proceeding by mandamus. The petitioner is plaintiff in an action (Krumdick vs. White) commenced in the superior court of Lake county in the year 1887. The respondent, who was the attorney for the defendant in that action, has been since January, 1891, judge of the superior court of Lake county. In December, 1891, the judgment of the superior court of Lake county in the action referred to was reversed by this court, and the cause remanded for a new trial. Krumdick v. White, 92 Cal. 143, 28 Pac. Rep. 219. On the 14th of January, 1892, the remittitur was filed in the superior court, and on the 16th of the same month Mrs. Krumdick's attorney duly notified the defendant White that she would on the 1st of February, 1892, move the superior court of Lake county for an order transferring said cause for trial to the nearest superior court where the like objection or cause for removal did not exist, upon the ground that the judge of the superior court of Lake county, the respondent herein, was disqualified. This notice of motion was accompanied and supported by a formal demand for a change of the place of trial of said action, and by affidavits showing the disqualification of the judge. On the 1st of February, 1892, said motion came on regularly to be heard before the respondent, but the hearing was continued by him to February 8th because the defendant in said action was not present. On February 8th, on motion of the defendant's attorney, opposed by plaintiff's attorney, the hearing of said motion was again continued to February 15th. On February 15th the hearing was continued by consent to March 14th. On that day the motion was by consent submitted on briefs to be filed by plaintiff in 10 days, defendant in 15, and plaintiff, 5. On March 19th the defendant in that action filed and served on the plaintiff an affidavit tending to show that the convenience of witnesses required that said action be not removed to another county, but be retained in Lake county to be tried before some superior judge from some other county, to be called for that purpose. On March 21st the order of March 14th for the submission of the motion on briefs to be filed was vacated by respondent, and a new order to the same effect, extending for one week the time of the respective parties for filing briefs, was entered. Briefs were thereafter filed in pursuance of the last order. At the time of filing her reply brief, — April 20, 1892, — plaintiff delivered to the respondent all the papers in the case, and her motion was regularly submitted, but it has never been decided. This proceeding to compel the respondent to act upon said motion, and to grant it, was commenced January 7, 1893, nearly nine months after the motion was submitted. The respondent's excuse for not acting on the motion is that the affidavit filed by the defendant on March 19th, tending to show that the convenience of witnesses required the retention of the cause in Lake county for trial, presented an issue which he was disqualified to try or determine, and made it necessary that he should call another superior judge, from some other county, to decide the motion; and he says he did invite the Honorable S. K. Dougherty, of Sonoma county, to hold a session of the superior court in Lake county, to hear and determine causes in which he was disqualified; that Judge Dougherty, in pursuance of such invitation, did hold such session of court, commencing June 8, 1892; that said cause of Krumdick v. White was on the calendar for June 8, 1892, and regularly called by Judge Dougherty, but was on motion of the plaintiff stricken from the calendar, and never restored.

There is nothing in any of the facts here recited to justify or excuse the respondent from refusing or neglecting to perform the plain statutory duty imposed upon him by section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹ The case provided for by that section was clearly made out by the uncontradicted affidavits filed in the support of the motion; and, aside from the affidavits, the essential fact upon which the right to transfer the cause depended was necessarily within the knowledge of the respondent, whose duty it was to make the order without delay. Livermore v. Brundage, 64 Cal. 299, 30 Pac. Rep. 848. There should have been no postponement on account of the absence of the defendant, no continuances, no time given for the filing of briefs, no holding under advisement, no entertaining of any counter motion based upon grounds calling for the exercise of judicial discretion. The plain injunction of the statute leaves the disqualified judge, in such cases, no discretion. He has but one thing to do, and it is his duty to do that thing at once. This case does not come within the rule of Upton v. Upton, 94 Cal. 26, 29 Pac. Rep. 411, in which we felt constrained to follow the decision ¹Code Civil Proc. § 398, provides that if an action is pending in a court, and the judge thereof is disqualified, it must be transferred for trial to a court the parties may agree on, or, if they do not so agree, then to the nearest court where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist.

in Paige v. Carroll, 61 Cal. 216. We did so, however, because the point of practice had been so settled, and not without serious doubts as to the correctness of the decision, which ignores what seems to be a substantial provision of the statute, designed to prevent the selection by either party to the controversy of the court and judge before whom the trial is to be had. It is not necessary here to determine whether the practice tolerated in Upton v. Upton and Paige v. Carroll, supra, can be longer recognized. It is enough to say that in those cases the court went to the extreme verge of toleration, and that the exceptions to the statutory rule will certainly not be extended. It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue, as prayed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(97 Cal. 644)

MORRIS et al. v. WILSON. (No. 18,057.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1893.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—FAILURE TO RECORD CONTRACT.

1. Const. art. 20, § 15, provides that mechanics, material men, etc., shall have a lien on the property on which they have labored or furnished material. Code Civil Proc. § 1183, provides that all contracts between the owner and contractor for work, where the amount exceeds $1,000, shall be in writing, and recorded before the work is begun, otherwise the contract to be void, and no recovery to be had thereon by either party thereto; that the labor done and materials furnished by all persons except the contractor shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the instance of the owner, and that they shall have a lien for the value thereof. Held, that a contractor who has failed to record his contract for work, where the amount to be paid therefor is over $1,000, is not entitled to a lien.

2. The lien notice averred that the employment was under an attempted contract in writing, and the contract price to be paid thereunder exceeded $1,000, but said contract was never filed, and was void, etc. Held, that such notice showed that the contractor claimed under an implied contract to recover that which, had the contract been properly recorded, he could have recovered under, and that such notice negated the contention that his demand was for extra labor, and not included in the void contract.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by W. A. Morris and Thomas Grabb against W. W. Wilson to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Thompson & Paulsell, for appellant. James H. and J. E. Budd, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. Appeal from a decree in favor of plaintiffs for $356.35 and costs, and for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien as security therefor. The cause comes up on the judgment roll. The lien of the plaintiffs is for labor and services as carpenters and builders, rendered to the defendant in the construction of a building upon a lot of land owned by the latter in the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin.

They were not entitled to a lien. They had entered into a written contract with defendant to furnish all the materials and construct the building for the sum of $2,000, which contract was never recorded, as required by section 1183¹ of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under such circumstances, the contract was void. In such case the labor done and materials furnished by all persons except the contractor shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof. Section 1183, supra, and section 1184. The evident intent of the statute was to make it an object for both the contractor and owner to put in writing and record their building contracts where the amount agreed to be paid is in excess of $1,000. The penalty which attaches to the owner for failure to do so is that he may be held liable for the value of all labor done and materials furnished by persons other than the contractor, without reference to the contract price. The contractor suffers the penalty of a like failure, by being excepted from the class of persons who may take liens under the law. If a contractor, under a contract void for the reasons indicated, can perform the labor and furnish materials, and file a valid lien upon the implied promise to pay, as was attempted in this case, he can avoid the force and intended effect of the statute. It is true that our constitution (section 15, art. 20) provides that "mechanics, material men, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished material," etc. But the constitution is not, and does not profess to be, self-acting. It commands legislation on the subject. It is equally true that the first part of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for a lien in favor of a class of persons, among which contractors are included; but this must be read in connection with the context, and he who would avail himself of the benefits of the law must bring himself within its purview as to time and manner of filing. In short, he must comply with the statute to avail himself of its benefits. Plaintiffs claim that their demand is for extra labor, and therefore not included in the void contract. Their claim of lien, made a part of the complaint, negatives this position. In the notice of lien it is averred "that said employment was under an attempted contract in writing, and the contract price and amount agreed to be paid under said contract exceeded ¹Code Civil Proc. provides that contractors shall have liens on the property on which they have bestowed labor and materials for the value of such labor and materials; that all contracts between the owner and contractor for work, where the amount agreed to be paid exceeds $1,000, shall be in writing, and recorded before the work is begun, otherwise the contract to be void, and no recovery to be had thereon by either party thereto; that labor done and materials furnished by all persons except the contractor shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof.

$1,000, but said contract was never filed, * * * and was and is wholly void," etc.; showing that, the contract being void, they claim under an implied contract to recover that which, had the written contract been properly recorded, they could have recovered under it. The law gives them a right in such cases to recover the money on an implied contract. A mechanic's lien only exists by virtue of compliance with the statute which creates it. Plaintiffs did not comply with the terms of that statute. They must therefore rest content with a personal judgment. The judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to enter a personal judgment only in favor of plaintiffs, without counsel fees or expenses of preparing and recording the mechanic's lien.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter a personal judgment only in favor of plaintiffs, without counsel fees or expenses of preparing and recording the mechanic's lien.

97 Cal. 676

LINDSAY IRRIGATION CO. v. MEHRTENS et al. (No. 18,003.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1893.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Whether a particular region is a "farming neighborhood," and whether the supplying of water to that neighborhood is a "public use," within Code Civil Proc. § 1238, providing that eminent domain may be exercised in the following "public uses:" Canals, ditches, and pipes for supplying "farming neighborhoods with water,"—are questions of fact for the trial court, and its findings thereon are conclusive, where the evidence upon which they were based was not insufficient to support them.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by the Lindsay Irrigation Company against William Mehrtens and others to condemn land for the purpose of digging ditches and laying pipes for irrigation. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. B. Wallace and Wm. W. Cross, for appellants. Geo. H. Smith, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff is incorporated under the laws of this state for the purpose of supplying water for irrigation and domestic use, and other purposes to which water may be put, to the farming neighborhood surrounding and lying contiguous to the town of Lindsay, in the county of Tulare, and seeks in this proceeding to condemn certain lands for the purpose of constructing a ditch or canal through which to conduct water from Kaweah river to said farming neighborhood. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for a condemnation of the land sought to be appropriated by it, and fixing the amount of damage which should be paid by it to each defendant for the land taken from him. In their appeal from this judgment the argument of the appellants is directed chiefly to an attempt to show that the land to which the plaintiff seeks to conduct the water is not a farming neighborhood, and that the supplying of water to that land is not a public use, and therefore the plaintiff cannot exercise the right of eminent domain for the purpose of taking their lands.

The right of the state to take private property for public use is an inherent element of its sovereignty, and its exercise is restrained only by the limitations contained in the constitution. The right to take the property is not conferred by the constitution, but is to be exercised in conformity with the will of the sovereign, as expressed by the legislature, and such right can be exercised only in behalf of those public uses which the legislature has authorized, and in the mode and with the limitations prescribed in the statute which confers the authority. Whoever, under the claim of an agency of the state, would deprive the owner of any of his property by virtue of the exercise of eminent domain, must show, not only that the use for which he seeks to appropriate it is a public use, but also that the legislature has authorized the taking of property for that particular use, and in the mode in which he is seeking to appropriate it. The legislature must designate, in the first place, the uses in behalf of which the right of eminent domain may be exercised, and this designation is a legislative declaration that such uses are public, and will be recognized by courts; but whether, in any individual case, the use is a public use, must be determined by the judiciary from the facts and circumstances of that case. Section 1238, Code Civil Proc., provides that "the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following public uses: * * * (4) * * * Canals, ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes for public transportation, supplying mines and farming neighborhoods with water. * * * This is a legislative declaration that the supplying of water to a farming neighborhood is a public use, and such declaration must be regarded as falling within the scope of legislative duty in providing for the public welfare. In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 309, 311, 28 Pac. Rep. 272, 675. "If the subject-matter of the legislation be of such a nature that there is any doubt of its character, or if by any possibility the legislation may be for the welfare of the public, the will of the legislature must prevail over the doubts of the court." Id. In a state like California, where so great a portion of the land is susceptible of agriculture, it may well be said, in view of the climatic peculiarities, and topographical distribution of the land, that the legislature is acting for public welfare in making provision for supplying its many farming neighborhoods with water. "We are not prepared to say that the supply of water to farming neighborhoods for irrigation (and the Code evidently means for irrigation) may not be for a public use. Indeed, in view of the climate and arid soil in parts of the state, (for this object, climate and soil may properly be considered,) it is safe to say that the supply for such use may be that which the legislature has decided it to be,—a public use. The judgment of the legislature that it is such ought not, therefore, to be disturbed by the courts." Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 304, 10 Pac. Rep. 674.

The term "farming neighborhood" is an indefinite expression, and whether it can be applied to any particular tract of land must be determined by evidence. The word "neighborhood" is not synonymous with "territory" or "district," but is a collective noun, with the suggestion of proximity, and refers to the units which make up its whole, as well as to the region which comprehends those units. One of the definitions given in the Century Dictionary is "a district or locality, especially when considered with relation to its inhabitants, or their interests." A farming neighborhood may be defined as a region in which there are several tracts of farming land, with a proximity of location, and which can be regarded as a whole with reference to some common interests, although they are distinct in boundaries, and held in individual proprietorship. Its extent need not be characterized by fixed boundaries, nor is its existence determined by any definite number of proprietors; and while a tract of land, though large in extent, might, if held in different proprietorships, constitute a neighborhood, yet it would not if it were held in single ownership. The term "public use" is also an expression of indefinite signification, and its application to the facts of any particular case is also to be determined from evidence. The supplying of water to a tract of agricultural land, though of many thousand acres in extent, if occupied by an individual proprietor, would be for his private benefit, and not a public use, yet the same tract of land might be so subdivided, and held in individual proprietorship, as to render the supply of water to it a public, instead of a private, use. The same tract of land may constitute a farming neighborhood, and yet be so limited in the elements which make it a neighborhood that the supplying of water to it would not constitute a public use. Water Co. v. Baker, 95 Cal. 270, 30 Pac. Rep. 537. It is not necessary that the entire public shall enjoy the use, or even that it be capable thereof, but the use must be capable of enjoyment by all who may be within the neighborhood, and there must be within that neighborhood so great a number of the entire public as to destroy its character as a private use. Whether the particular region is a farming neighborhood, and whether the supplying of water to that neighborhood constitutes a public use, are questions of fact, which must be determined by the court before whom the proceeding is had; and its decision thereon must be held conclusive upon this court, to the same extent as in other cases where it is called upon to determine matters of fact. It is only when it appears that such decision is manifestly erroneous, either by an abuse of its discretion, or by making its decision without any evidence to support it, that this court will call it in question. In the present case the court below has found that the region to which the plaintiff proposes to supply water is a farming neighborhood, and that the supplying of water to that neighborhood is a public use. There is evidence in the record tending to support both of these findings, and we cannot say that the evidence upon which these findings were made is insufficient to support them. For the purpose of determining the existence of a farming neighborhood, it is not essential that the proprietor of a tract of land therein should actually reside upon the land, or cultivate it by his own industry. It is the land to which the water is to be supplied, and the subdivision of the region into individual proprietorships is essential only for the purpose of constituting it a neighborhood, and determining whether such supply is a public, instead of a private, use. The distinctive characteristic of the neighborhood is that it be a "farming" one, and this implies the proximity of the several tracts of land, rather than of their proprietors. The same public use would exist, whether the lands were cultivated by individual tenants to whom the proprietors had leased it, or by the employes of the proprietors, who were themselves absent, as if by the proprietors residing upon the lands. Nor does the fact that the stockholders of the plaintiff are owners of land within the neighborhood change the supplying of water to that neighborhood from a public to a private use. If the farming neighborhood exists, it is no objection to these proceedings that every member of that neighborhood is a stockholder in the plaintiff. The public use would still remain, and the incidental benefit to the stockholders from supplying the water to the land would be no greater objection than in the case of a corporation formed to supply water to a town whose stockholders are inhabitants of the town. Whether a majority of the stock of the plaintiff is owned by a few persons, who are also the owners of the greater portion of the land to be supplied with water, is equally immaterial. These are questions worthy of consideration by the court in determining whether the region constitutes a farming neighborhood, and whether the supplying of water is a public use, but they are not, of themselves, determinative of the question. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 35

BIGGI v. BIGGI. (No. 14,936.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1893.)

CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—PARTITION.

1. The title to land was conveyed to both husband and wife, who were subsequently divorced by a decree which made no disposition of the community property. While the action was pending, the parties made a written contract that the land should be sold for not less than $3,100, as one V. should determine, and the proceeds divided between them, and that the husband should occupy it till sold, and pay a certain sum per month to the wife. The contract also recited that the wife released all claims to all other property other than "the one-half interest in said life estate and the one half of the proceeds of the sale thereof." Held, that the contract was a release of the wife's interest in all other property but the land which they had agreed to sell, and was a recognition that the land was community property, one half of which belonged to the wife, but did not convey the interest of the wife to the husband.

2. In an action on the contract by the wife, alleging that the husband refused to comply with its terms, and that the land could not be partitioned without great prejudice to the owners, the wife was entitled to a judgment for its sale and a division of the proceeds between the parties.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Theresa Biggi against Narcisso Biggi to enforce a contract providing for the sale of a lot of land and a division of the proceeds between the parties. There was judgment for defendant, and, a motion for a new trial being denied, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Geo. W. Reed and Geo. M. Shaw, for appellant. Hall & Earl and Dodge & Fry, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff was at one time the wife of the defendant, Narcisso, and in October, 1888, pending an action between them for divorce, they entered into an agreement for the division of their property, in which it was provided that a lot of land situated on San Pablo avenue, in Oakland, should be sold, and the proceeds of the sale equally divided between them, but that such sale should not be for less than $3,100, and that, whenever an offer should be made therefor, one Vandercook should be the exclusive judge as to the value of said premises, and as to accepting or rejecting said offer, and that they would abide by his judgment, and sell the premises for such sum as Vandercook might determine. This lot of land had been purchased during the marriage of the parties, and the title thereto taken in the names of them both, but the judgment of divorce which was afterwards rendered between them was silent upon the disposition of the community property. In June, 1889, Vandercook received an offer of $3,200 for the property, which he deemed sufficient therefor, and which the plaintiff agreed to accept, but the defendant, when requested thereto, refused to accept the offer or sign a contract of sale unless he should receive the entire proceeds thereof. The plaintiff thereupon brought this action, alleging in her complaint that the land was owned in common between her and the defendant, Narcisso, setting forth the foregoing agreement, and the refusal of the defendant to comply with its terms, and asking for a sale of the land and the division of the proceeds between them. The defendant in his answer denied that the plaintiff had any interest in the land, and also denied that he had refused to accept the offer which the plaintiff alleged had been made for the land. Upon the trial the court found that the defendant was the owner in fee of the entire tract of land, and that the plaintiff had no interest therein, and rendered judgment against the plaintiff, and also a judgment in favor of the defendant, Narcisso, upon his cross complaint therefor, quieting his title to the land as against the plaintiff. The court did not make any finding upon the issue of the defendant's refusal to accept the $3,200 offer.

The finding of the court that the defendant was the owner in fee of the entire tract, and that the plaintiff had no interest therein, is contrary to the evidence. The conveyance of the land to the husband and wife made it presumptively community property, and their subsequent divorce without any disposition of that property in the decree left them tenants in common thereof, (De Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157;) and the fact that the title had been conveyed to them both caused each of them to be thereafter the holder of the legal title to one half of the land. The agreement between them prior to the decree of divorce was a recognition by the husband that it was community property, and that the plaintiff was entitled to one half thereof. The contention by the respondent that by the aforesaid agreement between the parties the plaintiff conveyed to the defendant whatever interest she had in the land in question, and that her rights against him are only an obligation on his part to pay her one half of the proceeds of any sale that he may make, is contrary to a proper construction of the instrument. The provision therein that until the property should be sold the husband should be entitled to its possession and occupancy, and should pay to the plaintiff six dollars per month therefor, and the further provision that "the parties hereto agree to abide by the judgment of said Vandercook, and to sell said premises for such sum, offered or not, as said Vandercook may determine," are inconsistent with the proposition that the plaintiff's title to the land passed to the defendant by the instrument, and show that, whenever a sale should be made in accordance with its terms, it was to be made by both parties, and that the consent of the plaintiff, as well as of the defendant, was necessary to effect the sale. The clause relied upon by the respondent, wherein the plaintiff "releases and acquits said party of the first part from all and every claim of every character and kind whatsoever to other property, other than said one half interest in said life estate, and the one half of said net proceeds of said sale, as aforesaid," when read in connection with the other portions of the instrument, and the purposes for which the parties recite that they have executed the agreement, must be construed as relating to "other" property than that enumerated in the instrument, and not as a release of her interest in the property out of whose sale she was to receive one half of the proceeds. For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, and the interpretation to be given to the instrument, all of its parts must be considered, and, when so considered, it is to be construed as a mutual, executory agreement on the part of both parties that they will consent to a sale of the land for such sum, not less than $3,100, as may be approved by Vandercook, and that upon such sale each will accept one half of the proceeds thereof. As in the case of any other executory agreement, its breach by one party gave to the other the right to treat it as rescinded or to seek for its enforcement. It may be conceded that, until a breach by either party, the right to a partition of the land between them was superseded or suspended, but the refusal of the defendant to perform the agreement, and his denial of the right of the plaintiff to its performance, gave her the right to disregard the agreement, and either bring an action for the partition of the land, or treat the agreement as existing, and seek its enforcement against the defendant. For this purpose the plaintiff alleged in her complaint the facts constituting the breach by the defendant, and the court should have made a finding upon this issue, as the evidence in the record is ample to sustain her allegations. Upon such finding, inasmuch as her allegation in the complaint that the land could not be partitioned without great prejudice to the owners thereof was not denied, her right to a judgment for its sale and the division of the proceeds between them would have been established. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 86

McDANIEL et al. v. PATTISON et al. (No. 14,280.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1893.)

EQUITY JURISDICTION—PROBATE OF WILL—SETTING ASIDE DEED.

A complaint by certain devisees of a will alleged that another devisee fraudulently suppressed the will, and altered a deed, whereby testator had conveyed to him a small portion of land, so as to include the entire property of the testator, and demanded that the deed be set aside and the property distributed in accordance with the will, which, it was alleged, could not be probated under Code Civil Proc. § 1339, providing that no will shall be proved as lost or destroyed unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses. Held, that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to probate a will, though such relief is sought only incidentally to the main equitable relief; and the fact that the devisees are also alleged in the complaint to be heirs at law will not enable them to obtain the relief demanded, since, having alleged a will, their rights arise only from it. Beatty, C. J., and De Haven, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Sarah E. McDaniel and others against J. H. Pattison and another to set aside certain deeds, etc. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal. Reversed.

For former opinion, see 27 Pac. Rep. 651.

J. L. Murphey and Anderson, Fitzgerald & Anderson, for appellants. Chapman & Hendrick, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. We are satisfied with opinions filed and the conclusion reached by department 1 when this case was before it for decision, and the judgment is therefore reversed.

In their petition for a rehearing respondents claim that they are entitled to assert their rights as heirs, but it is evident from the pleadings, findings, and decree that the parties and the court below proceeded upon the theory that plaintiffs were claiming as devisees, and not as heirs. The decree, therefore, cannot be modified, but we think there is enough in the complaint to justify an order allowing the plaintiffs to amend their complaint, if they desire so to do, so as to assert any claim they may have by reason of their heirship. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to allow the parties to amend their pleadings, if they be so advised.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The opinion of the department originally filed in this case, which has now been adopted by the court, decides two propositions, which, in my opinion, are untenable, and which, if incorrectly decided, not only operate unjustly in this case, but establish a most unfortunate precedent for others.

1. It is decided that the complaint fails to state any cause of action,—is so fatally defective, in other words, that, in the absence of even a general demurrer, it will not support a decree limited in its operation to the annulment of the fraudulent deeds therein mentioned. The sole ground upon which this conclusion is reached is that the complaint, although it shows clearly that the plaintiffs are heirs to the decedent, with an undoubted right, in the absence of a will, to maintain the action in that capacity, also shows that they are named as devisees of the same estate in a will which has been suppressed or destroyed by the defendant, and which has not been admitted to or denied probate. Reduced to its simplest terms, the proposition is that, under such circumstances, the heir has no title to the property whatever upon which he can maintain an action to recover its possession or prevent its fraudulent alienation. He has no title as heir, because he may be proved to be a devisee; and he has no title as devisee, because the will has not been admitted to probate. The title, in short, pending a decree of the probate court establishing the will or the intestacy of the decedent is nowhere. There must, it seems to me, be some fatal flaw in the reasoning which leads to such a conclusion. The fallacy evidently consists in the assumption that on a given state of facts a man may be, in legal contemplation, a devisee, and at the same time not a devisee; for it is only upon this assumption that the plaintiffs can be denied all relief. One door is closed against them on the ground that they are devisees, another on the ground that they are not devisees.

To me it seems a sounder argument to say that upon the facts alleged in the complaint the plaintiffs either are or are not devisees. They must be either the one or the other, for there is no room for a third category in which to place them. If they are devisees, they may maintain the action in that capacity; if they are not devisees, their title as heirs is undoubted. To hold that they are just sufficiently devisees to destroy their title as heirs, but not sufficiently so to enable them to make title under the will, is to draw too fine a distinction for the ends of justice,—a fact made strikingly apparent by the results of the doctrine in this case, and its inevitable consequences in other cases that may be easily supposed. The probate of an existing will, even when regularly and formally executed and uncontested, requires some time. At least 10 days' notice of the time and place fixed for hearing the proofs must be given, and in the matter of protecting estates from spoliation even so short a delay as 10 days might be of most serious consequence. But when a will is contested, or when it has been fraudulently suppressed or destroyed, so that, if proved at all, it must be proved in the face of all the difficulties that attend the establishment of a spoliated or contested will, months, and even years, may elapse before a final decree establishing the will or the fact of intestacy. In such a case the heirs of the estate, whether named as devisees or not, could maintain no action for its preservation or protection until the decree of the probate court became final; for clearly, if they have no title as heirs when named as devisees in an unproved will, they would, a fortiori, have no title as heirs if the estate was devised to others. But I need not concern myself about the latter case, the question here being as to the right of an heir who is at the same time named as devisee in an unproved will to protect the estate which in any event belongs to him from spoliation or destruction, pending a final decree of the probate court admitting the will to probate or establishing the intestacy of his ancestor.

The decision of the court is that, under such circumstances, he cannot maintain an action to set aside and declare void a forged deed purporting to convey his ancestor's estate to the forger. In other words, although years may elapse before a final decree in probate, the heir must stand by, while the forger, vested with an apparently fair record title of the property, makes use of his opportunity to victimize an innocent purchaser. Or, if the case were different, if the deed, instead of being a forgery, conveys no title, has merely been obtained by some fraud or deception which will authorize a court of equity to set it aside at the suit of the heir or devisee, but in the mean time will enable the fraudulent grantee to pass a good title to an innocent purchaser for value, there will be the same inability on the part of the heir to sue. He cannot commence an action and file notice of his pends, but must wait until his status is determined,—until it is settled whether he owns the estate as heir or devisee. When that is done, he finds that the estate is vested in an innocent purchaser by a transfer which he has been denied all opportunity of preventing; and, if he could not maintain such an action, neither could he maintain an action to oust an intruder, or to enjoin the most destructive waste or spoliation. He is, in other words, utterly impotent to protect property which is certainly his by one title if not by the other, merely because it has not been determined which is the good one. I cannot forbear to express my dissent from a doctrine which, to my mind, is so unfounded and so destructive of the most valuable rights of heirs. It is scarcely necessary to point out the broad distinction between this case and Castro v. Richardson, 18 Cal. 480, and other similar cases cited in the opinion of the court. In that case the only claim of title was based upon a devise in an unproved will. I venture to say if the complaint had alleged that the plaintiff was also an heir it would not have been held that it showed no title. My conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the complaint did disclose facts sufficient at all events to warrant a decree annulling the several deeds of conveyance therein mentioned. It most assuredly stated a cause of action, and the most that can be said of the allegations with respect to the will is that they rendered it ambiguous or uncertain as to the measure of relief to which the plaintiffs were entitled; but, conceding that they had that effect, all objections on the ground of ambiguity or uncertainty were waived by the failure to demur.

The opinion of the court just filed, while adopting the original opinion of the department, adds a clause allowing the plaintiffs to amend their complaint so as to assert their right as heirs. This permission appears to be entirely inconsistent with the decision. The record shows that the existence of an unproved will was as clearly established by the testimony at the trial as it was alleged in the complaint. The only amendment which the plaintiffs can possibly make is to omit from their complaint allegations of fact which are established by plenary proof. By doing so they may make a prima facie case, but all that the defendants will have to do to defeat their action will be to allege and prove the same facts,—as they can easily and will most certainly do; for, if the allegation of these facts by plaintiffs shows that they have no right of action, the facts are necessarily material, and when they are alleged and proved by the defendants, the action must inevitably be dismissed.

2. It is also held in the opinion of the court that the devisee in a spoliated will can have no relief in equity against the spoliator unless he first establishes the will in probate. This part of the decision ignores the well-established distinction between the proceeding in rem, by which the probate court establishes a will so as to bind the heirs generally and the whole world, and a suit in equity by the party injured against the spoliator to charge him as a trustee with respect to the property gained by his fraud. I admit the correctness of the doctrine that a court of equity, as such, has no power to establish a will, even in a case of spoliation, so as to bind the heirs generally, although there are cases of spoliated wills where such power has been asserted and exercised. Bailey v. Stiles, 2 N. J. Eq. 220. The current of authority, however, is the other way, and I think the sounder and more reasonable view is that for the establishment of a will in the strict sense the jurisdiction of the probate court is exclusive. But the same law writers who uphold this doctrine admit an exception or distinction in case of a spoliated will. Prof. Pomeroy, for instance, who is cited in support of the prevailing opinion, when discussing this specific point, uses the following language: "When instruments have been fraudulently suppressed or destroyed for the purpose of hindering or defeating the rights of others, equity has jurisdiction to give appropriate relief by establishing the estate or rights of the defrauded party;" and he gives the following illustration: "If an heir should suppress a deed or will, equity would confirm the title of the grantee or devisee." Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 919, and note. Other law writers state the doctrine in substantially the same terms. 6 Waite, Act. & Def., 377; 3 Redf. Wills, c. 1, § 7; and see authorities cited at page 239, 2 N. J. Eq. The only case which I have found which holds that a court of equity can afford the defrauded devisee no relief against the spoliator is the case of Morningstar v. Selby, 15 Ohio, 345, cited in the opinion of the court. None of the other decisions there cited was made in a case of spoliation, and the general expressions therein contained to the effect that a court of equity, as such, has no power to establish a will, have no application to an action by the defrauded legatee against the spoliator. Not only the weight of authority, but every consideration of justice and expediency, would seem to support the view that a court of equity is not without the power to afford a remedy for so gross a wrong, where, by the very act of the spoliator, the injured party has been deprived of all other remedy.

It is contended that, since the probate court is invested with power to take the proof of lost or destroyed wills, there is no necessity for resorting to equity in such a case, and no ground for its interposition. It is true that a lost or destroyed will may be proved and established in the probate court if there is sufficient evidence of its execution and its terms, and this is a wise and necessary provision for the enforcement of the rights of devisees and legatees against heirs generally. But for the protection of innocent heirs, and the prevention of frauds, the law has at the same time wisely provided that a lost or destroyed will shall not be admitted to probate unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by two credible witnesses. Code Civil Proc., § 1339. Now, it might often happen, as it has happened in this case, that there would be but one living witness by whom a bequest or devise in a spoliated will could be proved. In such a case the will could not possibly be admitted to probate so as to bind innocent heirs, no matter how clear the evidence of its existence and its destruction by another heir, because, as to the innocent heirs for whose protection the law was enacted, there would not be sufficient evidence of its provisions. But as to the spoliator, the case would be different, because the rule of evidence would be different. Everything is presumed against the spoliator, and, the spoliation being clearly proved, comparatively slight evidence of a bequest thereby defeated would be satisfactory as against him, and therefore sufficient. To hold otherwise would be to convert a provision intended as a shield for the innocent into an instrument of fraud. A will could be destroyed by an heir, and he could admit or even boast of the act, but, unless the provisions of the will could be clearly established by two credible witnesses, the legatee or devisee could have no relief against the actual perpetrator of the fraud. I am unwilling to admit that a court of equity is powerless to grant relief in such a case. It seems, on the contrary, to be precisely the case in which equity is bound to interpose, upon the ground that there is no remedy elsewhere. The result of its interposition is not to usurp the functions of the probate court by establishing the will in a strict sense, so as to bind all the world, but merely to fasten a trust upon the property coming to the hands of the spoliator in favor of the person defrauded. Civil Code, § 2224. The case is strictly analogous to the numberless cases in equity arising under the statute of frauds in which rights in lands have been effectuated upon the ground of implied or resulting trusts in the absence of the written evidence of the right required by the statute. Section 1339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, requiring the evidence of two credible witnesses to establish a lost will, is nothing more nor less than a statute of frauds, and can no more be used as a protection for fraud in a court of equity than other statutes designed to effect the same purpose.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the foregoing opinion of the chief justice.

98 Cal. 30

CLAIBORNE v. CASTLE et al. (No. 18,071.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1893.)

VERIFICATION OF PLEADING—WAIVER OF VENDOR'S LIEN.

1. A verification of a pleading by one co-defendant is a compliance with Code Civil Proc. § 446, providing that the verification must be by affidavit of a party, or, under certain conditions, his attorney.

2. Civil Code, § 3046, provides that one who sells real property has a vendor's lien thereon, independent of possession, for the unpaid price, unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer. Section 5 provides that the provisions of the Civil Code, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes or the common law, must be construed as continuations thereof. Held, that the act and conduct of a vendor, which indicate a waiver of the lien, may be shown by parol, since the common-law character of the lien is not changed by the Code provisions.

3. A vendor's lien is a simple equity, and a consideration is unnecessary to support a waiver of it.

4. Where the owner of land executes a deed to N., taking his note for the price, and, before recording the deed, N. sells the land to C., when, by agreement of all concerned, and in consideration of the payment by C. of the interest due on the note, the deed to N. is destroyed, and the owner executes a deed of the land to C., and agrees to look to N. personally for payment, neither the owner nor his representative can be heard to say, in a court of equity, that there was no consideration for the waiver of the vendor's lien.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action by Gilbert B. Claiborne, executor of George Crossmore, deceased, against George H. Castle, Jr., and others, executors of George H. Castle, deceased, and Hayes Nicewonger, to foreclose a vendor's lien for the purchase price of real estate. There was judgment in favor of defendants, and, a motion for a new trial being denied, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Aug. Muenther and John B. Hall, for appellant. Baldwin & Campbell, (Reddy, Campbell & Metson, of counsel,) for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. On April 5, 1884, George Crossmore, now deceased, was the owner of the real estate in the complaint described, and on that day he sold the said real estate to defendant Nicewonger for the sum of $8,000, taking his promissory note therefor, payable four years from that date, with interest. Crossmore executed a grant, bargain, and sale deed for said premises to Nicewonger, but said deed was never recorded. It appears that Nicewonger was indebted to one Castle in a sum of money exceeding $10,000, and about the 28th day of February, 1885, Castle, Crossmore, and Nicewonger met, and it was agreed between them that Nicewonger would surrender up his deed, and that the same should be destroyed, and that Crossmore should execute a deed of said land to Castle, direct; that Castle should pay $3,500 for the land, by paying to Crossmore $480 interest on the note, and to Nicewonger $20, and by crediting Nicewonger with the sum of $8,000 on his indebtedness to him, (Castle,) and that Crossmore should keep the note of Nicewonger, and hold it for payment of the land, and look to Nicewonger personally for payment; and under that agreement the deed was executed by Crossmore, and accepted by Castle. After this date, Crossmore did not intend to claim, and did not claim, any lien whatever upon the land and premises in the complaint mentioned, for the purchase price thereof, but looked entirely to the note of defendant Nicewonger for payment thereof. The foregoing facts were substantially found by the court, and are fairly supported by the evidence. This action is brought by the executor of the last will of Crossmore, against Nicewonger and the executors of the last will of Castle, to enforce a vendor's lien upon the realty, based upon the original transfer to Nicewonger. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. It is insisted that the default of the defendant Castle should have been entered, for the reason that the answer was verified by Nicewonger alone, he stating that he also made the affidavit on behalf of his codefendant. The necessity for the verification of the pleading arises from the statute alone, and the solution of this question is dependent entirely upon the construction of section 446 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Without entering into a detailed analysis of that section, it is quite apparent, taking it as a whole, it was contemplated by the legislature that a verification of a pleading by one plaintiff or codefendant would be sufficient to meet the demands for such legislation. Such has been the practice in this state. To our knowledge it has never been questioned, and we are not disposed to disturb it. Conceding that cases may arise where the real party in interest would thus be able to shift the responsibility of the verification of the pleading upon his nominal plaintiff or codefendant, the evil should be remedied by legislative enactment, rather than by judicial construction.

2. It is insisted that a vendor's lien cannot be waived or released as long as the obligation exists, by parol declarations of the lienholder. Appellant concedes that prior to the Codes the text-books and authorities were against his contention, but claims that a vendor's lien is now a statutory lien by virtue of section 3046 of the Civil Code, and consequently stands upon a higher plane, and is endowed with greater capabilities, than the ordinary vendor's lien, recognized by equity courts. Section 3046 declares: "One who sells real property has a vendor's lien thereon, independent of possession, for so much of the price as remains unpaid and unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer." But this section is but a repetition of the common law, as are hundreds of other sections found in the Codes. When it uses the term "vendor's lien," it refers to the same old vendor's lien proper that is treated of in the text-books, both modern and ancient. If other provisions of the Code limit or enlarge rights under it to that extent, it is not the vendor's lien of the past, but to that extent only. Section 5 of the Civil Code provides that its provisions, "so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes or the common law, must be construed as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments." See Churchill v. Improvement Co., 96 Cal. 490, 31 Pac. Rep. 560. The recent cases of Avery v. Clark, 87 Cal. 619, 25 Pac. Rep. 919, and Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 24 Pac. Rep. 608, and 26 Pac. Rep. 789, fully discuss this subject, and, in effect, hold that the Code provisions do not change the character of the lien. While in those cases the title still remained in the lien holder, yet the matters discussed were fairly involved, and we again assent to the law as there declared. It is settled beyond dispute that the acts and conduct of a vendor, which indicate a waiver of the lien, may be shown by parol. The California cases all point directly to this conclusion, and the doctrine is clearly announced in Moshier v. Meek, 80 Ill. 79; Jurman v. Farley, 7 Lea, 141; Jones, Liens, § 1073.

3. It is insisted that Crossmore's agreement with Castle and Nicewonger to waive the lien was made without consideration. The evidence indicates to the contrary, but as said in Avery v. Clark, supra: "A vendor's lien is not the result of any agreement or any intention of the vendor and vendee, but is a simple equity raised by courts for the benefit of the vendor of real estate. It is a privilege purely personal, and cannot exist in favor of any but the vendor." If it is a simple equity or privilege, purely personal,—something dependent for life upon no agreement of the parties,—a consideration is unnecessary to support a waiver of it. Under any view of the case, Crossmore cannot be allowed to come into a court of equity, asking to have a vendor's lien foreclosed upon Castle's land, and claim that his release of the lien thereon was made without consideration. His promise to release the lien was the moving consideration to Castle to purchase. Without it he never would have bought the land. Crossmore's conduct placed Castle in his present position, and it would be most unfair if he should be allowed to make such a showing, and thereby visit loss upon an innocent party. Equity will not listen to a plea of "no consideration" upon any such state of facts. For the foregoing reasons, let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 45
BENSON v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 13,290.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1893.)
INJURY TO PERSON ON RAILROAD TRACK—NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. When the engineer first discovered plaintiff, a child six years old, on the track, her father had her by the hand and was leading her towards the other parallel track. After reaching that she became frightened, and, breaking away, went in front of the moving train. The train was going only 15 miles an hour, and immediately after she put herself in peril every effort was made to stop the train. Held, that there was no negligence on the engineer's part, as plaintiff's action could not have been anticipated.

2. Carrying plaintiff beyond her destination and leaving her at the next station was not the proximate cause of her injury, she being struck by a train while walking back to her station along the track, the only direct way.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. Rearden, Judge.

Action by Elvine M. Benson, by I. B. L. Brandt, her guardian ad litem, against the Central Pacific Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry E. Highton and I. B. L. Brandt, for appellant. W. H. L. Barnes, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action is brought by the plaintiff, an infant, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her while walking upon the roadway of defendant, by being run into by a locomotive operated by defendant. The case was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict for defendant, and the appeal is from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial.

Plaintiff's evidence tended to prove the following facts: Plaintiff, a child of but six years of age, with her father and the other members of her family, took passage on a train of defendant for Watt's station, in Alameda county. As the train approached Watt's station the whole family arose and took positions at the door of the car so as to be able to step off the train without delay, and immediately on the stoppage of the train at the station proceeded to leave it; but the stop was so short that but part of the family were able to get off, and the train moved away with the father and the plaintiff and her brother still on it. While the family was thus endeavoring to get off, the conductor of the train was on the platform of the car, and, when the train began to move, the father asked him, "Why didn't you let me off?" and the conductor thereupon told the father: "You cannot get off here. You have got to go to the next station, only a short distance, and you can walk back when you get to the next station." When the next station (Emery) was reached, the father, with plaintiff and her brother, left the train. The father had never before been on the part of the railroad between Watt's and Emery Stations, and on stepping off looked up and down the railroad. He saw no cars. He could observe no other route than the railroad to get back to Watt's station, and in fact there was no other way; one side of the railroad right of way being the waters of the bay, and the other a slough, running through marsh and swamp. There were two tracks, and supposing that if a train should come along behind him it would be on the east track, as the train which he had just left was occupying the west track, the father started to walk southerly along the east track to Watt's station, carrying the baby on one arm and holding plaintiff by the hand; and he had thus proceeded for a distance of 500 or 600 feet south of Emery when he heard a noise back of him. Looking in the direction of the noise he saw a train, but owing to the existence of a curve in the road it was impossible for him to determine on which track the train was running. A moment later he looked again at the train, and saw that it was on the east track,—the same on which he was walking. He then left that track, crossing to the west track, and had entirely cleared the east track, continuing all the time to hold plaintiff by the hand, when the plaintiff, frightened by the approach of the train, while it was yet 150 or 200 feet from her, broke away from her father and ran back to and on the east track, where she was struck by the flying train, and received the injuries complained of. The accident happened in broad daylight; the view of the railroad between the two stations, a distance of 2,062 feet, was unobstructed; and a person standing at either station could see to, and some distance beyond, the other; and a person on the spot where plaintiff and her father were when the latter first heard the train, namely, 600 feet south of Emery station, could easily be seen from the latter place. Plaintiff and her father were in fact noticed by the fireman of the train, according to the latter's evidence, while they were still on the track on which the train was approaching them, and were seen by him to cross over to the other track, and they were observed by the engineer when about 100 yards from the train; notwithstanding which the train, which had pulled out of Emery station at a speed of 15 miles an hour, continued such speed. No bell was rung, or whistle blown, or other signal given plaintiff, and no attention paid to her presence on the track, until the train was within 150 feet of her, when an endeavor was made to stop it, but too late to be of use. To which must be added the uncontradicted testimony introduced by defendant that when the engineer first saw plaintiff's father he was in the act of stepping off the track upon which the train was traveling, towards the other track, and succeeded in getting entirely clear of the track and out of danger, and, further, that the engine was provided with the best equipment known for stopping the train; that the engineer kept his eye upon the plaintiff and her father, and, as soon as she unaccountably broke from her father and ran across the track in front of the engine, every possible effort was made to prevent the injury.

Appellant contends that various erroneous instructions were given by the court, to her injury, and that several instructions asked for by her were wrongfully refused; that because of these errors the question of negligence was not properly submitted to the jury. But we think there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and that a verdict for the plaintiff, had one been rendered, could not have been sustained; and in considering this question we shall adopt the rule laid down in Wilson v. Railroad Co., 62 Cal. 172, that where the evidence of negligence consists of circumstances from which inferences may be drawn for or against it, it is the province of the jury to determine whether there was negligence or not. There were no houses along this roadway at the point where the accident occurred, or for some considerable distance either way. The roadbed was about 25 feet wide, on one side of which was water and on the other marsh. Two tracks were laid over it. It is matter of common knowledge that 15 miles per hour is not more than one half the usual speed between stations, outside of cities and towns. No one would think such speed reckless or dangerous under ordinary circumstances over this road at that point. The defendant had a right to the use of its track, and may ordinarily presume that no one is upon it to be injured. It owes to persons wrongfully there no duty to look out for them that they may not be injured. Whatever duty it owes such persons arises after and because they have been discovered there by its servants. When the engineer first discovered plaintiff she was in the custody and control of her father, and was in the act of stepping from the track towards the other parallel track. The party did get off and reach a place of security. It is difficult to see why, under such circumstances, the defendant's engineer should have made any attempt to check the speed of the train. Counsel suggest because of the fright to the child, which they assume should have been anticipated. But the child was apparently and in fact in the custody of a person of mature years, her father, who testified that he held her by the hand. Unfortunately she broke from him and ran in front of the engine. We do not think this could have been anticipated, or was caused by any negligence on the part of defendant's servants. As soon as she put herself in peril every possible effort was made to prevent the injury. So far, we think, negligence on the part of defendant could not be reasonably inferred from the circumstances.

But appellant's counsel contend that plaintiff was not wrongfully upon the roadway, but was there through the fault of defendant's servants, who carried her beyond her station, in violation of the contract of defendant, and put her off at another point on their road, telling her that she could walk back; that there was no other way to reach the station save by the roadway, and therefore the acts of defendant's servants in failing to permit her to alight at Watt's station, and leaving her at Emery station, directly and proximately caused the accident. The failure of defendant to permit plaintiff to alight at Watt's station, leaving her at Emery station instead, was a violation of defendant's contract for which plaintiff was entitled to an action for damages. She might have insisted upon her contract and perhaps have refused to alight anywhere else, or might have taken the next return train for Watt's station, and insisted upon her right to be left at Watt's station free of charge, but it is difficult to see how such wrong on the part of the defendant gave her a right to go back over the track to Watt's station.

The real contention here is that, defendant having carried her beyond her destination and left her, the defendant must be held to have intended that she should walk to the station, and, there being no other obvious way, the wrong of defendant was the proximate cause of the danger to which she was exposed; and, as a child of six years cannot be guilty of contributory negligence, the defendant must be responsible. When it is said that there was no other way back, it must be understood that there was no direct way. We cannot suppose that Emery station was entirely isolated from the general road system of the country. The testimony of plaintiff's father also shows that he knew that a return train was then expected, upon which they could have taken passage. The cases cited by counsel for appellant in support of this contention are cases where the common carrier violated another obligation imposed by his contract, that is, to furnish a safe place for alighting. Hutchinson on Carriers, which is referred to, says, (section 617): "Such carriers must be equally careful not to pass beyond the alighting platform station, and thus to require or make it necessary for the passengers to alight without returning to it. When this has been done it is a breach of the carrier's contract, and the passenger may demand a return to the platform or station before leaving the train, and if the servant of the company in charge, without sufficient cause, refuse to return with him, but leaves him to get back by other means, the passenger will be entitled to an action and to the recovery of damages. * * * If there should be no demand to be taken back or refusal to do so, and no attending circumstances of aggravation, and the passenger voluntarily leaves the car, all that the passenger could rightfully claim would be compensation for the inconvenience to which he has been put. * * * But nevertheless where the passenger is carried past the platform or usual alighting place, and is required, either expressly or impliedly, to leave the car without assistance and to find his way unaided to the station, during which time he receives injury, the carrier is liable." This is evidently because the passenger was left in an unsafe position. This is made evident by the cases cited in its support. Railroad Co. v. Doane, 115 Ind. 435, 17 N. E. Rep. 913. A lady passenger was carried some 40 rods beyond the station, and ordered to alight. The roadway was fenced by a wire fence. She discovered no way of getting out except to walk back to the station. In doing so she had to pass a cattle pit, into which she fell. It is said: "It is also the duty of a railroad company to provide suitable stations and platforms to enable persons to enter its cars, and passengers to safely alight when they have accomplished their journey." It is also said that, when passengers are required to alight at any other place than the platform, the company is liable for injuries received in leaving such place to the same extent as it would be for defects in its own premises. The facts in this case and the reasoning of the court clearly show that it can have no application to the case in hand. Adams v. Railway Co., 100 Mo. 555, 12 S. W. Rep. 637, and 13 S. W. Rep. 509; Winkler v. Railway Co., 21 Mo. App. 99; and Franklin v. Motor Road Co., 85 Cal. 63, 24 Pac. Rep. 723,—are of the same character, and have only to be read to show their inapplicability to the case under consideration. Here the plaintiff was left at a different station from that to which the defendant had agreed to carry her, but she was not left in a position of danger. When she left the car without asking to be carried back and left where she ought to have been left, the contract relation between her and defendant ceased. She had a right of action against the company for the breach of their contract, but they owed her no special care because of it. It must follow that the failure to leave plaintiff at Watt's station and carrying her to Emery station was not the proximate cause of her injury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

98 Cal. 63

BARROWS et al. v. FOX et al. (No. 14,643.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1893.)

WATER COURSES—APPROPRIATION—AMOUNT OF DIVERSION.

A decree enjoining an appropriator of water against diverting from a stream any greater quantity of water than will flow through an iron pipe, of a certain size, which is found to be the amount required by him, is erroneous where the water is conducted in an open ditch or flume; as in such case the amount which reaches the place of use is not the same as that diverted, and the appropriator is entitled to such an amount, allowing for waste, as will yield the amount required at the place of use, and he is not obliged to substitute iron pipes.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. F. Williams, Judge.

Action by Barrows and others against Fox and others. From a decree defining the rights of the parties, and from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Blackstock & Shepherd, (Chapman & Hendrick, of counsel,) for appellants. H. L. Poplin, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. The plaintiffs in this action are successors in interest to an appropriator of running water. The appropriation was made at a time when all the lands affected were public lands of the United States, and by means of a ditch and flume through which the water diverted from the stream was conducted to the lands now owned and occupied by the plaintiffs, where it was applied to irrigation, watering stock, and domestic purposes. The diversion and use of the water for these purposes and by these means had been continued for more than 13 years prior to the trial of the action in October, 1890. The defendants, long subsequent to the appropriation by plaintiffs' grantor, became the owners of riparian lands through which the stream flows in its natural course below the dam maintained by plaintiffs for the purpose of forcing the water into the head of their ditch. The lands of plaintiffs are not on or adjacent to the stream, and no surplus or waste water will flow from their lands back into the stream, above or within the limits of defendants' lands. In the summer of 1890 the defendants, for the purpose of diverting the water from the plaintiffs' ditch and flume, and bringing it upon their own lands, tore out plaintiffs' dam, whereupon this action was commenced for damages, injunction, etc. The defendants answered, contesting plaintiffs' claims, and asserting their own claims, not only as riparian owners, but as appropriators, and praying for affirmative relief. The cause was tried by the court, and a decree rendered, defining the rights of the respective parties, and enjoining each from interfering with the other. From this decree, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, the plaintiffs appeal.

The appeal from the order may be disposed of in few words. There was no error—none certainly that could possibly have prejudiced the plaintiffs—in any of the rulings made by the superior court during the trial, and we find in the record evidence sufficient to sustain the findings which are attacked. The principal objection to the findings is that they limit too strictly the extent and character of plaintiffs' appropriation. In effect, it is found that the appropriation did not exceed 11 inches of water, and that this quantity cannot be beneficially applied for the purpose of irrigation on plaintiffs' lands more than 15 days in each month during the irrigating season, i. e. from June to November, inclusive, in each year. There is evidence to sustain this finding and to support the conclusion that the diversion by plaintiffs of the entire 11 inches during other months, or for more than 15 days in each irrigating month, would merely result in a waste of the waters of the stream upon nonriparian lands. It is also found that for domestic purposes and for watering stock the plaintiffs require no more water than will flow through a three quarter inch iron pipe laid from the point of diversion to plaintiffs' lands on the grade of their ditch and flume. There is evidence, not very satisfactory perhaps, but sufficient to sustain this finding in the terms in which it is made, the only difficulty being that it fixes no quantity of water, and is incapable of fixing it in the absence of a pipe such as that described; and the fact is that the plaintiffs have not, and have never had, a pipe of any description, but only an open flume and ditch. This difficulty, however, does not result from lack of evidence to support the finding, though it does, as we shall see, affect that portion of the decree which is based upon it.

We come next to consider the points urged in support of the appeal from the judgment.

1. The superior court did not err in enjoining the plaintiffs from diverting the whole amount of water appropriated by them for purposes of irrigation at times when it is found they could not use it beneficially for that purpose, and when, as a necessary consequence, it would run to waste on nonriparian lands. The extent of an appropriation is limited, not by the quantity of water diverted, but by the quantity which is, or which may be, applied by the appropriator to a beneficial use; and as to any surplus the riparian proprietor below the point of diversion has a right to demand that it should flow in the stream as it has been accustomed to flow. Civil Code § 1411; Perego v. McKissick, 79 Cal. 572, 21 Pac. Rep. 967.

2. But we think the decree of the superior court in attempting to enforce this principle goes in one respect too far, and is in another particular too uncertain and indefinite to be capable of enforcement. The findings nowhere determine the quantity of water diverted by plaintiffs. All that they establish is the quantity which plaintiffs have a right to use on their lands for irrigation and other purposes. But plaintiffs are enjoined against any diversion from the stream in excess of the quantity which they are found to be entitled to use on and at their lands. There is always and inevitably a difference between the quantity of water diverted from a stream and the quantity which reaches the place of use when conducted for any distance through an open ditch or flume, and, when the only fact found is the quantity of water used, this is not a sufficient basis for an injunction limiting the diversion. These remarks apply with especial force to that part of the decree which limits plaintiffs' right of diversion for stock and domestic purposes to the quantity of water which will flow through a three quarter inch pipe. The plaintiffs, as we have seen, have no pipe of any dimensions, and they are not only not obliged to put in a pipe, but they have no right to do so, in the lands of other parties through which their ditch is shown to extend. Allen v. Water Co., 92 Cal. 138, 28 Pac. Rep. 215. The quantity of water which they are allowed to divert at all times for stock and domestic purposes is therefore undetermined, and incapable of determination except by means legally impossible, and the decree is therefore erroneous. It is also erroneous for the further reason that the plaintiffs have the right to divert from the stream a quantity of water sufficient to yield at the place of use the quantity required after the loss by absorption and evaporation of so much thereof as is necessarily so lost in a ditch and flume well constructed and kept in good condition. Ditches and flumes are the usual and ordinary means of diverting water in this state, and parties who have made their appropriations by such means cannot be compelled to substitute iron pipes, though they may be compelled to keep their flumes and ditches in good repair so as to prevent any unnecessary waste. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court, with directions to modify its decree to conform to the views herein expressed, and for that purpose to take such additional testimony and make such additional findings as may be necessary.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 110

CLARK et al. v. CHAPMAN. (No. 18,005.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 8, 1893.)

VARIANCE—FORECLOSURE SALE—GUARANTY.

1. In an action on a contract of guaranty which recites that it is made by defendant in consideration of the execution and filing in court of a certain agreement to arbitrate, to which defendant, one H., and others were parties, where it appears that H.'s name was erased, by mutual consent, before filing, no objection can be made to introducing the agreement, as filed, to identify the subject-matter on which defendant's liability is based, since the variance is not such as will mislead defendant.

2. Where land worth $3,500 is incumbered of record with mortgages for $3,200, a bid of $25 at an execution sale is not disproportionate to the value of the property, after deducting the apparent liens.

3. Where a creditor has recovered a judgment against the principal debtor, which remains unsatisfied, a guarantor against whom judgment is recovered on his guaranty is, on payment thereof, entitled to an assignment of the judgment against the principal, but such assignment is not a condition precedent to a recovery from the guarantor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by A. M. Clark and W. H. Mc-

Kenzie against E. W. Chapman on a contract of guaranty. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. M. Demont and Newman Jones, for appellant. Van Meter & Warlow, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order overruling a motion for a new trial. On the 24th day of May, 1888, J. G. Wofford, the assignor of the respondents, S. G. Boyd, E. W. Chapman, the appellant, and E. H. Fleming entered into a written agreement of arbitration of certain differences existing between them, growing out of and relating to certain commissions claimed by Wofford from Chapman and Fleming for the sale of fruit and ornamental trees and cactus hedge plants; for salary claimed to be due him; also, for an amount claimed to be due him and Boyd from all the others on account of moneys, notes, etc., received by such others from the sale of cactus hedge plants in Merced county, where said Wofford and Boyd claimed an interest in the sales. The name of one J. H. Hamilton was originally written in the body of the agreement of arbitration, as a party thereto, but was erased therefrom, as appears by a note at the bottom of the instrument, which note is as follows: "Name J. H. Hamilton erased wherever occurring in this instrument. [Signed] H. S. Dixon. S. W. Geis. G. G. Goucher." Dixon was the attorney of Chapman, and Geis and Goucher were attorneys of Wofford. On the day of the execution of the agreement to arbitrate, viz. May 28, 1888, E. W. Chapman, the appellant, entered into a written agreement with J. G. Wofford, in the following language: "In consideration of the execution and filing in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Fresno, by him, of a certain agreement of submission to arbitration, dated this day, to which J. H. Hamilton, E. W. Chapman, S. G. Boyd, and E. H. Fleming are parties, submitting to arbitration the divers matters specified therein, and of the faithful performance by him of all his obligations entered into under and by virtue of said agreement, I, E. W. Chapman, of the county of Fresno, state of California, do hereby covenant and agree with J. G. Wofford, of the same place, that I will and shall save him, said Wofford, harmless against all loss of any and all lawful claims he may establish before the arbitrators appointed in said agreement by reason of his surrender to them of any of the property or effects involved in said controversies so to be decided, and that I will and do hereby guaranty said Wofford that he shall have immediate payment of any and all sums found by said arbitrators due him upon the settlement of the affairs and accounts involved in the matters submitted to said arbitrators by said agreement, upon the final determination of the matters so submitted to said arbitrators. E. W. Chapman. Fresno, 24th May, 1888." On the same paper, below the foregoing agreement, the following appears: "I hereby obligate myself to said Wofford in manner and form above written. Ed. H. Fleming." The agreement of submission to arbitration was filed in the superior court of Fresno county on the day of its execution, viz. May 24, 1888. The arbitrators named in the agreement met, received from Wofford a surrender of certain horses, wagons, harness, promissory notes, and other assets, as provided in the agreement of arbitration, and on the 18th day of July, 1888, filed their findings and award in the proceedings with the clerk of the superior court of Fresno county, in which, among other things, the sum of $1,454.11 was found to be due to J. G. Wofford from E. H. Fleming. The agreement to arbitrate provided therefor, and such proceedings were had thereupon that on the 27th of July, 1888, judgment in favor of Wofford, and against E. H. Fleming, for $1,454.11, was entered in the superior court of Fresno county. At the date of the entry of judgment the defendant therein, E. H. Fleming, was the owner of lots 11, 12, and 13, in block 107, of Fresno City, valued at about $3,500, upon which there was of record mortgages amounting to $3,200, although in fact one of them, for $1,500, had been paid. Fleming, on the 7th of August, 1888, conveyed these lots to one Burns. Execution issued on the Wofford judgment September 22, 1888, was levied upon the three lots above mentioned; and, at a sale thereunder on the 10th of November following, they were bid in for $25 by Wofford, from whom they were redeemed by Fleming on the 8th of May, 1889. At the date of the sale, and ever since said date, Fleming has been insolvent, and had no property except the lots in question. On the 17th of October, 1888, Wofford assigned to Clark and McKenzie the guaranty from Chapman, receiving therefor the entire amount due him, viz. $1,454.11 and interest. No payments having been made thereon, the assignees brought this action, and recovered judgment in the court below.

As will appear from the foregoing statement, the name of J. H. Hamilton is mentioned as a party to the contract of arbitration in the guaranty of defendant, Chapman, while in the agreement to arbitrate, filed in the superior court, the name of Hamilton does not appear. Defendant objected, when the contract of arbitration was offered in evidence, upon the ground that this variance was fatal, and his objection being overruled, and the agreement admitted in evidence, he afterwards made the same point on motion for a nonsuit, which was denied; and these rulings are the basis of the first error assigned. Appellant admits that an agreement to arbitrate was filed in the superior court, but claims that, inasmuch as the name of J. H. Hamilton did not appear as a party thereto, it was not the agreement specified in the guaranty. Section 469 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "no variance between the allegations in pleading and the proof is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party." Was the defendant misled by the variance? The object of the reference to the contract to arbitrate in the contract of indemnity was to identify the subject-matter upon which defendant's liability was based. It described the contract of submission to arbitration accurately as to date, as to questions to be submitted, property to be surrendered to the arbitrators, court in which the submission was to be filed,—in short, in all respects, identically, except that, as filed, the name of Hamilton was erased. When we consider that this seems to have been done by the mutual consent of all the parties; that the attorney of defendant witnessed the erasure of Hamilton's name from the contract of submission; that the matter was arbitrated without objection, so far as appears; that Wofford surrendered the property in his possession, as provided in such agreement,—it is hard to see that Chapman was misled; non constat but that the insertion of the name of Hamilton in the two instruments was a mere clerical error, which might be disregarded or corrected by the parties thereto, at their will. The question is not one in which the variance is as to the measure of defendant's liability, but rather as to the identity of the subject-matter upon which that liability is founded. The responsibility of defendant, as measured by his guaranty, was founded upon a certain arbitration, and the results flowing therefrom, and any indices identifying that arbitration with certainty are deemed sufficient. Zeigler v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 28 Cal. 264, was a case in which the defendants were sued as common carriers for the loss of a draft sent through them, and described as being signed by "John Q. Jackson." The proof showed that it was signed "John Q. Jackson, Agent," and the court held the variance between the allegation and proof immaterial. Smith v. Morse, 9 Wall. 76, was an action upon a breach of covenant to perform the award of arbitrators. The agreement to refer to arbitrators contained this clause: "as provided in articles this day executed." The declaration in the case counted on the submission omitting the sentence quoted; and on the submission being offered in evidence, containing the quoted clause, its admission was objected to on the ground of variance. In fact, no articles of submission had ever been executed, and it so appeared at the trial, whereupon the court held there was no variance. I regard the error assigned as not well taken.

2. It is urged that there was no sufficient consideration for the contract of guaranty entered into by defendant. The first specification of insufficiency is based upon the theory that defendant's guaranty was based upon the consideration of the execution and filing in the superior court of the contract of submission containing the name of J. H. Hamilton, whereas in fact no such agreement was ever executed and filed. This allegation of error is answered in the discussion of the question of variance, in which it is held the contract of submission was substantially the same as specified in the contract of guaranty, and varied therefrom only as by consent of all the parties, defendant included. A further consideration for the guaranty is to be found in the surrender to the arbitrators by Wofford of the property in his possession, as provided for therein. The second specification, as to the sufficiency of evidence to justify the findings and decision, is based upon the supposed agreement between Wofford and Chapman that the former should purchase the town lots of the judgment debtor, Fleming, at the face of the judgment, on a sale under execution, and upon full payment by Chapman should assign the certificate of sale to the latter. The evidence as to this agreement involved a substantial conflict. The finding was against the defendant, and, upon well-established principles, will not be disturbed by this court. Wofford exhausted the lien of his judgment upon all the property of the defendant therein, and the sum bid, $25, was not disproportionate to the value of the property after deducting the apparent liens thereon. The fact that one of the mortgages had in fact been paid, although not so appearing of record, does not seem to have been known at the date of the sale and purchase by Wofford. A guarantor, like a surety, is entitled to be reimbursed by enforcing any remedy which the creditor then has against the principal; and, if defendant satisfies the judgment herein, he will be entitled to an assignment of the judgment against Fleming; but such assignment is not a condition precedent to recovery. I am of opinion the conclusion reached by the court below was correct, and advise that the judgment and order overruling the motion for a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

98 Cal. 134

FLAGG v. PUTERBAUGH, Judge. (No. 19,270.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 14, 1893.)

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—TIME OF PRESENTATION—MANDAMUS TO COMPEL SETTLEMENT.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 649, allowing a party to present a bill of exceptions for settlement at the time of the ruling in case of appealable orders made before final judgment, is merely permissive, and not exclusive; and such a bill should be settled and allowed if presented within a reasonable time, as in case of final orders, and the analogy furnished by sections 650 and 651 should determine what is a reasonable time.

2. Mandamus to compel settlement and allowance of a bill of exceptions which petitioner was entitled to have settled and allowed will be denied where the time for appealing has expired, and no appeal has been taken.

In bank.

Original application by O. S. Flagg for a writ of mandamus to compel George Puterbaugh, judge of the superior court, to settle and certify a bill of exceptions. Respondent demurred to the petition. Demurrer sustained.

O. J. Flagg and Thos. J. Capp, for petitioner. Welborn, Stephens & Welborn, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a proceeding by mandamus to compel the respondent to settle and certify a bill of exceptions to an order dissolving a writ of attachment. Respondent demurs generally to the petition, for want of facts. From the petition it appears that the order dissolving the attachment was made October 4, 1892. Afterwards, on the same day, the cause in which the attachment had been issued was tried by the court, and taken under advisement. On October 7th, judgment was directed for the plaintiff, and, on October 13th, findings were filed, and judgment entered. On October 8th, petitioner (plaintiff in the attachment suit) served a draught of his proposed bill of exceptions on the defendants' attorneys, and on the 19th gave notice that he would on the 24th of October present the bill to the respondent for settlement. On the 24th the bill was accordingly presented, but the respondent took no action in the matter until November 4th, when he granted leave to the petitioner to amend said bill, giving him until November 9th to file and serve his amended bill, and allowing the defendants 10 days thereafter to interpose objections, or propose additional amendments. On November 7th the petitioner served on defendants, and presented to respondent, his amended bill. The defendants objected to the settlement of the bill, and on January 13, 1893, the respondent indorsed thereon the following order: "The proposed bill of exceptions, not being presented in time, is disallowed, and the court hereby refuses to allow or settle the same." This action, or rather this refusal to act, on the part of the respondent is attempted to be justified on several grounds. In the first place, a distinction is claimed to exist between this case and Tregambo v. Mill & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 504, because the order excepted to here is an appealable order, while in that case it was a ruling which could only be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment; and it is contended that although in the case cited the procedure prescribed by section 650, Code Civil Proc., may have been applicable, this case is wholly governed by section 649. We see no reason, arising out of the difference of the cases, for applying a different rule. The decision in Tregambo v. Mill & Mining Co. was a liberal ruling in favor of justice, and ought to be followed in all cases where it can be applied without violating the express terms of the statute. A court should lean in favor of giving to litigants every reasonable opportunity of presenting their cases on the merits, and rules of procedure should be made to serve their true purpose of expediting and facilitating the disposition of causes according to their merits, rather than to convert them into a means of obstruction. Taking this view of the matter, and assuming that the case is governed by section 649, that section is, in terms, permissive, and the privilege granted the party, of presenting his bill of exceptions for settlement at the time of the ruling, is not necessarily exclusive. It would frequently be extremely inconvenient to make up a bill of exceptions instantanously, and there is no reason why a court should hold itself rigidly bound to such a practice in the case of appealable orders made before final judgment, any more than in the case of similar orders made after final judgment, which are provided for in section 651. In short, we think that in a case falling under section 649 a bill of exceptions ought to be settled and allowed if presented within a reasonable time after the order excepted to, and that the analogy furnished by sections 650 and 651 should determine what is a reasonable time. The petitioner here followed the practice prescribed by those sections, and was entitled to have his bill of exceptions allowed and certified. It is only in consequence of our twenty-ninth rule that a bill of exceptions to this order is necessary. The rule does not, as perhaps it ought, prescribe any practice for the settlement of the bills of exceptions which it requires. We take the occasion, therefore, to say that, in order to comply with that rule, parties appealing from orders may follow the same practice prescribed by sections 650, 651, Code Civil Proc.

Another objection to the right of petitioner to the relief sought is that his petition shows that his original proposed bill was not refused settlement, and that the bill which was refused was filed too late.

We think it sufficiently appears that the court refused to settle, not only the bill proposed November 7th, but any bill. The first one, at least, was in time, and entitled the petitioner to a bill truly setting forth the proceedings to be reviewed. But, considering the extension of time granted by the court, we think the second draft proposed was in time, and, so far as it was true, ought to have been allowed.

The last objection is that more than 6 months have elapsed since the order dissolving the attachment, that the time for appealing was only 60 days, and that it does not appear that any appeal has ever been taken. This objection to the sufficiency of the petition seems to be well founded. It would be a vain thing to settle a bill of exceptions, if there is no appeal, and the court would not order it. For this reason, only, the demurrer to the petition must be sustained. Demurrer sustained, with leave to petitioner to file an amended petition within 10 days, if he is so advised.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; HARRISON, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(98 Cal. 138)

PEOPLE v. WALTERS. (No. 20,994.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 14, 1893.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

1. In a murder case, where the evidence shows that a feud existed between the families of defendant and deceased, evidence that, immediately after defendant shot deceased, he fired the other barrel of his gun, and wounded deceased's mother, who was present, is admissible to show motive.

2. It is also proper to admit the testimony of surgeons as to the number and position of the wounds on her body, as it tends to show that defendant shot at her with deadly aim.

3. For the same reason it is proper to prove that shortly after the shooting she was covered with blood.

4. Pen. Code, § 1130, providing for supplying the place of the district attorney by appointment of the court when he cannot prosecute, is not exclusive, and in such case an attorney may be employed to prosecute by the board of supervisors; and there need be no formal order of court, as required by said section.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; John L. Campbell, Judge.

Elmer Walters was convicted of murder in the second degree. The court granted a new trial, and the people appeal. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Hart and Harris & Gregg, for the People. R. E. Bledsoe, E. W. Freeman, and L. T. Farr, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendant was charged with the murder of one Ira Wall, and was convicted of murder in the second degree. On the trial in the superior court, evidence was admitted, over the defendant's objection, to the effect that at the time of the homicide Ira Wall and his mother were together, and, immediately after shooting and killing Ira Wall with one barrel of his shotgun, the defendant fired with the other barrel upon Mrs. Wall, and wounded her. Before judgment the defendant moved for a new trial upon the following grounds: "(1) That the court has misdirected the jury in matters of law, and has erred in the decisions of questions of law arising during the course of the trial; (2) that the verdict is contrary to the law; (3) that said verdict is contrary to the evidence." After argument the court made and entered the following order: "Defendant's motion for a new trial, heretofore submitted, is granted upon the ground that the court erred in admitting evidence regarding the shooting of Mrs. Wall, and on that ground only, and denied as to the other grounds of said motion, and the prosecution excepts." From this order the people appeal, contending that the several rulings of the court admitting evidence relating to the shooting of Mrs. Wall were free from error, and consequently that the order was wholly unwarranted. The defendant contends that the order granting a new trial is not only sustained by the ground upon which the action of the court was expressly based, but that it should have been granted upon other grounds.

In order to a proper consideration of the case, a brief statement of the leading facts is necessary: There was a controversy of some years standing between the Wall and the Walters families over the right to divert and use the waters of a small stream for the purpose of irrigating their respective lands. The Walls seem to have been the first appropriators, but the extent of their appropriation and use seems to have been disputed by the defendant and his two brothers, and there were mutual interferences in the way of turning the water in and out of the irrigating ditches of the parties. On one occasion, when several of the Walls—brothers and sisters—were present, a brother of the defendant took a gun from the hands of Ira Wall's sister, and in attempting to break it caused it to be accidentally discharged, inflicting upon himself a mortal wound. Subsequently a suit was commenced by the Walls against the defendant, in which a preliminary injunction was issued restraining him from interfering with the water; but this order was so modified as to permit the parties, pending the litigation, to use the water alternately four days at a time. Afterwards the action was tried, and decided in favor of the Walls. Pending his motion for a new trial the defendant claimed the right to use the water alternately with the Walls four days at a time, according to the modification of the preliminary injunction, and having turned the water from the Walls' ditch into his own, armed himself with a pistol and shotgun, and took his station at the point of diversion, apparently for the purpose of preventing any interference on the part of the Walls. During the night of August 10, 1892, he slept on the ground a few feet from the ditch, and was still in bed between 5 and 6 o'clock on the morning of the 11th, when Ira Wall, his mother, and a boy of sixteen, named Carver Peck, came down the canon along the road from the Wall residence to the town of Elsinore. Mrs. Wall was in a buggy on her way to Elsinore. Ira Wall and Peck were on foot, and each had a shovel. None of them were armed. Mrs. Wall stopped her buggy about 30 feet short of the point at which the Walters ditch crossed the road. Ira Wall and Peck went to the ditch, and commenced placing some stones in it where it crossed the road, for the purpose, as they claim, of making it passable for the buggy. At this moment defendant sat up in his bed, and drawing a double-barreled gun from under the cover, with the remark, "You know what I am here for," fired at Ira Wall, and immediately swung his gun around in the direction of Mrs. Wall, where she sat in her buggy, and discharged the second barrel. About 50 shot entered the body of Ira Wall under his left shoulder blade, killing him instantly. Thirteen shot took effect in the breast of Mrs. Wall, but did not inflict a fatal wound. It is for the supposed error in the admission of evidence of this shooting of Mrs. Wall that the superior court has ordered a new trial.

The superior court did not err in admitting this evidence. It is true that in trying a person charged with one offense it is ordinarily inadmissible to offer proof of another and distinct offense, but this is only because the proof of a distinct offense has ordinarily no tendency to establish the offense charged; but, whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion. These remarks are applicable to any case in which two persons are murdered or assaulted at the same time, and as part of the same transaction, and the present case affords an excellent illustration of the necessity of the exception to the general rule. On the occasion of this homicide, Mrs. Wall and her son were the representatives of one side of a long-standing controversy, which had resulted in a bitter family feud, and the shooting of the mother immediately after the shooting of the son, by a representative of the other side, was convincing evidence of the motive of the act. It showed the malice which is an essential ingredient of the crime charged, and tended strongly to disprove the claim of self-defense, which the people could anticipate if they chose to do so. Nor can the defendant complain of the rulings of the court admitting the evidence of surgeons as to the number and position of the wounds on the body of Mrs. Wall. This evidence tended to prove that he shot at her with deadly aim; and the same may be said of the evidence of another witness, who stated that when he saw Mrs. Wall at the scene of the shooting, shortly after it occurred, she was covered with blood from head to foot. The authorities cited in appellant's brief abundantly sustain the foregoing views. We do not think it necessary to refer specially to any case except People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 671, 4 Pac. Rep. 1144, and 6 Pac. Rep. 700, 846. The ground upon which the new trial was granted, therefore, does not sustain it, and it only remains to inquire whether either of the other grounds relied on by the defendant entitled him to a new trial.

Two points, only, are urged under this head: First, that it was error to allow attorneys to conduct the prosecution in place of the district attorney, who had not been regularly and formally authorized so to do by an order entered in the minutes of the court; second, that the court erred in refusing to allow one of the instructions requested by the defendant. The facts upon which the first point arises are as follows: The district attorney of the county had been attorney for the defendant in the litigation about the water right, and for that reason felt that he could not properly prosecute the charge of murder. At his suggestion the board of supervisors employed other counsel to conduct the prosecution, which they did without objection, but without any formal order of court, made in pursuance of section 1130 of the Penal Code. There was no error in this. Section 1130, Pen. Code, makes provision for supplying the place of the district attorney when for any reason he cannot conduct the prosecution, but is not exclusive. If his place is otherwise supplied by counsel who are guilty of no misconduct prejudicial to the defendant, he has no ground of complaint. As to the second point, it is sufficient to say that the instruction refused was so broad in its terms as to be misleading, if not positively erroneous, and so far as it was correct it was given, with the necessary qualifications, in another instruction allowed by the court. There was no ground for the order granting a new trial, and the order is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter the proper judgment upon the verdict.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

98 Cal. 103

In re SANBORN'S ESTATE. (No. 18,112.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1893.)

WILL—WHO MAY CONTEST—PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

Under Code Civil Proc. §§ 1307-1312, providing that a will can be contested on "written grounds of opposition" filed by a "person interested," a public administrator cannot contest the probate of a will, since the person contesting must be interested in the estate, and not merely in the fees of administration.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Petition by V. M. Peyton for the probate of the will of Israel Sanborn, deceased. J. R. Claves, public administrator, also filed a petition for letters of administration of the estate of Sanborn. From orders admitting the will to probate, and denying the petition of Claves, the latter appeals. Affirmed.

Nicol & Orr and E. I. Jones, for appellant. J. H. & J. E. Budd, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Israel Sanborn died in San Joaquin county on January 27, 1892, and on February 3, 1892, V. M. Peyton filed in the superior court of said county a petition in which it was averred that said Sanborn left a will dated April 17, 1872, by which petitioner and one Severy were named as executors. It was further stated that Severy was incompetent, and petitioner prayed that the will be admitted to probate, and letters testamentary be issued to said Peyton. Due notice was given to the heirs, and no one interested in the estate appeared to contest the probate of said will. But on February 8, 1892, J. R. Claves, who was public administrator of said county, filed in said court a petition for letters of administration of the estate of said Sanborn, in which he averred, among other things, that he "has no knowledge whether said will was ever signed or attested by said Sanborn, or any witnesses;" that it "does not show upon its face that the same is any will or testament of said deceased;" and that he "is advised and believes that the attestation, witnessing, or publication of said paper as a will cannot be shown;" and, further, that no other will has been found, and that "to the best knowledge, information, and belief of said petitioner, said deceased died intestate." The two petitions were heard together; and the court made an order admitting the will to probate, and granting letters to the administrator, Peyton, and also another order denying the petition of the public administrator, Claves. From these orders, Claves appeals.

At the trial, Claves offered evidence tending to show that Sanborn had made a later will, which could not be found. To this evidence, respondent objected, and it was admitted, "with the privilege to move to strike it out;" and afterwards the court granted a motion of respondent to strike it out, which ruling is assigned by appellant as error. This evidence was properly stricken out; and, if the court committed any error, it was in listening at all to the petition of the public administrator before it had passed upon the probate of the will. The probate of a will can be contested only upon "written grounds of opposition" filed by a "person interested,"—that is, interested in the estate, and not in the mere fees of an administration thereof. Sections 1307-1312, Code Civil Proc. A public administrator has no interest in an estate, or in the probate of a will. That is a matter which concerns only those to whom the estate would otherwise go. In Estate of Parsons, 65 Cal. 240, 3 Pac. Rep. 817, one J. W. Parsons had been appointed administrator, and afterwards a document was offered for probate as the will of the deceased. Parsons, as administrator, contested the probate, and afterwards charged the expenses of the contest in his account; but this court said: "This item is not a charge against the estate. It was the affair of the heirs, as such, to contest, if they wished, the probate of the document; not of the administrator." See, also, Roach v. Coffey, 73 Cal. 281, 14 Pac. Rep. 840, and cases there cited. If a public administrator could legally assume the character of a standing contestant of wills, notwithstanding the wishes of heirs and devisees, he would certainly enlarge the sphere of his activities; but the limitations of the statute do not allow such inflation. Orders affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 51

SWAMP-LAND DIST. NO. 150 v. SILVA et al. (No. 18,058.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1893.)

DRAINAGE DISTRICTS — ORGANIZATION — ASSESSMENTS — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE.

1. Where, under Act March 30, 1874, (St. 1873-74,) providing that, immediately after the passage of the act, owners of land in swamp-land district No. 150 may elect trustees, and proceed in the work of reclamation, as provided in the Code, the landowners organized the district by electing trustees, and making and recording by-laws, the organization was complete; and an attack on the validity of such organization could not be considered in an action by such district to recover assessments against land of persons lying within such district.

2. Such act is constitutional, since, under Const. art. 4, § 31, providing that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes, the legislature could create a reclamation district by special act.

3. Pol. Code, § 3459, as amended by Act March 30, 1874, provides that if the original assessment is insufficient for the reclamation of the district lands, or if further assessments are necessary to maintain the reclamation work, the trustees must present to the board of supervisors by which the district was formed a statement of the work "done" or "to be done." Held that, where an assessment was levied for work "to be done," it was not rendered invalid because the trustees, in their statement to the board of supervisors, did not specify the work already done.

4. Nor was such assessment invalid because it included incidental expenses, and the sum of $33,400 for erecting and maintaining a pump.

5. The fact that the officers of, and owners of land in, the district, failed to act as a corporation, does not destroy the corporate existence of the land district, since no acts or misconduct of the agents or officers of a corporation can operate to forfeit its charter.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Action by swamp-land district No. 150 against A. J. Silva and Mary Silva. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for appellants. Add. C. Hinkson and John W. Armstrong, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover from the defendants the sum of $953.11, the amount of an assessment levied against the land of the defendants lying within reclamation district No. 150. The act of March 30, 1874, (St. 1873-74, p. 867,) under which the plaintiff was organized as a reclamation district, provides that immediately after the passage of the act the "owners of land in swamp-land district No. 150 consisting of what is known as 'Merrit Island,' in Yolo county, may proceed to elect trustees, and make and record by-laws, * * * and they shall thereafter proceed in the work of reclamation, as provided in said Code, with the modifications herein contained." Under this act the landowners organized the district by electing trustees, and making and recording by-laws. A notice was given on the 7th day of April, 1874, that a meeting for the purposes stated would be held on the 18th day of April, and at the time and place mentioned in the notice all the landowners in the district met, and elected trustees, and adopted by-laws. This is all the act required, so far as the organization of the district is concerned, and the points made by the appellants, seeking to impeach the validity of the organization of the district, cannot be considered. A reclamation district is a public corporation for municipal purposes, and the creation thereof may be shown by acts recognizing its existence. People v. Reclamation Dist., 53 Cal. 346. The validity of the organization itself cannot be collaterally attacked in an action to recover an assessment levied upon land by a de facto district. Reclamation Dist. v. Gray, 95 Cal. 601, 30 Pac. Rep. 779.

It is claimed by appellants that the act above referred to was clearly unconstitutional, and gave the plaintiff no power to act, but no grounds are stated upon which this claim is based. Section 31, art. 4, of the old constitution, provided that "corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes." Under this provision the legislature had the power to create a reclamation district by special act.

It is claimed by appellants that the assessment is invalid because the trustees, in their statement to the board of supervisors, did not specify the work which had already been done. Section 3459 of the Political Code formerly authorized an additional assessment only for work necessary to complete the reclamation. It did not authorize an assessment to be made for work already done. By an act approved March 30, 1874,¹ this section was amended by inserting the words "done or" before the words "to be done." Unless the assessment is to be for work already done, in whole or in part, there is no necessity for a statement as to what work has been done. The assessment in this case was levied for work to be done under section 3459, supra. Hagar v. Board, 51 Cal. 477.

The contention that the assessment is invalid because it includes incidental expenses, and the sum of $33,400 for the purpose of erecting a pump and maintaining the same, cannot be sustained. Reclamation Dist. v. Hagar, 66 Cal. 56, 4 Pac. Rep. 945.

¹Pol. Code, § 3459, as amended by Act March 30, 1874, provides that if the original assessment is insufficient for the reclamation of the district lands, or if further assessments are necessary to maintain the reclamation works, the trustees must present to the board of supervisors by which the district was formed a statement of the work done or to be done.

It is claimed by the appellant that the district "lost its corporate existence by reason of the nonuser of its functions, and by reason of the total failure on the part of its officers and land owners to act as a corporation." But there is no such thing in this country as forfeiture of a charter of a municipal corporation through the acts or misconduct of its agents or officers. Any neglect to use the powers in which the public or individuals have an interest may be corrected by the courts. As such corporations can exist only by legislative sanction, so they can only be deprived of their existence by act of the legislature, or a judicial sentence based upon legislative provision and sufficient facts.

The court did not err in overruling the defendants' objection to the introduction in evidence of the order of the board of supervisors of Yolo county appointing commissioners. The act under which the plaintiff was organized provides that "all assessments for reclamation purposes in said district shall be made as provided in the Political Code." The act itself shows that the district is entirely within the boundaries of Yolo county. It follows, therefore, that, although the board of supervisors of that county did not form the district, yet such board is the proper tribunal to which report should be made. Reclamation Dist. v. Goldman, 65 Cal. 643, 4 Pac. Rep. 676.

Other errors are alleged, but we find no merit in any of the points made by the appellants. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

SWAMP-LAND DIST. NO. 150 v. BUMP. SAME v. CORNISH, (two cases.) SAME v. WINTER. (Nos. 18,059-18,062.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1893.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Four actions by swamp-land district No. 150 against Bump and others to recover the amount of assessments levied against defendant's land. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, for appellants. Add. C. Hinkson and John W. Armstrong, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon the authority of Swamp Land Dist. v. Silva, (No. 18,058, this day decided,) 32 Pac. Rep. 866, the judgment and order are affirmed.

98 Cal. 55

MARSHALL v. TAYLOR. (No. 14,674.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1893.)

SEDUCTION—EVIDENCE—DAMAGES.

1. In an action for seduction it appeared that plaintiff, 16 years of age, was working as a waitress in a hotel, and sleeping alone in a cottage near by; that she was on friendly terms with defendant, who was her employer, and a man of wealth and years; that defendant called on her at the cottage, after dark, and, after conversing on ordinary topics, offered her a glass of wine, which she drank, and was soon scarcely able to stand without assistance; that defendant placed his arm around her, expressed his affection for her, caressed her, promised her future friendship and assistance, and finally assisted her to a bed, where he had intercourse with her. Held, that the evidence establishes a cause of seduction, whether plaintiff was or was not conscious at the time of intercourse.

2. Where, by reason of the intercourse, plaintiff became pregnant, and had a child, a verdict of $25,000 was not excessive.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinley, Judge.

Action by Jessie N. Marshall against Jacob S. Taylor for seduction. There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. C. Sephens, for appellant. W. T. Williams and W. W. Holcomb, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This was an action for damages, plaintiff alleging by her complaint that the defendant with force and violence made an indecent assault upon her, and then and there wickedly seduced, debauched, and carnally knew her, when and whereby she became pregnant with child. A trial resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $25,000, and this appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial.

It is developed by the evidence that the defendant is a man of mature years, of large property interests, and at the time the alleged cause of action arose was residing with his wife and daughters at a seaside resort in San Diego county, and, among his various business callings, was there engaged in keeping a hotel. The plaintiff was an employee of the defendant, engaged as a waitress at the hotel. She was of the age of 16 years and 10 months, had seen considerable of the world, having resided with her mother in various localities, and, as indicated by her evidence and correspondence introduced at the trial, may be considered a bright and intelligent girl for her years. The proof of the seduction rests alone upon the testimony of the plaintiff, and her evidence is squarely and entirely contradicted in every essential particular by the testimony of the defendant; he denying ever having had any sexual intercourse with her at any time or under any circumstances. Indeed, at every step of the trial perjury was there in all its hideousness; but all those matters came before the jury, and, as evidenced by their verdict, her statements were believed.

It is now insisted that, conceding the facts to be as detailed by the plaintiff, no case of seduction has been made out by her evidence. Her testimony upon cross-examination as to the circumstances of the act is stronger in her behalf than her testimony in chief, and may be summarized as follows: That in the early part of October, 1888, on a Saturday evening, either the 6th or 13th thereof, about 8 o'clock, while she was in her room at a cottage alone, a short distance from the hotel, Taylor visited her, having called upon her once before, and brought her some books. He conversed with her for a while, and then asked her if she ever drank any wine. He then handed her a glass of wine, which she drank. He poured out some for himself, and tasted it, but said it was too sweet, he did not like it. She continues: "In about five minutes from the time I took the wine I began feeling sick. At first I began to feel sick at my stomach. My head began to go around. I had sensations of tingling all over my body. I never felt that way before. I had difficulty in talking. My voice was husky. That lasted a moment or two. I got up and said, 'I am quite sick, Mr. Taylor.' I got up, but could not stand; my limbs felt so heavy and numb, I could not step. As I stood up, Mr. Taylor stood up, and I rested by hand on the front of the table. As he got up he stepped towards me. I was glad to have support, as I could scarcely stand. I didn't repulse him, because I couldn't stand up. There was in my ears a sound like the rushing of waters. My voice sounded to me very distinct and clear. His voice sounded the same. He put his arms around me and assisted me to the bed. When he put his arms around me, he bent and kissed me, and assisted me to the bed, and said that he loved me, and, 'You poor little girl, I am sorry you are sick.' He said that just before or just after he kissed me, I don't remember which. He half carried me to the bed. It was a very short distance. I didn't lay down at once. I sat on the edge of the bed. He sat beside me, with one arm still around me. I can scarcely recollect anything that happened distinctly. I asked him to get me a drink of water. As he got up I fell backwards on the bed; couldn't sit up. He got me a drink of water. He had his arm around my waist, and kissed me again. I asked him to go away, and he said he did not want to leave me if I was going to be ill. He kissed me again, and told me that he loved me. He told me that he loved me, and put his hand in my dress, and asked me if I loved him; and then he asked me if I would care if he stayed with me. I made no reply. I could scarcely speak. I don't remember distinctly what occurred after that. I don't know what happened at all until I knew he hurt me. I had not gone to bed. I know it was wine Mr. Taylor gave me, because I had seen it served to the guests at the hotel." At another stage of the proceedings, in referring to this event, she testified as follows: "Mr. Taylor assured me of his friendship, and promised me that he would also be a friend to me; that he had plenty of means, and I would never want; and he gave me his word that he would never see me in any trouble, and I then yielded. He said these things to me while I was lying in bed. I had a child which was born on August 22, 1889. The defendant was the father of that child. Until I met Mr. Taylor I was a chaste and virtuous girl."

In actions of the character under present investigation, where the plaintiff is a young girl, poor and friendless, and the defendant a man of mature years, married and wealthy, it may well be said that the contest is an unequal one; but her youth and poverty are often weapons of victory, for frequently they form a citadel of strength in the minds of jurors, which is impregnable to successful attack by the opposition. Thus in her weakness lies her strength, while a defendant's wealth, his family, and his gray hairs are elements which, when placed before the jury, often tend only to his own destruction. These things are made plain by a perusal of the history of legal jurisprudence upon the subject, and this unequal struggle between the parties so appearing to juries has frequently caused verdicts to be rendered opposed both to the law and the evidence; and the extreme danger which arises in this class of cases that a man may be despoiled of his good name and his property demands of courts a careful consideration of the evidence which forms the basis of such verdicts. For these reasons, and from the additional facts that the case as disclosed by the record is a most peculiar one, and that the verdict rendered largely exceeds in amount any verdict returned by a jury in an action of seduction in any of the courts of this country to which our attention has been directed, we have given the record a most careful examination. As before intimated, the evidence is squarely conflicting. The plaintiff says the defendant seduced her; the defendant says he never had sexual intercourse with her at any time. The plaintiff says she was a chaste and virtuous girl; the defendant's witnesses say, in effect, she stood but little above the plane of the common strumpet. But the jury were fairly and fully instructed by the court as to the law of the case, including the rules of law applicable to the weight of evidence, and the credibility of witnesses; and upon this conflicting evidence, taken in connection with the law, they found for the plaintiff, and, under an established practice, we have not the right to disturb those findings of fact, even if we were so inclined.

Does the plaintiff's evidence establish a case of seduction? And that brings us to the inquiry, what is the meaning of the word "seduction," as used in the Code of Civil Procedure, for it is there provided, (section 374:) "An unmarried female may prosecute as plaintiff in an action for her own seduction, and may recover therein such damages, pecuniary or exemplary, as are assessed in her favor." Plaintiff's evidence may be viewed from two distinct standpoints. Viewed from one standpoint it indicates that she had lost consciousness from the effect of the wine, at the time the act was committed. If this be so, the defendant was guilty of rape; and while it is held in those states where seduction is a criminal offense that proof of a rape will defeat a prosecution for seduction, (State v. Kingsley, 39 Iowa, 439; State v. Lewis, 48 Iowa, 578; Croghan v. State, 22 Wis. 444,) yet no case is found in the books where a party has failed to recover in damages for seduction when the evidence at the trial disclosed the defendant guilty of the more heinous offense of rape. Such a showing but aggravates the injury, and furnishes ample ground for exemplary damages. Perhaps it was from this standpoint of vision that the jurors viewed this case, and for that reason assessed the damages at such a large amount. It does not lie in the mouth of the defendant to say: "I am not liable to pay any damages in this action, because the evidence discloses I did not seduce the plaintiff, but committed the atrocious crime of rape." The complaint in this case is broad in its allegations, and, except as to the use of force, the elements forming the measure of damages in a case either of seduction or rape are very similar. Where a parent sues for the seduction of his daughter, and consequent loss of service, and it appears that the intercourse was accomplished by force, such a showing will not defeat the action, but will aggravate the injury. Furman v. Applegate, 23 N. J. Law, 28; Kennedy v. Shea, 110 Mass. 147; White v. Murtland, 71 Ill. 250. While the recovery of the parent is based upon a different principle from that involved where the female is the complainant, yet we see no bad effect to follow an application of the same rule in her case. Certainly a court will not be astute in drawing fine distinctions from the evidence in order to discover a case of rape, if such fact would defeat a recovery. For the foregoing reasons we conclude that, if plaintiff was unconscious from the effects of the wine at the time defendant had intercourse with her, her cause of action was not defeated by reason of such fact.

Assuming her to have been conscious at the time the act of intercourse took place, and consenting thereto, was she seduced? "Seduction" is not defined by our statute; and seduction, as recognized at the common law, based purely upon the loss of service to the master, is such that we are bound to hold our statute, in using the word, intended other things. We think the word is there used in its popular acceptance as recognized in this country. The court, in its instructions to the jury, declared the law upon this question as follows: "The word 'seduction,' when applied to the conduct of a man towards a female, means the use of some influence, promise, art, or means on his part, by which he induces the woman to surrender her chastity and her virtue to his embraces. There must be something more than a mere reluctance on the part of the woman to commit the act, and her consent must be obtained by flattery, false promises, artifice, urgent importunity based on professions of attachment, or the like, for the woman; and that, relying solely on said promises or professions of flattery or artifice or importunity, she surrendered her person and chastity to her alleged seducer; and that, relying and being influenced solely by such promises, flattery, artifice, and urgent importunity, she then being chaste, surrendered her person and chastity to her alleged seducer." After a careful examination of many cases, we are satisfied the law is fairly declared in the foregoing instruction, and that such instruction is in line with the authorities in this country. State v. Pierce, 27 Conn. 319; Croghan v. State, 22

Wis. 444; Brown v. Kingsley, 38 Iowa, 222. Modern lexicographers define seduction as the act of persuading a woman to surrender her chastity. In its ordinary acceptance it implies a betrayal of confidence, and for that reason a great majority of this class of cases are based upon a violated promise of marriage, but this is not a universal rule by any means; for a married man may seduce a girl, and that, too, though she is aware of his marriage. There are many cases to this effect, but they have arisen generally where the injured parties, being young girls, and easily beguiled, could not be held to the plane of responsibility occupied by women possessing a wider knowledge of the world. In the present case we have a chaste girl, not 17 years of age, making her living far distant from her few friends, stopping at night alone in a cottage. She is visited after dark by her employer, with whom she was upon friendly terms, a man of wealth and years. After a conversation upon ordinary topics, lasting some time, he gives her a glass of wine which she drinks, and her mind is seriously affected thereby. He expresses affection for her, repeatedly caresses her, makes promises of future friendship and assistance, and, after all these things have been going on for some length of time, he seduces her; at least a recital of these events would picture a case of seduction to the ordinary mind. They do not disclose a cold, deliberate transfer of virtue for a consideration. Neither do they describe a sacrifice of virtue to the demands of lustful passion; but the blandishments, the expressions of friendship, the promises, the wine, weapons of the seducer, were all there. If the plaintiff were a woman of years, with that knowledge of the world which age brings with it at the present day, the case might present a different aspect. The struggle would not have been so unequal, and she would have been held to a stricter responsibility. But we cannot charge her with that judgment and discretion which come only with age and experience. The drinking of the wine seriously affected her, and its administration alone may well be termed an artifice that conduced to her downfall. If these things which she has said be true, (and the jury has so found the facts,) her cause of action is supported by the evidence.

We have examined in detail the alleged errors of law relied upon by the appellant in the admission and rejection of evidence by the court, and either find them not well taken, or the error, if committed, not prejudicial to appellant.

It is insisted that respondent's counsel was guilty of such misconduct during the progress of the trial as to have prejudiced defendant's case thereby in the minds of the jurors. This misconduct is claimed to have consisted in attempting to get before the jury matters not within the issues by means of asking improper questions and "offers to prove," etc. It was held in the case of People v. Ah Len, 92 Cal. 282, 28 Pac. Rep. 286, that this character of misconduct could be carried to such lengths as to justify a new trial, and for that reason a new trial was there ordered. The rule is a most wholesome one, and in criminal cases especially its rigid enforcement will be maintained by the court. A trial court should always be alert to prevent an attorney from obtaining advantages in jury trials by the practice of methods not countenanced by the ethics of the profession. The record here presented does not disclose sufficient in this regard to justify a new trial of the case. Neither do we think the showing made for a new trial based upon affidavits sufficient.

We are not prepared to say that the damages are excessive. Courts are not disposed to make smooth the ways of the seducer. At common law, in these cases, verdicts of juries were seldom held to be excessive, and this, too, where the parent recovered damages upon the fiction of loss of service. With much greater reason should we not disturb the amount of a verdict where the party directly injured is the party plaintiff. The law is most liberal in these matters, and rightly so. Through the seducer's arts a young girl has been outlawed from society. She has been cast upon the world robbed of her innocence; an injury has been done which nothing can repair; a loss has been suffered which nothing can alleviate. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

HARRISON and FITZGERALD, JJ., not having heard the argument, do not participate in the decision hereof.

98 Cal. 78

Ex parte WHITWELL. (No. 20,954.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1893.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—REGULATION OF USEFUL BUSINESS—JUDICIAL POWERS—PRIVATE INSANE ASYLUMS.

1. It is competent for the court to determine whether any particular regulation of a useful business is a reasonable restriction on the constitutional right of the citizen to engage in such business.

2. The business of maintaining a private asylum for the treatment of mild forms of insanity, inebriety, and other nervous diseases is a lawful one, and cannot be prohibited, either directly or indirectly.

3. Ordinance of board of supervisors of San Mateo county of March 16, 1892, regulating the business of keeping asylums for the care of persons afflicted with insanity, inebriety, or other nervous diseases, provides (section 3) that the board shall not grant a license to any person to conduct such business unless the walls of the asylum designated in his application are rendered fireproof by being constructed of brick and iron, or stone and iron, and the grounds accessible to patients are surrounded by a brick wall at least 18 inches thick and 12 feet high, and the premises are distant more than 400 yards from any dwelling house or schoolhouse. Section 4 provides that no license issued by the board shall authorize male and female patients to be cared for in the same building. Held, that sections 3 and 4 are unconstitutional and void, being an arbitrary exercise of the police power.

In bank.

Habeas corpus proceeding by Dr. Whitwell, who was imprisoned for conducting an insane asylum without securing a county license therefor. Petitioner discharged.

Geo. C. Ross, for petitioner. Robert Y. Hayne and G. W. Towle, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is a proceeding upon habeas corpus, and it appears, from the return to the writ issued herein, that at the date of its service the petitioner was imprisoned by the sheriff of San Mateo county upon a charge of maintaining within that county a hospital for the treatment, for reward, of insane persons, without having procured a license so to do, as required by an ordinance adopted by its board of supervisors March 16, 1892. The ordinance referred to purports to be one "to license for purposes of regulation and revenue the business of keeping, * * * within the county of San Mateo, * * * hospitals, asylums, homes, retreats, or places for the care or treatment, for reward, of insane persons, or persons of unsound mind, or inebriates, or persons affected by or suffering from any mental or nervous disease, or who are suffering from the effects of the excessive use of alcoholic liquors." By the first section of this ordinance it is made unlawful to maintain within the county of San Mateo any hospital, asylum, or place for the care or treatment, for reward, of any insane person, or person belonging to either of the classes mentioned in the title of the ordinance, unless the keeper of such hospital or asylum shall have first procured a license therefor. The second section provides that, before any such license shall issue, the person desiring the same shall make a written application therefor to the board of supervisors, in which he "shall state specifically the location, purpose, place of business, its distance from the nearest dwelling house owned or occupied by any other person, with the name of the owner or occupant of such dwelling house, the class of persons that the applicant desires or intends to receive, as being the insane, or inebriates, or other persons designated in section 1 hereof, and whether the same are to be male or female," and the number of persons it is intended to care for, the name of the general superintendent, and that of the attending physician or physicians. It is further provided that such application shall be accompanied by an architect's diagram of the premises to be used in connection with such business, with a statement of the height of the ceilings from floors, and an official survey and description of the land to be used in connection therewith. The third section provides for giving notice of the time for the hearing of such application, when any person interested in favor of, or in opposition to, the granting of such license may be heard, and the sworn testimony of persons may be taken in relation to such application; and if, after such hearing, the board shall be satisfied "that the designated premises are suitable for the purpose, and that the persons designated in such application as superintendent and attending physician or physicians are proper and suitable persons for their several stations," said board shall grant such applicant a license: "provided, however, that in no case shall such license be granted unless the board shall be satisfied * * * that the building and buildings designated in such application is and are what are usually known as fireproof, by reason of being constructed of brick and iron, or stone and iron, and that such building so designated in said application is not more than two stories in height, and that the same and the land used in connection therewith, or such part of said land as any of the patients are to have access to, is surrounded by a brick or stone wall not less than eighteen inches in thickness, and not less than twelve feet in height, and in which wall there is but one opening, which opening is closed by a solid iron door, * * * so constructed and fitted into said wall as that the same may be securely fastened by a combination lock, and said door is furnished with a combination lock; and provided, further, that no such license shall be granted if the premises designated in the application are within a distance of four hundred yards from any dwelling house or schoolhouse." Section 4 provides "that no license issued hereunder shall authorize male and female persons, or more than one of the classes of persons designated in section 1 hereof, to be cared for or treated in the same building, or put together in the same building, or in any inclosure connected with any building." Section 9 gives the form of the license which is to be issued, and which by its terms only authorizes the person to whom it is issued to carry on the business of keeping a hospital or asylum for the care or treatment of one of the classes of persons designated in the first section of the ordinance, subject to all the conditions, restrictions, and penalties in the ordinance contained.

The petitioner alleges that he is a physician and surgeon, and that the particular branch of the profession to which he especially devotes his attention is the treatment of insane persons, and patients with nervous and mental disorders, and inebriates, and persons suffering from the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and that for the purpose of more effectually treating such persons he, long before the passage of said ordinance, at great expense purchased, and now owns, 22 acres of land in the county of San Mateo, on which he has erected buildings which he uses as a home or asylum for them; but such buildings are not fireproof, or of the character designated and required by the ordinance, and are also situated within 400 yards of the dwellings of other persons. The petitioner further alleges that he treats in the asylum established by him both male and female persons suffering from any and all nervous diseases and from mild forms of insanity, such as melancholia, dementia, and hysteria, but that he does not knowingly admit or treat violent or dangerous cases. It is claimed by the petitioner that the provisions of the ordinance above set out impose unreasonable restrictions upon his right to prosecute a lawful business, and to devote his property to a lawful use, and that such provisions are therefore in conflict with the constitution of the United States and of this state, and are for this reason void. Upon the other hand, the respondent contends that the ordinance is a police regulation, designed, among other things, to protect the patients in such asylums from the danger which might result to them from fire, and also to promote the comfort and peace of the community in which such an asylum may be located, by requiring insane patients to be confined within walls, and so prevented from coming in contact with people who are entitled to be free from such annoyance; and it is further said that the nature of the business conducted in such an asylum or hospital is such as to justify a regulation that it shall only be carried on in a building removed from the dwellings of others a sufficient distance; and in this connection it is argued that the ordinance does not in either of its requirements conflict with any general law, and that the court is not authorized to declare it invalid because in its judgment the ordinance may be deemed unreasonable.

The police power—the power to make laws to secure the comfort, convenience, peace, and health of the community—is an extensive one, and in its exercise a very wide discretion as to what is needful or proper for that purpose is necessarily committed to the legislative body in which the power to make such laws is vested. Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 589, 27 Pac. Rep. 933. But it is not true that, when such power is exerted for the purpose of regulating a useful business or occupation, the legislature is the exclusive judge as to what is a reasonable and just restraint upon the constitutional right of the citizen to pursue any trade, business, or profession which in itself is recognized as innocent and useful to the community. As the right of the citizen to engage in such a business, or follow such a profession, is protected by the constitution, it is always a judicial question whether any particular regulation of such right is a valid exercise of legislative power. Tied. Lim. §§ 85, 194; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Jersey City, 47 N. J. Law, 286; Com. v. Robertson, 5 Cush. 438; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121. This principle is stated very forcibly in the case of Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, in the following language: "The courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses. They are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the constitution." And so, also, in Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, Earl, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, said in relation to the power of the legislature to make police regulations: "The limit of the power cannot be accurately defined, and the courts have not been able or willing definitely to circumscribe it. But the power, however broad and extensive, is not above the constitution. When it speaks, its voice must be heeded. It furnishes the supreme law and guide for the conduct of legislators, judges, and private persons, and, so far as it imposes restraints, the police power must be exercised in subordination thereto." And this necessary limitation upon the power of the legislature to interfere with the fundamental rights of the citizen in the enactment of police regulations was recognized by this court in Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 Pac. Rep. 245, in which case we said that the personal liberty of the citizen and his rights of property cannot be invaded under the disguise of a police regulation. This power of the courts to declare invalid what they may deem an unreasonable legislative regulation of a business or occupation which the citizen has the constitutional right to follow, although undoubted, must, from the nature of the power, be exercised with the utmost caution, and only when it is clear that the ordinance or law so declared void passes entirely beyond the limits which bound the police power, and infringes upon rights secured by the fundamental law. The rule upon this subject is thus expressed by the supreme court of the state of Missouri in the case of St. Louis v. Weber, 44 Mo. 547: "In assuming, however, the right to judge of the reasonableness of an exercise of corporate power, courts will not look closely into mere matters of judgment where there may be a reasonable difference of opinion. It is not to be expected that every power will always be exercised with the highest discretion, and, when it is plainly granted, a clear case should be made, to authorize an interference upon the ground of unreasonableness." But while the police power vested in the various counties of the state need not be exercised with the highest discretion, it must be so exercised as not to trench upon the constitutional rights of the citizen.

With this general statement of the power and duty of the court, we proceed to consider whether the ordinance before us is a valid regulation of the right to maintain such an asylum or hospital as the petitioner alleges he is now conducting in the county of San Mateo. The state may, of course, make proper laws for the care, government, and safe-keeping of the unfortunate insane within its limits. This duty it owes, not only to those who are thus rendered incapable of taking care of themselves, but also to the community at large, the members of which are entitled to protection from the acts of persons not subject to the commands of reason. In re Colah, 3 Daly, 529; Browne, Insan. § 6. In the discharge of this duty the state has provided public asylums, to which persons who are so far disordered in mind as to be dangerous to remain at large may, upon satisfactory proof of such condition of mind, be committed by the judge of a superior court, but it has made no provision at all for those of unsound mind who are not regarded as dangerous to themselves or the property or persons of others; and, even as to those who are insane to such a degree that they may under the law be committed to the state asylum, the statute provides that "the kindred or friends of an inmate of the asylum may receive such inmate therefrom on their giving satisfactory evidence to the judge of the court issuing the commitment that they, or any of them, are capable and suited to take care of and give proper care to such insane person, and give protection against any of his acts as an insane person." Section 19 of "An act to provide for the future management of the Napa State Asylum for the Insane," approved March 6, 1876. St. 1875-76, p. 133. It will thus be seen that it was not the intention of the legislature, in providing public asylums for the insane, to deprive the kindred and friends of even dangerous lunatics of the privilege of caring for them elsewhere, upon showing their ability and willingness to do so, while, as to those not regarded as dangerous to themselves or others, the law does not contemplate that they shall be confined in such asylums at all. But unfortunate persons belonging to this latter class are not to be denied the right to receive the patient attention, and often healing treatment, of a comfortable private asylum or hospital, if they or their kindred or friends are able and willing to incur the expense of such care and treatment. The business, therefore, of conducting a private asylum, in which proper care can be given to such persons by a member or members of the medical profession having experience and special skill in the treatment of such cases, is a necessary and humane one; and the right to maintain such an asylum or hospital, and to follow and practice this particular branch of the medical profession, cannot be prohibited or burdened with unreasonable and oppressive conditions.

In our opinion the ordinance now under consideration imposes arbitrary and wholly unnecessary conditions upon the right to maintain such an asylum as that which petitioner alleges he is now conducting,—an asylum in which only those afflicted with mild forms of insanity and the other diseases named in the ordinance are treated. While it is doubtless true that the board of supervisors of a county have the power, in the absence of any general legislation upon the subject, to prescribe by ordinance proper regulations for the protection of the patients in such an asylum from the danger which might result to them from the destruction of the asylum building by fire, still the requirement that such hospital or asylum shall be maintained only in a building constructed of either brick and iron, or iron and stone, without any reference to the size of such building, or the number of patients it is designed to accommodate therein, and without regard to other safeguards against fire with which it may be provided, is clearly unreasonable. It may be conceded that there would be less danger from fire in a building of the character required by the ordinance than in one differently constructed; but experience has not shown that the danger from fire in such a hospital is such an imminent peril, when reasonable care is taken to guard against it, as to justify a requirement that such hospital shall be conducted only in a building made from the materials named in the ordinance. Of course, in the management of a hospital where insane persons are treated, it is necessary to have, and it must be presumed that there will be, a sufficient number of competent attendants to prevent danger or damage from any unreasonable actions of such insane persons. Without such attendants no such asylum or hospital could be properly conducted. The fact, however, that a person is suffering from an insane delusion requiring treatment does not necessarily make him dangerous to himself or others, or render inactive in him the ordinary instincts which prompt self-preservation. On the contrary, as was said by Mr. Justice Cooley in his opinion in the case of Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 129, "many insane persons, even after they have become hopelessly so, are to all appearance perfectly harmless, and for years continue to discharge the common duties of life in the most regular and acceptable manner, being trusted by every one in those particulars to which the insane delusion does not extend. The law takes notice of the fact that in many cases the disease leaves the person in the responsible possession and control of most of his faculties, and that the same motives influence his action in the employment of them that influence those not afflicted." It is the duty of the superintendent or attending physician of such an asylum to ascertain the nature of the delusion affecting any person received for treatment; and if there should be one admitted afflicted with pyromania, or whose actions would for any reason be difficult to control, it cannot be assumed that such person would not be properly guarded, or that the hospital would not be managed with that degree of prudence which would render the patients therein reasonably safe from danger on account of fire. Legislation of this character which imposes an onerous burden of expense upon a lawful and highly meritorious business, cannot be justified by the mere possibility of the danger which it ostensibly seeks to avert. It must rest upon the fact that experience has demonstrated that such danger, in the absence of such legislative regulation, is one which may reasonably be anticipated as the probable result of conducting such business, notwithstanding the exercise of ordinary care to prevent it.

The provision that no asylum in which persons suffering from any degree of insanity are treated shall be permitted within 400 yards of any dwelling or school cannot, in our judgment, be sustained as a lawful police regulation. A law or ordinance, the effect of which is to deny to the owner of property the right to conduct thereon a lawful business, is invalid unless the business to which it relates is of such a noxious or offensive character that the health, safety, or comfort of the surrounding community requires its exclusion from that particular locality; and an asylum for the treatment of mild forms of insanity is not properly classed as such. If rightly conducted, such asylum would not render the occupation of dwellings or schools in its neighborhood uncomfortable to such a degree that its maintenance would be deemed a nuisance, or any impairment of the substantial rights of occupants of such dwellings or schools. It is not like a private asylum for the confinement of dangerous lunatics, or a hospital for the treatment of loathsome or contagious diseases; and the reasons which make it necessary and proper to exclude from the thickly settled portions of cities and towns slaughterhouses, soap factories, and tanneries, with their offensive smells, magazines for the storage of powder, and powder mills, with their attendant dangers, or any business or occupation which seriously interferes with the health or comfort of others if permitted in such localities, do not apply to a hospital whose inmates are harmless, although insane. It is possible that the maintenance of such an asylum would be to some people in its vicinity disagreeable and annoying, in the sense that it would be more or less repulsive to them, but this is not enough to justify a regulation like that under consideration. There are many unpleasant, and even annoying, things which must be borne by persons living in a state of organized society, in order that others may also enjoy their equal rights under the law.

The ordinance further denies to any one the right to conduct such an asylum unless the building or buildings used for that purpose, and the grounds to which the insane persons may be allowed access, shall be surrounded by a brick or stone wall at least 12 feet high and 18 inches thick. The erection of such a wall would be costly, rendering the buildings and surrounding grounds uninviting and unsightly to the eye, and would be a manifest injury to the unfortunate persons placed therein for care and treatment. This requirement of the ordinance cannot be defended upon the ground that it is reasonably necessary for the protection of the public. Whatever justification there might be for such a provision if applied only to a private asylum in which dangerous lunatics are to be confined, it is plainly unreasonable when applied to a hospital of the character maintained by the petitioner, where only persons suffering with mild forms of insanity and who are harmless are received. Such persons, if properly attended, do not require prison walls to restrain them, and it would be barbarous and inhuman to subject them to such treatment. The board of supervisors of a county, or the legislative department of any city or town, in which such an asylum is erected, may, undoubtedly, provide by ordinance that patients therein shall not be permitted to leave the grounds upon which it is erected unless accompanied by an attendant, and may impose a penalty upon the superintendent or keeper of such asylum for a failure to conform to such regulation. Such an ordinance would be reasonable, affording all necessary protection to the public, without conflicting with the rights of any one.

The ordinance further provides that only one of the classes of persons therein mentioned shall be treated in the same building, and that a separate license shall be required for the treatment of each of the diseases named, and that male and female patients shall not be "cared for or treated in the same building." This provision is clearly invalid. The treatment of inebriates and insane persons, and of mental and nervous diseases not amounting to insanity, is a special branch of practice in the medical profession, and no reason exists why a physician desiring to maintain an asylum or hospital for the treatment of such cases should be required to erect separate buildings for the treatment of persons suffering from each of such diseases. Such a requirement is an unnecessary interference with the business of maintaining such an asylum, without any corresponding benefit to the public. If it be said that the welfare of the patients may demand this separation,—that persons suffering from nervous prostration, for instance, should not be treated in the same building with the insane,—the answer is that this is a matter which may be safely left to the judgment of the physician, whose business it is to treat such cases, and whose education and experience, it must be presumed, qualify him to superintend such an asylum. The power to pass upon such a question has not been committed to boards of supervisors of the different counties, and such a regulation of the manner of conducting the business of maintaining such a private asylum is therefore unauthorized and void. In relation to that part of the ordinance requiring the separation of the sexes, it is sufficient to say that the admission of male and female patients to a private asylum or hospital conducted in one building is not immoral per se, nor can it be made so by any legislative declaration.

It is unnecessary to further discuss the provisions of this ordinance, or to pass upon other objections which have been urged against it. Viewed separately, we think each provision discussed in this opinion invalid, and, when the ordinance is considered as a whole, the invalidity of each provision becomes more plainly apparent. The ordinance covers completely and entirely the business of maintaining such an asylum as petitioner alleges he is now conducting, and imposes upon it such burdensome, oppressive, and unreasonable conditions as in effect to amount to its prohibition. The case has been argued here, both orally and in the briefs of counsel, with great learning and ability, and we have given to the questions involved the careful consideration which their importance demands, and our conclusion is—First, that it is competent for the court to determine whether any particular regulation of a useful business or occupation is a reasonable restriction upon the constitutional right of the citizen to engage in such business or follow such occupation; second, that the business of maintaining a private asylum for the treatment of mild forms of insanity, and of persons afflicted with the other diseases named in the ordinance before us, is a lawful one, which cannot be prohibited, either directly or indirectly; third, that the ordinance which petitioner is accused of violating is, in each and all of the provisions referred to in this opinion, unreasonable, and therefore void. It follows that the petitioner is entitled to be discharged.

Petitioner discharged.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; HARKISON, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 67

FISCHER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF TUOLUMNE COUNTY et al. (No. 15, 175.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1893.)

PARTNERSHIP—DISSOLUTION—APPOINTING RECEIVER.

Where property is actually owned by a copartnership, but the title thereto stands in the name of a corporation organized for the sole purpose of operating the property, in an action by one of the partners for a dissolution and an accounting, for fraud on the part of another partner, in which the corporation is made a party, the court is authorized to appoint a receiver to take charge of the property. Beatty, C. J., and De Haven, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Petition by Jacob A. Fischer and others against the superior court of Tuolumne county and others for a writ of prohibition to restrain the execution of an order of respondent court. Denied.

J. L. Crittenden, J. C. Campbell, and F. W. Street, for petitioners. Pillsbury, Blanding & Hayne, Scrivener & Schell, and Wheaton, Kalloch & Kierce, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. During the pendency of an action entitled Behlow et al. vs. Fischer et al., one Lane was appointed receiver to take possession of and manage certain mining property pending the result of the litigation. Subsequently a judgment was rendered for plaintiffs in said action, in which judgment said Lane was reappointed receiver with full power and authority to manage, conduct, and carry on this mining property. The present proceeding is an application for a writ of prohibition, commanding respondents to desist from acting under said order. The application for the writ and the order to show cause were made prior to the rendition of the aforesaid judgment, but that judgment includes the authority under which the receiver is now acting; and for that reason we shall address ourselves to the legal sufficiency of that authority, although the jurisdictional question presented is probably the same under either order, and the arguments of counsel so seem to concede. Petitioner's position, as stated in his reply brief, is that the "superior court acted without jurisdiction in wresting the possession of the mines from the corporation, which was the undisputed owner of them, and placing a receiver in charge of them, and carrying on the business of the corporation." The case of Behlow v. Fischer is now in this court upon an appeal from the very judgment in which the order appointing the receiver, and which order we are now considering, is found; and that nothing may be said in this opinion which might interfere to any degree with the full consideration of the appeal upon the merits, when it is finally submitted, we feel constrained to confine the examination at hand within narrow limits.

The action of Behlow v. Fischer may fairly be said to be a suit in equity for the dissolution of a copartnership, for an accounting, and for the setting aside of certain transfers of stock, on the ground of fraud practiced by the alleged copartner Fischer. A corporation known as the Consolidated Golden Gate & Sulphuret & Developing Company was joined as codefendant, it appearing that the title to the property over which the receiver was placed in charge stood in the name of said corporation. It will not be necessary to enter into a discussion of the principles and authorities relied upon to sustain the proposition that a court of equity cannot appoint a receiver to take possession of the property of a corporation pending litigation, for petitioner's case fails before it reaches that position. The complaint charged that Behlow, Fischer, and others were copartners, and as such owned and worked the mining property mentioned in this litigation. That said partnership has not been dissolved, but still exists. That said copartners, with the object and purpose of carrying on the business of said copartnership by said corporation, under a corporate name, organized the corporation defendant heretofore referred to. It was further agreed as to the parties who should hold the offices and conduct the various business affairs of said copartnership. That the said agreement was carried out, and the copartners transferred by deed the mining property here involved to the corporation for the purpose of carrying out the said agreement. That said corporation is merely a nominal corporation, and was organized by said copartnership merely for the purpose of carrying on its business, and is not an independent corporation. Upon issue joined the trial court found "that said so-called corporation has ever since its organization and incorporation been a mere name and agent of said copartnership; that it was not the owner of said mining property; and that said partnership is the owner, and entitled to the possession and management, of said property." The foregoing findings come fairly within the allegations of the complaint, and squarely contradict the theory of petitioner, that this mining property was the property of the defendant corporation. As indicated by the quotation from petitioner's brief, he rests his application for relief upon the theory that the corporation is the owner of the property, but he cannot be allowed the benefit of any such assumption, for the adjudication of the court is directly to the contrary, and that adjudication is authorized by the pleading. From some portions of the complaint, it may appear, inferentially, that the corporation was the owner of the property in dispute, but the allegations heretofore quoted indicate a contrary view; and in this proceeding the complaint will be deemed sufficient if any material can be found therein which will furnish support for the findings and judgment, bearing upon the question of the ownership. The court finds this property to be the property of the partnership, and that said corporation was a mere name and agent of said partnership. If a state of facts could ever arise where a corporation was a corporation in name only, and where property standing in its name as grantee was in truth and in fact the property of another, then, for the purposes of this investigation, we assume such state of facts to be present in this case. The existence of such conditions are not impossible, and, assuming them to exist, we have a copartnership, the actual owner of a large amount of property, the title to which stands in the name of another, that person possessing no interest whatever in the property. A dissolution of the partnership and an accounting are asked for. Under such circumstances this property is assets of the copartnership, and the court is authorized to appoint a receiver to take charge of the same. For the foregoing reasons let the application for the writ be denied.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

We dissent: BEATTY, C. J.; DE HAVEN, J.

98 Cal. 105

KLAUBER et al. v. SAN DIEGO STREET-CAR CO. (No. 19,189.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1893.)

REVIEW ON SECOND APPEAL.

Though a determination of the supreme court on a former appeal is conclusive on a second appeal if the record presents the same matters, either of fact or law, such judgment is not final on a second appeal if the record contains matters directly affecting the findings whereon the judgment rests, which were not before the court on the former appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by A. Klauber and others against the San Diego Street-Car Company to enforce specific performance of a contract. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appealed. The judgment was reversed, and judgment directed to be entered for plaintiffs. 30 Pac. Rep. 555. Defendant now appeals, and plaintiffs move to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Gibson & Titus, for appellant. Parrish, Mossholder & Lewis and Luce & McDonald, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Upon the trial of the cause, findings of fact were made and filed by the court, upon which judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant. From that judgment the plaintiffs appealed directly to this court, upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions, and upon the hearing in this court the judgment was reversed, and the superior court directed to enter a judgment upon the findings in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, (95 Cal. 353, 30 Pac. Rep. 555;) and upon the going down of the remittitur the superior court caused judgment to be entered in favor of the plaintiffs in accordance with the directions of this court. Thereupon, within the time authorized by section 650, Code Civil Proc., the defendant prepared a bill containing certain exceptions taken by him at the trial, and the same was settled by the judge who had tried the case, and filed with the clerk. The defendant has now appealed from the judgment entered against it, as aforesaid, bringing up with the judgment roll this bill of exceptions. The respondents move to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the former action by this court has become the law of the case, and that the judgment entered thereunder has become final, from which no further appeal can be taken.

The "law of the case" is a phrase which has been formulated in this state to give expression to the rule that the final judgment of the highest court upon a question of law arising between the parties to an action on a given state of facts establishes the rights of the parties to that controversy, and is a final determination thereof, and, like a final judgment in any other case, estops the parties thereto from afterwards questioning its correctness. This court has no appellate jurisdiction over its own judgments, and such judgment, therefore, constitutes an estoppel of record, of the highest character, and is conclusive between the parties as to the matters adjudged. Hence it has been invariably held that, upon a second appeal in a cause, this court must accept its former determination as conclusive, and is precluded from any re-examination of the matters therein determined. As this rule is, however, applicable only to matters which have been determined by the court, it is only when the same matters that were determined on the first appeal are brought before it on the second appeal that the rule can be invoked; and, being a rule which tends to prevent a judicial consideration of the case, it is not to be extended beyond the exigencies which demand its application, and it is therefore held that whenever, upon the second hearing, the record presents a different state of facts, the former determination ceases to be an estoppel. When an appeal is taken to this court the record on the appeal is brought here by the appellant, and if the appeal is merely from the judgment the only portion of the records of the court below that he is required to bring up is the judgment roll, and "any bill of exceptions or statement in the case upon which the appellant relies." Code Civil Proc. § 950. If a judgment has been rendered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals therefrom, the defendant is only interested in maintaining the judgment, and cannot ask this court to consider any errors against him which the court below may have committed at the trial. This court will examine only the statement or bill of exceptions upon which the appellant relies, and in the preparation of such bill of exceptions, only such errors as the moving party deems essential to present his ground of reversal, and so much of the evidence as is necessary to explain them, are to be included. "Any exception taken by the prevailing party, either to the exclusion of evidence offered by himself, or to the admission of evidence against his objection, would be useless and redundant matter, and should not be allowed by the judge as an amendment to a bill proposed by the losing party. The amendments which may be proposed to the draft of a bill relate to the evidence or other matter which section 648 authorizes to be stated in the bill for the purpose of explaining the objection taken, and do not include exceptions taken by the party proposing the amendments, or any evidence or other matter necessary to explain the same." In re Gates, 90 Cal. 259, 27 Pac. Rep. 195. Upon the hearing in this court only such errors as are relied upon by the appellant for the reversal of the judgment will be considered. Hence the respondent is precluded upon the appeal from having any consideration by this court of those errors which, if the judgment had been adverse to him, might have been sufficient for a reversal; and, even though a bill of exceptions containing those errors had been settled by the judge before the appeal, it would form no part of the transcript, and would not be considered by this court upon an appeal from a judgment in his favor. As it is only when, upon the second appeal, the record presents the same matters, either of fact or of law, upon which the determination of this court was rendered at the former appeal, that that determination is held to be final, it follows that if there is presented upon the second appeal a different state of facts, or any errors that were committed by the trial court which were not presented in the former record, this court is at liberty to consider them as fully as though presented upon a first appeal. In case, therefore, the respondent upon the first appeal shall afterwards appeal from a judgment rendered against him upon a second trial, in which the same errors were committed as were committed at the first trial, he will not be precluded from having them considered by this court, even though the effect thereof should be a reversal of the second judgment, and indirectly a determination by this court that the first judgment of the court below should have been in his favor.

Section 650, Code Civil Proc., provides that a party who desires to have the exceptions taken at a trial settled in a bill may, within 10 days after receiving notice of the judgment, prepare a draft thereof, and have the same settled by the judge. A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties to an action or proceeding, and, as there can be only one final judgment in an action, if for any reason a judgment that has been entered is vacated, and another judgment entered in lieu thereof, this last judgment becomes the only one in the case, and the notice of its entry is the point of time from which the right to have a bill of exceptions settled begins to run. For this purpose there is no distinction between a judgment rendered by the trial court upon its original determination of the cause, and a judgment which it enters in obedience to the direction of this court after an appeal; and a judgment entered by it in obedience to such direction has no greater sanctity upon an appeal than if it had been entered under the direction of this court to try the cause anew, and render a judgment in accordance with the opinion of this court. If, in either case, any errors had supervened prior to the entry of the judgment, and which conduced thereto, that were not presented in the record upon the former appeal, this court is not precluded from their examination. If the findings of fact upon which the judgment rests are based upon evidence that was improperly admitted, the party against whom the judgment was rendered is entitled to have those errors corrected. The statute permits an appeal from a judgment by any party who is aggrieved thereby, and it also permits him to have any exceptions taken at the trial which he desires incorporated in a bill of exceptions settled by the judge. It also makes all bills of exceptions taken and filed a part of the judgment roll, (Code Civil Proc. § 670,) and requires the appellant to bring to this court, upon an appeal from the judgment, a copy of the judgment roll, (Code Civil Proc. § 950.) If, upon such appeal, there are found in the record matters which were not determined upon the former appeal, he has the right to be heard thereon. In Heinlen v. Beans, 73 Cal. 240, 14 Pac. Rep. 855, this court had directed the superior court to enter a judgment in favor of the defendants, and when the remittitur went down such judgment was accordingly entered. The plaintiff, however, sought to procure an amendment of his complaint, which was denied, and, on his appeal from the judgment thus entered against him, brought to this court no other record than the judgment itself, and an exception to the ruling of the court refusing leave to amend his complaint. This court very properly dismissed the appeal, as there was no pretense of error in the judgment entered by the court below. The present case differs materially from that, however, in that it presents a bill of exceptions containing matters directly affecting the findings of fact upon which the judgment rests; and as those matters were not before the court upon the former appeal the "law of the case" has no application. The motion is denied.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

(98 Cal. 120)

SHAIN v. PEOPLE'S LUMBER CO. (No. 19,176.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 8, 1893.)

DISMISSAL OF APPEAL — FAILURE TO FILE POINTS — EXTENSION OF TIME.

Sup. Ct. Rule 2 provides that an appellant shall file his points and authorities within 30 days after the filing of the transcript, and that the time shall not be extended except by order of the court upon stipulation of the parties, or an affidavit showing good cause therefor, and in no case for more than 20 days. Rule 5 provides that if the points and authorities are not filed within the prescribed time the appeal may be dismissed, on motion, upon notice given. Held that, to obtain an order extending time within which to file points and authorities, appellant should have shown, by the affidavit on which he asked for such order, the date when the transcript was filed, and whether any time in addition to that limited by the rule had been given, either by order or by stipulation, and that, having failed to do this, a motion to dismiss the appeal was properly granted.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county; B. T. Williams, Judge.

Action by Shain against the People's Lumber Company. There was judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Blackstock & Shepherd, for appellant.
W. H. Wilde and E. S. Hall, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motion to dismiss the appeal. The transcript in this case was filed October 20, 1892, and on November 1st the respondent stipulated with the appellant that he might have "twenty days in addition to the time allowed by the rules of this court in which to serve and file his points and authorities, * * * and that the order of the court may be entered herein, in accordance with this stipulation, upon its being filed." The stipulation was not, however, filed, nor was any order obtained thereon, as was contemplated by it; but on the 8th day of December, upon an affidavit of Vincent Neale, one of the attorneys for the appellant, an order was made by the court "that appellant have twenty days' additional time to that allowed by rule of court within which to prepare and serve his opening brief herein." The affidavit did not state the date when the transcript was filed, or when the time allowed by the rules of the court for filing points and authorities would expire, nor did it state whether any order or stipulation had been made, granting time for filing points and authorities; and when the above order was asked for the words, "to that allowed by rule of court," were inserted therein before the order was signed. On the 19th of December the respondent moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that no points and authorities had been filed on the part of the appellant, and on the 28th of December the appellant filed his points and authorities.

Rule 2 of this court requires the appellant to file with the clerk his printed points and authorities within 30 days after the filing of the transcript, and declares that the time so limited shall not be extended "except by order of the court upon stipulation of the parties, or an affidavit showing good cause therefor, and in no case for more than twenty days;" and rule 5 provides that if the points and authorities are not filed within the time prescribed the appeal may be dismissed, on motion, upon notice given. For the purpose, therefore, of enabling the court to determine whether an order extending the time to file points and authorities should be granted, the proper practice for an attorney who would seek such additional time is to show by the affidavit upon which he asks for the order the date when the transcript was filed, and whether any time in addition to that limited by the rule has been given, either by order or by stipulation, so that it may be determined therefrom whether it is within the discretion of the court to grant the time asked for. In the present case the time provided by the stipulation, as well as that granted by the order, covered the same period of time, viz. 20 days in addition to the time allowed by the rules of the court, and expired on the 9th day of December. The notice of the motion to dismiss the appeal was not served until the 19th of December, and at that date the respondent had the right, under rule 5, to a dismissal. The right of the respondent to have the appeal dismissed must be determined by the facts as they existed at the time that notice of the motion was given, and was not destroyed by the subsequent filing of points and authorities on the part of the appellant. Rules of court are designed to facilitate the business of the court, as well as for the convenience of litigants, and the rule requiring the points and authorities on behalf of the respective parties to be filed within specified times after the filing of the transcript confers rights which may be enforced by the litigants. The right of the appellant to be heard depends in the first place upon his compliance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in taking his appeal, as well in the manner as within the time provided by that Code; and after his appeal has been taken his right to a consideration thereof by this court depends upon his compliance with the rules of this court in perfecting his appeal by filing his transcript, and thereafter his points and authorities, within the time specified in those rules. The rules themselves provide for additional time to be granted if, by reason of any intervening cause, through no fault of the appellant, he may have been prevented from a strict compliance therewith; but, if the appellant would invoke such provision, he must bring himself within the terms upon which the favor is to be granted. If he neglects to procure a stipulation from the respondent, or an order of the court upon a proper affidavit, he is not in a position to resist a motion of the respondent to enforce the penalty which the rules have declared shall follow such neglect. The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 851)

PEOPLE v. SHERMAN. (No. 20,922.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1893.)

INFORMATION—INDORSING NAMES OF WITNESSES—LARCENY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The names of witnesses examined before the committing magistrate need not be inserted at the foot of or indorsed on the information filed in court against defendant after he had been examined before such magistrate, though Pen. Code, § 943, provides that when an indictment is found the names of the witnesses before the grand jury must be so indorsed.

2. Where there is evidence before the convicting magistrate that a watch was taken from one B. when he was asleep, and when defendant and one F. were present, and it was afterwards found concealed on the person of F., so as to indicate that it must have been taken feloniously, a finding by the trial court that defendant had been legally committed by the magistrate will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. The stealing of a watch from the person of another is grand larceny, though the value of the watch is less than $50.

4. Testimony to show improper relations between the state's witnesses, a man and woman, in order to impeach the woman's testimony, is inadmissible.

5. The court has a right to amend imperfect instructions submitted.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Al. Sherman was convicted of grand larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Chamberlain, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

BELCHER, C. The defendant and one Lulu Franks were examined before a magistrate, and held to answer upon a complaint charging them with the crime of larceny, committed in the county of Placer, on or about the 7th day of June, 1891, by "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously stealing, taking, and carrying away one watch of the value of $75, the property of one S. T. Bowers." Thereafter the district attorney filed in the superior court of the county a information charging that the defendant, on or about the 7th day of June, 1891, in the county of Placer, "did then and there feloniously steal, take, and carry away from the person of S. T. Bowers one gold watch, of the value of seventy-five dollars," etc. When the defendant was called upon to plead to the information, he moved the court to set it aside upon the grounds: "(1) That the names of the witnesses examined before the committing magistrate are not inserted in or at the foot of said information, or indorsed thereon. (2) That before the filing of said information the said defendant had not been legally committed by a committing magistrate, in this: that after hearing the proofs it did not appear that a public offense had been committed, and there was not sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof." The court denied the motion, and the defendant, reserving an exception to the ruling, then pleaded not guilty to the charge. Subsequently the defendant was tried and found guilty of grand larceny, and judgment was entered that he be imprisoned in the state prison at Folsom for the term of six years and three months. From this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The first point made for a reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in refusing to set aside the information upon both of the grounds stated in the motion. Section 943 of the Penal Code provides: "When an indictment is found, the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions may have been read before them, must be inserted at the foot of the indictment, or indorsed thereon, before it is presented to the court." And section 995 of the same Code provides that an indictment must be set aside, on motion, upon several grounds, and, among others, when the names of the witnesses are not inserted or indorsed as required. There are, however, no provisions requiring the names of witnesses to be inserted at the foot of or indorsed upon an information, and the only grounds stated on which an information must be set aside are: "(1) That before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate; (2) that it was not subscribed by the district attorney of the county." See sections of Code above cited. It is clear, therefore, that the court rightfully refused to set aside the information upon the first ground stated.

As to the second ground, it is earnestly urged that defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate, because there was no evidence before the magistrate showing that he was guilty of the offense charged. But there was evidence showing that the watch had been taken from the person of Bowers when he was asleep, and when defendant and Lulu Franks were both present; and besides, it was afterwards found concealed upon the person of Lulu Franks, in such a way as to clearly indicate that it must have been taken feloniously. We do not think, therefore, that it can be said there was no evidence tending to show the defendant's guilt, and, this being so, the ruling of the court below cannot be disturbed on appeal.

It is next claimed that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, and that at most defendant should have been convicted of petit larceny only. This claim is rested upon the fact that the principal evidence that defendant took the watch from the person of Bowers was that of Lulu Franks, an accomplice, and that the value of the watch was proved to be only "about $45." But the testimony of the accomplice was amply corroborated by other evidence, and, if the watch was taken from the person of Bowers, the offense was grand larceny, whether its value was greater or less than $50. Pen. Code, § 487. There is no merit, therefore, in this point.

When the prosecution rested, the defendant called as a witness Esther Brown, who testified that she had been in the county jail, and that "Miss Frank's room and mine were right alongside." She was then asked, "Did you see any one, or did you see Mr. Brisentine, enter this woman's room?" The question was objected to by the district attorney as irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection sustained. This ruling is now assigned as error, and it is said by counsel that "Brisentine was a witness for the prosecution, as was also Lulu Franks, and it was proper for the defense to show the character of Lulu Franks, and her deportment while in jail, together with the relation existing between her and Brisentine." If, as would seem from the language above quoted, the purpose was to show improper relations between Brisentine and Lulu Franks, and thus to impeach her testimony, the question was clearly irrelevant and immaterial, as that is not the way prescribed for impeaching a witness. Sections 2051, 2052, Code Civil Proc. We see no error in the ruling.

Finally, it is claimed that the court erred in modifying, and giving to the jury as modified, certain instructions asked by defendant, and in refusing to give certain others asked by him, and also in giving certain instructions of its own motion. The learned attorney, however, simply quotes the instructions, and says the action of the court in regard to them was erroneous. The defendant requested the court to give to the jury thirty-two separate instructions, and it gave twenty-two of them as requested, amended two, and gave them as amended, and refused to give eight. It also gave four instructions of its own motion. The instructions, as amended, stated the law correctly. The court had a right, therefore, to make the amendments, and its action cannot be complained of. People v. Dodge, 36 Cal. 448; People v. Hall, 94 Cal. 595, 30 Pac. Rep. 7. The instructions not given were properly refused, because some of them had already been substantially given, and the others did not correctly state the law of the case. There was, therefore, no error in the refusal. The instructions given by the court of its own motion were general statements of the law, and such as have been given in criminal cases and approved by this court many times. The instructions, as a whole, covered the case, and seem to have been full, fair, and correct. We find no prejudicial error in the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

98 Cal. 133

PEOPLE v. AH LEN. (No. 20,995.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1893.)

MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

On a murder trial, where there is evidence that defendant and others were together when deceased was shot, it is proper to modify an instruction that if the jury find that the evidence points as clearly to the commission of the crime by another as by defendant, and if they entertain a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt, they should acquit him, by adding, unless they find that such other person is the guilty party, and that defendant aided and abetted him in committing the crime.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Ah Len was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

C. C. Stephens and Geo. J. Davis, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

PER CURIAM. 1. There was no error in admitting the dying declarations of the deceased, and the evidence was sufficient to show that they were made under a sense of impending death.

2. The defendant requested the court to give the following instruction: "The jury are instructed that if they find, from a consideration of all the evidence, that it points as clearly to another person who committed the crime in question as it does to the defendant, and if, after a full and fair consideration of all the evidence, the jury entertain any reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant is the guilty party, then the jury should acquit the defendant." The court gave the instruction, but at the same time modified it by adding thereto the following: "Unless you find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that such other person is the guilty party, and that the defendant aided and abetted him in committing the crime." The court did not err in thus modifying the instruction requested by defendant. As given, the instruction correctly stated the law. The evidence upon the part of the people tended to show that the defendant and others were acting in concert at the time of the shooting of the deceased, and under these circumstances the instruction, in the form requested by defendant, was misleading; and it was the duty of the court to modify it in the respect stated, and instruct the jury as it did.

There are many other errors assigned, but none of them require particular discussion. We find no error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

98 Cal. 121

PEOPLE v. GARDNER. (No. 20,943.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW—JUDGMENT—MOTION IN ARREST—TERM OF IMPRISONMENT—EVIDENCE—ATTEMPT TO RAPE.

1. An objection that an information for attempt to rape a girl under the age of 14 years states that the girl was 11 years old, and therefore does not charge the offense, if of any merit at all, is too technical to be raised by motion in arrest, or otherwise than by special demurrer.

2. It is no ground for motion in arrest that no punishment for the offense was fixed by the statute, as such a motion, under Pen. Code, § 1185, can only be based on defects appearing on the face of the indictment or information.

3. A prosecution for attempt to commit rape is not governed by Pen. Code, § 220, providing the punishment for assault with intent to commit rape, as the offenses are different.

4. Under Pen. Code, §§ 264, 671, rape may be punished by life imprisonment, or by not less than five years; and section 664 provides that an attempt to commit an offense may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon a conviction of the offense. Held, that punishment for attempt to rape by imprisonment for five years cannot be objected to on the ground that the term of half a life cannot be calculated, and that the statute therefore prescribes no punishment for attempt to rape.

5. Such a term is within the statute, even assuming that imprisonment for life is a longer term than imprisonment for any stated number of years.

6. The testimony of a witness at the preliminary examination, where the witness is out of the state at the time of the trial, cannot be proved by the testimony of the stenographer, who was present at the examination, and heard the testimony, as Pen. Code, § 686, gives the accused the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the court, without any other exception than that the deposition of a witness at the preliminary examination may, under certain circumstances, be read. People v. Chung Ah Chue, 57 Cal. 567, and People v. Qurise, 59 Cal. 343, followed. People v. Carty, 19 Pac. Rep. 490, 77 Cal. 213, explained.

7. In a prosecution for attempt to rape, a witness may testify as to statements made to him by the prosecuting witness that she was going to get some money out of defendant if she had to put up a job on him, as tending to show her prejudice and interest in the case, provided the proper foundation had been laid while she was on the stand.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. Van Fleet, Judge.

Daniel Gardner was convicted of attempt to rape, and appeals. Reversed.

Grove L. Johnson and S. Solon Hall, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of an attempt to commit rape upon a girl under the age of 14 years, and this appeal is taken from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial.

Defendant moved to arrest the judgment upon the grounds: (1) The court had no jurisdiction to affix any penalty or render any judgment, for the reason that no punishment was provided for the offense by the statute. (2) The information did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The objectionable language of the information is: "Said Lizzie Cox being then and there of the age of eleven years." It is now insisted that the information does not show the child to have been under 14 years of age. Appellant's position has no merit, and the objection to the information, if it is objectionable, is entirely too technical to be reached otherwise than by special demurrer.

As to the remaining ground relied upon to arrest the judgment, it was not a matter that could be urged upon the hearing of such a motion. A motion of that character can only be based upon defects appearing upon the face of the information or indictment. Section 1185, Pen. Code; People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 147; People v. McCarty, 48 Cal. 559. But the question is before us upon appeal from the judgment, and we proceed to its consideration. The defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of five years, and it is now asserted that no penalty is prescribed by statute for a conviction of the offense here charged. It will be noticed that the defendant was convicted of an attempt to commit rape, and not of the offense of an assault with intent to commit rape, for which provision is made by section 220 of the Penal Code. There is a distinction between these offenses, and the facts required to prove an attempt are not necessarily sufficient to prove an assault with intent. We had occasion to consider at some length this question in People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 666, 30 Pac. Rep. 800, and leave the matter with a reference to that case and the case of State v. Godfrey, (Or.) 20 Pac. Rep. 625. Judgment was pronounced upon this defendant by virtue of section 664 of the Penal Code, which provides: "Any person who attempts to commit any crime, but fails, or is prevented or intercepted in the perpetration thereof, is punishable, where no provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempts, as follows: (1) If the offense so attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years or more, or by imprisonment in a county jail, a person guilty of such attempt is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in a county jail, as the case may be, for a term not exceeding one half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon a conviction of the offense." In order to determine, therefore, what the punishment for an attempt to commit rape is, we must look for the longest term of imprisonment imposed for the commission of the crime of rape. Section 264 of the Penal Code is as follows: "Rape is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than five years." In such a case, where the minimum punishment only is limited, by virtue of section 671 of the Penal Code, the penalty may be affixed in terms at imprisonment for life. Therefore a defendant convicted of rape may be sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of his natural life, or he may be sentenced to imprisonment for any specified term of years not less than five. It will thus be observed that the court has the power to visit upon such defendant either one of two judgments. It is now insisted that a judgment of life imprisonment is a longer term of imprisonment than one for any stated number of years, and, the statute providing that the judgment upon the defendant should be for a term of years not exceeding one half the longest term prescribed upon a conviction for rape, it follows that the judgment should be for a term of years not exceeding one half of the defendant's life; and, such a term of years being impossible of calculation, the statute is meaningless, and consequently no penalty for this offense is found in the law. This reasoning is ingenious, but not sound. If the statute only allowed a judgment of imprisonment for a term of years not less than five upon a conviction of rape, then the judgment in this case would be strictly within the law, for it would declare a term of imprisonment not exceeding one half the longest term that the court would have the power to impose. Again, if it be conceded that any term, no matter how long, would be a longer term of imprisonment than a judgment of imprisonment for life, then the judgment under investigation comes strictly within the law. Now, assuming appellant's position to be true, that a judgment of imprisonment for life is a judgment for a longer term than one for any stated number of years, then the judgment at bar is equally sound, for the greater includes the less; and if the judgment in this case is a valid judgment, computed upon the basis of any judgment that might be rendered for a term of years under a conviction of rape, it necessarily is a valid judgment computed upon the basis of a judgment of imprisonment for life, for, as counsel for appellant insists, such judgment is for a longer term of imprisonment than any judgment could be that prescribed imprisonment for a stated time. In other words, if the judgment of five years is not in excess of one half of the longest term that could be given, in case the statute did not allow a life imprisonment, then it cannot be in excess of one half of a life imprisonment, for that is a longer term. The evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, and in this class of cases the evidence of the prosecuting witness, if convincing the jury and satisfying the law, need not be corroborated. People v. Mayes, 66 Cal. 597, 6 Pac. Rep. 691; People v. Stewart, 90 Cal. 212, 27 Pac. Rep. 200; People v. Fleming, 94 Cal. 308, 29 Pac. Rep. 647.

The court erred in admitting the testimony of the witness Briar. One Stone was examined as a witness at the preliminary examination of defendant. At the trial it was proven that said Stone could not be found in the state, due diligence being used. Thereupon the district attorney attempted to introduce in evidence the deposition of Stone taken at the preliminary examination. The deposition was rejected by reason of a defective certificate thereto, and thereupon the stenographer, Briar, was called, and testified as to the evidence given by the witness Stone at the preliminary examination. One of the objections made to the admission of the evidence was that the evidence of an absent witness, given at the preliminary examination, could only be used at the trial by the introduction of his deposition taken at that time. Both reason and authority sustain this position. To permit the testimony of an absent witness to be given to the jury through the medium of the recollection of a bystander at the hearing (and the reporter occupied no different position) is to deprive the defendant of the right to be confronted by the witnesses, and to place before the jury the purest hearsay. While hearsay testimony, under certain peculiar circumstances, is allowed to be placed before the jury, the facts here divulged by the record do not place this case within the exceptions to the general rule. Whatever may be the rule of evidence regarding these matters in civil actions, as declared by section 1870, subd. 8, Code Civil Proc., that rule has no application to criminal cases. Section 1102 of the Penal Code provides: "The rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions, except as otherwise provided in this Code;" and as to these matters it is very apparent that the Penal Code otherwise provides. Section 686 declares the rights of a defendant in a criminal action; and subdivision 3 thereof provides: "To produce witnesses on his behalf, and to be confronted with the witnesses against him in the presence of the court, except that, where the charge has been preliminarily examined before a committing magistrate, and the testimony taken down by question and answer in the presence of the defendant, who has either by person or by counsel had an opportunity to examine the witness, * * * the deposition of such a witness may be read upon its being satisfactorily shown to the court that he is dead or insane, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state." The law thus states that the defendant is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him, in the presence of the court, with but a single exception, and this case is not that exception. By rejecting the official notes the court in effect held that it was not a deposition; and, that fact being established, the exception provided by the statute requiring the presence of the witness in court at the trial was not present, and the witness' knowledge of the facts of the case could only have been produced before the jury from his own lips. This question was directly adjudicated upon, and the foregoing views supported in People v. Chung Ah Chue, 57 Cal. 567, which decision was followed in People v. Qurise, 59 Cal. 343. In those cases it was held that the official report of the witness' evidence as given at a previous trial could not be received before the jury, as it failed to come within the exception found in subdivision 3, § 686, already quoted. If such evidence is not allowed to go before the jury, for the same reasons the recollections of persons present as to what the witness said at the preliminary examination is doubly objectionable. It is intimated in People v. Carty, 77 Cal. 213, 19 Pac. Rep. 490, that this character of evidence is admissible, but the intimation was purely voluntary, and was not demanded by the exigencies of the case. The rule in civil actions evidently possessed the mind of the learned commissioner at the time he threw out the suggestion. No authority has been called to our attention, decided since the adoption of the Codes, that justifies the admission of the evidence here introduced. The remaining objection to the admission of the evidence of the witness Briar does not seem to be well founded in view of the last provision of section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The proposed evidence of the witness Rich as to the statements made to him by the prosecuting witness, that she was going to get some money out of the defendant if she had to put up a job on him, was admissible as tending to show her prejudice and interest in the case, provided the proper foundation was laid when she was on the stand, but we are not referred to the folio of the transcript where such evidence may be found. The other statement proposed to be shown by this witness was clearly not a proper matter to go to the jury.

The objections made by the attorney general to the consideration of the record in this case are technical in the extreme, and we pass them by as not demanding extended notice. We see no other matter in the record demanding our attention. Let the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

LYONS v. KNOWLES et al. (No. 18,010.)

(Supreme Court of California April 11, 1893.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYEE—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a servant against the master for injuries caused by the breaking of the hook of the upper block on a derrick used in moving stone, there was evidence that the hook, which was of wrought iron, broke because of crystallization. The derrick, block, and hook had been in use but a few months. Defendant's expert testified that, if the iron had been flawless, the hook could have been safely used for about five years in lifting from seven to ten tons, while plaintiff's expert testified that if the hook was new it would support six tons, which was the weight of the stone being raised when the hook broke. Held, that the evidence was insufficient to charge defendant with negligence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by Charles C. Lyons against F. E. Knowles and others for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

James G. Maguire, A. A. Moore, and J. C. Martin, for appellants. Thompson & King and Church & Cory, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This action was brought to recover damages for a personal injury, alleged to have been caused through the negligence of defendants. It is alleged that defendants, as partners, were engaged in quarrying rock and transporting the same by railroad, and employed one Dusy to haul the rock from the quarry to the railroad station, and there load the same on the cars; that by the terms of their contract with Dusy they agreed to furnish all necessary and proper machinery and appliances for the purpose of loading and unloading the rock, and to furnish assistance in loading the rock from the ground onto the cars; that in October, 1888, while Dusy was engaged in hauling and loading granite blocks under the contract, defendants, regardless of their duty, and the lives and safety of plaintiff and others employed in loading and unloading the same, carelessly and negligently caused to be attached to a derrick a block and tackle for the purposes of loading and unloading said granite, which block and tackle was used during all of the times mentioned in the complaint; that said block and tackle, and particularly the hook of the upper block, was imperfectly constructed, defective, weak, and unsafe, and wholly inadequate in strength to support the weight of a particular block mentioned in the complaint, and that defendants knew of the imperfection and unsafeness; that on the 1st of December, 1888, plaintiff was employed and hired by Dusy to load and unload said granite, and was then and there, with the assistance of defendants and employes, engaged in loading from the ground onto a car a certain block of granite, and that, while so engaged, the hook alluded to, by reason of its imperfection and inadequacy, broke and gave way, without fault of plaintiff, causing the rock to fall, crushing his foot so that amputation became necessary. After a demurrer had been overruled, defendants answered, denying that they were partners, and in effect all the allegations of the complaint. The case was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiff. A motion for a new trial was made by defendants, one of the grounds of which was that the evidence was insufficient to support the decision. The motion having been denied, the defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying them a new trial.

On the trial plaintiff testified that he was employed by Dusy, but did not know the contract between Dusy and defendants; that Dusy was engaged in hauling granite from the quarry to the switch, and in loading it upon the cars; that defendants had erected at the switch a derrick, to be used in loading the granite upon the cars. Plaintiff was employed by Dusy to attend to the loading at the switch. When the cars were ready to receive the granite as it came down on the wagons, Mr. Dusy's teamsters and plaintiff loaded it from the wagons to the cars. If no cars were there when hauled, the rock was unloaded on the ground, and, when the cars came, defendants always sent men to assist him. Defendants or their clerk would designate what rock should go upon certain cars, but otherwise exercised no supervision or control of the matter of loading. Appellants urge many reasons for a reversal of the judgment, among them that the evidence shows that defendants were guilty of no negligence.

Plaintiff's account of the accident was as follows: "I was engaged in loading a large block of granite, weighing about six tons, from the ground to a flat car. Louis Knowles, the bookkeeper of defendants, his son, and Mr. Johnson, all of whom were in the employment of F. E. Knowles & Co., were helping me. We had hoisted the block of granite from the ground, and swung it around over the flat car. I think I gave all the orders that were given on that occasion. When the granite block had been hoisted to a sufficient height to swing clear of the car, I put on the brake on the winch with which we did the hoisting, and gave the lever of the brake to Mr. Louis Knowles, and told him to hold it. I then took hold of a rope attached to the granite block, and swung it around over the car and fixed it in the position in which it should rest upon the car. * * * I was holding the block of granite in position. I reached over with my right hand to get a timber to place under the end of the block of granite when lowered to the car. I had my left hand still on the block of granite, steadying it. Just as I leaned over to get hold of the timber, the hook of the upper block attached to the end of the boom, and from which the granite block was suspended, broke, and the granite block fell on my foot." He also testified that he thought the derrick was improperly rigged, because the block with three sheaves was at the bottom, and the block with two sheaves was at the top. It ought to have been reversed. Also, that the derrick had been erected by Dusy, at the quarry in May or June, 1888, and that witness had been employed by Dusy for several months prior to August of that year, and while so employed he worked with the same derrick. He also testified, on cross-examination, that he did not know the exact weight of the rock, but thought it was between five and six tons; that they had previously loaded several blocks of the same size with the one which fell on his foot with the same derrick, and the same block and tackle, and the same hook that broke. Another witness said that the derrick was improperly rigged, because the three sheaves ought to have been at the top instead of at the bottom. The weight would have been more evenly distributed, and a jolt or jar would not have caused so great a strain. He said: "Sometimes in hoisting rock the second row of coils of the rope on the drum of the winch will slip through the first row, causing a jar, and straining the derrick." There was no jar during the raising of the rock which fell and injured plaintiff.

It appeared that the hook was composed of common wrought iron, an inch and a quarter thick, and the evidence tended to show that the break was caused by the crystallization of the iron,—a defect which no one could have discovered by examining the iron. A witness was examined for plaintiff as an expert who said that he was a machinist, but did not know the breaking weight of common black iron. He was allowed to testify, however, without objection on that ground, and said he thought the hook, when new, would not sustain more than six tons as a breaking weight; didn't think it would be safe in hoisting a ton when it broke, but thought the breaking weight of such a hook would be about six tons, and its working weight about four tons. He thought from appearances that the block and tackle were old. Defendants proved by Dusy, whose testimony was uncontradicted, that the derrick and block and tackle were procured new in March of that year, and had therefore been used only a few months before the accident; and by Sheppard, a civil engineer, who claimed to be familiar with the tensile strength of iron and steel, that the lowest tensile strength of an inch bar of common black iron was 22 tons; and he said that in 30 experiments conducted by scientific men the lowest breaking weight found was 22 tons. The hook which broke here was one inch and a quarter, and should sustain a weight in excess of 22 tons, by at least 25 per cent. He thought if the iron had been free from flaw it could safely have been used for from four to five years in lifting from seven to ten tons. The hook had not been used one year. Berchig, plaintiff's expert witness, thought it must have been old, but said, if new, it would support six tons. But, to charge defendants with negligence in allowing the hook to be used, it must not only appear that it was in fact insufficient, but that defendants knew of its defectiveness, or by the use of ordinary diligence and care could have known it. It was shown that the iron was apparently sound, and that its defect could not have been discovered by an examination. It was apparently sufficient for the purpose for which it was used. It had been frequently used in lifting blocks of the same size. Although it proved to be in fact insufficient, its continued use under such circumstances is not proof of negligence. Sappenfield v. Railroad Co., 91 Cal. 57, 27 Pac. Rep. 590.

As to the rigging of the derrick, plaintiff's means of knowledge of the defect, if any, was at least equal to defendants'. It appears as a fact that he did not know of it, and, as there was no jolt or jar at the time of the accident, it is difficult to see how it could have contributed to the accident. The injury, therefore, must be attributed to accident for which no one can be held responsible. An employer does not guaranty the sufficiency of appliances furnished, but only for the exercise of such skill and diligence in providing safe machinery as discreet and prudent men would use where the risk is their own. I do not think negligence on the part of defendants could reasonably be inferred from the evidence. Taking this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider the other points raised. For the purpose of this decision it is assumed, but not decided, that defendants would have been responsible had it been shown that there was negligence in the use of the derrick. I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

98 Cal. 40

RISLEY v. GRAY et al. (No. 18,013.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1893.)

ACTION ON NOTE—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—INDORSEMENT AFTER MATURITY.

Where, in an action against the maker and payee of a note which plaintiff had purchased after maturity, it appears that the note was given in payment for a portion of a mine, and that the mine was worthless, the defense of failure of consideration, which would have been good in an action on the note by the payee, is good as against plaintiff, who acquired the note after maturity.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by one Risley against one Gray and others on a promissory note. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sayle & Coldwell, for appellant. Church & Cory, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a promissory note, executed by the defendant Gray to the defendant Stevens. The plaintiff's title to the note was derived by a purchase thereof after its maturity at a sheriff's sale under an execution issued upon a judgment against Stevens. The note had been executed by Gray in part payment for the purchase of an interest in a mine in Fresno county. At the time of the purchase and execution of the note, Stevens represented to Gray that the value of the ore in the mine was enough when worked out to meet the amount of the purchase price and notes given therefor, and the purchase by Gray and the execution of the note were made in reliance upon these representations. Upon working the mine it proved to be of no value, and thereupon Gray and Stevens mutually agreed to a surrender of the note and cancellation of its obligation, but the note itself was left with Stevens, and was not in fact delivered to Gray. This agreement was after the maturity of the note, and prior to the purchase by the plaintiff at the sheriff's sale. The defendant Gray, in his answer, alleged that the only consideration for the note was the purchase of this interest in the mine, and that he made the purchase upon the mutual agreement and understanding between him and Stevens that the mine was worth more than the amount paid for it, but that in fact it was of no value whatever. At the trial the court found in accordance with these allegations. These findings have not been excepted to by the plaintiff, and are sufficient to sustain the judgment. If Stevens had brought an action against Gray upon this note, the failure of consideration would have been a sufficient defense thereto, and the plaintiff, having acquired the note after its maturity, took it subject to the same defense. This renders it unnecessary to consider what would have been the effect of the failure to surrender the note to Gray in pursuance of the oral agreement between him and Stevens for its cancellation, if the note had in fact been upon a sufficient consideration. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

101 Cal. 500

GORDON v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO. (No. 18,031.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 17, 1893.)

QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE—ESTOPPEL.

1. By Act Jan. 30, 1852, the city of San Diego was organized, and the board of trustees authorized to sell as much city property as was necessary to pay certain debts. Section 11 provides that, "when the debts of the city are paid, no more of the city property shall be sold, except by a vote of the inhabitants of said city they shall be authorized to do so." Act Feb. 7, 1874, § 1, provides that "no deed * * * made prior to the 24th day of November, 1871, for and on behalf of the city of San Diego * * * for a valuable consideration, by the corporate authorities of the city, shall be invalid by reason of the want of a corporate seal." Held, in an action against said city by its grantee, to quiet title to land under a deed made in 1869, which recited that the officers who executed the same were authorized so to do by a vote of the inhabitants, such deed is admissible in evidence, though it was not attested by defendant's corporate seal.

2. In an action to quiet title to the east half of a tract of land, it appeared that defendant, being the owner of the entire tract, conveyed to plaintiff the undivided half interest therein; that afterwards, but before plaintiff's deed was recorded, defendant conveyed to another the west half of the tract in fee. Held, that the fact that defendant thus undertook to convey the entire interest in the west half of the tract did not estop it to claim its undivided interest in the east half.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. L. Pierce, Judge.

Action to quiet title by H. C. Gordon against the city of San Diego. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

William H. Fuller, for appellant. Cassius Carter, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to quiet title to the east half of pueblo lot 1,215, containing about 45 acres of land, situated in the city of San Diego. The appeal is taken by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, adjudging him to be entitled to said east half of pueblo lot 1,215, according to the Poole map of the pueblo lands of the city of San Diego made in 1856, and adjudging that defendant has no title thereto, etc.; also from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The city of San Diego was a municipal corporation, organized under two acts of the legislature, approved January 30, 1852, and April 28, 1852, respectively. The title of respondent is derived from the appellant, the city of San Diego, through a conveyance executed by the trustees of said city on the 27th day of February, 1869, to one Thomas Whaley, and which conveys "the undivided half of lot twelve hundred and fifteen, (1,215,) according to the official map of said city made by Charles F. Poole, A. D. 1856, and on file," etc. The deed is executed by the president and trustees of the city, who attach their private seals, it being recited that no corporate seal had been "as yet provided." Among the recitals of the deed are the following: "Whereas, the president and trustees aforesaid, by the vote of the duly-qualified electors of the said city of San Diego, at an election for the especial purpose, held in said city on the 25th day of May, A. D. 1868, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of the legislature of the state of California entitled 'An act to repeal the charter of the city of San Diego, and to create a board of trustees,' approved January 30, 1852, were directed, authorized, and empowered to sell pueblo or city lands, the property of said city; and whereas, on the twenty-seventh day of February, A. D. 1869, the said president and trustees, in compliance with said vote and said act of the legislature, sold to said party of the second part the land and premises herein-after described for the sum of twenty dollars in gold coin of the United States of America, being at the price of twenty-five cents per acre, upon the conditions provided for and prescribed in a certain resolution or order of said board of trustees, made and entered on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1868; and said party of the second part has made and completed all the improvements upon said lands by said resolutions or order required to be made, and has fully paid said sum of twenty dollars into the treasury of said city." The conveyance was duly acknowledged, and was recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of San Diego, August 21, 1869. On the 28th day of February, 1869, the same trustees, by a like deed containing like recitals, conveyed the west half of the same lot (No. 1,215) to one J. C. Babcock, which deed was acknowledged and duly recorded March 1, 1869, viz. prior to the acknowledgment and recordation of Whaley's deed. At a special meeting of the board of trustees held June 8, 1868, it was resolved "that the only way pueblo lands will be granted is as follows." Then follow the conditions, which are, in substance, that one half of the purchase price is to be paid on securing certificate; the land to be occupied and improved within six months after certificate is taken, and it must be taken out within one month after approval of the petition; $250 worth of improvements to be placed upon tracts of 40 acres or less, and $400 upon tracts of 80 acres, within one year, and, if not made, previous payment to be forfeited, and land to revert to the city. When the improvements were made, the petitioner became entitled, upon payment of the residue of the purchase price, to a deed; surveys to be made at expense of purchaser.

It was conceded at the trial that title to the pueblo lands, of which lot 1,215 was a part, was at the date of the execution of the Whaley deed in the city of San Diego, and that whatever title passed by that conveyance was vested in H. C. Gordon, the respondent. Appellant objected at the trial to the introduction of the Whaley deed upon several grounds, the most important of which was that said deed was not executed on the part of the city as required by law. The specification of the reasons why not executed as required by law shows that there was no showing that the city ever passed a resolution authorizing the sale or transfer of the property described in the deed; that the property was not sold or conveyed in accordance with the charter of the city of San Diego. The Whaley deed recites the particular facts upon which the authority of the city trustees to convey is supposed to be founded.

That particular recitals in a deed are binding upon parties and privies, and that this doctrine applies to the authorized acts of a corporation, does not seem to be disputed by appellant. It is essential to an estoppel by deed that the deed itself should be a valid instrument; and if void, though under seal, it does not work an estoppel at law or in equity. Cafrey v. Dudgeon, 38 Ind. 512; Merriam v. Railroad Co., 117 Mass. 241. The contention of counsel for appellant is that, the deed to Whaley not being executed under the corporate seal of the city of San Diego, before it was admissible in evidence respondent should have been required to show that the corporate authorities possessed the power to sell the property, that it was sold under such power, and that the board of trustees, when assembled and acting as such, sold the property, and directed the execution of the deed to Whaley. The city of San Diego, as it existed at the date of the execution of the Whaley deed, as before stated, was organized under an act of the legislature of the state of California approved January 30, 1852, and by an act approved April 28, 1852. The first-named act provided for the election of three trustees, one of whom should be president, etc. The seventh section of the act authorized the board of trustees to sell as much of the property of the city as was necessary to pay its debts, "giving at least ten days' notice of any property to be sold, and to continue the sale from time to time until said debt is paid." Section 11 of the act provided that, "when the debts of said city are paid, no more of the city property shall be sold, except by a vote of the inhabitants of said city they shall be authorized to do so," etc. It appears from the act that there had been a previous corporation of the same city, the charter of which was repealed by the act first above cited, and the provisions of section 7 were intended to apply to the payment of the debts thereof. The language of section 11, that after the debts were paid "no more of the city property shall be sold, except by a vote of the inhabitants of said city they shall be authorized to do so," must be construed to empower the trustees to sell upon a vote in favor thereof. When the debts were paid, the power of the trustees under section 7 ceased, and thereafter their power of alienation came, if at all, from section 11 and the vote of the inhabitants. According to the recitals of the Whaley deed, the qualified electors, at an election for that purpose held, directed, authorized, and empowered the trustees to sell the land in question, and the board of trustees duly assembled, and, acting as such by resolution, prescribed the terms and conditions upon which sales would be made. The recitals in the deed, coupled with the law, are sufficient evidence to bind the parties and show that title passed by the deed, provided it was properly executed. We have seen before that it was executed by the trustees, who purported to act for and in the name of the city, except that they signed their names as trustees, and affixed their private seals, etc. On the 7th day of February, 1874, an act of the legislature was approved in the following language: "Section 1. No deed, conveyance, or grant of land in fee, made prior to the 24th day of November, A. D. 1871, for and on behalf of the city of San Diego and the inhabitants thereof, for a valuable consideration, by the corporate authorities of said city, shall be invalid by reason of the want of a corporate seal, but all of said deeds, conveyances, and grants shall have the same force, effect, and validity as if a corporate seal of said city had been regularly provided and properly affixed thereto by the proper corporate authorities of said city."

It is not deemed necessary to go to any great length in discussing the question of the power of the legislature to enact valid curative laws. The field is a broad one, often involving questions of constitutional law, vested rights, retroactive laws, etc., and giving rise to distinctions sometimes too subtle to be readily grasped by the ordinary mind. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, at page 457, states concisely the rule on this subject, thus: "If the thing wanted or failed to be done, and which constitutes the defect in the proceedings, is something the necessity for which the legislature might have dispensed with by prior statute, then it is not beyond the power of the legislature to dispense with it by subsequent statute; and if the irregularity consists in doing some act, or in the manner or mode of doing some act, and which the legislature might have made immaterial by prior law, it is equally competent to make the same immaterial by a subsequent law." Tested by this rule, all doubt must vanish as to the power of the legislature to enact the curative law above quoted. No question has ever been suggested, so far as known, of the power of the legislative branch of government to abolish the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, as was done by section 1223 of the Civil Code. That a like provision might be enacted in reference to corporate and official documents can scarcely admit of a doubt. It is therefore held that the deed of conveyance to Whaley is to be taken, received, and interpreted between the parties to this action precisely as though sealed with a corporate seal of the city of San Diego at the date of its execution. Had vested rights in third parties accrued between the execution of the instrument and the passage of the curative act, a different question would be presented. That question need not concern us in the present case. Treating the deed as duly executed in point of form, under a statute conferring power upon the officers to sell and convey the lands of the city upon a majority vote of the inhabitants, the recitals in the deed that an election had been held pursuant to the provisions of the statute, at which the trustees "were directed, authorized, and empowered to sell pueblo or city lands, the property of said city," etc., is prima facie evidence that an election had been held. It is not here a question of power, but of proof. Many of the authorities go much further in holding to the binding force of recitals in deeds executed by municipal corporations than is necessary to uphold the conveyance in this case. Jamison v. Fopiana, 43 Mo. 565; Devl. Deeds, § 348, and cases cited. I am certain the court did not err in the admission of the Whaley deed. Like considerations apply to the admission of the conveyance from the city to Babcock, provided, always, that it was material testimony in the case, relevant to the issues joined therein, all of which may properly be considered in connection with the findings.

The point is made that the judgment is contrary to the findings, and not warranted by the facts as found in the case. The facts as found by the court may be epitomized as follows: (1) The city of San Diego, being the owner of pueblo lot 1,215, on the 27th day of February, 1869, conveyed in due form and by valid deed an undivided one half thereof to one Thomas Whaley; that the plaintiff herein, H. C. Gordon, is the successor in interest, by proper mesne conveyance, of the land and interest conveyed to Whaley. (2) That on the 28th day of February, 1869, one day after the conveyance to Whaley, the city of San Diego executed to one J. C. Babcock a proper deed of conveyance of the entire west half of the same lot, viz. lot 1,215. (3) The deed to Babcock was first acknowledged and recorded. Upon this state of facts the court entered judgment quieting and confirming plaintiff's title to the entire east half of lot 1,215, and perpetually restraining defendant, the city of San Diego, from asserting title thereto, and that it be decreed to have no title thereto. The position of respondent is (1) that by the conveyance to Whaley of the undivided one half of lot 1,215 he became tenant in common with the city therein. This no doubt is a correct conclusion. (2) That when, on the next day, the city conveyed the entire west half of the same lot to Babcock, it had conveyed the whole thereof, and, as a consequence, ceased to have any interest in any part of the lot. This second position is not readily apparent. No doubt two halves of a thing are equal to the whole of it; but the undivided one half and the whole of one half of a thing are not equal to the whole of it. When Whaley received a deed of an undivided one half of lot 1,215 he was a tenant in common with the city, and when on the next day the city sold the whole of the west half of the same lot, it simply attempted to convey the whole of a parcel of the lot in which it owned but an undivided half. If a grantor conveys lot A, which he does not own, I am at a loss to see how, in the absence of mistake or fraud, he can be deemed to have conveyed lot B, which he does own. If the title of Whaley failed to the west half of the lot, it was by a failure to have his deed acknowledged and recorded prior to the recordation of the Babcock conveyance.

There is, however, another and distinct theory upon which respondent contends the judgment of the court below can be upheld. Section 764 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as material, is as follows: "Whenever it shall appear, in an action for partition of lands, that one or more of the tenants in common, being an owner of an undivided interest in the tract of land sought to be partitioned, has sold to another person a specific tract by metes and bounds out of the common land, and executed to the purchaser a deed of conveyance, purporting to convey the whole title to such specific tract to the purchaser in fee and in severalty, the land described in such deed shall be allotted and set apart in partition to such purchaser, his heirs or assigns, or in such other manner as shall make such deed effectual as a conveyance of the whole title to such segregated parcel, if such tract or tracts of land can be allotted or set apart without material injury to the rights and interests of the other cotenants who may not have joined in such conveyance." Under this section, or rather by analogy to it, respondent claims that where there are two tenants in common, each owning an undivided half of land, while neither can make a partition binding upon the other by assuming to convey either half specifically, yet if one does so convey, the other would be at liberty to acquiesce and to accept the remaining half; and that where he has, as in the present case, done so by conveying such remaining half specifically, the two conveyances operate as a complete and binding partition. In support of this proposition we are referred to Freem. Coten. §§ 188, 535, and to the cases of Dall v. Brown, 5 Cush. 289, and Eaton v. Tailmadge, 24 Wis. 223. At section 188 of Freeman, supra, it is said: "A deed of a specific parcel of land made by one cotenant is not binding on the others, nor can their rights be, to any extent, prejudiced by it. Such a conveyance is not void, but only voidable. It may therefore be approved and ratified by the cotenants, and thereby be made to operate as a conveyance in severalty." Eaton v. Tailmadge, cited supra, is substantially to the same effect as the above quotation. The same may be said of many decisions upon the same question. A parol agreement for the partition of land is void under the statute of frauds, and cannot be enforced; but where consummated and ratified by the parties it will be upheld. In Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 409, it was held that, where an attorney in fact exceeded his authority in executing a deed of partition, his principal, who had ratified the act of partition by his own acts and conduct of solemn significance, such as the execution of deeds of conveyance, which necessarily recognized the partition as of legal validity, was estopped from saying there had been no partition. If the city of San Diego is bound by its acts in the premises, it must be upon the ground of estoppel. But estoppels must be mutual. All the authorities are to the effect that a sale by a tenant in common by specific bounds of a portion of the land held in common is not binding on his cotenant unless ratified by him. I fail to find in the record any evidence of ratification by Whaley, or those holding under him. It is true it appears that the deed to Babcock was first acknowledged and first recorded; but Babcock, for all that appears, may have taken with actual notice of the prior deed of Whaley. Had Whaley conveyed the whole of the east half of lot 1,215, an inference might be predicated, perhaps, on that act, as tending to show his acquiescence in a partition; but so far as appears he did not do so. It was stipulated at the trial "that the plaintiff in this action succeeds by proper mesne conveyances to any title and interest in and to said pueblo lot No. 1,215, which was conveyed to Thomas Whaley by the deed dated February 27, 1869." The finding of the court is in harmony with the stipulation.

I fail to find in these points any basis for an estoppel in pais. Non constat but that Whaley or his grantees may still hold an undivided interest in the west half of lot No. 1,215. I recommend that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the court below directed to enter a judgment quieting plaintiff's title to the undivided one half of the east half of pueblo lot No. 1,215, described in the complaint, and adjudging defendant to be an equal owner and tenant in common with plaintiff therein.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the court below is directed to enter judgment quieting plaintiff's title to the undivided one half of the east half of pueblo lot No. 1,215, described in the complaint, and adjudging defendant to be an equal owner and tenant in common with plaintiff therein.

98 Cal. 123

COCKRILL v CLYMA et al. (No. 18,099.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1893.)

SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES — ORDERS — RECORD — PRESUMPTIONS ON APPEAL.

1. Plaintiff sued as executrix of the will of her husband, to recover damages for the conversion of property. During the pendency of the suit the decree of distribution of the estate was made, and the causes of action were assigned to plaintiff. Held that, under Code Civil Proc. § 385, providing that, in case of a transfer of interest, the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action, the court properly substituted plaintiff in her own right as plaintiff.

2. On admission by both parties in open court of the facts on which the substitution was based, the court, on application of defendant, made the order of substitution, but the record did not show whether the order was entered on the minutes of the court. Held that, while the order should have been entered in the minutes as a distinct order made before judgment, the fact that it was prefixed to the judgment, and recorded in the judgment book, and made a part of the judgment roll, does not affect its validity.

3. Where the record does not show that any objection was made to defendant's application for the substitution, or that the order was excepted to, and at the trial plaintiff admitted all the facts proper for making the order, and, after the decree of distribution, actually continued the action in her own right, the appellate court will assume that, when defendant made the motion, plaintiff consented thereto.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; E. A. Davis, Judge.

Action by Cynthia A. Cockrill against Thomas Clyma and William Clyma to recover damages for the conversion of certain cattle. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Sears, for appellant. M. E. Sanborn, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action in the nature of trover to recover damages for the conversion, by the defendants, of certain cattle. In the original complaint, filed November 23, 1891, the plaintiff described herself as executrix of the will of Christopher Cockrill, deceased, who, she alleges, died on January 6, 1891, and whose will was probated and letters testamentary issued to her on January 31, 1891. The cause of action alleged is that on May 4, 1891, "the plaintiff, as such executrix, was the owner and in the possession of" the cattle described, of the value of $1,268; that on that day the "defendants wrongfully took said property, and converted the same to their own use, to the damage of the plaintiff, as such executrix, in the sum of $1,268;" and "that, by reason of the detention of said property, the plaintiff, as such executrix, has been further damaged in the sum of $250," for the sum of which damages she prays judgment. The answer denies the alleged ownership and possession of the cattle by plaintiff as such executrix, or in any other capacity or character; but does not deny the alleged death of Christopher Cockrill, the probate of his will, nor the appointment and qualification of plaintiff as executrix. The case was tried by the court, and of the 21 findings of fact the 6th, 7th, and 8th are as follows: "(6) That since the commencement of this action, and prior to the trial thereof, to wit, on the — day of —, 1892, the said superior court of said Yuba county duly made its order and decree in the matter of the estate of said Christopher Cockrill, therein pending, finally distributing the entire estate of said Christopher Cockrill, deceased, to the persons entitled thereto, according to law and the terms of the last will and testament of said deceased, by which said order and decree the causes of action alleged in the complaint herein were duly assigned to the said Cynthia A. Cockrill, plaintiff herein, in her own right. (7) That, since the decree last above referred to, said plaintiff, Cynthia A. Cockrill, has continued this action in her own right and interest. (8) That all the foregoing facts were admitted to be true in open court by the parties hereto, and defendants have asked the court that this action be continued in the name of said Cynthia A. Cockrill." On all the issues made by the pleadings, the findings were in favor of defendants. As conclusions of law the court found "(1) that said Cynthia A. Cockrill should be substituted as plaintiff herein, in her own name and right; (2) that the defendants are entitled to judgment against said Cynthia A. Cockrill for their costs herein." The judgment, after reciting the trial and submission of the cause, and that written findings had been filed, proceeds as follows: "Wherefore it is by the court now considered, ordered, and adjudged that said Cynthia A. Cockrill, in her own name and right, be, and she is hereby, substituted as plaintiff herein, in lieu of the said Cynthia A. Cockrill, executrix of the estate and will of Christopher Cockrill, deceased. It is further ordered and adjudged that the defendants, Thomas Clyma and William Clyma, do have and recover of and from said plaintiff, Cynthia A. Cockrill, their costs of suit herein, taxed at $81.75. E. A. Davis, Judge of said Court." The plaintiff, C. A. Cockrill, appeals from this judgment on the judgment roll, without a bill of exceptions.

The appellant contends that the court erred in substituting as party plaintiff Cynthia A. Cockrill simply, for Cynthia A. Cockrill in her representative character as executrix, etc., whereby she was made personally liable for defendants' costs, taxed at $81.75. There is no substantial merit in this point. Beyond question the facts found made a proper case for the substitution under section 385¹ of the Code of Civil Procedure. By the decree of distribution of the estate of Christopher Cockrill, pending this action, the entire cause of action had been assigned to Cynthia A. Cockrill, who, since said decree, had continued the action in her own right and interest. Upon the admission of these facts by both parties in open court at the trial, the defendants asked that the action be continued in the name of Cynthia A. Cockrill. No objection appears to have been made to this motion, and the record does not show whether any order of the court upon the motion was entered in the minutes; but the court found the facts thus admitted by the parties to be true, and, as a conclusion of law therefrom, found that the substitution should be made, and on the same day made the order of substitution. As a matter of correct practice, this order should have been entered in the minutes as a distinct order made before judgment, but the fact that it is an order prefixed to the judgment, and recorded in the judgment book, and made a part of the judgment roll, is not inconsistent with its previous entry in the minutes of the court. In its position in the judgment it appears to have been made prior thereto, and as distinct from the judgment as if it had been separately entered in the minutes of the court. It is incumbent upon the appellant to make it affirmatively appear that error was committed by the court below. The record herein does not show that any objection was made to the defendants' application for the substitution, or that the order was excepted to by the plaintiff. It appears from the findings that at the trial she did admit all the facts proper for making the order of substitution, and, in addition to this, admitted that, since the decree of distribution, she had actually continued the action "in her own right and interest." Under these circumstances, we are authorized to assume in support of the action of the court that, when the defendant made the motion, she expressly consented to the order. If the order was warranted by any possible state of facts not negatived by the record, it must be presumed in justification of the action of the court that such state of facts existed. Caruthers v. Hensley, 90 Cal. 560, 27 Pac. Rep. 411. "All presumptions are in favor of the correctness of the proceedings of courts of general jurisdiction, and as the consent of the defendants [plaintiff] would have justified the order of the court, we must presume that such consent was given, there being nothing in the record to show that it was not." Parker v. Altschul, 60 Cal. 380.

¹Code Civil Proc. § 385, provides: "An action or proceeding does not abate by the death or any disability of a party, or by the transfer of any interest therein, if the cause of action survive or continue. In case of the death or any disability of a party, the court, on motion, may allow the action or proceeding to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest. In case of any other transfer of interest, the action or proceeding may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action or proceeding."

The judgment is affirmed.

98 Cal. 155

THOMPSON v. BRANDT et al. (No. 18,016.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 19, 1893.)

CHANGE OF VENUE—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

In an action brought in T. county to foreclose a mortgage on lands, a part of which are in T. county and a part in F. county, after presenting material issues of fact by answer, defendants moved for a change of venue to F. county, alleging by affidavit that all the parties and all of defendants' witnesses reside in F. county, except one, and that it would be as convenient for him to attend the trial at F. as at T. In reply to the motion, plaintiff denied the matters alleged in defendant's answer, but did not deny the materiality of defendant's witnesses, nor that their convenience required a change in the place of trial, nor allege that a change would cause a delay in the trial. Held, that the motion should have been granted.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; William W. Cross, Judge.

Action by O. M. Thompson against Otto Brandt and Ambrose Caldwell to foreclose a mortgage. From an order denying a motion for a change of venue, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Justin Jacobs, for appellants. N. O. Bradley, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Defendants moved to change the place of trial from the county of Tulare to the county of Fresno, on account of the convenience of witnesses, and this appeal is from an order denying said motion. The action is to foreclose a mortgage upon lands, a part of which are in Tulare, and a part in Fresno, county. Defendants answered, presenting material issues of fact. The affidavit upon which the motion is based was made by defendant Brandt, and shows that defendants' evidence consists of records and files in the courthouse at Fresno, including the testimony of a deceased witness, whose name is given, and the testimony of two other witnesses, bankers in Fresno, whose names are also given; that defendants have but one witness in the county of Tulare; and that it is as convenient for said witness to go to Fresno as it would be to go to Visalia. The statement of facts expected to be proved by the two living witnesses at Fresno is sufficient, as is also the affidavit of merits as supplemented by the affidavit of Justin Jacobs. The plaintiff also lives in Fresno.

In plaintiff's affidavit in reply, he says he brought the action in Tulare county because his counsel lived there; denies the matters alleged in defendants' answer; alleges that defendant Caldwell is interested in the determination of the cause; but does not deny in any manner the materiality of defendants' witnesses, nor that their convenience requires a change of the place of trial, nor that the ends of justice would be promoted thereby; nor is it alleged that it would cause delay in the trial; nor is the good faith of defendants impugned therein. Caldwell does not make an affidavit in support of the motion, but he joined with his codefendant in the answer to the complaint, and the motion is made on behalf of both defendants by the same counsel who answered for them, and it is not shown that the motion was not made with his consent. The presumption must be that his counsel had authority to represent him in making this motion. The record does not show the grounds upon which the court denied the motion, and we are at a loss to conceive of any grounds upon which the order appealed from could be justified. The action could properly have been brought in Fresno county, in which county the greater part of the land lies; and, no reason appearing in the record against the change, the order cannot be justified upon the ground that granting such orders are in the discretion of the court, for here there was no fact or reason against the change, and hence no basis for the exercise of discretion. The order should be reversed, and the court below directed to enter an order granting the motion.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter an order granting the motion.

98 Cal. 189

STOCKTON SAV. BANK v. STAPLES et ux.
(No. 18,019.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1893.)

ESTOPPEL—DEED OF MARRIED WOMAN—RIGHT OF CORPORATION TO HOLD LAND — ADVERSE POS-SESSION—EVIDENCE.

1. Where there is a substantial conflict of evidence, a finding on the issue to which it relates will not be set aside.

2. A husband who witnesses a deed of the wife purporting to convey the wife's separate estate, and who, although he must be presumed to know its contents, does not dispute or object thereto, is estopped to deny the validity of the deed.

3. A corporation is presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, to have the right to purchase and hold land.

4. Declarations of one in actual possession of land, showing that he claims to be sole owner, is admissible on an issue of adverse possession, as tending to show the character of the possession.

Commissioners' decision. Department

1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by the Stockton Savings Bank against D. J. Staples and Mary P. Staples, his wife. Judgment for plaintiff, from which, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur Rodgers and John E. Budd, for appellants. Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to quiet title to an undivided half of a quarter section of land situate in the county of San Joaquin. The judgment was in favor of the plaintiff, and defendants have appealed therefrom, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. Robert Coffee, who is admitted to have been the source of title, conveyed an undivided half of the quarter section to the defendant Mary P. Staples in March, 1870; and it is not disputed that she remained a tenant in common with him until the 2d day of June, 1875, at which time it is claimed by plaintiff that he ousted her, and thence maintained a continuous adverse possession of her interest until September 11, 1888, when he conveyed the whole quarter section to Alice L. Hudson, who continued the adverse possession until September 20, 1890, when she conveyed the entire quarter section to the plaintiff. This action was commenced October 15, 1890. The court found all the essential elements of a continuous adverse possession by Robert Coffee, Alice L. Hudson, and plaintiff, except notice to Mary P. Staples of its hostile character, from June 2, 1875, until the commencement of this action; and further found, substantially, that Mary P. Staples had actual notice of the adverse and hostile character of such possession from 1884 until the commencement of this action. Thus it appears that the title upon which plaintiff recovered was found to have been acquired by prescription.

1. Counsel for appellants contend, with considerable force and plausibility, that the findings as to adverse possession are not justified by the evidence; and, if it were merely a question of preponderance of the evidence, I should be inclined to agree with them; but after a careful examination I think there is sufficient evidence, positive and circumstantial, substantially tending to support those findings, to bring the case within the rule that, where there is a substantial conflict of evidence, a finding upon the issue to which it relates should not be set aside.

2. It appears that at the date of the deed from Coffee to Mrs. Hudson she was a married woman, and that the consideration for that deed was her promise to support Coffee during the remainder of his life. It does not appear, however, that this consideration was expressed in the deed from Coffee to Mrs. Hudson, as no copy of any part of that deed appears in the record. The consideration was proved on the trial by the testimony of Mrs. Hudson, who testified that an oral agreement for the deed and the consideration therefor had been made about the time of her marriage. Upon this showing it is claimed for appellants that the land must be presumed to have been community property, which could not have been conveyed to the plaintiff by the wife, and therefore that her deed to plaintiff conveyed no title. But it further appears that the deed from Mrs. Hudson to plaintiff was signed by her husband as a witness to her execution of it, and that the deed contained the following recitals: "The right, title, and interest hereby conveyed, being the separate property and estate of the said party of the first part, [the wife,] the same having been by her acquired by deed dated September 11, 1888, made, executed, acknowledged, and delivered by Robert Coffee to said party of the first part, the consideration paid for the said deed * * * being then and there the separate property and estate of the said party of the first part." The facts thus recited in the deed, if true, show that the land was the separate property of the wife; and if the husband, when he signed the deed as a witness, knew its contents, and did not then dispute nor object to those recitals, he would be estopped from denying their truth to the prejudice of plaintiff's title, (Bigelow, Estop. p. 553;) and as against the defendants, for all purposes of this case, it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he did know the contents of the deed when he signed it, and that he has ever since acquiesced in the conveyance. Prima facie, therefore, whatever title the husband had passed to plaintiff by the estoppel. The plaintiff was in possession of the land before and at the time of the commencement of this action. The possibility that this prima facie case may be overcome by facts not disclosed by the record in this case can be of no avail to the defendants in any event, since it appears that they have lost their title, whether the plaintiff has acquired it or not; the term of five years' adverse possession having expired before the date of Mrs. Hudson's deed to plaintiff.

3. Appellants contend that the court erred in overruling their objections to the introduction in evidence of the deed from Mrs. Hudson to plaintiff. The ground of the objection was that the plaintiff "was not shown to have the power to purchase, hold, or receive said land, nor that said land was conveyed to it for any of the purposes of the corporation." There was no evidence to show for what purpose the corporation had been organized, or what business it was conducting. The court found according to the allegation of the complaint, not denied in the answer, that at all the times stated the plaintiff "was a corporation duly organized and incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and having its office and principal place of business in the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin, state of California." Under these circumstances I think it must be presumed (as against the defendants, at least) that the corporation had power to purchase and hold the land. Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 545; Evans v. Bailey, 66 Cal. 112, 4 Pac. Rep. 1089; Hagar v. Board, 47 Cal. 222; People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 526, 8 Pac. Rep. 81; Spel. Priv. Corp. §§ 203, 206. It does not appear under what statute, or for what purpose, the plaintiff was incorporated, nor what business it was engaged in, nor for what purpose the property was purchased or used. In answer to a similar objection in People v. La Rue, supra, it was said: "If there was anything in its charter, or the business in which it was engaged, or in the law under which it was organized, in any manner abridging its right to hold land, it does not appear of record; hence we deem the objection untenable."

4. It is contended that the court erred in admitting evidence of the declarations of Coffee, while in possession, that he claimed to be the sole owner of the land. That Coffee was in the actual possession and the sole occupant of the land during the whole term of his alleged adverse possession was admitted by the defendants at the trial, and the questions contested related only to the character of his possession, namely, did he intend and claim it to be adverse, and did the defendants have notice that it was so intended and claimed? I think the declarations admitted tended in some degree to show the character of his possession, and for that purpose were admissible. Cannon v. Stockman, 36 Cal. 536; Lick v. Diaz, 44 Cal. 479. I think the order and judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

3 Cal. Unrep. 855

BENICIA AGRICULTURAL WORKS v.

ESTES et al. (No. 18,006.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 17, 1893.)

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE—DEFENSE—UNLAWFUL CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

1. On a mortgage foreclosure the evidence showed that, at the time the note and mortgage were given, there was pending, in insolvency proceedings against defendants' father, the latter's petition for discharge and plaintiff's opposition thereto; that the consideration of the note, though not expressed therein, was an assignment to defendants by plaintiff of his claim against the insolvent, which was of the same amount as the note, and that the estimated value of the claim was one-sixth of its face; that by agreement plaintiff's claim against the insolvent assigned to defendant was to be held by plaintiff's attorney, and, when paid, to be applied on the note; that, after the giving of the note and mortgage, plaintiff's opposition to the discharge of the insolvent was withdrawn. Held, that the mortgage and note were void as against public policy.

2. The fact that a mortgage was given as security for the performance of an unlawful contract may be shown by oral testimony in an action for foreclosure, though no infirmity appears on the face of the mortgage. Buffen-deau v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 642, followed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by the Benicia Agricultural Works, a corporation, against Lyman W. Estes and M. Estes, for the foreclosure of a mortgage. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

R. P. Davidson, for appellants. R. B. Terry and G. B. Graham, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage executed by Lyman W. Estes to the plaintiff, to secure a joint and several promissory note for $1,200 made by both defendants. The only defense to the action is that the consideration for the note and mortgage was unlawful, as being contrary to the policy of express law. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The facts of the alleged defense are substantially as follows: That, at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage, there was pending in the superior court a proceeding, under the insolvent act of 1880, against one Albert Estes, the father of the defendants, instituted by his creditors, in which he had been adjudged an involuntary insolvent, and had filed his petition for a final discharge from all his debts and liabilities; that the plaintiff, as one of the creditors of the insolvent whose claim had been proved, opposed the final discharge of the insolvent, and had filed in the court in which the proceeding was pending written specifications of the grounds of its opposition; that said petition of the insolvent for discharge, and the opposition thereto by the plaintiff, were pending and undecided at the time of the making and execution of the note and mortgage; and that the only consideration for the making of said note, and the execution of said mortgage, was the withdrawal by plaintiff of its opposition to the final discharge of the insolvent. The cause was tried by the court, and the only findings upon the issues tendered by the answer are, in substance, that the plaintiff did not promise the defendants that, if they would make and execute the note and mortgage, the plaintiff would withdraw all opposition to the discharge of said insolvent; and that defendants did not make and execute the note and mortgage in consideration of any agreement or promise of the plaintiff to withdraw its opposition to the discharge of said insolvent. The appellants contend that these findings are not justified by the evidence; and this is the only ground upon which a reversal of the judgment and order is asked.

On the trial, the allegations of the answer in respect to the pending of the insolvency proceeding against Albert Estes, and the opposition to the discharge of the insolvent, were admitted by the plaintiff. The only oral testimony at the trial was that of the defendants on their own behalf, and that of G. B. Graham, Esq., who had been the attorney for the plaintiff in the matter of its opposition to the discharge of the insolvent, on behalf of the plaintiff. Besides this, there was some documentary evidence, which will be noticed hereafter. It appears without dispute that the trial of the matter of the opposition to the discharge of the insolvent had been set for trial on the 22d day of March, 1890, and that one of the defendants had been subpoenaed as a witness on that trial; that during the morning of that day, before the hour appointed for the trial, the defendants called upon Mr. Graham, when negotiations were commenced between him and them for a compromise or settlement of the matter of the opposition to their father's discharge. The defendants testified, in substance, that Mr. Graham, on behalf of plaintiff, first proposed the compromise, and offered to withdraw plaintiff's opposition to their father's discharge if they would pay, or secure the payment of, $1,200; that they said they had no money, but would accept the proposal if they could give satisfactory security, but they wanted a few days to consider the matter. Thereupon it was agreed that Mr. Graham should have the trial postponed until March 29th, to give time to complete the settlement, which he did. On March 24th the defendants returned, and on that day a compromise was effected, according to the terms of which they signed the note and mortgage in suit, and placed them in Mr. Graham's hands, with the understanding that they should be considered delivered, and take effect, when he should withdraw the plaintiff's opposition to their father's discharge, provided no other creditor should have filed opposition to such discharge; but if plaintiff's opposition should not be withdrawn, or if any other creditor should file opposition before the discharge, the note and mortgage were to be returned to defendants. That it was also agreed that defendants should be credited on their note the amount of dividends which should be paid by the assignee on the plaintiff's claim against the insolvent, which, it was then understood, would not exceed $200. Defendants further testified that there was no other consideration for the note and mortgage than above stated.

The minutes of the court in which the insolvency proceeding was pending show that on March 22d the trial of the matter of opposition to the discharge of the insolvent was postponed, at request of Mr. Graham, by stipulation with opposing counsel, until March 29th, and that on March 29th the opposition of plaintiff to the discharge of the insolvent was withdrawn by Mr. Graham as attorney for plaintiff, the minute of the withdrawal being as follows: "Insolvency of Albert Estes. Now comes G. B. Graham, attorney for Benicia Agricultural Works, and in open court withdraws his opposition to the discharge of the insolvent heretofore filed." Plaintiff's counsel objected and excepted to all oral testimony as to the transaction, on the ground that the only agreement made had been reduced to writing, and signed by defendants, and they contend here that the written instrument so signed is the only competent evidence of the transaction; and there is no question that the following instrument was drawn by Mr. Graham, and signed by the defendants: "March 24, 1890. Whereas, L. W. Estes and M. Estes have this day given their notes to Benicia Agricultural Works for the sum of $1,200, payable in seven months from this date, and the said L. W. Estes executed a mortgage on certain real estate to secure said note, which said note was given to secure the amount by them agreed to be paid to the Benicia Agricultural Works for the transfer to them of a certain claim by the said Benicia Agricultural Works against the estate of Albert Estes, an insolvent, which proceedings in insolvency were begun and are pending in the superior court of Fresno county, state of California; and it is hereby agreed by the undersigned that said claim so transferred to them by the said Benicia Agricultural Works shall be held by Geo. B. Graham, its attorney, as collateral security to said note and mortgage, and he shall have the right to collect and receipt to the assignee of said insolvent estate for any dividends that may be payable on account of said claim, and credit the same on said note. Said mortgage is not to be recorded until March 29, 1890; and, in case any creditor shall, of his own motion, file opposition to the discharge of said insolvent before or at that time, said note and mortgage to be surrendered back to them, and they to retransfer said claim. L. W. Estes. M. Estes." This instrument was put in evidence by plaintiff, and is admitted to have been drawn by Mr. Graham, and signed by defendants, at the time the note and mortgage were signed.

Mr. Graham testified that this instrument, as written, is the agreement that was entered into, and contains all its terms; that he never agreed to withdraw plaintiff's opposition to the discharge of the insolvent, except at the request of defendants; that he told defendants the opposition to the discharge would be within their control. "They told me they wanted to dismiss it. Then I said, 'I will go up to court, and dismiss it on Saturday (March 29th) on your request;' and I did dismiss it for them, and not for anybody else. * * * There was not a word said about my signing the agreement; never intended to sign it. * * * I notified the Benicia Agricultural Works of the mortgage, and they ratified everything I did with it." He further testified that defendants first proposed the settlement or compromise, and that he immediately said to them: "You can't settle it or compromise anything with me. The only way you can do in the matter is to buy the claim. * * * I don't think I told them it would be illegal to do so. I knew it myself, and just shut it all off by telling them they need not say anything except about the purchase of the claim. I told them if they purchased the claim they could dismiss the opposition,—control it; the right to control it would pass to them. * * * I told them I would do whatever they directed me to do; it would be under their control. Did not tell them I would have them substituted in the proceeding, and appear as their attorney. I did not have them substituted in the proceeding. I appeared as their attorney in the way I did. They told me to dismiss, and I did it. Did not make any intimation to the court of any change in the relationship. I simply dismissed it. I was in the case as attorney for the Benicia Agricultural Works." Being asked to explain the last part of the written agreement the witness said: "I think I can state that so you can understand it. They said they didn't want to buy the claim if there was going to be other opposition filed, * * * and this agreement was written up in accordance with what was then understood and agreed between us,—that in case other opposition should be filed, that then I was to surrender it, and there was to be no sale; if there was no other opposition filed, then it was to be an absolute sale. Question. Then, unless the withdrawal of the opposition you had filed, could be made effective, there was to be no sale. That was the understanding, was it? Answer. You can draw your own conclusions about that. I have stated to you what was said. They directed me to dismiss the opposition after I had turned it over to them. Q. Then you have no other explanation than that you have given of that last clause of the agreement? A. The clause explains itself. It is according to the terms of the agreement between us. There is no explanation to be given growing out of the contract or agreement between the parties. I have an opinion about it, but my opinion, the court has said, was not proper to be given. No, sir; I have no explanation to make." The testimony of the defendants that it was estimated and understood that the dividends to be paid by the assignee on plaintiff's claim against the insolvent would not exceed $200 was not disputed.

Conceding the truth of Mr. Graham's testimony as to facts, exclusive of his opinion as to their legal effect, and considering only such parts of the testimony of the defendants as are undisputed, it seems too clear to admit of debate that the entire substance of the consideration for the note and mortgage consisted of the withdrawal of plaintiff's opposition to the discharge of the insolvent, Albert Estes. Mr. Graham must have known that the defendants had in view, and sought to accomplish, only that object; and it is clearly apparent that they received, and were to receive, nothing else beneficial to themselves or detrimental to the plaintiff. It was not disputed that the parties understood that the dividends on plaintiff's claim against the insolvent would not exceed $200, nor is it pretended that such understanding was incorrect. Therefore, the formal assignment of that claim, on the condition that plaintiff should continue to hold it as collateral security, and receive and credit the dividends on the note, did not operate as a consideration, or even as a partial consideration, for the note. The note and the conditional assignment of the claim, having been parts of the same transaction, are to be construed together, and in the light of the circumstances of the case; especially the circumstances that the parties understood that the dividends on plaintiff's claim against the insolvent would not exceed $200, and that the sole object of the defendants was to secure the discharge of their father. By so construing the note and written agreement, any attempted disguise is made transparent, the alleged transfer of plaintiff's claim against the insolvent is discovered to be mere form without substance,—a mere subterfuge,—and the real nature of the transaction is clearly revealed. The provision that the claim, said to have been assigned, was to be held and the dividends thereon collected by plaintiff, and credited on the note, becomes merely a qualification or contingent limitation of the liability of defendants on their note, the only effect of which is that, instead of being unconditionally obligated to pay $1,200, as expressed in the note, the defendants are only bound to pay $1,200, less the amount of the dividends paid plaintiff on its claim against the insolvent. It is the same as if the contingent qualification or limitation had been expressed in the note.

If the views above expressed as to the effect of the evidence are correct, it follows that the consideration for the note and mortgage was illegal, because "contrary to the policy of express law," in the sense of the second subdivision of section 1667 of the Civil Code, and consequently the note and mortgage are void. The authorities to this effect are numerous, only a few of which, specifically applicable to this case, need be cited. The facts of the case of Bell v. Leggett, 7 N. Y. 176, are almost entirely similar to the facts of this case. The bankrupt proceedings in question in that case were under the United States bankrupt act of 1841, the policy of which in respect to withdrawing opposition to the discharge of the bankrupt cannot be distinguished from that of our insolvent act of 1880. Indeed, that case was cited by our code commissioners as an example falling under the second subdivision of section 1667 of the Civil Code. See note 2 under that section in Deering's Code. It is also cited as authority, on a point similar to the principal point in this case, in Estudillo v. Meyerstein, 72 Cal. 317, 13 Pac. Rep. 869. The case of Rice v. Maxwell, 53 Amer. Dec. 85, is also specifically applicable to this case. As having a general bearing upon the main question in this case the following cases may be consulted: Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 403; Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354, 4 Pac. Rep. 229; Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 18 Pac. Rep. 391; Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 Pac. Rep. 36; Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. Rep. 735. The point made by counsel for respondent to the effect that the oral testimony was incompetent is not tenable. Buffendean v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 642, and cases above cited. For the reason that the finding excepted to is not justified by the evidence, I think the order and judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order and judgment are reversed, and a new trial granted.

98 Cal. 143

KENNEDY v. GLOSTER et al. (No. 18,020.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 17, 1893.)

HOMESTEAD—SELECTION OF—ABANDONMENT.

1. Where portions of a tract of land selected as a homestead are situated in different counties, a declaration of the homestead, executed in duplicate, and one recorded in each county, has the same effect as one declaration recorded in both counties.

2. The fact that the owner of a farm selected as a homestead took cattle to pasture for hire, when he had more pasture than was necessary for his own animals, and sometimes sold hay therefrom, does not vitiate the selection as a homestead, as being within the rule that property used for business purposes solely cannot be selected as a homestead.

3. Under Civil Code, § 1243, providing that "a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof executed and acknowledged," a conveyance of land as security only does not operate as such abandonment after a reconveyance.

4. Under Civil Code, § 1262, providing for the selection of a homestead by a declaration, which must be acknowledged in the same manner as grants of real property, and section 1186, providing that the acknowledgment of a married woman shall not be taken unless she is made acquainted with the contents of the instrument by the officer, on an examination without the hearing of her husband the selection of a homestead by a married woman is void, when the certificate does not recite that she was examined by the certifying officer apart from her husband.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; John Caldwell, Judge.

Action by John J. Kennedy against D. M. Gloster, Catherine Gloster, and others, for the foreclosure of a mortgage. Plaintiff had judgment against all of the defendants except Catherine Gloster, and as to her the action was dismissed, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

P. Reddy, Chas. F. Hanlon, and Frank R. Wehe, for appellant. T. L. Ford and Goodwin & Goodwin, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. In 1874, and for several years prior thereto, the defendant D. M. Gloster was the owner of a tract of land situated partly in Plumas county and partly in Sierra county, in this state, the part in Sierra county being described as the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of a certain section 5. He was a married man, and the land was all community property. There was a dwelling house on the quarter section in Sierra county, in which he, with his wife and children, then lived, and has ever since lived. The whole tract was inclosed by a fence, but was subdivided into separate fields, a portion of the land being used for pasturing stock, and a portion for raising hay; and around his house was also a fence, which inclosed about two acres. On September 1, 1874, Mrs. Gloster, the defendant Catherine, for the joint benefit of herself and husband, executed, in duplicate, a declaration of homestead upon the whole tract. Each copy of the declaration was separately acknowledged by her in proper form, and one of them was filed for record in Sierra county on the 5th, and the other in Plumas county on the 9th, of the same month. On December 21, 1875, Mr. and Mrs. Gloster executed to Michael Coffey and Margaret Gloster a deed, absolute in form, of all that part of the land situate in Plumas county. The deed was given to secure the payment of an indebtedness from Mr. Gloster to the grantees, and on its payment, in July, 1879, they reconveyed the property to him. Meantime he remained in possession of the land, using it as before. On November 17, 1886, Mrs. Gloster, for the joint benefit of herself and husband, executed, in duplicate, a new declaration of homestead upon all the land described in the declaration of 1874, and two other quarter sections,—one situate in Plumas county, and the other in Sierra county. Each copy of this declaration was in fact properly acknowledged by her, but the certificates of acknowledgment were defective in form, in that they failed to state, as required by statute, that, upon an examination without the hearing of her husband, she was made acquainted with the contents of the instrument. One of the copies was filed for record in Plumas county, and the other in Sierra county, on the 22d day of the same month. On January 23, 1888, the defendant D. M. Gloster executed a mortgage to the plaintiff's assignor upon all the land in Plumas county described in the homestead declaration of 1874, and upon the two quarter sections in Sierra county described in the declaration of 1886. The plaintiff commenced this action to foreclose that mortgage, making Mr. and Mrs. Gloster and certain other parties defendants. All of the defendants, except Mrs. Gloster, suffered their defaults to be entered. She answered and set up in defense of the action the two declarations of homestead, executed and filed for record by her, as before stated. The court below found all the facts alleged in the complaint to be true as against D. M. Gloster, and also found that, at the time the mortgage was executed, there was a valid homestead, covering all the land described in the declaration of 1886, and hence that the mortgage was void. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiff, and against D. M. Gloster, for the amount found due, and in favor of Mrs. Gloster, dismissing the action as against her, with costs. From this judgment in favor of Mrs. Gloster, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

1. It is claimed for appellant that, when a copy of the homestead declaration of 1874 was filed for record in Sierra county, the land described therein and situated in that county immediately became and constituted the homestead of the declarant, and that the filing of the other copy in Plumas county a few days later was, in effect, an attempt to select a second homestead while the first was in force; and it is argued that, as one cannot have two homesteads at the same time, the land in Plumas county did not become impressed with the character of homestead. It is admitted, however, that a valid homestead may be declared upon land situated partly in two counties; but it is said that to effect that end the same declaration or paper should be filed in each county. We do not think this claim should be sustained. When an instrument is executed in duplicate, it is, in effect, but one instrument. Here the declaration was evidently executed in that way that it might more conveniently and promptly be sent to the two county seats for record; and, if it had not been executed in duplicate, it clearly could not have been recorded in both counties at the same time, and yet in that event the objection interposed would seem to be equally tenable.

2. It is also claimed that the homestead must be limited to the dwelling house in which the claimant resided, and the separately inclosed two acres of land on which it was situated. This claim is rested upon the theory that the balance of the land was used for purposes of business, and hence was not subject to selection as a homestead. But it is well settled in this state that a farm may be selected as a homestead. In Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 227, it is said: "Both in the constitution and in the statute the word 'homestead' is used in its ordinary or popular sense; or, in other words, its legal sense is also its popular sense. It represents the dwelling house at which the family resides, with the usual and customary appurtenances, including outbuildings of every kind necessary or convenient for family use, and lands used for the purposes thereof. If situated in the country, it may include a garden or farm. If situated in a city or town, it may include one or more lots, or one or more blocks." Here it was proved that the whole tract was used as a farm by its owners, principally for pasturing and feeding their own cows and other domestic animals, though sometimes, when there was more pasturage than was necessary for their animals, they took in other cattle to pasture; and, when they had more hay than their animals would consume in the winter, they sold some of it. But these facts did not, in our opinion, make the farm such a place of business as to bring it within the cases holding that property used for business purposes solely cannot be selected as a homestead. The declaration was in proper form, and, when filed for record, we think it had the effect to impress upon the whole farm a valid homestead claim.

3. It is further claimed that when Mr. and Mrs. Gloster executed their deed in December, 1875, they abandoned their homestead upon that part of the land covered by the deed. The answer to this claim is that "a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof, executed and acknowledged." Section 1243, Civil Code. Here the proof is clear that the deed was given only as a mortgage, and therefore it did not pass the title, and could not operate as a grant.

4. It is claimed that the declaration of 1886 did not create any new homestead rights, for the reasons, among others, (1) that it was an attempt to select a second homestead, while that of 1874, if valid, was still in force; and (2) that the certificates of acknowledgment attached to the declaration were not in the form prescribed and made necessary by the statute, and hence it was not entitled to be recorded. It is admitted by respondent that the certificates of acknowledgment were not in proper form, but contended that, notwithstanding the defects, the declaration might still be filed for record, and that, when so filed, it constituted a valid homestead. The Civil Code has the following provisions: "Sec. 1262. In order to select a homestead, the husband or other head of a family, or, in case the husband has not made such selection, the wife, must execute and acknowledge, in the same manner as a grant of real property is acknowledged, a declaration of homestead, and file the same for record. Sec. 1263. The declaration of homestead must contain" certain specified statements. "Sec. 1264. The declaration must be recorded in the office of the recorder of the county in which the land is situated. Sec. 1265. From and after the time the declaration is filed for record, the premises therein described constitute a homestead," etc. As we read these sections, the requirement is imperative that a married woman's acknowledgment of a declaration of homestead must be taken and certified in the manner prescribed by section 1186 of the Civil Code¹ and it was, in effect, so held in Beck v. Soward, 76 Cal. 527, 18 Pac. Rep. 650. The certificate must be attached to the declaration, and the paper may then be filed for record, and constitute a homestead; but, if the certificate is not made in substantial conformity to the requirements of the statute, the paper is not entitled to record, and, if filed and recorded, it will not constitute a homestead. Looking at the whole record, we conclude that Mrs. Gloster had a valid homestead upon all the land described in her declaration of 1874, and as to that land that the mortgage was void, but that the plaintiff was entitled to have his mortgage foreclosed upon the quarter section in Sierra county, which was covered by it, and not included in the homestead. The judgment and order should therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment in accordance with the views above expressed.

¹The section provides: "The acknowledgment of a married woman to an instrument purporting to be executed by her must not be taken unless she is made acquainted by the officer with the contents of the instrument, on an examination without the hearing of her husband; nor certified, unless she thereupon acknowledges to the officer that she executed the instrument, and that she does not wish to retract such execution."

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

98 Cal. 193

WEILL v. LIGHT, Justice of the Peace,
(No. 18,065.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1893.)

WRIT OF REVIEW.

A writ of review will not be granted until after the time has expired for taking an appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Proceedings by R. Weill for writ to review a judgment rendered by Charles Light, a justice of the peace. From a judgment annulling the said judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. B. Webster and L. W. Elliott, for appellant. Loutitt, Woods & Levinsky, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of San Joaquin county, annulling a judgment of a justice of the peace upon a writ of review. The action in which the judgment of the justice of the peace was rendered was brought by the History Company, a corporation, against R. Weill, to recover from the defendant therein the sum of $86.70 for certain books alleged to have been sold to the defendant by the plaintiff, and a judgment by default was rendered by the justice of the peace for the sum demanded on the 29th day of January, 1892. The writ of review was issued by the superior court, and served on the justice of the peace, on the 16th day of February, 1892. It is claimed by counsel for respondent here that the justice's court exceeded its jurisdiction, because there was no valid service of summons on the defendant, Weill. On the other hand, appellant's counsel contend (1) that service of summons was waived by an appearance of the defendant; and (2) that defendant might have appealed from the judgment of the justice's court, as the time within which such appeal might have been taken had not expired when the writ of review was issued and served. I think this second point of appellant must be sustained, and that it is finally decisive of the case in favor of the appellant. It is too well settled to admit of doubt that the writ of review will not be granted on the petition of a party who is entitled to appeal from the order or judgment of which he complains. Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 322, 12 Pac. Rep. 270, and cases there cited. See, also, Heinen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 557, 26 Pac. Rep. 366. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the superior court directed to dismiss the proceeding.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the superior court is directed to dismiss the proceeding.

98 Cal. 179

CITY OF FRESNO v. FRESNO CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. et al. (No. 18,034.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1893.)

IRRIGATION—CANAL THROUGH CITY—NUISANCE—ACTION TO ABATE—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS—DECREE DESTROYING PROPERTY.

1. In an action by a city against an irrigating canal company to enjoin the operation of its canal along one of plaintiff's streets, and abate it as a nuisance, the court found, inter alia, that said canal can be constructed below the surface of the street, and covered up so that it will not be an obstruction to the street. Held, that such finding is inconsistent with a finding, or conclusion of law, that "said canal, where it traverses the streets of said city, is a nuisance per se," and a judgment granting an injunction, and ordering the nuisance abated, must be reversed.

2. It appeared that the canal was constructed at great expense, more than five years before the incorporation of plaintiff, and eleven years before the suit was brought, and had ever since been used by the canal company adversely to all the world; that the proprietors of the land where the city is located induced such company to run its canal through the town, and located the latter on the assurance that the company would do so; that the supervisors were consulted at the time, and made no objections; that taxes on the canal were paid to the city, and its trustees, by ordinances and official acts, recognized its existence; that a mill of the company was erected at an expense of nearly $100,000; that there are other expensive mills on the canal operated by its waters; that, after leaving the city, the canal distributes water for the irrigation of many farms; and that it can be constructed below the street and covered so that the surface can be restored to its former condition. Held, that a decree ordering the canal to be abated as a nuisance by filling it up was erroneous.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by the city of Fresno against the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company and the Fresno Milling Company to enjoin and abate as a nuisance such irrigation company's canal, which runs along certain streets of such city, and on the banks of which such milling company has erected a mill. From a decree granting the relief prayed, and ordering the nuisance abated by filling the canal, defendants appeal. Reversed.

T. P. Ryan, for appellants. Reel B. Terry, C. C. Merriam, and Church & Cory, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by the city of Fresno, in its corporate capacity, to obtain a decree abating as a nuisance a certain ditch or canal owned by the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, and which runs through parts of certain streets of said city. The Fresno Milling Company, which had purchased water from the ditch of the other defendant, and had built a large flouring mill on the banks of the canal, was also made a party defendant. The court declared the canal a nuisance per se, and ordered it to be entirely abated; that is, filled up and entirely destroyed. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, said defendant the Fresno Milling Company appeals.

The said canal was constructed at great expense more than five years before the incorporation of said city; the mill of the milling company was erected at an expense of nearly $100,000; other expensive and costly mills have been erected upon the banks of the canal, and are operated by its waters; and the canal, after leaving the city, distributes water for the irrigation of many farms. There are therefore many equitable considerations in favor of defendants; and such large properties should not be thus utterly destroyed, unless such result necessarily follows from an application of the rules of law. It appears that in 1874 the land now composing the city of Fresno, and a very large body of land, consisting of many thousands of acres, adjoining it, was the property of the Contract & Finance Company, and that in said year the agents of said company visited that locality for the purpose of selecting a site for a new town or city. They consulted Mr. M. J. Church, who was the president and superintendent of the said defendant the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, as to a proper town site. They wanted a place to which water could be brought, saying that "a town without a stream of water was no town at all." Church informed them that the place where the city of Fresno was afterwards located could be more readily supplied with water than any other part of the territory designated, and that he would pledge himself that his company would put a stream of water through that place if they located the town there. Upon that assurance the town was shortly afterwards located at that place. Afterwards the projectors of the town, fearing that Church might fail to bring in the water, offered him inducements in the way of both money and land to bring it in. The ditch was commenced by Church's company about 1874, and was completed about 1879 or 1880, the water being brought into the town through the ditch in 1880. The board of supervisors of the county were consulted about the matter, and made no objection to the building of the ditch, although no formal action was taken by the board upon the subject. The company defendant has continuously used the ditch from 1880 to the present time. The corporation plaintiff, the city of Fresno, was not incorporated until October, 1885. This action was not commenced until December, 1891. At the time the ditch was in course of construction, the defendant was urged to build it by the persons who then owned all the property in what is now the city of Fresno; but in 1876 the owner of the property made a deed to Fresno county, "granting a perpetual right of way to public streets and alleys" of said proposed town or city. After the plaintiff was incorporated, its trustees, by ordinances and official acts regularly done, recognized the existence of said canal. The canal was assessed in 1888, and the city tax paid thereon. The court finds that "about the year 1880, before the incorporation of the city of Fresno, a canal or a ditch was built through certain streets of said city by the defendant the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, and has been maintained and used by said company ever since, uninterruptedly, continuously, and adversely to all the world, but without color of title." The words "without color of title" are of no significance here, because the defendant had actual, and not merely constructive, possession of the canal; and, of course, as against private persons, the said defendant would have acquired a perfect title by prescription.

It is contended, however, by respondent, that, as the streets were dedicated to the public in 1876, the appellant could acquire no right to any part thereof by adverse user; and this, of course, is the general rule. If, however, it were necessary to discuss the proposition here, it is not clear under the law that in this case an estoppel in pais cannot be invoked by appellants as against the respondent. In 2 Dillon's Municipal Corporations the author, after reviewing the subject at great length, and referring to many authorities, uses this language, which seems to be the result of such authorities: "The author cannot consent to the doctrine that, as respects public rights, municipal corporations are impliedly within ordinary limitation statutes. It is unsafe to recognize such a principle. But there is no danger in recognizing the principle of an estoppel in pais as applicable to exceptional cases, since this leaves the courts to decide the question, not by the mere lapse of time, but, upon all the circumstances of the case, to hold the public estopped or not, as right and justice may require." Section 675. And many cases are cited by the author, mainly from Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and Ohio,—all exceptional cases,—in which the doctrine of estoppel in pais was successfully invoked as against the public; and the case at bar seems to be as safely within the rule as are many of the cases there cited. But we do not deem it necessary to determine absolutely whether or not that rule would apply to the case at bar, for we think that in this case another principle comes into play.

The court finds "that said canal is an irrigating ditch; that it flows out west of the city, and is there distributed, and supplies water for the irrigation of many farms; that within the city extensive and costly mills for the purpose of crushing grain and manufacturing flour have been erected on its banks, to be operated by its waters; that these industries would be injured should the canal be prevented from running within the city." The court also, in finding 14, finds "that said canal can be constructed below the surface of said street, and covered up in such a manner that the surface of said street can be restored to its former condition, so that it will not be an obstruction to the free use and enjoyment and travel of said street." The constitution of the state (section 1, art. 14) declares that "the use of all water now appropriated, or that may be hereafter appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use." See, also, People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209; McCrary v. Beaudry, 67 Cal. 120, 7 Pac. Rep. 264; Fresno Co. v. Fowler Switch Canal Co., 68 Cal. 359, 9 Pac. Rep. 309. And the statutes of the state recognize ditches and canals as of public use, and regulate such use. For instance, section 551 of the Civil Code provides that, where they cross or are on the lines of public highways, their works "must be so laid and constructed as not to obstruct public highways." The canal of the defendants was constructed in the face of, and without objection by, the supervisors of the county or the public, and the city of Fresno, when it was incorporated, found said canal occupying parts of certain streets in the city which it then took control of. Under these circumstances, if the nuisance consists merely in the manner in which the canal is conducted and managed, it is a nuisance which can be remedied without a total destruction of the property, and the rule stated in McMenomy v. Baud, 87 Cal. 134, 26 Pac. Rep. 795, should be applied; that is, the appellant should be enjoined from conducting the canal in such a manner as to make it a nuisance, but a total destruction of the property should not be decreed. This rule has been applied as against a public corporation. In Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487, the appellant was indicted for causing a public nuisance within the city of Pontiac by maintaining a milldam therein, and the trial court, in its judgment, ordered that the dam should be removed; but the appellate court reversed that part of the judgment, saying: "Property is not to be destroyed until its destruction is lawfully ascertained to be necessary in order to stop the nuisance, and then no other, and no more, is to be destroyed than is thus determined to be needful to effect that object." Many cases are cited. See, also, People v. Albany, 11 Wend. 539. But in the case at bar the findings do not clearly set forth what the real facts are. Finding 14, above quoted, is inconsistent with other findings, and particularly with the statement (whether considered as a finding of fact or a conclusion of law) that "said canal, where it traverses the streets of said city, is a nuisance per se;" and for this reason the judgment and order must be reversed. Judgment and order reversed, and new trial ordered.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 184

MAWHINNEY v. SOUTHERN INS. CO.
(No. 14,763.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1893.)

FIRE INSURANCE POLICY—ACTION FOR LOSS OF HARVESTING MACHINE—LOCATION OF PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a fire insurance policy on a harvesting machine while "operating in the grain fields, and in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting, in" a certificate, No. 13—60 tain county, it appeared that the machine was moved, the day after the policy was issued, from the place where it had been stored since the previous harvesting season, to a blacksmith shop, to be repaired in order to fill contracts for cutting grain. While near such shop, eight days after being taken thereto, and about the day the harvesting season commenced, the machine was burned. Held, that it was not "operating in grain fields," or "in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting," at the time it was destroyed. Paterson, Garoutte, and McFarland, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by Mawhinney against the Southern Insurance Company on a fire insurance policy. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

T. C. Van Ness and J. P. Meux, for appellant. Church & Cory, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendant made this policy of insurance in favor of the plaintiff's assignor, by which it insured him, to an amount not exceeding $800, for the term of three months from June 2, 1890, against loss or damage by fire to the following described property, "while located and contained as described herein, and not elsewhere, to wit: Threshing outfit in the field. $800 on one combined harvester, complete, all while owned by assured, and known as 'Barrett's harvesting machine and outfit,' and operating in the grain fields, and in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting, in Fresno county, Cal." The harvester was destroyed by fire June 10, 1890, and in an action upon the policy the complaint alleged that its destruction occurred "while in transit from L street, in Fresno, the place where the same was at the time of said insurance, to the grain fields, for use in connection with the harvest in said Fresno county." This allegation was denied by the defendant, and was the issue upon which the cause was tried. At the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the evidence failed to sustain this allegation of the complaint. The court denied the motion, and, the defendant declining to offer any evidence, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which, and on order denying a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

At the date of the policy the harvester was in a building on L street, in the city of Fresno, where it had been stored since the previous season, and on the next day after the policy was issued it was taken to a blacksmith shop in the city of Fresno, about a quarter of a mile distant, for general repairs, where it remained until it was destroyed, on the night of June 10th. The plaintiff testified: "The machine had never got to the grain fields when it was burned, but was left at this shop for the purpose of repairs. I helped to take it there. It had never been taken from the shop after being carried there." Barrett, the plaintiff's assignor, to whom the policy was issued, testified that "it required about $175 worth of repairs upon the harvester to put it in a condition to be used, and took about two weeks to repair it.

I took the machine straight from Mr. Mawhinney's place to the shop, on the other side of the railroad track, about a mile from Mr. Mawhinney's place. It had not been used at all prior to that, when carried to the shop for repairs, and there it stood until it burned. It stood about sixty or one hundred feet away from the shop, with several machines between it and the shop. None were burned, except this one. Neither was the shop burned. I had never carried it into the field, nor put it to any use, after the insurance was procured, nor used it in any way, except to take it to the shop for repairs, and had not taken it from any place with a view of harvesting at that time, and nothing had been done in the way of harvesting that season; only the repairs I have stated. I mean I had taken it to the shop for the purpose of repairs, and with a view of going into the field for harvesting as soon as it was ready, and used it for no other purpose during that season." Upon this testimony the nonsuit should have been granted. The harvester was not "operating in the grain fields," or "in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting," at the time it was destroyed. It had not been used at all in connection with harvesting during that season, and the testimony of Barrett that it required about two weeks to make such repairs as would put it in a condition to be used shows that it could not have been, at the time of the loss, in transit from place to place "in connection with harvesting." The policy purported to be on a "threshing outfit in the field," and its terms did not cover the harvester while it was at a blacksmith shop for repairs, and it cannot be said that while it was at the shop in Fresno, to which it had been taken for the purpose of putting it in repairs for the season, it was in transit "from place to place, in connection with harvesting," any more than if it had been sent to San Francisco for repairs, and had been there destroyed. An insurer is not liable except upon proof that the loss has occurred within the terms of the policy, and when making the policy he is at liberty to select the character of the risk he will assume. If the terms of this risk are distinct, and without ambiguity, the assured cannot complain if the risk assumed does not cover the loss. The locality of the property, as well as its custody, and the incidental care that, by reason of such locality and custody, the property will naturally receive, are elements which enter into a consideration of the risk to be assumed; and, if they are made a part of the conditions of the policy they must be observed by the assured, as fully as any other conditions, before the insurer can be made liable for a loss. In the present case the insurer would reasonably assume that the harvester would be under greater care and watchfulness while it was actually operating in the fields, or in transit from place to place for such purpose, than if left standing, unhoused and uncared for, in open grounds near a blacksmith shop. But, whatever may have been the motives for limiting the extent of his risk, he cannot be made liable for a loss that was not covered by the risk assumed in the policy.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

PATERSON, J. I dissent. The plaintiff testified that the harvesting season in Fresno county commenced about the 10th of June; that the machine was sent to the blacksmith for repairs, which were nearly completed when it was burned. I. N. Barrett testified that the object of taking the machine to the blacksmith shop was to repair it for work in the field; that a contract had been made for cutting grain, and that he had made arrangements to take the machine out to the field on the 11th day of June, or as soon as the necessary repairs were completed; that one contract had been made for harvesting before the machine left plaintiff's place, and another contract after it reached the shop, but no work had been done with it that season. Upon this showing I think the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. The taking of the machine from the place where it was housed to the shop, and the work done upon it there, were acts done "in connection with harvesting,"—as much so as if the machine had already been in operation, and had been returned to the shop for repairs. The plaintiff, when he took it out for repairs, intended, not to return it to the place where it had been stored, but to continue on to the field of operations as soon as the necessary repairs were completed. If the plaintiff had actually entered the field he was to harvest, although he knew that the machine needed repair, and had returned to the blacksmith shop, there would be no question whatever of his right to recover herein. The law did not require of him such a vain thing. Contracts had been made for the harvesting of crops, and the machine was "in transit from place to place, in connection with harvesting," within the meaning of that language, as used in the policy, when it was destroyed by fire. It is evident that by the terms of the provision of the policy quoted the parties intended that, so long as the machine remained in the house or shed on plaintiff's place where it had been stored for the winter, the company should not be liable, but that as soon as it was removed therefrom, and started out to operate in the grain fields, the company should become liable. A machine is not so likely to be burned when in the hands of a crew of threshers as when stored in a hay barn, nor it is so likely to be burned when on the road, or when standing in front of a blacksmith shop for repairs. When plaintiff took the machine from its storehouse, his intention was to commence operations in the grain fields he had promised to harvest. The stop made at the shop for repairs was merely incidental to the main object, viz. actual work in the harvest field towards which they were headed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; McFARLAND, J.

TURNER v. COFFMAN. (No. 19,258.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1893.)

In bank.

From a judgment in favor of Turner, Coffman appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Blackstock & Ewing, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Motion to dismiss appeal for failure to file transcript of the record within the time prescribed by section 1. of rule 2.

The clerk's certificate shows that a statement of the case was settled and filed on February 10th. This gave the appellant all of March 23d to file the record in compliance with the rule. The notice of this motion was prematurely served on March 21st, which is also the date of the clerk's certificate. Motion denied.

98 Cal. 203

In re WHETTON'S ESTATE. (No. 15,095.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1893.)

WILLS—CONTEST—RIGHT OF EXECUTOR TO DE-FEND.

Under Code Civil Proc. § 1327, which makes an executor, where a will is attacked after probate, a necessary party to the proceeding, and requires the issue of a citation to him personally to show cause why the probate should not be revoked, the executor has the right to support and defend the will.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceedings by James Whetton to have the will of Catarina R. Whetton declared null and void, and letters testamentary granted to one Navarro revoked. Decree granting the relief, from which this appeal is taken. Reversed.

Dunne & McPike, for appellants. Henry I. Kowalsky, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. The record in this case is in a condition of hopeless entanglement, but sufficient appears to require a reversal of the judgment. One Navarro was named as executor and made a devisee by the last will and testament of Catarina R. Whetton, deceased. He qualified as such executor, and entered upon the discharge of his duties. James Whetton, husband of deceased, filed a contest asking for revocation of his letters testamentary, and that the will be declared null and void. A citation was issued to Navarro to show cause upon a certain day why his letters should not be revoked, and the will set aside as void. Navarro appeared as executor, and filed a general demurrer to the petition. What occurred subsequently to the foregoing events is not made plain by the record, but sufficient appears therefrom, aided by the light furnished from the briefs of respective counsel, to indicate that the court was of the opinion that the executor, as such, had no right to support and defend the will, and he was thereupon denied such right. This position is not well founded. When a will is attacked after probate, section 1327, Code Civil Proc., makes the executor a necessary party to the proceeding, and requires that a citation issue to him personally to show cause why the probate should not be revoked. It would be an absurdity to cite him to show cause, and, when he appears in court in obedience to the citation, to refuse to consider the reasons which he is prepared to advance why the will should not be set aside and annulled. It is not only his privilege to make such showing, but it is his duty under his trust. While it has been held in many cases that an administrator cannot appeal from a decree of distribution, because he has no interest in the final judgment, whatever it may be, yet that principle is in no sense analogous to the right of an executor to support a will, especially so when it has once been probated. For the foregoing reasons, let the judgment and decree setting aside the will, revoking the probate thereof, and distributing the estate be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

98 Cal. 195

RICHARD v. WOLFLING. (No. 18,035.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1893.)

MINES—LOCATION ON AGRICULTURAL LANDS.

A location of a mine is not invalid, as against a subsequent location, because a portion thereof was made on agricultural land, which was afterwards patented, where the agricultural land could be profitably worked only by commencing on the other portion of the location, and the money expended on such other portion was sufficient to make a valid location of the whole, the subsequent locator not connecting his claim with the holders of the agricultural patent.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; John M. Corcoran, Judge.

Action by E. J. Richard against M. J. Wolfling. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Street and F. P. Otis, for appellant. Reddick & Solinsky, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant filed an application in the United States land office for a patent to a quartz mining claim 1500 feet in length and 600 feet wide, called the "Scorpion." The plaintiff filed in said land office an adverse claim, averring that he was the owner of a quartz mine called the "Hope Mine," and that a portion of the Scorpion mine, claimed by defendant, conflicted with a portion of said Hope mine. The contest was referred to the superior court, where the plaintiff brought this action, and the court found in favor of plaintiff for the portion of the mining ground in conflict. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show ownership of the mining ground in contest, first, under a location made by Alexander Araya and others in June, 1872, and also under a relocation made by said Araya and one Samuel Ralston on the 7th of April, 1880. Many of the exceptions relied on by appellant refer to said location of June, 1872, and to evidence tending to show the continued ownership of plaintiff's grantors under that location down to the second location of April, 1880. We think that plaintiff showed a good location made in June, 1872, a conveyance by the other locators to said Araya, and a full possession by Araya, under mining laws and customs, down to April, 1880, and that if plaintiff could have shown those facts under the complaint the said exceptions would not be tenable. But as the complaint seems to be based expressly upon the second location of April 7, 1880, the testimony as to the location of June, 1872, perhaps, should not be regarded at all, and therefore the exceptions as to that testimony need not be here examined.

On the 7th of April, 1880, the said Araya and said Samuel Ralston relocated the said Hope mine,—the description being the same as in the location of 1872, except that the width was made only 450 feet instead of 600,—and their notice of location contained this clause: "This claim was recorded in 1872, and has been worked and held up to date." It is not disputed that this location of April, 1880, was made in accordance with the laws of congress and the customs of the district, or that it was held by a proper mining possession, unless the whole location was invalid and void because a portion of the claim was afterwards patented as agricultural land to one St. Cyr, as hereinafter mentioned. The Hope mine runs generally in a northerly and southerly direction, and the northerly half of the claim (that is, about one half) was on section 30 of a certain township, and the southerly half was in lot 1 of section 31, which lies immediately south of said section 30. At the time of the location it does not appear that lot 1 of section 31 had been patented, but it does appear that about three months afterwards a patent issued from the United States government to said St. Cyr for said lot 1. The northerly part of the mine in section 30 still is public land of the United States. Nearly all the work that has been done by plaintiff and his grantors on said mine is on the southerly portion of it, and upon the ground which lies within said section 31, afterwards patented to St. Cyr; and, as before said, there is no doubt that more than sufficient work was done on the said southerly portion to hold the whole mining claim. Indeed, it appears that about $25,000 has been spent on the mine by plaintiff and his grantors. Under these circumstances, appellant contends that the whole location of the Hope mine made by Araya and Ralston in April, 1880, is void, because the southerly portion of it was upon land not open to location, and that, therefore, the work done upon the southerly part of the mine was of no value, in point of giving possession to the upper portion. It appears, however, that, within a couple of months after the location of the Hope mine, Araya and Ralston procured from the claimants of said lot 1, in section 31, a conveyance to them of the right to mine said Hope mine, on the said lot 1; and, under these circumstances, we do not think that appellant's position is tenable. If, after the second location, in 1880, plaintiff's grantors allowed St. Cyr, without opposition, to procure a patent to lot 1, as agricultural land, of course they could not have made any successful contention for the mine, as against the holders of the agricultural patent. It does not appear whether or not, at the time of the location of the mine, they knew that there was any claim of any kind for the land, as agricultural land. It was quite a common thing for miners, in locating mining claims, to be ignorant of government legal subdivisions, and of the inchoate rights of other persons to agricultural titles. In the present case the locators of the mine acquired from the agricultural owners the right to work the mine; and under these circumstances we do not think that a third person, not connecting himself with the St. Cyr right, is in a position to dispute the validity of the mining location. Appellant claims under a location made several years afterwards, to wit, in 1887; and his successful contest of respondent's right must rest upon the very narrow and technical point that a portion of the location of respondent was not on public land. But the real prior right, in justice, and in accordance with the generally received notion of valid mining locations, is with the respondent; and we know of no absolute rule of law which makes such a location as that of respondent invalid, as against the subsequent comer, who evidently relies wholly upon this supposed defect in respondent's location. There is no question that the land in contest between the parties in this action is unoccupied public land, and the contention that respondent cannot hold it because a portion of the ground located at the time was not public land cannot be maintained. Moreover, it appears from the evidence that the northerly portion of the Hope mine could be profitably worked only by commencing on the southerly portion, and working northerly; and it has been frequently held that work done for the purpose of developing a mine is deemed to have been done on the mine, although actually done at a distance therefrom. Neither is the position tenable that there could not have been a valid relocation of the mine by plaintiff's grantors. Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 528, 14 Pac. Rep. 182.

Appellant cites Gwillim v. Donnellan, 115 U. S. 45, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1110. In that case, plaintiff claimed that his grantor, Thomas, had discovered a vein, and sunk a discovery shaft at a certain point, and thereupon made a valid location. But it appeared that he had not made such discovery; that one Fallon had previously made the discovery, and had previously made a valid prior location of the claim, and had made application for a patent; that Thomas did not contest Fallon's application; and that Fallon obtained a patent for his location, which included the discovery shaft of Thomas. And the court held that "a location on account of the discovery of a vein or lode can only be made by a discoverer, or one who holds under him," and that, "if the title to the discovery fails, so must the location which rests on it." The court further said that "the issue of the patent to Fallon was equivalent to a determination by the United States in an adversary proceeding, to which Thomas was in law a party, that Fallon had title to the discovery superior to that of Thomas, and that consequently Thomas' location was invalid." It is apparent, therefore, that the facts in that case were different from those in the case at bar. There nothing was involved but mining locations and rights; and the decision went upon the theory that the whole claim of Thomas rested upon an alleged "discovery," which he had not made, but which had previously been made by Fallon. And Thomas obtained no rights from Fallon, and did not connect himself with Fallon in any way. But in the case at bar the mining location of plaintiff's grantors was long prior to that of defendant, and was in every way a perfect location, except so far as it might be embarrassed by the rights of the subsequent agricultural patentee, with whom defendant does not connect himself in any way; and therefore we think that, as against the appellant, the title of respondent to that part of the Hope mine which is in conflict with the Scorpion mine is complete. To hold otherwise would be to commit an injustice which the law applicable to mining locations and rights does not demand.

There were numerous exceptions taken at the trial which we do not deem it necessary to notice. It is sufficient to say that we do not think that the court erred in excluding the judgment roll in the case of Wolfig v. McCormick, and that there was no error committed in rulings concerning the testimony of the witnesses Tanzey and Araya. The other exceptions were either not well taken, or concern immaterial matters. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 27

BULL et al. v. STRONG. (No. 19,108.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1893.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—MORTGAGE ON SEPARATE ESTATE.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage on a wife's separate estate, plaintiff alleged that defendant and her husband executed and delivered a deed conveying land to him "in trust, the conditions of which are stated in a separate instrument in the hands of the parties of the first part;" that the deed was intended as a mortgage for moneys advanced to defendant's husband, and that at the time of its delivery plaintiff executed and delivered to defendant and her husband a defeasance. The court found that no such contract was made with defendant's husband, that the defeasance was never delivered, and that defendant knew nothing of it until after her husband's death. Held, that a judgment for defendant was proper.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; William P. Wade, Judge.

Action by Alpheus Bull, Jr., and others, executors of Alpheus Bull, deceased, against Hattie Strong. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wells, Monroe & Lee, for appellants. S. M. White, John D. Bicknell, and Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was originally commenced by Alpheus Bull, now deceased, against John T. Coe, administrator of Charles L. Strong, deceased, and his widow, Hattie W. Strong, to foreclose a mortgage executed to said Bull by said Charles and Hattie Strong upon land admitted to have been the separate property of said Hattie. Judgment was first rendered in favor of the defendants; and upon appeal to this court the judgment was reversed, and a new trial ordered. See Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 54, 18 Pac. Rep. 808. After the return of the remittitur the pleadings were amended several times; and the action was prosecuted by the administrators of Alpheus Bull against Hattie W. Strong, alone, it having been dismissed by the plaintiffs as to the administrator of said Charles L. Strong. Judgment was again rendered in favor of the defendant Hattie W. Strong, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. It is averred in the complaint that on October 31, 1882, the said Charles L. Strong, since deceased, and his wife, the said Hattie W. Strong, duly executed to said Bull, deceased, a deed which conveyed to said Bull the land in contest, which provided, however, that the said land "is herein made over to the party of the second part in trust, the conditions of which are stated in a separate instrument in the hands of the parties of the first part." It is averred in the complaint that this deed was given and intended as a mortgage to secure certain moneys advanced or to be advanced by said Bull to said Charles L. Strong; that this deed was delivered the next day, November 1st, by said Charles to said Bull; and that at the time of its delivery the said Bull executed and delivered to said Charles and Hattie Strong an agreement in writing dated November 1, 1882, and which is called generally the "defeasance." This defeasance refers to said deed of October 31st, and declares that it was given in trust to secure the payment, with interest at 9 per cent., of all moneys advanced or to be advanced by Bull in payment of said Charles L. Strong's one-third interest in the Belmont mine, as well as for the expense of working said mine, the amount not to exceed $11,000. It also provided that the profits of said mine should be applied in payment of the money thus advanced; and that, if such profits should not be sufficient to pay said advances, then said Bull should have the right to sell such portion of the land as should be necessary to meet the deficiency. There is a rather obscure provision about "twelve months from the date of this instrument," and there are some other provisions not necessary to be here stated. The answer denies that said defeasance was delivered either to said Charles or to said Hattie Strong at the time alleged in the complaint, or at any time. Said defendant Hattie Strong also denies in her answer that said deed was delivered to said Bull for any such purpose as that stated in the defeasance; and she avers that the deed was given only for the purpose of raising some money, if it should become necessary, not exceeding $3,000, to pay her expenses for a trip east to be treated for her ill health, and for certain family expenses. She also denies that any money was advanced by Bull on said deed; and furthermore that the profits, sale, etc., of said mine, all of which were received and controlled by said Bull, more than repaid him for any advances which he may have made for her said husband in the business of said mine. Many other issues were made by the pleadings, but they are not necessary to be here noticed. Evidence was introduced at the trial as to a great many matters, and the findings are very full and quite lengthy. But the court finds, among other things, that the said defeasance "was never delivered to the said C. L. Strong in his lifetime, nor was it drawn up in the presence of said Strong, nor was any such contract as set forth in said defeasance ever made between said Alpheus Bull and the said C. L. Strong;" and that said defendant Hattie Strong knew nothing of said alleged defeasance until long after the death of her husband. We have carefully examined the long transcript and the exhaustive briefs of counsel, and we are satisfied that the court was warranted in making said findings. This being so, the judgment must be affirmed without reference to the many other points which arose in the case. We may say, however, that we see no material error in the rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence. As the appellants rely in their complaint upon the terms of the written defeasance, they could hardly recover upon any other theory; but as to the said statement of respondent that the deed was given to secure advances, if such should be found necessary, not to exceed $3,000, for her trip east, family expenses, etc., the court finds that if any moneys were advanced by Bull for such purpose they had been fully paid, and we cannot say that such finding was not warranted by the evidence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 149

SPINNEY v. GRIFFITH et al. (No. 18,014.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1893.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—MECHANICS' LIENS—WHO MAY CLAIM—RECORDING CONTRACT.

1. Const. art. 20, § 15, providing that mechanics, material men, etc., shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished material, etc., and the legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens, is not self-executing, but requires legislation to give a lien.

2. Code Civil Proc. § 1183, provides that mechanics, material men, contractors, subcontractors, etc., shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor, or furnished materials, for the value thereof. The section then provides that "in case of a contract for the work between the owner and his contractor, the lien shall extend to the whole contract price. * * * All such contracts shall be in writing when the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeds $1,000," and shall be recorded; "otherwise, they shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto; and in such case the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien" therefor. Held, that a contractor who fails to record his contract, where the agreed sum to be paid is over $1,000, can have no lien.

3. In such case the contractor cannot claim a lien under the first part of the section, on the ground that, his contract being void, he may recover on an implied contract for the services and materials furnished; since, though, under the common law, he may be entitled to recover on an implied contract, he cannot have a lien, as the lien is created by statute solely, and the statute must be complied with.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by John Spinney against Annie T. Griffith and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Sayle & Coldwell, for appellants. Church & Cory, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action to cancel a contract for the construction of a brick building in the city of Fresno, and to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants, Annie T. Griffith and S. N. Griffith, appeal. Defendant Annie T. Griffith is the wife of her codefendant, S. N. Griffith. She owned lots 8 and 9, in block 70, of the city of Fresno, and her husband owned, or had recently owned, lots 161 and 162, of the Central California Colony, near Fresno. On the 26th of February, 1890, the plaintiff, Joseph Spinney, entered into a written contract with the husband, S. N. Griffith, by which Spinney agreed to furnish the materials and build a brick building on said lots 8 and 9, in the city of Fresno, for the sum of $3,940, and to accept in full payment therefor a mortgage executed by one W. D. Crichton, for $4,000, on lots 161 and 162, in Central California Colony aforesaid. Crichton executed the mortgage to plaintiff in accordance with the contract, and the latter built the house, completing the same on or about June 1, 1890. About the time of the completion of the building, plaintiff discovered that he had been victimized in the matter of the mortgage which he had received in satisfaction of his building contract. S. N. Griffith had represented to him that he had sold the land in the Central California Colony to Crichton for $5,500, had received $1,500 of the purchase price in cash, and was to receive the mortgage of $4,000 as security for the residue of the consideration; whereas, in fact, the sale was a sham, no money had been paid, and the mortgage was only given to be palmed off upon plaintiff, the mortgaged property not being worth $2,500, etc.

In the view taken of the case, it is not deemed necessary to state at length the facts constituting the alleged fraud. Upon discovering the facts, plaintiff tendered the mortgage and notes, which it was given to secure, to Griffith, and demanded a rescission of the contract, which being refused, he proceeded and in due time filed a contractor's lien under the law for the "liens of mechanics and others" for $3,940 upon the building which he had constructed. It is alleged in the complaint, and found as true by the court, that, in making the contract, S. N. Griffith was the duly authorized agent of his wife, Annie T. Griffith, although that fact does not appear from the contract. The court below rendered a judgment annulling the contract between plaintiff and S. N. Griffith, and awarding the former a judgment for $3,940, with interest and attorneys' fees, amounting in the aggregate to $4,478.50 against the defendant Annie T. Griffith, and upholding the validity of plaintiff's lien upon her premises aforesaid.

Can so much of the judgment as holds the mechanic's lien of the plaintiff to be a valid and subsisting lien on the premises of the defendant be sustained? The lien of mechanics and others on buildings and the land upon which they are erected, as security for the amount due them for labor performed and the materials furnished, is the creation of statute, and was unknown either at common law or in equity. We must therefore look to the source of its being—the statute—alike for the right to such a lien and the mode by which it can be secured. The terms "statute" and "statute law" are here used in that broad and comprehensive sense which includes alike the organic law and the statute enacted under it. By section 15 of article 20 of our constitution it is provided that "mechanics, material men, artisans, and laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor, or furnished material, for the value of such labor done and material furnished; and the legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens." This declaration of a right, like many others in our constitution, is inoperative except as supplemented by legislative action. So far as substantial benefits are concerned, the naked right, without the interposition of the legislature, is like the earth before the creation, "without form and void;" or, to put it in the usual form, the constitution in this respect is not self-executing. Chapter 2, tit. 4, pt. 3, Code Civil Proc., contains the statutory provisions applicable to the case at bar. That chapter (Id. § 1183) provides that mechanics, material men, contractors, subcontractors, artisans, architects, machinists, builders, etc., performing labor, or furnishing materials, to be used, etc., shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor, or furnished materials, for the value of such labor done and materials furnished. The same section provides further: "In case of a contract for the work between the owner and his contractor, the lien shall extend to the whole contract price. * * * All such contracts shall be in writing when the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeds one thousand dollars, and shall be subscribed by the parties thereto, * * * and shall, before the work is commenced, be filed in the office of the county recorder of the county, or city and county, where the property is situated; * * * otherwise, they shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto; and in such case the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." It will be seen from this quotation that, when the amount agreed to be paid thereunder exceeds $1,000, the contract must be in writing, and shall be subscribed by the parties thereto, and must be filed and recorded before the work is commenced; otherwise it shall be wholly void. If the contract is wholly void, it cannot be made the basis of a substantial claim for a lien. A void contract is no contract; it is as though it had never existed. The statute, in addition to declaring the contract void, which would seem to be quite sufficient for practical purposes, goes a step further, and declares that "no recovery can be had thereon by either party thereto." If no recovery can be had thereon, manifestly no lien thereunder would be of avail.

It has been contended that, while the contractor cannot take a lien and recover under the contract, still, the contract being void, and a lien being given by the earlier part of the section to contractors as well as to others, he is, upon well-established rules, entitled to recover upon an implied contract for the services and materials furnished, and, being so entitled to recover, and the lien being assured to contractors, he may have and enforce it. The contention may seem plausible, but is the position tenable? First, the right to recover upon a quantum meruit for services, and upon a quantum valebat for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered, in case no value or price has been agreed upon by the parties, and in some cases where an attempted contract is void, is a creation of the common law, founded upon the equitable theory that he who has received and been benefited by the services or goods should pay a reasonable compensation therefor. The rule is not one created or dependent upon any statute, but exists independent thereof. The "lien law," as it is frequently termed, is with us pre-eminently a creature of the statute. It derives its existence only from positive enactment, and "not arising out of, or of the essence of, the contract for labor, or dependent on the motives which suggest its being enforced, * * * a remedy given by law, which secures the preference provided for, but which does not exist, however equitable the claim may be, unless the party brings himself within the provisions of the statute, and shows a substantial compliance with all its essential requirements." Phil. Mech. Liens, § 9. This being so, the right to a lien is not a corollary of the right to recover, but, while dependent upon such right for its efficacy, is an independent creation of the statute. Looking, then, to the text of the statute, it may be said the contractor whose contract is for more than $1,000, and whose contract is not in writing, and is not filed for record, cannot enforce his lien under the contract, because it is declared void. He cannot have a lien independent of the contract, because the statute by implication forbids it. "In such case the labor done and material furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof."

All persons except the contractor shall have a lien. If it was intended that the contractor, too, was in such a case to have a lien, why was he excepted? To hold that he may under such circumstances have a lien is to hold the exception nugatory. The statute must be construed so as to give effect to all its provisions, and, when so construed, the contractor whose remuneration is in excess of $1,000, and who has failed to comply with the provisions as to execution and recording his contract, is without the pale of the class to which liens are given by such statute. The reason of the exception is apparent. It is in the interest of laborers, subcontractors, and material men. In contracts of magnitude they are afforded a medium by which to judge as to the security afforded them under the contract. The penalty upon the owner failing to record is found in his liability to pay for all the labor performed and materials furnished; while the contractor, for like negligence, is shut out of the class of persons to whom a mechanic's lien is given, and relegated to the personal liability of the owner given him, not by the statute, but independent of it. These views of the law preclude the right of plaintiff to a mechanic's lien. He was an original contractor, and, as such, entered into a written contract with defendant, by which he agreed to construct for the latter a building, the consideration for which was in excess of $1,000. The contract was not at any time filed for record, or recorded, as required by section 1183, Code Civil Proc. It was therefore void, and plaintiff was not entitled to a lien. Under the circumstances of this case, we may regret the conclusion to which we are forced, but we have no duty except to declare the law as we find it. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and the court below directed to take such action as may be proper, and in consonance with the views expressed herein.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order should be reversed, and the court below is directed to take such action as may be proper and in consonance with the views expressed herein.

98 Cal. 157

GRAY v. McWILLIAMS. (No. 18,098.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1893.)

SURFACE WATER—EASEMENT OF FLOWAGE—OVERFLOW FROM RIVERS.

1. The owner of the lower or servient land must permit the surface water from the higher land of his neighbor to flow unobstructed over his lower land. Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, followed.

2. The rule that the owner of the lower or servient land must permit the surface water from the higher land of his neighbor to flow unobstructed over his lower land does not apply to the overflow of water from the large rivers of the state, and the owners of land along such streams have the right to construct levees or embankments to protect their land from such overflows, though the effect thereof may be to prevent the free discharge of such water, or may tend to increase the flow of such water on the land of their neighbor, not so protected. Lamb v. Reclamation Dist., 14 Pac. Rep. 625, 73 Cal. 125, followed.

3. If the owner of higher land upon a river subject to overflow fails to erect levees or embankments to protect his land from the effect of floods, his neighbor owning lower land in his rear may protect himself from such floods by erecting a levee on his own land, though the effect may be to increase the flood waters on the higher land of the neighbor, who has not so protected himself. McDaniel v. Cummings, 23 Pac. Rep. 795, 83 Cal. 515, followed.

4. Water seeping from a river through an embankment or levee constructed by the owner of the higher land near the river is not overflow from which the owner of neighboring lower land may protect himself by an embankment, thus accumulating it upon the higher land, but is like surface water, and he is bound to permit it to flow off over his lower land.

Commissioners' decision. Department I. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county; W. H. Grant, Judge.

Action by Mary Gray against A. S. McWilliams. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. W. Brown, for appellant. II. M. Albery and K. Albery, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Action to remove and abate as a nuisance an embankment or levee, erected by defendant upon his own land, but which held back and caused water to flow upon the land of plaintiff, and to recover damages for injury caused thereby. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. The plaintiff, Mary Gray, has been since 1888 the owner in fee in her own right, and in possession, of a tract of land consisting of over 40 acres, situate in the county of Colusa. The defendant, A. S. McWilliams, is, and since September, 1887, has been, the owner of and in possession of a tract of land of over 200 acres, lying south of and adjoining plaintiff's land for a distance of 80 rods. Upon the dividing line, between the land of plaintiff and defendant, is a roadway or avenue 50 feet wide, known as "Fruitvale Avenue." Upon the center of this avenue is an embankment, constructed in 1884, by the grantors of plaintiff and defendant, for the double purpose of a roadway, and as a check to hold water for irrigation purposes. This embankment, which runs east and west, if maintained intact throughout its length, prevents the water accumulating on the north side from flowing in a southerly or southwesterly direction to and upon the land of defendant, and, as a consequence, causes or tends to cause the same to accumulate upon the land of plaintiff. In the winter of 1889 and 1890, defendant closed up a water way through this embankment, in consequence of which plaintiff's land was flooded, her orchard thereon injured, etc. The land north and east of that of plaintiff is slightly higher than plaintiff's land, there being a slight slope over the lands of plaintiff and defendant towards the southwest. These lands are all on the west side of the Sacramento river, and east of them and on the west side of said river is a large levee, to protect the country from overflow in times of flood. West of this large levee, and east of the lands of the plaintiff and defendant, is a raised wagon road leading from Colusa to Princeton, the general course of which is northwest and southeast. Through the embankment of this road there are several openings or water ways. The court finds that commencing at the Princeton road there is a trough, water course, or washout, running thence in a southwesterly direction across the lands of plaintiff and defendant, crossing Fruitvale avenue in its course. This "trough, water course, or washout," across plaintiff's land, and for 100 feet on the land of defendant, has abrupt banks, is about 3 feet deep, and from 12 to 14 feet wide. From a point on defendant's land, say 100 feet from his north line, this trough subsides into a depression or swale, which extends for a couple of miles in a southwesterly direction to Hoppins slough, which in turn connects with a large natural water course, called the "trough," etc. The court finds that this trough, water course, or washout was formed naturally by the action of the water, has existed certainly since 1881, and serves in time of rainy weather or high water to drain and carry off the surface and surplus water from plaintiff's land, and from lands of others naturally draining upon and over hers. The court finds, as to the sources from which the waters thus accumulating upon plaintiff's land came, as follows: "(9) That the water thus thrown back upon the plaintiff's land was surface water, and was composed partly of seepage water escaping from the Sacramento river by percolation through the river levee, and partly of rainfall; but what portion of said water was seepage or percolating water, and how much thereof was rain water, cannot be found or determined from the evidence; but there was no rush or great flow or volume of water spreading over the surface of the soil as in case of flood or overflow from the river, and at no time did it appear in such quantities but that it would have naturally passed off in the said water way or trough on plaintiff's and defendant's lands, had there been no obstruction in said water way or trough. There is a branch ditch on the west side of the Princeton road, which defendant claims by his answer served to concentrate the surface waters and seepage water coming from the Sacramento river, and pour them upon plaintiff's land at a fixed point, etc., but, as the finding of the court is against this view, the facts connected therewith need not be mentioned at length. Like considerations apply to matters of estoppel and prescription. To say that the evidence is sharply contradictory scarcely conveys an adequate idea of the antagonisms it presents. There is hardly an issue made in the case but that might have been decided differently, and the conclusion would have found support in the evidence. After the findings in the cause were filed, counsel for defendant asked the court, in addition to its findings, to pass upon 18 additional propositions, which were offered in writing, which request was refused. Some of these propositions involved facts and issues already passed upon; others may be regarded as involving evidentiary, rather than ultimate, facts, and, while it would have been of interest here to have had an exposition of a few of them, we cannot say, in the face of the somewhat full and explicit findings, that any error was committed by the court in its refusal.

Among the conclusions of law deduced by the court were: "(1) That plaintiff's land is the dominant tenement, and defendant's land the servient tenement; that the water which was obstructed, and caused the injury to plaintiff, was surface water, and that the plaintiff had an easement, and defendant owed plaintiff a servitude for the flowage of such water from plaintiff's land onto and across defendant's land. (2) That the embankment of earth or obstruction complained of was a nuisance, and should be abated as such," etc.

Had plaintiff an easement in the land of defendant for the flow of the water in question over it? "An easement is a privilege without profit, which the owner of one tenement has a right to enjoy, in respect of that tenement, in or over the tenement of another person, by reason whereof the latter is obliged to suffer or refrain from doing something on his own tenement for the advantage of the former." Godd. Easement, p. 2; Stevenson v. Wallace, 27 Grat. 87; Ritger v. Parker, 8 Cush. 147. "A charge or burden upon one estate, (the servient,) for the benefit of another, (the dominant.)" Morrison v. Marquardt, 24 Iowa, 35. Easements are of two kinds, similar to one another in many respects, but differing in many particulars. To the first class belong those easements created by act of man, and to the second those which are given by the law to every owner of land. This latter class is given by law, because without them there would be no security in the enjoyment of land by its owner. Without them a neighbor might deprive a landowner of the benefits derivable from things which in the course of nature have been provided for the common good of all, and which the law wisely provides shall not be wrested from one by the act of another. These easements are said to be inherent in the land ex jure nature, and are often termed "natural rights." A careful review of the adjudicated cases will, it is believed, show that a good deal of obscurity has been thrown around many questions connected with the subject under consideration, by a failure to observe the line of demarcation between these two classes of easements. As it is with the latter class that we have exclusively to do in the present case, we must eliminate from consideration such rules of construction as apply exclusively to easements founded upon grant or prescription.

What then is the "natural right" of the plaintiff in the premises? It is claimed that at common law it was held that no natural easement or servitude existed in favor of the owner of the superior or higher land, as to mere surface water, or such as falls or accumulates by rains or the melting of snow; and that the proprietor of the inferior or lower tenement or estate might at his option lawfully obstruct or hinder the flow of such water thereon; and in so doing might turn back or off of his own lands, and onto and over the lands of other proprietors, such water, without liability by reason of such obstruction or diversion. It is also claimed that the doctrine of the civil law is almost directly the reverse of that of the common law, and that under it the owner of the upper or dominant estate has a natural easement or servitude in the lower or servient one, to discharge all waters falling or accumulating on his land which is higher, upon or over the land of the servient owner as in a state of nature; and that such natural flow or passage of the waters cannot be interrupted or prevented by the servient owner, to the detriment or injury of the estate of the dominant proprietor. And as that conclusion is in unison with the doctrine on the same subject of the courts of fully one half of the states of our Union, all professing to be controlled as we are by the common law, we are justified in saying that with us the rule established has become and is a part of our common law. The case of Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, in which this court, in a well-considered opinion, held in substance that where two parcels of land belonging to different owners are adjacent to each other, and one is lower than the other, and the surface water from the higher tract has been accustomed by a natural flow to pass off over the lower tract, the owner of such upper tract of land has an easement to have the water flow over the land below, and the lower tract is charged with a corresponding servitude. In McDaniel v. Cummings, 83 Cal. 515, 23 Pac. Rep. 795, the court was urged to overrule Ogburn v. Connor, but refused to do so, placing such refusal upon the ground of stare decisis. The case was, however, distinguished from Ogburn v. Connor, and passed off upon the principle laid down in Lamb v. Reclamation Dist., 73 Cal. 125, 14 Pac. Rep. 625. In view of the reasoning and conclusions in McDaniel v. Cummings, and Lamb v. Reclamation Dist., it may be fairly assumed, as the consensus of opinion on the part of the court: (1) That the owner of the lower or servient tenement must permit the surface water from the higher land of his neighbor to flow unobstructed over his lower land, as held in Ogburn v. Connor, supra. (2) That the rule of Ogburn v. Connor does not apply to the overflow of water from the large rivers of the state, and that the owners of land along such streams have a right to construct levees or embankments for the protection of their lands from the ravages of flood waters, although the effect thereof may be to prevent the free discharge of such flood waters in as large and ample a manner as they would otherwise do, or may tend to increase the flow of water upon lands not similarly protected, as was held in Lamb v. Reclamation Dist., supra. (3) That if the owner of higher land upon a river subject to overflow fails to erect levees or embankments to protect his land from the effect of floods, his neighbor owning lower land in his rear may protect himself from such floods by erecting a levee upon his own land, although the effect thereof may be to increase the flood waters on the higher land of the neighbor, who has not resorted to like means of protection, as was held in McDaniel v. Cummings, supra. If there is an essential difference in the conclusions reached in these several cases, the reasons for such difference are to be found in the elementary facts forming their basis.

In the case of flood waters escaping from natural streams, we view them, it is true, as a common enemy, against which we may protect ourselves without the commission of a wrong; but after all, this declaration is used in view of the means of defense resorted to, rather than in the abstract. We build the banks of the river higher for our protection, it is true, but in so doing we aid nature in her effort to carry the water to its ultimate destination, and he who, to protect himself from a flood, should erect a barrier across the channel of one of our important rivers, would probably be met with the declaration that it was not the proper mode of warfare, even against a "common enemy." In the case of surface waters having no defined channels of escape, and the owner of the land upon which they are found being impotent to rid himself of their presence, the law wisely provides that the laws of nature shall be left untrammelled in their disposition.

Was the water held back by defendant's embankment surface water, in the sense that defendant was legally inhibited from retarding its passage over his land? Surface water is usually defined to be such as falls from the clouds in the form of rain or snow, or rises to the surface in springs. The reason why the owner of the higher land has an easement in the lower land for their escape is to be found not so much in the source from which they are derived, as in the fact that nature has adopted this method of ridding the land of their presence in surplus quantity. I can see no good reason why the water which accumulated upon the land of plaintiff should not be subject to the rules in regard to surface water, as defined in Ogburn v. Connor, supra. A portion of such water (how much the court cannot determine) came from the seepage through the levee built to protect, or which at least does protect, all these lands from overflow. The evidence showed that this river levee was a large and high one; that the winter of 1889-90 was one of heavy floods; that for some months the water was several feet above the general level of the country, and that gradually the levee became saturated until the water seeped or percolated through and under it; that it came to the surface much as springs do, and gradually sought a lower level, not in a defined channel, but as surface water is wont to do, by percolation and by the force of gravity. It came without any act or agency of the plaintiff, and as she was, so far as appears, powerless to direct its course, it would seem rational to say that, like other surface water coming without volition, it should be permitted to pass off by the method devised by nature. It must be within the observation of many of us that these large levees, in time of protracted flood, however well constructed, are not so impervious to water under pressure but that percolation or seepage to some extent is liable to occur. Constructed as they are in this state, under the encouragement of law, for the general benefit, and effecting as they usually do great good to individuals and communities, it would seem natural that the minor inconveniences inevitable and inseparable from their existence should be borne by those upon whom they naturally fall, and that to concentrate the whole effect upon a single individual is not in consonance with our views of justice under such circumstances. Had the defendant left the water way through Fruitvale avenue open, as he was in duty bound to do, to allow the escape of what, beyond all cavil, was the surface water upon the land of plaintiff, this seepage water, according to the finding of the court, would have passed off without injury to plaintiff, and, so far as appears, without detriment to any one. If the presence of this seepage water enhanced the servitude imposed upon defendant's land, it was without the action of plaintiff, and was and is a condition not dependent upon the acts of the parties, the result of which all the landowners subject to its effect must bear in their turn.

The only theory suggesting itself under which a different conclusion could be reached is to be found in the doctrine of McDaniel v. Cummings, supra, holding that, upon the failure of the landowner next the river to construct a levee, the owner of lower land in the rear of him can do so, even though the higher land near the river is surcharged with flood water as a consequence. If this may be done, it may be asked in case a levee is built by the landowner next the river, as in this case, which restrains the major portion of the flood water, why may not the owner of lower land in the rear, as in case of this defendant, protect himself from the minor portion or seepage water by a sublevee, even though it increases the quantity of water upon the owner of higher land, as in case of plaintiff here? The answer must be that the rule enunciated in McDaniel v. Cummings was in consonance with a sound public policy favoring a cherished object, viz. the reclamation and improvement of valuable lands subject to overflow, and was well calculated to meet and do justice in cases where the owners of higher lands along the rivers refuse or neglect to construct levees, or to join with their neighbors in doing so. It does not apply here, because a main levee has been built upon the higher land contiguous to the river, which appears to effect, in the main, the object of its construction. To permit each owner of lower lands in the rear to construct sublevees to hold back the seepage water escaping from the main levee would be to permit them to flood the protected higher land in front, and thus practically to frustrate the beneficial results of the main levee. Such a rule, when thus extended, would tend to retard rather than promote improvement and consequent prosperity. As a conclusion, after a careful examination of the case in all its different aspects, it is held that the court below was correct in its conclusions that plaintiff, as the owner of the higher land, had an easement or right to have all the water in question, including what was termed "seepage water," flow from her land to, upon, and over the land of defendant, and to that extent the land of defendant was the servient, and that of the plaintiff the dominant, tenement. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

98 Cal. 166

WHITE et al. v. FRESNO NAT. BANK.
(No. 14,758.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1893.)

CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—JURISDICTION—RES JUDICATA—APPEAL.

1. In an action by a contractor for constructing a building, defendant cannot set off damages for plaintiff's failure to complete the building within the time prescribed by the contract, where such failure was due solely to its own negligence.

2. Where the supreme court denies an application by a defendant corporation for a writ of prohibition, to prohibit the trial court from proceeding in the action, based on the ground that it has acquired no jurisdiction, the question of jurisdiction is res judicata on appeal by defendant from a subsequent judgment in the action.

3. In an action by a building contractor, defendant cannot for the first time on appeal complain that the plans and specifications referred to in the contract set out in the complaint, and introduced in evidence, were not attached to or made a part thereof, and hence that the contract was not in its entirety filed for record as required by statute.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by W. C. White and F. R. Thomas, partners, etc., against the Fresno National Bank. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nourse & Short, for appellant. Baldwin & Campbell, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This action was brought to recover a balance alleged to be due from defendant to plaintiffs for the construction of its bank building in the city of Fresno. Plaintiffs are assignees of the contractor, and his contract was confined to the woodwork of the building. The contractor completed his work to the satisfaction of the architect, but the bank claims that it was not done within the time fixed by the terms of the contract, and by reason thereof it suffered damage in loss of rents, etc., and asks a set-off to that extent. Judgment went for the plaintiff, a motion for a new trial was denied, and the appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and order.

The principal point upon which appellant relies for a reversal of the judgment is that by virtue of section 16, art. 12, of the constitution, defendant, being a corporation, could not be sued in San Joaquin county, and therefore no jurisdiction was ever obtained over it. When this action was originally brought, the bank objected to the jurisdiction of the superior court of San Joaquin county to proceed in the matter, and applied to this court for a writ of prohibition based upon such alleged want of jurisdiction, asking for an order directing that court to refrain from further proceedings in the case. The application for the writ was heard in bank, and denied, and a petition for a rehearing was also denied. 83 Cal. 491, 24 Pac. Rep. 157. While such decision may not, technically speaking, be the law of the case, yet it is res adjudicata as to that subject; and, notwithstanding the industry and learning disclosed in the present discussion of the question by appellant's counsel, we shall treat the matter as settled and foreclosed by the former decision.

Appellant's affirmative defense is based upon the failure of the contractor to complete the building within the time agreed upon, and in this respect the court found that such failure was not due to any fault or neglect of the contractor, but was attributable entirely to the negligence of the defendant. The contractor's evidence supports this finding, and we cannot disturb it. The mere fact that the brick and iron work was finished in December, and the contractor did not complete the building until some four months after that time, is not of itself sufficient to overthrow the finding of the court that the delay was not occasioned by his fault or neglect. There was also some evidence tending to show that the contract was filed in the recorder's office prior to the commencement of the work, and no evidence to the contrary.

It is insisted that the contract set out in the complaint, and introduced in evidence, is incomplete, in this: that the plans and specifications therein referred to are not attached and made a part thereof, and consequently the contract in its entirety was not filed for record, as required by the statute. No demurrer was offered to the complaint upon this ground. The answer admitted the contract as set out in the complaint, and the contract itself was introduced in evidence without objection. It is too late to raise the question for the first time in this court. The authorities cited do not support appellant's contention in this regard. In Holland v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 434, 18 Pac. Rep. 412, the question arose upon a special demurrer. In Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. Rep. 1111, it came before the court upon an objection to the evidence. Rebman v. Water Co., 95 Cal. 394, 30 Pac. Rep. 564, does not appear to be in point. The errors of law are not well taken. Let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

98 Cal. 171

BURKE v. BOURS et al. (No. 18,087.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1893.)

EJECTMENT—FINDINGS OF FACT—REVIEW ON APPEAL—PURCHASE OF LAND BY FORMER AGENT—EQUITABLE TITLE—EVIDENCE.

1. Where, in ejectment, there is evidence supporting the findings of the trial court, its decision, either on the weight of the testimony or the credibility of the witnesses, will not be reviewed on appeal.

2. In ejectment it appeared that the owner's agents employed defendant to sell the land in dispute; that he informed such agents that he had a purchaser, and sent them a deed in which neither the name of the grantee nor the consideration was inserted; that such agents forwarded the deed to the owner, who inserted the consideration, and returned it executed to such agents, who sent it to defendant. Afterwards the latter informed such agents that the supposed purchaser refused to take the land; that he had caused his own name to be inserted in the deed as grantee, and, if satisfactory to the owner, he would take the land. The owner consented, and defendant sent the price to such agents, and took possession. Held, that defendant was not acting as the owner's agent in making the sale to himself, but was a purchaser dealing directly with the owner, and obtained a good title to the land, in the absence of any fraud on his part.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action in ejectment by W. G. Burke, administrator of the estate of Jose R. Arguello, deceased, against B. W. Bours and F. A. Ruhl, Bours' tenant. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

For reports of decisions on prior appeals, see 28 Pac. Rep. 57, and Arguello v. Bours, 8 Pac. Rep. 49.

George D. Collins, for appellant. Jas. H. Budd, John E. Budd, and Nicoll & Orr, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. When this action was here upon the last appeal (92 Cal. 108, 28 Pac. Rep. 57) the facts before the court were that Bours had been employed by Faulkner, Bell & Co., who were agents of Arguello, to make a sale of the land, and had reported to them a sale thereof for the sum of $4,500, sending at the same time a form of a deed to be executed by Arguello, without, however, inserting the amount of the consideration or the name of the grantee; that Arguello filled in the amount of the consideration, and executed the deed without inserting the name of any grantee; that when Bours received the deed he caused his own name to be inserted therein as grantee, and sent his check for the amount of the purchase money to Faulkner, Bell & Co., who accounted for the same to Arguello. The judgment of the court below was reversed upon the grounds that Bours was to be regarded as the agent of Arguello for making a sale of the land, and could not, as such agent, make a sale to himself. After the cause went down, another trial was had, and, in addition to the facts found upon the preceding trial, the court found that, when Bours sent the deed to Faulkner, Bell & Co. for execution, he had negotiated a sale of the property to one Ahumaja for the sum of $4,500, but that when he received the deed, after it had been signed by Arguello, Ahumaja refused to consummate the purchase; that thereupon Bours had his own name inserted as the grantee in the deed, and wrote to Faulkner, Bell & Co., informing them of his failure to complete the sale, and "that he had had his own name inserted in said deed as grantee, and that, if this was agreeable to Mr. Arguello, he would take said property, and pay the said sum of $4,500 therefor, and that, if it was not agreeable to Mr. Arguello, he would return the said deed to him;" that a few days thereafter he received a letter from Faulkner, Bell & Co., inclosing one from Arguello, in which Arguello stated "that he was satisfied with Mr. Bours as the purchaser of said property, and that he was glad he had purchased it, and all that he (Arguello) wanted was to receive his money," that upon the receipt of this letter Bours caused the deed, which he had in the mean time kept in his possession, to be placed of record, and immediately remitted the $4,500 to Faulkner, Bell & Co., and entered into possession of the property, and has since remained in possession of the whole thereof; that upon the receipt of the money by Faulkner, Bell & Co. they informed Arguello that they had received from Bours the sum of $4,500 as the proceeds of said property, and had placed the same to his credit; and that Arguello immediately acknowledged the receipt of such information. The court also finds "that the said Jose R. Arguello, prior to the payment of the said purchase money by the said Bours, had full knowledge and notice that said B. W. Bours' name had been inserted in said deed as the grantee therein named after the signing thereof; and at the time of the receipt of said purchase price said Arguello had full knowledge and notice that said Bours was the grantee named in said deed, and had full knowledge and notice of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the said transaction." Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom, bringing up the evidence in a bill of exceptions, and specifying therein that it is insufficient to sustain certain of the findings. There was, however testimony before the court below supporting the above findings, and the decision of that court, both upon the weight of this testimony as well as upon the credibility of the witnesses, cannot be reviewed here.

The decision of this court upon the former appeal was based upon the fact that it then appeared that Bours was the agent of Arguello for the purpose of making a sale of the land, and that the purchase by him was made without the knowledge of Arguello that he was such purchaser, and upon the well-established principle of law that when these facts were brought to the knowledge of the principal he had the right to have the sale set aside at his option, irrespective of any question of fraud or unfairness or advantage. It was said in the opinion at that hearing, "while a trustee may purchase the trust property where he deals openly with his beneficiary in the sale, and the transaction is in all respects fair and just, and the consideration full and adequate, yet that is not this case. Neither does the evidence disclose that Arguello ratified and confirmed the sale to Bours after a full knowledge of all the facts. Aside from the fact that Bours sent his personal check to Faulkner, Bell & Co. for the amount of the purchase price, there is nothing in the record to indicate that Arguello had any knowledge whatever that Bours was the purchaser.

* * * Having decided that defendant occupied such relations towards Arguello that he would not be allowed to become a purchaser of this real estate unless the sale was made with the full knowledge and consent of Arguello, or ratified and confirmed by him after a full knowledge of all the facts, neither of which conditions existed in this case, it necessarily follows that he is not the vendee under an executed contract of sale, and possesses no equity sufficient to defeat plaintiff's rights to a recovery of the possession of this tract of land." The conditions under which the judgment of this court was then rendered do not now exist. It now appears not only that Bours dealt openly with Arguello in the sale, and that the transaction was fair and just, and the consideration full and adequate, but it also appears that "the sale was made with the full knowledge and consent of Arguello." These circumstances take the case out of the principles announced at the former hearing, and show a complete defense to a recovery by the plaintiffs. There is no inhibition upon a purchase by an agent from his principal, "where the facts are fully disclosed, and the agent acts in good faith, taking no advantage of his situation. The principal may, if he sees fit, deal with the agent as with any other person." Mecham, Ag. § 466; Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562, 4 N. E. Rep. 203. The agent has the same right to deal directly with his principal as has a stranger. The rule which prevents the agent from purchasing the property which he is authorized to sell for his principal is based upon the maxim that no man can serve two masters, and that an agent shall not unite in his own person his individual with his representative character, or place himself in a position where his personal interest will be in conflict with his duty to his principal. When, however, the agent deals with his principal "at arm's length, and after a full disclosure of all that he knows with respect to the property," (Murphy v. O'Shea, 2 Jones & La. T. 425,) or when the principal ratifies the purchase from himself with full knowledge of the circumstances connected with the transaction, he can thereafter avoid the sale only upon the same grounds as if the purchase had been made by a stranger. The powers of an agent in dealing with the property of his principal are limited in the same manner as those of a trustee. A trustee is not forbidden to deal with the trust property when the beneficiary, with a full knowledge of the motives of the trustee and of all other facts concerning the transaction which might affect his own decision, and without the use of any influence on the part of the trustee, permits him to do so. Civil Code, § 2230.

The present case does not fall within the rule which is applicable when an agent with a power of sale makes a sale to himself. Bours did not have any power of sale from Arguello, and did not in fact make any sale to himself. His relation to Arguello, resulting from his original employment by Faulkner, Bell & Co., was rather that of a broker than an agent for sale, and his subsequent proposition to them that he would himself purchase the land from Arguello at the price of $4,500 placed him in the position of a purchaser dealing directly with the owner. Faulkner, Bell & Co. were the agents of Arguello for the sale of the property, and the persons to whom Bours, if he desired to purchase the same, would naturally make application. He had had no direct correspondence with Arguello, and his offer and information to Faulkner, Bell & Co. must be regarded the same as if made to Arguello. Although his previous relation to Arguello, by virtue of having been employed to make a sale of the property, still left him charged with the duty of disclosing any facts or circumstances affecting the property which might have come to his knowledge while holding such fiduciary relation, yet the record does not show that there was any concealment or silence on his part which would make him guilty of constructive fraud. When Bours wrote to Faulkner, Bell & Co., making the proposition to purchase the property himself from Arguello for the sum of $4,500, he was not acting as the agent of Arguello in making a sale of the premises to himself, but was making a direct proposition to Arguello through Faulkner, Bell & Co., who were his agents for the sale of the property. Arguello had been previously informed of all that Bours had done in attempting to effect the sale, and it is not disputed that $4,500 was the full value of the property. The court finds that, when Bours was first employed in behalf of Arguello, he wrote to Faulkner, Bell & Co., "fully advising them of the condition of the said property;" and that, after the receipt of that letter, Arguello stated "that he agreed with Mr. Bours' opinion of the property;" and that, after Bours had endeavored to make a sale of the property, he again wrote to Faulkner, Bell & Co., "advising them therein of what he had done;" and that, as soon as he had found a purchaser, he informed Faulkner, Bell & Co. thereof. These findings are not excepted to, and, as it is not claimed that there were any facts or circumstances within the knowledge of Bours that he failed to disclose, must be construed as equivalent to a finding that he made a full disclosure of all the information he had respecting the value or condition of the property. As the sale from Arguello to Bours is to be regarded as made upon a direct dealing between them for the purchase and sale of the property, the rules governing the ratification and confirmation by a principal of the act of his agent have no application. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; McFARLAND, J.

98 Cal. 199

YOSEMITE COMMISSIONERS v. BARNARD. (No. 18,093.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1893.)
LANDLORD AND TENANT — MISTAKE IN LEASE — HOLDING OVER — UNLAWFUL DETAINER — PLEADING AND PROOF.

1. On an issue as to mistake in a lease, testimony of the lessee that he understood that the lease was to run for 10 years from the expiration of a previous lease does not warrant the court in disregarding the terms of the lease that it should run 10 years from a named date.

2. In unlawful detainer the defense of an outstanding title against plaintiff, if available at all, cannot be taken advantage of unless pleaded, notwithstanding what the court finds on the subject.

3. In unlawful detainer against a tenant holding over, an outstanding lease by the landlord to a third person, under whom the tenant does not claim, is no defense.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county; John M. Corcoran, Judge.

Action by Yosemite Commissioners against Barnard. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Budd and Gould & McCabe, for appellant. W. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., and Oregon Sanders, (T. C. Coogan, of counsel,) for respondents.

HARRISON, J. Action of unlawful detainer. The complaint contains the ordinary allegations in an action of unlawful detainer brought by a landlord against his tenant, who continues in possession, against the will the landlord, after the expiration of the term. The defendant made no denial of these allegations, except that he denied that the term for which the premises were demised had expired, or that he held over contrary to the terms of the lease. He pleaded, however, as a separate defense to the action, that he signed the lease set forth in the complaint, but that that portion thereof fixing the term was intended to read "from the 1st day of January, 1885, for and during the full term of ten years then next ensuing," instead of 10 years from the 1st day of January, 1882, and that the insertion in the lease of words purporting to make the term commence on the 1st of January, 1882, was made "by inadvertence and mistake." The court found "that no mistake was made in the execution of said lease."

1. It is unnecessary to determine whether such a defense can be pleaded to an action of unlawful detainer, or whether the facts alleged in the present case would entitle the defendant to any remedy whatever. The defense was an affirmative one, and, unless sustained by evidence offered in its support, necessitated a finding against its existence. The defendant, however, failed to offer any competent evidence that the plaintiffs ever intended to make him a lease of the premises for any term other than that expressed in the instrument which was executed between them, and his testimony that he understood that the lease was to run for 10 years from the expiration of a previous lease did not require the court to disregard his written agreement in the lease itself that it was to run for only 10 years from the 1st of January, 1882. The finding of the trial court upon this conflict of evidence cannot be reviewed in this court.

2. The court found "that on August 1, 1891, plaintiffs executed a written lease for the property described in the complaint to one Glascock for a period of one year from January 1, 1892, at a nominal rent." It is contended by appellant that by reason of this finding the plaintiffs were not entitled to the possession of the premises, and that judgment should therefore have been rendered in his favor. The defendant did not, however, allege any defense of this nature in his answer, and there was no issue before the court which authorized it to make the finding; and, consequently, being a finding outside of the issues in the case, it could not form an element in determining the judgment to be rendered. See McCreary v. Marston, 56 Cal. 403. But, if the pleadings had properly presented an issue upon which this finding could have been made, the finding itself falls short of constituting a defense to the plaintiffs' right of recovery, for the reason that the defendant does not connect himself with Glasscock, or show that he has succeeded to Glasscock's right to the possession of the premises. Such a defense is in the nature of a plea of outstanding title, and even in those actions of ejectment that do not proceed upon strict title, but where only the right of possession is involved, the defense of outstanding title is not available to the defendant unless he connects himself with such title. Title, however, is never involved in an action of unlawful detainer. Felton v. Millard, 81 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. Rep. 533, and 22 Pac. Rep. 750. The tenant, having received the possession by the permission of his landlord, cannot compel the landlord to litigate the right of some other to that possession for which the tenant has no claim. As between him and his landlord, his contract as lessee obligates him to surrender the possession at the expiration of his term, and he cannot set up an outstanding title, or show any title in himself which has not been mediated or immediately derived from his landlord.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.; McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

93 Cal. 168

SCOTT v. GLENN. (No. 18,088.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1893.)

ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL — APPEAL — FAILURE TO FILE UNDERTAKING — DISMISSAL — TIME OF TAKING — SALE OF REAL ESTATE — FAILURE OF VENDEE TO SIGN CONTRACT — TENDER OF DEED — DEFAULT.

1. Where no undertaking is filed on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, such appeal will be dismissed.

2. Where an appeal from a judgment is not taken within 60 days, the evidence will not be considered.

3. Where a contract for the sale of land is signed by the vendors and delivered to the vendees, and a partial payment is made thereunder, it is valid, though not signed by the vendees.

4. A vendor of real estate is not in default because he fails to tender a deed at the time the last payment falls due, though time is expressly made of the essence of the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by A. E. D. Scott against G. R. G. Glenn on a contract for the sale of certain real estate. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. B. Graham, for appellant. J. P. Meux, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This action arises from a contract of sale of real estate, and was commenced to recover the sum of $600, paid to respondent and one Meux as a partial payment under the terms of the contract, and is based upon an alleged default upon the part of said respondent and Meux to carry out the terms of said contract. Glenn answered the complaint, denying the allegations thereof, and set out a cross complaint alleging tender of the deed, demand and refusal of the payment of the balance due, and asked judgment against Scott and his covendees under the contract for the balance due, and that the realty be held to satisfy such judgment. The cross complaint was denied. Meux, as a covendor, assigned his interest to Glenn, and judgment went in favor of defendant upon the main case, and also in his favor upon the cross complaint, and plaintiff appeals.

His appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial must be dismissed, as no undertaking was filed thereon; and, the appeal from the judgment not being taken within 60 days from the rendition thereof, we cannot look into the evidence, but must confine our examination to the pleadings, findings, and judgment.

1. It is insisted that the contract is void, as a contract for the sale of real estate, because not signed by the vendees. The vendor is the party to be charged, and his signature to the contract, taken in connection with a delivery thereof to the vendee, and a partial payment thereunder, binds both parties. Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458; Dennis v. Strassburger, 89 Cal. 583, 26 Pac. Rep. 1070; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 Pac. Rep. 249; Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 543, 26 Pac. Rep. 515.

2. The signature of Meux, the covendor, was attached to the contract by Glenn, and appellant claims this was done without authority. The court finds the act of Glenn in this regard was fully ratified in writing by Meux. The evidence is not before us, and the finding concludes the matter against appellant's contention.

3. It is insisted that the vendor is in default because he did not tender the deed at the time the last payment fell due; time being expressly made of the essence of the contract. Except as to the single case of Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 Pac. Rep. 280, which has since been overruled in this respect, the authorities are all opposed to this doctrine upon which appellant now relies. Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 Pac. Rep. 629; Smith v. Mohn, 87 Cal. 489, 25 Pac. Rep. 696; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 493, 27 Pac. Rep. 429; Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 609, 27 Pac. Rep. 934; Townsend v. Tufts, 95 Cal. 257, 30 Pac. Rep. 528; Joyce v. Shafer, (Cal.) 32 Pac. Rep. 320.

The findings of the court are full upon all the issues raised by the pleadings. They are favorable to defendant, and support the judgment rendered by the trial court. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment be affirmed, and the appeal from the order denying a new trial dismissed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

(93 Cal. 206)

PEOPLE v. SELMA IRRIGATION DIST.
(No. 18,031.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1893.)
IRRIGATION DISTRICT—DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION—NONUSER.

Since St. 1887, p. 29, providing for the organization and government of irrigation districts, and for the acquisition of water and other property, makes no provision for a judicial sentence dissolving a corporation formed thereunder because of a nonuser, an action cannot be maintained to dissolve such corpora-

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

33 PACIFIC REPORTER

98 Cal. 247

HUNTER v. BRYANT et al. (No. 15,151.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1893.)

ACTION ON OFFICIAL BOND — INSUFFICIENT COMPLAINT — AMENDED COMPLAINT — JUDGMENT — WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS — FAILURE TO ANSWER OR DEMUR — SERVICE OF SUMMONS — AUTHORITY OF ATTORNEY TO APPEAR — EVIDENCE — SURETIES — PRIOR JUDGMENT AGAINST CODEFENDANTS.

1. Where an amended complaint, on which judgment is rendered, is unobjectionable, the judgment will not be set aside because the original complaint did not state a cause of action.

2. Where an amended complaint contains material matters which should have been alleged by supplemental pleading the irregularity cannot be questioned for the first time on appeal.

3. On appeal by defendants on a judgment roll containing neither answer nor demurrer, the plea of the statute of limitations is unavailable.

4. Where, on a motion to set aside a default, the evidence as to whether or not the summons was served on defendants is full and conflicting, a refusal of the trial court to grant the motion will not be disturbed.

5. The appearance of an attorney in an action is prima facie evidence of authority, and a finding by the trial court that he had such authority will not be disturbed where the parties for whom he appeared fail to show lack of authority by "cogent and strong evidence."

6. In an action on an official bond it is not a valid objection by sureties to judgment against them that judgment had previously been taken in the case against their codefendants.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco, J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by David Hunter against A. J. Bryant, L. Koster, and H. Plagemann and others on the official bond of one Hubert, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion to set aside the default and judgment against Koster and Plagemann, the latter appeal. Affirmed.

Daniel Titus, for appellants. Tilden & Tilden, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from the judgment, and also from the order of the trial court denying a motion to set aside the default and judgment taken against the appellants, John L. Koster and H. Plagemann.

1. The appeal from the judgment is based upon the contention that the original complaint did not state a cause of action. Conceding, for the purposes of the case, that the original complaint was lacking in essentials, still the amended complaint is unobjectionable, and that is the pleading upon which the judgment was rendered. Admitting that material matters are set out in the amended complaint which should have been alleged by supplemental pleading, such an irregularity cannot be questioned for the first time in this court upon the claim of the failure of the plaintiff to state a cause of action. Neither can the plea of the statute of limitations avail appellants upon an appeal on a judgment roll containing neither answer nor demurrer.

2. It is insisted that the judgment should be set aside because appellants were not served with summons. The evidence upon this point is full and conflicting, and upon that evidence the trial court denied the motion to set aside. The contentions of the respective parties in this regard created a pure issue of fact, and upon that conflict of evidence the court found that service of summons had been made; and, there being sufficient evidence to support the finding, we will not disturb it. While it is said in Buell v. Emerich, 85 Cal. 116, 24 Pac. Rep. 644: "The power of the court should be freely and liberally exercised, * * * so as to dispose of cases upon their substantial merits,"—that language of the court has no reference to the question here involved. This is not a matter of discretion in the lower court, but a matter of pure legal right, and does not arise under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Norton v. Railroad Co., (filed Feb. 25, 1893,) (Cal.) 32 Pac. Rep. 452.

3. It is insisted that the judgment is void because the amended complaint upon which the judgment was based was never served upon appellants. This objection to the validity of the judgment involves the authority of one W. C. Burnett, an attorney at law, to represent appellants in the litigation; for subsequently to the filing of the amended complaint Burnett appeared in the court claiming to represent appellants, and attacked the pleading, both by motion and demurrer, and his appearance for such purpose was a waiver of personal service thereof, either upon him or his clients. Was Burnett authorized to represent appellants in this litigation? The trial court has so found the fact, and it is only upon a clear case to the contrary that we would disturb that finding. If the original complaint stated a cause of action, which is a matter we do not find it necessary to decide, the summons being served upon appellants, as the court has found, then, under no aspect of the case, can they complain, for, as said in Fitzgerald v. Fernandez, 71 Cal. 509, 12 Pac. Rep. 562: "In such a case, if there had been no appearance for her, the plaintiff would have been entitled to a default and decree against her, and his position should not be held worse by an appearance with which he had no connection." Aside from the foregoing conditions, the appearance in court of a regularly licensed practitioner, claiming to represent a litigant, is prima facie evidence of his authorization to act, and to defeat the results of a protracted and important litigation by reason of a want of authority in the attorney to represent the unsuccessful litigant can only be done upon a showing entirely clear and convincing. Without entering into a detailed review of the evidence bearing upon this question, we conclude the subject by saying we are well satisfied that the history of the litigation, as disclosed by the record, does not make a satisfactory showing of want of authority in the attorney to represent appellants throughout the many years in which this litigation has been pending. They have not established their claim of lack of authority in the attorney to represent them by "cogent and strong evidence," and it was said in Garrison v. McGowan, 48 Cal. 600: "But the act of the attorney in entering the appearance of a defendant carries with it a presumption of due authority upon his part to do so. Therefore if, after an appearance entered, judgment be rendered against the defendant, and the latter seeks relief against the judgment on the ground of want of authority of the attorney to enter his appearance, it is incumbent upon the party 'to make out a clear and unmixed case.' He is required to show merit, to take prompt action and to establish his right by 'cogent and strong evidence.' There would, indeed, be little security afforded by judicial proceedings had, if a party who had been unsuccessful in litigation could overthrow or defeat them upon the simple suggestion of want of authority in his attorney to appear for him, or to conduct the controversy on his behalf."

4. Appellants and others were sureties upon the official bond of one Huber, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. The obligation of the sureties was joint and several, and the fact that judgment had been previously taken against appellants' codefendants in no way invalidates respondent's right to have judgment entered against them. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed, and this order is directed to be entered as of date May 1, 1893.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 210

SMITH v. LOS ANGELES & P. RY. CO.
(No. 19,132.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1893.)

DAMAGES—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

1. A railroad company entered on land under an agreement with the owner that it would build its road from a point near the center of a city through such owner's land. The company built a portion of its road, including the part through the land in question, but failed to build the portion running near the center of the city, which portion, if built, would have greatly increased the value of such land. Held, that the landowner was entitled to recover from the company the amount it would cost to place his land in the same condition as before entry by the company.

2. Such damages can be recovered in an action for breach of contract, and are not founded on tort.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. W. McKinney, Judge.

Action by George H. Smith against the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company for an injunction and damages. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, granting the injunction, without damages. Plaintiff appeals from so much of judgment as refuses damages. Reversed.

Smith & Winder, for appellant. Anderson & Anderson and Wilson & Lamme, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment entered in favor of appellant, who was plaintiff in the court below, decreeing the plaintiff to be the owner of certain land, and enjoining defendant from entering upon or interfering therewith. The cause comes up on the judgment roll, and the sole question involved relates to the right of appellant to damages in addition to the relief afforded him. In November, 1866, the Los Angeles & Ostrich Farm Railway Company, a corporation, procured, by ordinance of the council of the city of Los Angeles, a franchise to construct a street railroad from point A, near the center of the city, to point C, near its northern boundary. From point A to an intermediate point on the line, which we will designate as point B, the road, when constructed, was to be operated with horse power, and from B to C, by steam power. One M. L. Wicks proposed to the company holding the franchise that on certain conditions to be performed by the company, and satisfactory to it, and upon the further condition that parties owning land along the line of the proposed route would pay certain sums of money, he would construct the road. This was agreed to by the landowners, and appellant, who owned a tract of land between points B and C, in December, 1886, made to Wicks his note for $750, payable at four months, provided the road should be constructed, equipped, and put in operation, by the maturity of the note, from point A to point C. A bond with sureties was executed by Wicks for the benefit of appellant, and other parties who had given notes or made donations conditional for the construction of the road, as specified in the promissory notes. Afterwards the Los Angeles Ostrich Farm Railway Company sold and conveyed all its rights, title, and interest in the road, franchise, etc., to the Los Angeles County Railway Company, a corporation. Wicks, who had been but an agent for the grantor, also assigned all his interest, and the notes of appellant and others were assigned at the same time. Wicks, before the sale and assignment to the Los Angeles County Railway Company, had constructed the road from point B to point C, had entered upon the land of appellant, and constructed the roadway over the same, and in doing so made deep cuts and high embankments, in such manner as greatly to injure the land. The road from point A to point B has never been constructed. The Los Angeles County Railway Company, on the 3d day of October, 1887, entered into an agreement with the appellant and other donors by which, in consideration of the payment of the notes of appellant and others, "and in further consideration of the grants of right of way made by the said parties of the second part," it agreed to do certain things, and, among them, that the conditions of the notes as to constructing the road should be carried out, except as to time, and it was to be relieved from the consequences of the delay. The note of appellant, as well as those of the others due at four months, were thereupon paid. In consideration of the payment of his note, the company agreed with appellant that it would perform the obligations specified therein. Afterwards the Los Angeles County Railway Company sold, assigned, and conveyed the said railway, etc., to the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company, a corporation, the respondent herein. On the 8th day of September, 1887, the three corporations hereinbefore named were duly consolidated under the name of the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company. Each of the three corporations, according to the findings of the court, assumed all the obligations of Wicks, and the second and third corporation, the obligations of their predecessors, to plaintiff, including the obligation on account of damages in the premises. Appellant never gave any license or granted any right of way over his land, except such license as may be inferred from the language used in his promissory note or agreement of December, 1886. The excavations and embankments on appellant's land, made by Wicks and the Los Angeles & Ostrich Farm Railway Company, detracted from the value thereof in the sum of $8,000, and such damage or deterioration can be obviated, and the value of the land restored, only by filling up the excavations and spreading out the embankments, to effect which will cost $6,000. Had the road been constructed from point A to point C, this damage would have been compensated by the increased value of the land, and by the convenience afforded thereby in communication with the center of the city. Appellant, according to the findings, has suffered damages, in all, aggregating $8,000. Respondent, as well as its predecessors in interest, refused to construct the road from point A to point B.

The appeal being upon the judgment roll, we must regard the findings as conclusive in favor of the assumption that the defendant is in the position of, and subject to all the liabilities which would have attached to, its predecessor, the Los Angeles & Ostrich Farm Railway Company, and its agent, Wicks, had that corporation remained the owner of the property, and failed to execute the contract. To put it more broadly, the defendant has assumed the responsibility of all its predecessors in interest.

For the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, save in excepted cases, "is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." Civil Code, § 3300. The detriment must be "proximately caused" by the breach; that is, it must be the efficient cause,—the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes which are merely incidental, or instruments of some other controlling agency, are not proximate, within the purview of the law. "Proximate" is also defined as immediate; nearest; next in order. "The proximate cause is the efficient cause,—the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental are instruments of a superior or controlling agency; are not the proximate causes, and the responsible ones, though they may be nearer in time to the result." Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 130. Was the refusal of defendant to construct its road from point A to point B, thus making a harmonious whole of its line from A to C, whereby plaintiff would have been compensated by the increased value of his land for the detriment caused thereto by the cuts and fills upon it, the proximate and efficient cause of the injury complained of? Respondent contends that, when the construction was completed across appellant's land, the act was legal and proper, under an implied license of a contract for its construction; that the injury to appellant was then complete; and as the breach of the contract did not occur until afterwards in point of time, until respondent refused to complete the road, the damage cannot be said to have been caused by the breach. Suppose A., a farmer, and the owner of broad acres in need of irrigation, contracts with B., the sole proprietor of water which can be used for such purpose, whereby the latter agrees with the former to construct an irrigating ditch from the center of his land to the source of supply, through which to conduct water. He constructs the ditch across the land of A., and then refuses to complete the contract, and in consequence the ditch is a detriment to the land, and must be filled up to restore it to its primary condition. In such a case, is not the expense a direct and immediate effect of the breach of the contract? A. contracts with B. for the purchase and delivery of goods from the latter, and pays in advance a part of the agreed purchase price. B. refuses to deliver the goods. May not A., in effect, recover the money so paid? It is believed there can be no doubt as to this last proposition, and yet the money was paid, in point of time, before the breach of the contract to deliver. A mechanic agrees to make and deliver, at a time specified, a carriage, from materials furnished by his customer. Through ignorance, or by design, he ruins the materials, and fails to deliver the vehicle. The value of the materials furnished is an element in the estimate of damages, though the breach occurred upon the subsequent failure to deliver.

In justice to counsel for respondent, it must be said, however, that their objection to the recovery of the damages by appellant, while it involves the consideration above referred to, goes a step further, and may be thus stated: (1) The original contract with appellant was to construct the railroad from point A to point C. Wicks and his principal built it from B to C, and caused all the injury to appellant's land now complained of, for which, but for the consent of the owner, an action might have been at once sustained. (2) The contract of October 3, 1887, by the Los Angeles County Railway Company, being subsequent to the injury, was, in fact and effect, a contract to finish the road, or, in other words, to construct it from A to B, and therefore a breach of this last contract cannot be made the basis of the damages demanded.

This position, on its face, seems entirely logical. But when we refer to the contract of October 3, 1887, and to the finding, it appears: (1) That by the contract the Los Angeles County Railway Company expressly agreed to perform all the conditions contained in the notes to appellant and others, as well as those of a bond given by Wicks and others for constructing the road, except that it was not to be held liable for the delay which had occurred in the completion of the work. (2) When appellant thereupon paid his note the new company gave him an agreement, binding itself to perform the obligations incurred by the contract of October 3, 1887. (3) The defendant is a corporation resulting from a consolidation with the two corporations which preceded it in interest, and hereinbefore mentioned. (4) The defendant, according to the pleadings, found by the court to be true, assumed all the obligations of its predecessors and of M. L. Wicks to the appellant, "including all obligations on account of damages to the plaintiff [appellant] on account of the premises." Two or more railroad corporations may legally consolidate, under the provisions of section 473 of the Civil Code. True, such consolidation does not relieve either of the consolidating corporations from its liabilities. The consolidated corporation may, however, assume and make itself liable for the antecedent liabilities of such consolidating companies, (Spelling, Corp. § 108, and cases cited;) and while such agreement does not, without their assent, bind creditors, yet suit brought by a creditor, upon a demand so assumed, against the corporation which has agreed to pay, is of itself sufficient evidence of acceptance of the new debtor in lieu of the old. Morgan v. Mining Co. 37 Cal. 534. Viewed from this standpoint, the case is presented in a different aspect from that assumed by counsel for respondent.

The present defendant has absorbed into its corporate entity, and stands as the embodiment of, all the factors in the problem,—is the representative of all the corporations. Coupled with this, it has, in express terms, succeeded to all their responsibilities to appellant. Having, of its own volition, assumed this position, it cannot be permitted to divide up the obligation, and thereby reduce the responsibility. It must be held to be liable precisely as though it had been the sole actor from the outset.

The court below found, as beforestated, that the damage to appellant's land can only be obviated by filling up the excavations, and spreading out the embankments, to effect which would cost not less than $6,000. For this amount, appellant was entitled to judgment. The action, so far as it sounds in damages, is not for a tort, in which plaintiff recovers for the injury done to his land as such, but upon a contract; and the question is, what is the condition of plaintiff, as a direct consequence of the breach, compared with what he would have occupied, had the contract been carried out? The difference between the value of the land with the contract consummated, and the same contract broken, is regarded as the true criterion. If, in the partial performance of the agreement, injury has been done to the land, which can be, in whole or in part, remedied by the expenditure of money, to that extent it becomes an element in the deterioration of value, and as such is to be considered in determining the depreciation; yet, after all, the last analysis brings the whole subject to the question of the difference in value between the contract executed or broken. Upon this basis the court finds, generally, that plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $8,000. Did the findings stop there, a judgment for that sum would be regarded as the true measure of damages, but they do not. There is an additional finding as to the balance of damages, showing the basis upon which it is placed, and which, being in the nature of a special finding, must control the general statement. Hence the conclusion is reached that as to this residue of damages found by the court, viz. $2,000, made up, wholly or in part, by appellant's deprivation of the "convenience of communication between the said land and the center of the city," it cannot be determined from the judgment roll that the court below erred. Without determining the question whether or not, in an action upon a contract, a recovery can, in any case, be had for such cause, it is sufficient to say that if it can, being in the nature of special damage, it can only be had upon a more full and specific statement of facts than appears in the complaint in this cause. I am of opinion the judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment in favor of the appellant for $6,000, in addition to the relief heretofore granted.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCILIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment in favor of the appellant for $6,000 in addition to the relief heretofore granted.

PATTON et al. v. LOS ANGELES & P. RY. CO. (No. 19,133.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 4, 1893.)

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; J. M. McKinney, Judge.

Action by George S. Patton and others against the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway Company for an injunction and damages. Judgment was rendered for plaintiffs, granting the injunction, and without damages. Plaintiffs appeal from so much of judgment as refuses damages. Reversed.

Smith & Winder, for appellants. Anderson & Anderson and Wilson & Lamme, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause embraces precisely the same question as that involved in Smith v. Railway Co., (No. 19,132,) 33 Pac. Rep. 53, submitted on the same briefs. For the reasons given in the opinion in that case the judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and against defendant, for $6,000.

98 Cal. 252

HUNTER v. BRYANT et al. (No. 15,036.) (Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1893.)

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—UNAUTHORIZED APPEARANCE OF ATTORNEY—MATERIALITY.

Where defendants were served with summons it is immaterial, as affecting a judgment by default against them, whether or not an attorney who appeared for them was authorized to do so, since in either event the judgment was proper.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by David Hunter against A. J. Bryant and others on the official bond of one Hubert, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion to set such judgment aside, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Daniel Titus, for appellants. Tilden & Tilden, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment, and also from an order denying a motion to set aside said judgment. The appeal is taken by certain sureties upon the official bond of one Hubert, formerly treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. Appellants have presented no reason why the appeal from the judgment should be sustained, and we therefore pass to a consideration of the order denying the motion to set aside and vacate the judgment. The grounds relied upon to set aside the judgment are: (1) The summons was not served upon appellants. (2) W. C. Burnett, an attorney at law, appeared and represented appellants in the litigation without any authority or knowledge upon their part. The evidence relied upon to support the first ground stated is very similar to, and certainly no stronger for appellants than, that which was presented in Hunter v. Bryant, (No. 15,151,) 33 Pac. Rep. 51, (this day decided,) and for the reasons there stated we hold against their contention in this regard. Having decided that appellants were served with summons, it becomes immaterial to determine whether or not Burnett was authorized to appear for them in the litigation. If he was not their attorney in the litigation, then they had no attorney, and made no appearance, and their default was therefore properly entered under either set of circumstances. As was said in Fitzgerald v. Fernandez, 71 Cal. 509, 12 Pac. Rep. 562: "In such a case, if there had been no appearance for her, the plaintiff would have been entitled to a default and decree against her, and his position should not be held worse by an appearance with which he had no connection." For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed, and this order is directed to be entered as of date May 1, 1893.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(98 Cal. 259)

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
v. COLLINS et al. (No. 15,060.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1893.)

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—COSTS.

Since Const. art. 1, § 14, declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation to the owner, where land is condemned for a street at the suit of a city, the owner is entitled to recover his necessary costs incurred in making a bona fide defense, though Code Civil Proc. § 1255, provides that in such proceedings "costs may be allowed or not, and, if allowed, may be apportioned between the parties on the same or adverse sides, in the discretion of the court."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the city and county of San Francisco against Sophie E. Collins and others. Plaintiff had judgment, and, from an order apportioning the costs between the parties, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Henry E. Highton, for appellants. John H. Durst, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This was a special proceeding in the superior court to condemn lands of the defendants for the widening of Mission street, in said city, in which judgment passed for plaintiff. The appeal by the defendants is from an order apportioning the costs between the parties. Each party claimed costs, and filed a verified memorandum of the items thereof. The items of plaintiff's memorandum are as follows:

Sheriff's fees	$ 9 00
Clerk's fees	7 50
Jury fees	312 00
Reporter's fees	140 00
Notary's fees	2 00
Entering judgment	4 00
Constable's fees, serving 14 subpoenas	5 00
Sheriff in charge of jury	3 00
2 meals for sheriff and jury	13 00
	$405 50

Witness Fees.

Dr. Confell, 2 dates of attendance	4 00
Mertens, 2 dates of attendance	4 00
Lewis, 15 dates of attendance	30 00
Von Rhein, 2 dates of attendance	4 00
Magee, 1 date of attendance	2 00
Chester, 6 dates of attendance	12 00
Robinson, 4 dates of attendance	8 00
J. J. Haley, 4 dates of attendance	8 00
Quinn, 4 dates of attendance	8 00
Russell, 2 dates of attendance	4 00
Cody, 15 dates of attendance	30 00
Stern, 1 date of attendance	2 00
Lowell, 2 dates of attendance	4 00
Baldwin, 2 dates of attendance	4 00
	124 00
	$619 50

The items claimed by defendants are the following:

Sheriff's fees	$ 3 00
Clerk's fees, trial fees	4 00
Jury fees, 13 days at $24 per day	312 00
Reporter's fees, 14 days at $10 per day	140 00
Notary's fees	3 00
Clerk's fees, entry of judgment	4 00
Serving subpoenas, 12	6 00
2 meals for jury on Oct. 3, '91	13 00

Witness Fees.

A. T. Penebsky	4 00
Dr. C. A. Clinton	2 00
John Grabolle	2 00
J. W. Fish	4 00
J. C. Zignago	2 00
Wm. Byrnes	2 00
P. Isola	4 00
Fred'k W. Deiling	2 00
Thos. Moran	2 00
John McCarthy	2 00
Michael Fay	2 00
Daniel I. Newkirk	2 00
	$515 00

Besides objecting generally to plaintiff's cost bill, on the ground that plaintiff was not entitled to recover any cost, the defendants filed special written objections to each item thereof on various other grounds. But no objection appears to have been made by plaintiff to any item of defendants' bill, on the ground that it had not been necessarily expended or incurred by defendants in the proceeding. It appears that, on the morning of each day during the trial, each party, in obedience to a rule of court, deposited with the clerk the full amount of the fees of the reporter and the jury for one day, viz., $34; and, at the close of the trial, occupying 13 days, the deposits of each party amounted to $442. The order of the court appealed from was, in effect, that each party pay one-half of the fees of the jury and reporter, ($221,) and, with this exception, that neither party recover any cost from the other. The effect of the order upon the appellants is to compel them to pay one-half of the jury and reporter's fees, and the whole of all other costs incurred solely by them, which amount to $267, composed of the following items: One-half of jury and reporter's fees, $221; sheriff's fees, $3; clerk's fees, $4; notary's fees, $3; serving subpoenas on 12 witnesses, $6; fees of 12 witnesses for defendants, $30. All other costs to be borne by the plaintiff. Counsel for appellants contend that respondent should have been required to pay not only its own costs, but all proper costs of the defendants; because, to subject the defendants to payment of any portion of the costs is an infringement of their constitutional right to full and just compensation for the taking and damaging of their lands. As a general proposition, applied to proper costs incurred in good faith, I think this point should be sustained. Section 1255 of the Code of Civil Procedure, however, provides that, in proceedings to condemn property for public use, "costs may be allowed or not, and, if allowed, may be apportioned between the parties on the same or adverse sides, in the discretion of the court;" and it is claimed by respondent that the order of the court below, allowing and apportioning the costs, was a proper exercise of the discretionary power conferred by this section. But this power must be limited by section 14, art. 1, of the constitution, which provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into court for the owner." In proceedings to condemn, the burden of proving the compensation to which they are entitled is cast upon the defendants, who are also entitled to contest the material allegations of the complaint. To require the defendants in this case to pay any portion of their costs necessarily incidental to the trial of the issues on their part, or any part of the costs of the plaintiff, would reduce the just compensation awarded by the jury, by a sum equal to that paid by them for such costs. As a result of the authorities upon this point, Mr. Lewis, in his work on Eminent Domain, section 559, says: "It seems to us that courts should be guided by the following principles and considerations in the matter: By the constitution the owner is entitled to just compensation for his property taken for public use. He is entitled to receive this compensation before his property is taken or his possession disturbed. If parties cannot agree upon the amount, it must be ascertained in the manner provided by law. As the property cannot be taken until the compensation is paid, and as it cannot be paid until it is ascertained, the duty of ascertaining the amount is necessarily cast upon the party seeking to condemn the property, and he should pay all the expenses which attach to the process. Any law which casts this burden upon the owner should, in our opinion, be held to be unconstitutional and void." In Re New York, W. S. & E. R. Co., 94 N. Y. 287, the question was whether the company was entitled to recover costs from the owners of the land condemned, and upon this point the court of appeals, by Rapallo, J., said: "In such a case, to compel the landowners to pay any part of the expenses incurred by the company for the purpose of ascertaining the compensation * * * would conflict with the constitutional right of the landowners to just compensation. They are entitled to the full amount of their damages when finally ascertained, and this amount cannot be diminished by allowing to the company its own expenses incurred in ascertaining it, or in endeavoring to reduce it; * * * and a case may be supposed where the costs and expenses of the company would absorb a large part, or even the whole, of the award. There is no warrant in the statute for awarding such costs, and, if there were, it would be a violation of the constitutional right of the landowner." See, also, Railroad Co. v. Bull, 20 Ill. 218. No doubt the court has power to determine what are proper and what are improper items of cost in proceedings of this kind, and to disallow such as are improper, as in other cases. For example, unnecessary expenditures, made in bad faith, for the purpose of increasing the costs or obstructing the proceeding, are not properly taxable as costs, and may be disallowed; and cases may possibly arise in which a portion of the expense of the party seeking to condemn may be properly charged and apportioned to the landowner, on the ground that such expense was caused and incurred only by reason of unnecessary obstructive proceedings of the latter, interposed in bad faith; but no question as to these matters is involved in this appeal. The verified bill of costs filed by the appellant was prima facie evidence that the items thereof had been necessarily incurred; and since no objection was made in the trial court, nor here, on the ground that they were not proper costs necessarily incurred, the prima facie evidence must be taken as conclusive for the purpose of this appeal. I think appellants are entitled to recover their costs, amounting to $267, composed of the items as above stated; that the order appealed from should be reversed, and the court below directed to enter an order in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter an order in accordance with this opinion.

3 Cal. Unrep. 864

GERMAN v. BROWN. (No. 15,073.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL—FINDINGS.

Where the court's findings support the judgment, and are on all material issues, the judgment will be affirmed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; N. A. Dorn, Judge.

Action by Pedro German against H. Brown. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Montgomery & Hill, for appellant. Briggs & Hudner, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. This action was commenced in the court of a justice of the peace to recover damages for an alleged trespass by defendant upon plaintiff's land. The alleged title and possession of the plaintiff being denied, the case was transferred to the superior court, wherein the cause was tried without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff for $80 damages, and costs taxed at $50.35. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The only grounds upon which appellant's counsel ask a reversal of the judgment or order are expressed in their brief as follows: "The findings of facts do not support the judgment, and the judgment is against law. The uncontradicted evidence is that appellant had possession of the land in question at the time of entry of respondent." The court found upon all the material issues, and the finding supports the judgment. The statement on motion for a new trial contains no sufficient specification of any particular in which it is claimed that the decision is not justified by the evidence. I think the order and judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

98 Cal. 218

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (No. 20,977.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 5, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1111, providing that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice unless he is corroborated by other evidence, which of itself tends to connect defendant with the offense, and that the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof, a conviction of murder cannot be sustained, where there is no evidence aside from that of the accomplice on which even a well-grounded suspicion of defendant's guilt can be founded.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. Van Fleet, Judge.

Smith was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from a judgment sentencing him to life imprisonment, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

A. J. & Elwood Bruner, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

DE HAVEN, J. The defendant and four other persons were jointly indicted and charged with the murder of one Robert Allen, alleged to have been committed in the county of Sacramento, in the month of May, 1891. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to imprisonment for life, and from this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he has appealed to this court. The only evidence in the record before us which tends in any degree to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime of which he has been convicted is the testimony of his co-defendants, Gordon and Casey, and whose testimony, if true, shows them to have been his accomplices. This evidence, being uncorroborated, is not sufficient to sustain the verdict in this case. This is the explicit declaration of section 1111 of the Penal Code, which declares: "A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense, or the circumstances thereof." It was held in People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480, that, where the evidence relied upon as corroborative of that of the accomplice was only such as to raise a suspicion of the guilt of a defendant, it was not sufficient; but this case is still weaker upon its facts. There is here absolutely no evidence whatever, aside from that of the accomplice, upon which to found even a well-grounded suspicion of the guilt of defendant.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; McFARLAND, J.

98 Cal. 227

SANDERS, County Recorder, v. SEHORN, County Auditor. (No. 18,072.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1893.)

COUNTIES—CLASSIFICATION—REPEAL OF STATUTE.

1. Act March 11, 1891, conditionally creating the county of Glenn, provided, (section 14,) with reference to county officers, that they should receive the same compensation then provided by general law in counties of the same class, and that until otherwise provided the county should belong to the thirty-seventh class. Under Const. art. 11, § 5, the classification of counties is required to be made according to population. On March 11, 1891, Glenn county had a population of between 6,500 and 6,600, which was the population of a county of the thirty-seventh class. On March 31, 1891, a county government act was passed, placing counties of from 6,400 to 7,000 population in the forty-first class. Glenn county was organized May 11th. Held a county of the forty-first class; the act of March 11th not having been intended to fix its class irrespective of any future changes in the law, but only to determine its population.

2. The act of March 11th was not repealed for inconsistency with the latter act in classifying Glenn county.

Department 1.

Application by H. B. Sanders for writ of mandate against A. W. Sehorn to compel the latter, as county auditor, to draw a warrant. Judgment, from which applicant appeals. Affirmed.

C. L. Donohoe and M. J. Keys, for appellant. Ben. F. Geis, R. A. Long, and Geo. D. Dudley, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This was an application for a writ of mandate brought by appellant, recorder of the county of Glenn, against Sehorn, the auditor of said county, to compel said auditor to draw his warrant in appellant's favor for the sum of $108.33, as salary for the month of January, 1892. The merits of the litigation are fully disposed of by a determination of the class of counties to which Glenn county belonged in January, 1892. The act of March 11, 1891, conditionally creating the county of Glenn, provided, (section 14, p. 101, St. 1891:) "The officers elected and appointed under the provisions of this act shall each perform the duties, and receive the compensation, now provided by general law for the office to which he has been elected or appointed in counties of the class to which the said county of Glenn belongs, under the general classification of counties in this state; and, until otherwise provided by law, said county shall be classified as a county of the thirty-seventh class." The power of the legislature to classify counties for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers is limited by section 5, art. 11, of the constitution, which section requires such classification to be made according to the population of the various counties. It is apparent that the legislature has no power to arbitrarily place any particular county in any particular class. Classes of counties are arranged according to a graduated scale of population, and, when the population of a county is determined by the legislature, its classification is arrived at without trouble. Upon March 11, 1891, when the legislature declared that Glenn county should be a county of the thirty-seventh class, it was but a declaration that Glenn county had a population over 6,500 and under 6,600, for at that time counties of the thirty-seventh class were counties having a population within those limits. According to the county government act, the population of the various counties, for the purposes of the act, is to be determined from the last preceding federal census; but in the case of newly-organized counties, especially where the boundary lines of the new county do not follow township lines, such census would not furnish the data contemplated, and for that reason the legislature, for the purposes of classification, could well declare the population of Glenn county to be over 6,500 and under 6,600, receiving its information for such declaration from whatever source it saw fit. It would have been the better course for the legislature to have directly determined the population of Glenn county, rather than have enacted that it should belong to the thirty-seventh class. Under such circumstances it would have clearly stood forth in company with its sister counties, having its numbers settled and ascertained for all the purposes of the county government act. It certainly was not contemplated by the legislature that when it declared Glenn county a county of the thirty-seventh class it should remain a county of that class, regardless of any future changes in the law whereby the thirty-seventh class might be composed of counties having populations greatly larger or greatly smaller than when Glenn county was placed therein. If the act of the legislature is to be regarded as fixing the class to which Glenn county should belong when organized, rather than determining its population, then it would require a special act of the legislature to take it from the thirty-seventh class. Undoubtedly, such results were never contemplated or intended. The effect of section 14 of the Glenn county act was to fix its population, and, (in the absence of subsequent legislation,) by operation of law, it would have become a county of the thirty-seventh class by virtue of that fact upon May 11, 1892, the date of final organization of the county, and would have been such when this proceeding was inaugurated.

Section 235 of the county government act of 1891, among other things, provides "that in all newly-created counties for the purpose of fixing the salaries and fees of county and township officers, the board of commissioners appointed to organize said new county, and, if no commission be appointed, then the board of supervisors of said new county, shall classify said new county according to the population classification of this act." By virtue of this provision the commissioners appointed under the Glenn county act, upon the 11th day of May, 1891, the date of its organization, declared Glenn county to be a county of the forty-first class. It is not necessary to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of this provision of the county government act, as being a delegation of power to a board of commissioners or supervisors, for, conceding the declaration of such board of commissioners in declaring Glenn county to be a county of the forty-first class to be void, as ultra vires, which we do not decide, still the final result of the litigation will not be changed. Upon March 31, 1891, a county government act was passed, providing that counties having a population of over 6,400 and under 7,000 shall belong to, and be known as, counties of the forty-first class. Glenn county came into existence, as a county fully organized and equipped, May 11, 1891. At that time, under the terms of the act creating it, as we have construed that act, it had a population of more than 6,500 and less than 6,600, and consequently came within the limits prescribed for counties of the forty-first class. In adopting this construction of the foregoing provisions of the various statutes, it is not necessary to hold that the act of March 31, 1891, repealed the act of March 11, 1891. As to the classification of Glenn county, the acts are not even inconsistent. Construing section 14 of the Glenn county act as simply fixing the population of the county, we find nothing in the county government act of March 31st in any way touching upon the question of its population. We conclude that Glenn county is a county of the forty-first class, and for that reason the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

(98 Cal. 205)

CONNOLLY v. ASHWORTH. (No. 15,053.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 3, 1893.)
JUDGMENT—ENTRY OF DECISION AFTER EXPIRATION OF JUDGE'S TERM.

Under Code Civil Proc. § 632, providing that, on trial of a question of fact by the court, its decision must be in writing, and filed with the clerk, and section 633, providing that in giving the decision the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated, and judgment entered on the decision accordingly, the trial of a cause by the court is not concluded until the decision is filed with the clerk; and where the term of office of a judge who tried a cause expires before such decision is filed, the fact that it was signed by him, and filed by the clerk under the order of his successor, is not sufficient to sustain a judgment thereon.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; A. A. Sanderson, Judge.

Action by Owen Connolly against Thomas Ashworth. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Mich Mullany and Wm. Grant, for appellant. John H. Durst, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, J. This case was tried by the court without a jury, and its decision given in writing, and signed by the judge, but not filed with the clerk until after the term of office of the judge had expired. Upon the back of the proposed decision, and in the judge's handwriting, appears the following indorsement: "To be left with the clerk, and not filed till further notice or amendment heard by the court from def't [meaning plaintiff.] T. H. Rearden, Judge." The judge thereupon instructed the clerk to deliver the proposed decision so indorsed to plaintiff's attorney, for the purpose of proposing amendments in the event he saw fit to do so, which the clerk accordingly did. No amendments were ever proposed by either party; and so the matter stood on January 5, 1891, when Judge Rearden's term of office expired. Subsequently the court, (Judge Rearden's successor in office presiding,) on motion of defendant, ordered the decision to be filed, and thereupon judgment was accordingly entered thereon against plaintiff; from which judgment, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, this appeal is taken by plaintiff.

Section 632, Code Civil Proc., provides: "Upon the trial of a question of fact by the court, its decision must be given in writing, and filed with the clerk. * * *" And section 633 provides that, "In giving the decision, the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated. Judgment upon the decision must be entered accordingly." In view of these provisions it is clear that the trial of a cause by the court is not concluded until the decision is filed with the clerk. And when the term of office of the judge who tried the case expires before such decision is filed, the fact that it was signed by him, and ordered by his successor in office to be filed with the clerk, and was so filed, is not sufficient to sustain the judgment entered thereon. Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95; Van Court v. Winterson, 61 Cal. 615; 2 Hayne, New Trials & App. § 237; Warring v. Freear, 54 Cal. 56, 28 Pac. Rep. 115; Comstock Q. Min. Co. v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 625; Polhemus v. Carpenter, 42 Cal. 384; 2 Hayne, New Trials & App. § 246; Bank v. Mahoney, (U. S. Cir. Ct.) 2 Pac. Coast Law J. 123; Mace v. O'Reilly, 70 Cal. 231, 11 Pac. Rep. 721. Let the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(93 Cal. 230)

PEOPLE v. FAGAN. (No. 20,940.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1893.)

LARCENY—EVIDENCE.

On a prosecution for larceny, it appeared that 20 head of cattle were stolen October 2d, and 6 days later 11 of them were found about 30 miles away, with the brands changed and ears cut off, so as to obliterate the marks. On October 17th, the sheriff took possession of those found, and put them in charge of another person. The latter spoke of the cattle to defendant's son, who said that he owned them, and would drive them away, and on October 19th they were driven away by some person not recognized. The sheriff tracked them to defendant's cabin, where he found defendant, his son, and one D., who was seen with the cattle the day after the stealing. Defendant said the cattle were estrays, and made inconsistent statements as to when he first saw them. The evidence showed that on October 3d defendant was at his cabin, 50 miles from the ranch from which the cattle were taken, and then said that his son had gone to buy stock, and would bring back some 20 head of cattle. Held, that the evidence did not justify a conviction.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; William O. Minor, Judge.

Charles Fagan was convicted of grand larceny, and appeals. Reversed.

L. J. Maddux and Jas. H. Budd, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, J. W. Fulkerth, and J. C. Needham, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, having been convicted of grand larceny, appeals from the judgment, and from an order refusing him a new trial. He claims that there was no evidence against him, or, if any, none that he had committed the crime of grand larceny. On October 2, 1891, 21 head of cattle were taken from Mr. Weyer's ranch, about 21 miles east of Modesto. The next morning they were seen at Clark's place, about 3 miles west of Modesto. They were driven from there by William Ducker, a codefendant of appellant, and another person not recognized, but who was not appellant. During the night of October 8th, 11 head of them were left or found their way to Howard's ranch, near the Coast range; how far from Modesto cannot be made out from the evidence exactly, but apparently near 15 miles. The brands upon these cattle had then been changed, and the ears cut off, so as to obliterate the marks. Here they were taken in charge by William Grummett, with whose cattle they were found. October 17th, the sheriff of the county, having learned of the larceny from Weyer's place, and of the presence of the cattle at Howard's, came over, took possession, turned them into Howard's inclosure, and asked Grummett to keep watch of them. At the request of the sheriff, Grummett visited defendant's place, and, finding appellant's son, Frost Fagan, informed him in regard to the cattle. Frost said he owned the stock, and would drive them away. On the 19th, about midday, some person who was not recognized drove the stock from the inclosure towards a canon which extends into the Coast range towards the Fagan place. The sheriff was notified, and came over that evening, and with a posse tracked the cattle to Fagan's cabin, in the Coast range. There he found the appellant, his son Frost, William Ducker, who had been seen driving the cattle, and his brother, in bed, and the 11 head which had been driven from Howard's place the day before in a corral about 15 feet from the cabin. Appellant and his son both said the cattle were estrays. At first, appellant said the first time he had seen the cattle was the morning of the 19th, when he discovered them on the range, but didn't know where they came from; then, correcting himself, he said he had seen them there a week before. When the sheriff was questioning appellant's son as to how the cattle got into the corral, the appellant said: "If the cattle were stolen, Billy Ducker and I must have done it, for Frost had nothing to do with putting them into the corral." It does not appear how long Fagan had lived at the cabin, or had been occupying or claiming it. He told the sheriff that he intended to homestead the place for a hog ranch; also that everything belonged to Frost, as he couldn't own anything because of his creditors; and that there were some 30 head of stock on the place. Subsequently some 5 head of the stolen cattle, other than the 11 which had been at the Howard ranch, were found in the Coast range within 5 miles of the Fagan cabin. Upon these the brands and earmarks had been changed in the same way as on the 11 head. There was evidence showing that Fagan and his son were acquainted with the vicinity of Weyer's place, from which the cattle had been taken. The prosecution also proved that on the morning of the 3d, which was the morning after the cattle were taken from Weyer's place, appellant was at his cabin, which is some 50 miles from Weyer's. He then told the witness that the place belonged to Frost, as he could own nothing; that his son had been working with a machine, had saved his money, and would buy stock for the range. He thought his son was then at Modesto, and might return with 12 or 14 horses. In addition, he thought his son would have on the place some 20 head of cattle. Appellant had been seen working about the cabin hauling lumber, fixing the corral, and a shed. There was no direct evidence connecting the appellant with the property in any way, prior to the time when he was found with it by the sheriff at about 4 o'clock in the morning of October 20th, more than 17 days after they had been taken from Weyer's place. It was admitted by the district attorney at the argument that he was not present when the cattle were taken. The indictment charges the taking to have been from Weyer on the 2d, and at the trial the prosecution stated that this was the taking relied upon, and not the taking on the 19th from Howard. During 9 days of the 17 which had elapsed after the taking, before appellant is shown to have had anything to do with the cattle, they were in the custody of Grummett, who, at least during 2 days of that time, was acting as the bailiff of the sheriff. As Frost Fagan had informed Grummett that he would take the cattle, the last taking could hardly be called furtive. There is no direct evidence connecting Frost Fagan with the taking except this claim made to Grummett. Evidently, appellant did not himself, personally, take the cattle, or assist in such taking. He could therefore only be convicted on the ground that, though not present, he had previously advised and encouraged the theft. There is no direct evidence that he knew that the theft was contemplated, or that he knew, even on the morning of the 20th, when arrested, that a larceny had been committed, much less that he had previously advised and encouraged it. That he had previously to the actual commission of the theft advised and encouraged it is inferred from the circumstances above set out. That the circumstances raise a very strong suspicion against defendant may be admitted. We are not favored with an argument showing how the guilt is inferred, but it is manifest that it is claimed that Fagan was expecting his son to bring in stock, about the number taken from Weyer; that he was preparing for them. He was taken with them, and in the company of his son and Ducker, who, it is claimed, did take them, and drove them from Weyer's, more than 50 miles, to the Fagan cabin. And then when surprised with them, he falsely stated that he had seen them on the range a week before, and the day before; and then stated that, if they were stolen, he and Ducker must have done it. A great deal of importance seems to have been attached to the last statement, but we think it only constituted an admission that appellant had assisted in putting them into the corral. It was evidently made upon the assumption that the only ground for charging a larceny was the fact that the cattle had been taken from the range, and put into the corral. The old man strove to shield his son. No doubt the false statements that the stock were estrays which had been taken from the range tends very strongly to show that at that time Charles Fagan knew, or at least suspected, that the cattle had been dishonestly come by, but they do not prove that previous to the theft he had advised and encouraged its commission. Not a circumstance is proven which is not entirely consistent with his innocence of the particular offense with which he is charged. To justify a conviction, one must not only be proven to have committed an offense, but the very offense charged in the indictment. All the circumstances are consistent with the supposition that he had advised against the theft or only knew of it after its commission, or that he was simply a receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. Perhaps the evidence would sustain a charge of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, but the circumstances are not sufficient to show that he had previously to the commission of the offense advised and encouraged its commission. In view of the conclusion that the evidence does not sustain the verdict, it is not necessary to consider the other assignments of error.

Judgment and order reversed.

98 Cal. 291

ROURKE v. McNALLY et al. (No. 14,964.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)

PUBLIC LAND — ENTRY ON GOVERNMENT LAND IN POSSESSION OF ANOTHER — RIGHT TO RETAIN POSSESSION.

A person who, in the absence of another, who is in the actual possession of government land which is open to settlement under act of congress, peaceably enters on such land with intent to take it up as a homestead, is not entitled to retain possession as against such prior occupant, in the absence of any right or title acquired from the government.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; James F. Breen, Judge.

Action by Thomas Rourke against Hannah McNally and Julia McNally to recover possession of certain land. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Briggs & Hudner, for appellant. Scott & Dooling, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is by plaintiff upon the judgment roll, and appellant contends that judgment should have been for plaintiff upon the findings. Suit was brought to recover the possession of land, and it was tried without a jury. The court found that plaintiff, on the 15th day of August, 1891, was, and long prior thereto had been, in the actual possession of the demanded premises; that plaintiff entered in the occupation of the same March 20, 1890, and inclosed the land with a wire and brush fence, which, with natural barriers, excluded and inclosed stock; that plaintiff did not reside upon the land, but had continued and exclusive possession until ousted by the defendant Julia; that the land was a part of the public domain of the United States, and was open to settlement pursuant to the forfeiture act of congress, approved September 29, 1890; that on August 16, 1891, while plaintiff was so in possession, defendant Julia McNally entered upon the land and made a settlement thereon by building a house, then and now intending to enter the same and the adjoining land, not exceeding 160 acres, as a homestead under the laws of the United States, and is now residing thereon. She made her entry through an opening in plaintiff's fence, not made by her, but by some unknown person. She broke no fence, but her entry was without force or violence. Her entry, however, was without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff and against his will, and she has ever since kept him out of possession. By what course of reasoning the court reached the conclusion that plaintiff could not recover on these facts we are not informed, as respondents have filed no brief. The defendant Julia did not connect herself with the government title through the homestead law or otherwise. Since she entered upon the actual possession of another, it is of no moment that her entry was peaceable, because made in the absence of plaintiff. Nor is it of consequence that she intended to take up the land as a homestead. This did not warrant her entry upon the actual possession of another. But she has not even attempted to enter the land as a homestead, and she has acquired no rights under any act of congress. Until she has acquired some such right, or connected herself in some lawful mode with the true title, she cannot resist the presumption of title in the plaintiff, which arises from the fact of his prior possession. The laws of the United States do not authorize an entry upon the actual possession of another for the purpose of making a settlement, though made by one qualified to purchase from the government, or to acquire a homestead, although such entry is made with the intent to acquire the title in some lawful mode. Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513; Durand v. Martin, 120 U. S. 369, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 587; Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 421; McBrown v. Morris, 59 Cal. 68; Goodwin v. McCabe, 75 Cal. 584, 17 Pac. Rep. 705; Bullock v. Rouse, 81 Cal. 590, 22 Pac. Rep. 919; Peterson v. Kinkead, 92 Cal. 372, 28 Pac. Rep. 568. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff on the findings.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; HAYNES, C.

McFARLAND and FITZGERALD, JJ. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff on the findings.

DE HAVEN, J. I concur in the judgment.

(93 Cal. 235)

TUNIS et al. v. LAKEPORT AGRICULTURAL PARK ASS'N et al. (No. 14,963.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—HOTEL CONSTRUCTED ON FAIR GROUNDS—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LIENS.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. § 1185, providing that the land on which any building is constructed, "together with a convenient space about the same, or so much as may be required for the convenient use and occupation thereof," is subject to mechanics' liens, only such area as is necessary to the enjoyment of the building for the purpose in view in its construction is subject to liens created by the erection of such building.

2. A decree establishing mechanics' liens on the entire premises constituting the fair grounds of an agricultural society, consisting of about 60 acres of land, with race track, grand stand, corrals, stables, and other improvements thereon, in favor of persons who constructed a building on such grounds to be used as an hotel, club house, and saloon, is erroneous.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; S. K. Doherty, Judge.

Two consolidated actions by Frank D. Tunis and P. Christensen against the Lakeport Agricultural Park Association and one Walter to foreclose mechanics' liens. From a decree for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, the association appeals. Reversed.

J. J. Bruton and F. E. Johnson, for appellants. Woods Crawford, Thos. E. Bond, and Ira C. Jenks, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Two separate actions were brought, one by Tunis and the other by Christensen, to foreclose separate mechanics' liens upon a building constructed by defendant Walter upon land owned by the Lakeport Agricultural Park Association, a corporation, and one of the defendants herein. The two actions were consolidated and tried together. Judgment was entered foreclosing the liens, declaring their order of priority, and ordering the building and certain lands to be sold, subject to a prior mortgage thereon, to satisfy the liens. The corporation defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

1. The complaint of Tunis states a cause of action, and the court did not err in overruling the demurrer of the defendant corporation to such complaint.

2. The court found that all the premises described in the complaint were necessary to the convenient use and occupation of the building constructed, and the appellant claims that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. The description of the land is as follows: "Bounded on the east by lands of D. Dunnivan; on the north, by lands of H. C. Boggs; on the west and south, by the county road leading from Lakeport to Kelseyville, * * * and known as the 'Fair Grounds Tract,' upon which race track, grand stand, corrals and stables, and other improvements belonging to the Lakeport Agricultural Park Association, are situate," etc. There is no statement of the area of the land here, but in the statement on motion for a new trial is a declaration that it is "about sixty acres," all of which was well known to the judge of the court, but that there was no evidence on the question. Section 1185 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the land upon which any building, improvement, or structure is constructed, together with a convenient space about the same, or so much as may be required for the convenient use and occupation thereof, to be determined by the court on rendering judgment, is also subject to the lien," etc. The expression, "the land upon which any building * * * is constructed, together with a convenient space about the same, or so much as may be required for the convenient use and occupation thereof," should be construed to mean such space or area of land as is necessary to the enjoyment of the building for the purpose in view in its construction. The uses to which a building is to be put must manifestly, many times, determine the quantity of land necessary to the convenient use and occupation thereof. If erected as a mill for sawing lumber, the space required for a log and lumber yard would be regarded as necessary to its use, while like space around a similar building for a watch factory might not be at all necessary. This thing should be borne in mind: It is for the convenient use and occupation of the building that the land about the same is given by our statute; a flouring mill erected upon a large grain ranch would require a given space around it for the purposes incidental to its operations. It might require the whole ranch to create business for it. But it would not follow, under our statute, that the entire ranch would be subject to a lien for its erection. In the present case it is easy to see that the race track, with its training stables, grand stand, corrals, and other improvements, may be necessary to create business for the hotel, club house, and saloon, for which the building in question was constructed; but it is not at all apparent that they are necessary to the convenient use and occupation of the building for the purposes indicated. Their uses are foreign to its purposes, except as they may tend to bring custom to its doors. It is not the intention here to indicate to the court below the quantity of land necessary to the use and occupation of the building as an hotel, club house, and saloon, but rather to indicate the basis upon which, under our Code, a conclusion is to be reached in consonance with the requirement of the law. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

(93 Cal. 233)

BAIRD v. CRANK. (No. 14,719.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)

ACCOUNT STATED—PAYMENT IN FUTURE—LIMITATIONS.

1. An account stated is none the less such because the debtor agrees to pay the amount which he concedes to be due at a future day after he has done other acts.

2. In an action on an account stated defendant cannot insist that he promised to pay in the future, after performing other acts, and that performance thereof does not appear, unless he interposes such defense.

3. Where a debt is not barred at the time an account is orally stated, the statute begins to run as to the cause of action on the account stated from the date thereof. Auzerais v. Naglee, 15 Pac. Rep. 371, 74 Cal. 60; Kahn v. Edwards, 16 Pac. Rep. 779, 75 Cal. 192,—followed.

¹ For opinion on rehearing, see 33 Pac. Rep. 447.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Andrew Baird against J. F. Crank. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

O'Brien & Daingerfield, for appellant. J. M. Haven and C. W. Cross, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. Plaintiff commenced this action on the 18th day of May, 1889, to recover a balance due upon an account stated. It is alleged in the complaint that prior to the 3d day of July, 1888, at the city and county of San Francisco, plaintiff had done and performed for defendant, at his special instance and request, a large amount of services and labor, for which defendant was justly indebted to plaintiff in a large sum of money, and that on the day named it was agreed between the parties that such services were reasonably worth the sum of $5,000, and defendant agreed to pay plaintiff that sum therefor; and also that on the day named, at San Francisco, an account was stated between the plaintiff and defendant, and upon such statement a balance of $5,000 was found due to the plaintiff from the defendant, which sum the defendant then and there agreed to pay plaintiff; that defendant had not paid the same, nor any part thereof, except the sum of $900, which he paid on the 30th of November, 1888. The answer of defendant denies all the averments of the complaint, and as to the $900 alleges that plaintiff "harassed, pursued, and annoyed this defendant to such an extent that said defendant, to buy his peace, and without consideration, and not at all because he was under any liability to the said plaintiff, paid him the said sum of $900, in the complaint mentioned." It further alleges that each of the causes of action set up in the complaint is barred by the provisions of section 339, subd. 1, Code Civil Proc. After trial the court found the facts of the case to be as follows: "First. That the plaintiff entered upon the service and employment of the defendant, at his special instance and request, in the month of February, 1885, and continued such service and employment to the 20th day of January, 1887; that said employment was indeterminate as to duration, and a continuous employment to said 20th day of January, 1887; and no right of action accrued to plaintiff against defendant by reason thereof, prior to the 20th day of January, 1887. Second. That on the 3d day of July, 1888, it was agreed between the said plaintiff and said defendant that such services were reasonably worth the sum of five thousand dollars, and the defendant on said day promised to pay to the plaintiff the said sum of five thousand dollars. That on said day two years had not elapsed since a cause of action accrued in favor of plaintiff against defendant for or on account of said services. Third. That on the 3d day of July, 1888, an account was stated between the plaintiff and defendant, at San Francisco, California, and upon such statement a balance of five thousand dollars was found due to the plaintiff from the defendant for and on account of said labor and services theretofore done and performed by the plaintiff for the defendant; and at said time and place the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff the said sum of five thousand dollars, and the plaintiff agreed to accept the same in full payment of all services theretofore rendered by him to defendant. That at said time two years had not elapsed since a cause of action accrued in favor of plaintiff against defendant for or on account of said services so rendered by plaintiff to defendant as aforesaid. Fourth. That on the 30th day of November, 1888, the defendant paid to the plaintiff, on account of said sum of $5,000, the sum of $900, but that no other sum has been paid by the defendant thereon. Fifth. That the plaintiff did not voluntarily undertake to perform, nor did he voluntarily perform, any services for the defendant. Sixth. That the defendant did not, to buy his peace, and without consideration, pay to plaintiff the sum of $900, nor any other sum of money; nor did plaintiff receive from defendant any sum of money whereby he became indebted to defendant. Seventh. That plaintiff's causes of action against the defendant were not, nor was any of them, barred by the provisions of section 339, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure of California, or any other provision of law." Upon these facts the court gave judgment for the plaintiff according to the prayer of his complaint, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The notice of motion for new trial stated that the motion would be made upon a bill of exceptions to be subsequently prepared, and on the grounds that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, that the decision was against law, and errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by defendant. The specifications attached to the bill of exceptions subsequently settled and filed were to the effect—First, that there was no evidence that any account was ever stated between the parties, or that there was any agreement between them that plaintiff's services were reasonably worth the sum of $5,000, or any sum whatever; and, second, that the evidence shows that no acknowledgment or promise in writing was made by defendant, and also shows that at the time of the commencement of the action the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, as pleaded in the answer. The specifications do not assail the first, fourth, fifth, and sixth findings, and the facts therein stated must be accepted as true. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff did perform services for the defendant for nearly two years, and that no right of action, by reason thereof, accrued to the plaintiff prior to January 20, 1887; and also that in November, 1888, defendant paid to plaintiff on account, and not to buy his peace, or without consideration, the sum of $900.

It is argued that the evidence did not justify the finding that an account was stated between the parties, because, according to the testimony for the plaintiff, defendant was to pay the $5,000 upon his return to Los Angeles, and upon making a settlement there with a Mr. Jewett; and it is claimed that this shows that the account was stated conditionally only, and that, in order to recover upon it, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to allege and prove that the conditions had been performed,—that is, that defendant had returned to Los Angeles, and had settled with Jewett, or, if he had not settled with him, that it was in consequence of his own fault, but that no such allegation was made or proof offered. An "account stated," as defined by Bouvier, is "an agreed balance of accounts; an account which has been examined and accepted by the parties." And in Chitty on Contracts (11th Amer. Ed., vol. 2, p. 962) it is said: "It must appear that at the time of the accounting certain claims existed, of and concerning which an account was stated; that a balance was then struck and agreed upon; and that defendant expressly admitted that a certain sum was then due from him as a debt. Hence it follows that an account cannot be stated with reference to a debt payable on a contingency," but that it is not "essential that there should be cross or reciprocal demands between the parties, or that the defendant's acknowledgment that a certain sum was due from him to the plaintiff should relate to more than a single debt or transaction." Here it was proved that plaintiff had presented a much larger claim for his services than was allowed, and that there had been considerable correspondence between the parties in regard to it; "that on the 3d day of July, 1888, the defendant, then being in San Francisco, called at the office of the plaintiff, and a conversation occurred between them relative to a settlement of plaintiff's claim. After some negotiation, defendant offered to pay plaintiff the sum of five thousand dollars in full settlement, the money to be paid by defendant as soon as he should settle matters with a Mr. Jewett, who was the agent of defendant at Los Angeles. Plaintiff accepted this offer, and told defendant that he would settle his account with defendant for that sum; and it was then agreed that defendant should pay plaintiff, and plaintiff would accept from defendant, $5,000, in extinction of all claims of plaintiff upon defendant." The claim of plaintiff was not a debt payable on a contingency, but was clearly such a one as might be agreed upon and stated by the parties; and the facts proved by plaintiff, if true, clearly show that the transaction constituted a full and complete statement of the account. It is true that the money was to be paid when defendant should settle with Jewett, but that did not affect the statement. If two parties, having accounts between them, examine the accounts, and a balance is then struck and agreed upon, and admitted to be due from one to the other, the statement is complete, though the debtor reserves the right to pay the balance at some future day. Tuggle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96, 18 Pac. Rep. 131. Whether the defendant had settled with Jewett before the action was commenced does not appear, but, if not, the only defense which could be interposed on this ground would be that the action was prematurely brought. No such defense, however, was interposed, and upon the record presented the question cannot now be considered.

But, conceding this to be so, it is further strenuously urged that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations pleaded, and that the finding of the court that it was not barred was contrary to, and not justified by, the evidence. This position is rested upon the theory that the statute began to run against plaintiff's claim when he completed his services on January 20, 1887, and that under section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure its running was not suspended or affected by the oral statement of the account, and hence that, as more than two years had elapsed when the complaint was filed, the action was barred. It is admitted, however, by the learned counsel, that this theory is in direct conflict with the rulings upon the same question in Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 Pac. Rep. 371, and Kahn v. Edwards, 75 Cal. 192, 16 Pac. Rep. 779, but it is claimed that these cases were not well considered, and should be overruled. In the first of these cases it is said: "An open account, already barred by the statute of limitations, cannot be relieved from the bar of such statute by an oral statement of such account, for the reason that under our Code (Code Civil Proc. § 360) no acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract by which to take the case out of the operation of the statute, unless the same is contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby. Where, however, the demand is not barred at the date of the account stated, although the statement is verbal, the statute begins to run upon the new cause of action thus brought into existence from the date of the settlement and new promise arising thereunder; and, if verbal, an action may, under subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be brought within two years after such settlement." And in the second case named this language was quoted and approved. In answer to the claim that these cases should be overruled, so far as they treat upon the subject in hand, it is enough to say that they are supported by many authorities elsewhere, and, in our opinion, should be sustained. It follows that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(98 Cal. 219)

WELSH v. BRAMLET. (No. 14,832.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 8, 1893.)

COUNTY OFFICERS — COMPENSATION — INCREASE DURING TERM—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The county government act of 1883, as amended in St. 1889, p. 232, fixed the salaries of district attorneys, making them full compensation for all services, including deputies. The county act of 1891 also fixed the salaries of said attorneys, but provided that the deputies should be paid by the counties as other officers. Held, that an attorney elected before the act last named took effect was not entitled to have his deputies paid by the county, as this would be an increase in salary during his term, within Const. art. 11, § 9.

2. That part of the act of 1891 segregating counties of the eighth class alone from all others, and conferring on the district attorney therein authority, which is not granted to that officer in other counties, to determine whether he will have deputies or not, is in violation of articles 4 and 11 of the constitution, with reference to local or special laws, and uniformity in county governments.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Petition by one Welsh for writ of mandate to compel Bramlet to draw his warrant as county auditor. Writ denied. Petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

H. H. Welsh, in pro. per. Sayle & Coldwell and E. D. Edwards, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellant was appointed assistant district attorney of Fresno county on the 1st day of April, 1891, by virtue of the provisions of subdivision 21 of section 170 of the county government act, passed March 31, 1891. He entered upon the duties of his office, and on the 3d day of July, 1891, made a demand upon the respondent, as county auditor, that he draw a warrant on the county treasury in his favor for the sum of $200, as his salary during the month of June. The respondent refused to comply, and the appellant instituted this proceeding for a writ of mandate compelling him to draw the warrant. The superior court denied the writ, and the petitioner has appealed.

1. Under the county government act of 1883, the county of Fresno became a county of the twenty-sixth class, and remained in that class until the act was superseded by the county government act of 1891. In 1889 (St. 1889, p. 232) the legislature revised the compensation of the officers of the several counties of the state, and by section 188 of the county government act, as then amended, the salary of the district attorney in counties of the twenty-sixth class, "for the services required of him by law or by virtue of his office," was fixed at $3,600; and in section 211 of the same act (page 300) it was declared that the salaries provided in the act should be "in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers therein named, either as officers, or ex officio officers, their deputies and assistants; and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries hereinbefore provided." Under the classification of counties made by the legislature in the county government act of 1891, according to the census of 1890, Fresno county became a county of the eighth class, and by section 170 of that act the compensation of the district attorney in counties of the eighth class was fixed at $3,600. The legislature, however, incorporated into this section of the act the following subdivisions: "21. The district attorney may appoint an assistant district attorney at a salary of $1,800 per annum, an assistant district attorney at a salary of $2,400 per annum, a deputy district attorney at a salary of $1,500 per annum." "23. All the provisions herein relating to counties of this class shall take effect from and after the date of the approval of this act, and the compensation of all assistants, deputies, and clerks shall be paid by the county in the same manner in which the salaries of county officers are now paid." Article 11, § 9, of the constitution, declares: "The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office." If the effect of the foregoing provisions of the act of 1891 was to increase the compensation of the district attorney of Fresno county beyond the amount at which it was fixed at the time his term of office began, they are in conflict with this section of the constitution, and do not form the basis of a charge against the county. In Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. Rep. 834, 29 Pac. Rep. 1092, the county clerk of Marin county, at the time of his election, and when his term of office began, was entitled to receive a fixed sum for the services to be rendered by virtue of his office. After he had entered upon his term of office, he appointed Dougherty as one of his deputies, by virtue of a provision in the county government act authorizing the board of supervisors in certain classes of counties, one of which included Marin, to permit certain officers, whose compensation for all services to be rendered by them had been fixed at a gross sum, to appoint deputies, whose salaries should be a charge upon the county treasury. Upon an application for a writ of mandate to compel such payment by the county, it was held that that provision of the county government act was invalid. That case was very elaborately argued, and was determined upon deliberate consideration, and holds: (1) That under the provisions of section 5, art. 11, of the constitution, the legislature is required to fix the compensation of the county officers, and that it is not competent for that body to delegate the exercise of this authority to the discretion of any other body. (2) That a statute which authorizes the increase of salaries in certain counties, selected arbitrarily, and without reference to any criterion as the basis of such selection, is violative of the constitution, in not being uniform in its operation. (3) That when the legislature has fixed the compensation of an officer at a gross sum, it cannot increase that compensation during his term of office, directly, by legislative act, or indirectly, by providing that the salaries of his deputies, which by the law as it existed when his term of office began were to be paid by him out of this gross sum, shall be made a county charge, and paid out of the county treasury. In holding that the foregoing provision of the county government act was unconstitutional, it was said: "The salary of this officer was fixed by the legislature with direct reference to the fact that out of it he was to pay his own deputies, and the purpose of this amended section is to authorize the board of supervisors of that county to suspend the operation of this law in so far as he is thereby required to pay such deputies, and to place the burden upon the county. The power thus to change a law of the state is necessarily legislative in character, and is vested exclusively in the legislature, and cannot be delegated by it to the board of supervisors of the county." Page 606, 94 Cal., and page 1093, 29 Pac. Rep. And in the concurring opinion of the chief justice, it was said that the legislature "could not, either by direct enactment, or by authorizing the boards of supervisors to so order, impose upon a county treasury the payment of the salary of any deputy of a county officer elected while the act of 1883 remained in force, and unamended as to the provisions under discussion." Page 613, 94 Cal., and page 1095, 29 Pac. Rep. In the opinion of Mr. Justice Garoute, which was rendered upon the first hearing in the case, and which was also adopted by the court upon the subsequent hearing, it was said with reference to article 11, § 5, of the constitution: "To construe this provision of the constitution so that a county clerk's salary could not be increased during his term of office, but that an act of the legislature would be valid which provided that all of his deputies, men whom he was bound to employ and bound to pay, in the absence of such an act, should be paid by the county, independent of and in addition to the clerk's salary, would be to allow that to be done indirectly which could not be done directly, and would be establishing a medium for the practice of the very abuses which the constitutional provision was inserted to destroy." At the general election in 1890, W. D. Tupper was elected district attorney of Fresno county for the term of two years, and his term of office began on the 1st day of January 1891. At that date the compensation of the district attorney of Fresno county, as provided by the law then in force, was the sum of $3,600, and this sum was by the same law declared to be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description to be rendered by him and his deputies and assistants, and by virtue of section 9, art. 11, of the constitution, this salary was to remain as his entire compensation during his term of office, or until the 1st day of January, 1893. The provision in subdivision 21, § 170, of the county government act of 1891, authorizing him to appoint assistant district attorneys and a deputy district attorney, conferred no special authority in this respect, for, by section 61 of the act under which he was elected, he was authorized to "appoint as many deputies as may be necessary for the prompt and faithful discharge of the duties of his office." Section 211 of the act which was in force at the time when his term of office began required him, however, to pay the salaries or other compensation of these deputies and assistants out of the salary that had been provided for him in the act, and the foregoing provision in subdivision 23, § 170, of the county government act of 1891, that this compensation should be paid by the county, was to that extent an increase of his salary. There is no difference in principle between a statute authorizing the board of supervisors to permit a county officer to appoint a deputy, whose salary shall be a charge upon the county treasury, and one directly authorizing such officer himself to appoint a deputy, whose salary shall be paid by the county. The result in either case is to increase the compensation of the officer beyond the amount at which it was fixed at the time of his election and at the commencement of his term of office. If there be any difference in principle between the two statutes, the stronger argument is in favor of the one which would subject such appointment to the arbitrament of the legislative body of the county, rather than to leave it to the will of the officer himself to determine whether his salary should be so increased.

2. Section 4, art. 11, of the constitution, provides that "the legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the state." This means that the "system" or plan for the government of the several counties in the state shall be uniform, so that its several parts shall be applicable to each county. The legislature is forbidden by the constitution from passing any local or special law "regulating county or township business," (article 4, § 25, par. 9,) or "prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties," (Id. par. 28.) Section 5, art. 11, directs that "the legislature by general and uniform laws shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of * * * such county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties, and fix their terms of office." This provision of the constitution is mandatory, and must be construed not only as giving to the legislature the exclusive authority to provide for the officers in the several counties, fix their terms of office, and prescribe their duties, but also as declaring that such provision must be made "by general and uniform laws," and that any law which the legislature may enact upon these subjects must be uniformly applicable to all the counties in the state. The county government act of 1891 purports to be applicable to all the counties of the state. Its title is "an act to establish a uniform system of county and township governments." The first 161 sections of the act are devoted to provisions for the various officers of the counties, authorizing their election, fixing their terms of office, and prescribing their powers and duties. Section 162 makes a classification of all the counties in the state, according to their population, "for the purpose of regulating the compensation of all officers hereinbefore provided for," making 53 classes for the 53 counties into which the state was then divided. This classification is criticised in the respondent's brief as being in contravention of the evident purpose of the constitution, but it was held in Longan v. County of Solano, 65 Cal. 125, 3 Pac. Rep. 463, that the constitution had conferred upon the legislature authority to make the classification, and that its action therein is not reviewable by the judiciary. Sections 163-215, both inclusive, provide for the compensation of the different county officers in the several classes. In these sections, in addition to providing for the compensation of the various officers in the several classes, are found other provisions prescribing duties for county officers in certain classes, which are not made for all classes, fixing the terms of county officers in some classes at four years, while the section which declares the term of county officers generally limits it to two years, establishing special fee bills for certain classes, fixing the fees of witnesses and jurors in other classes, prescribing rules for the conduct of courts, and fixing penalties for violation of ordinances, which are applicable to only one or more of the several classes. It is, however, unnecessary here to consider the particulars in which the uniformity of the law is destroyed in matters other than those which refer to the office and duties of the district attorney. In counties of the second class the salary of this office is fixed at $4,000 per annum, and the board of supervisors is authorized to allow him an assistant and five deputies, at salaries to be fixed by the board, which are to constitute a county charge. In counties of the sixth class the legislature has itself created the offices of assistant district attorney and deputy district attorney, "to be appointed by the district attorney of said county, and to remain in office during the pleasure of the district attorney thereof," with fixed salaries to be paid by the county. In counties of the eighth class alone is the district attorney authorized of his own motion to determine whether he will appoint any deputies, and if so, to make the salary of those appointed a county charge. Section 216 of the act enumerates 29 classes in which authority is conferred upon the board of supervisors to authorize the appointment of deputies whose salary shall be made a county charge, and for several of the classes there is no provision, except the general one in section 61, by which this officer can appoint any deputy. The above provision of section 170, by which counties of the eighth class alone are segregated from the others, and authority conferred upon the district attorney therein which is not granted to that officer in other counties, renders the act to that extent local and special, and in violation of the foregoing provision of the constitution. In Cody v. Murphey, 89 Cal. 522, 26 Pac. Rep. 1081, we held that an amendment to a section of the county government act fixing the salaries of the county officers in a certain class was a general law, for the reason that it applied to all counties that were within that class. The logic of that opinion is clear, and embraces all laws falling within the principles of that case. As the legislature is expressly authorized by the constitution to classify the several counties of the state according to their population, for the purpose of fixing the compensation of the county officers, it follows that, when such classification has been made, a statute providing for the compensation of the officers within any class is a general law, and that it is immaterial whether such provision be in a special statute for each class, or in a single act providing for all of the classes, and that an amendment to such statute which affects an entire class is equally a general law as was the original act. The legislature has not the general authority to enact laws for the counties by classes, nor is it authorized to make a classification of counties for any purpose of legislation, except for the purpose of enabling it to regulate the compensation of the county officers for whose election or appointment it shall provide. San Luis Obispo Co. v. Graves, 84 Cal. 71, 23 Pac. Rep. 1032. Whenever it attempts to enact a law for one or more of the counties of the state upon subjects that it is directed to provide for by general laws, or which are to form part of a uniform system for the whole state, whether such counties are designated directly by name, or by reference to a class into which they have been placed for other subjects of legislation, it infringes these provisions of the constitution. We must take judicial knowledge that there is only one county in the state whose population places it in the eighth class, and, if an act is passed by the legislature that is applicable to only one county in the state, it does not cease to be a local act by reason of the fact that it purports to be applicable to a class of counties which the legislature is not authorized to create for the purpose of such legislation, and of which that county constitutes the only member.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur. DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; BEATTY, C. J.

eled in going only, in the discharge of the duties of his office." Under St. 1869-70, p. 148, the law in force when the county government act was passed, constables were entitled to 30 cents per mile for the distance traveled for the purpose of arresting a prisoner, and also for conveying him to the magistrate or to jail after the arrest. Held, that the only change in the compensation of constables intended by the later act was to reduce their mileage from 30 cents to 25 cents per mile.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county; J. K. Law, Judge.

Action by one Nelson against Breen and others. From the judgment entered, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Breckinbridge & Peck, for appellant
W. A. Nygh, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The question involved on this appeal is the right of a constable in Merced county to charge mileage for the distance traveled for the purpose of arresting a prisoner, and also for conveying him to jail after his arrest. The question was decided in the affirmative in Allen v. Napa Co., 82 Cal. 187, 23 Pac. Rep. 43, following the decision in Cunningham v. San Joaquin Co., 49 Cal. 323. It is contended, however, that by subdivision 14 of section 201 of the county government act of 1889, (St. 1889, p. 297,) a different rule of compensation has been prescribed. Under that section constables in counties of the thirty-ninth class, (which embraces Merced county) are authorized to receive "such fees as are now or may hereafter be allowed by law, except that the constable's mileage shall not exceed twenty-five cents for each mile traveled in going only, in the discharge of the duties of his office." It is contended that under this provision a constable is entitled to receive mileage "for going only" for the purpose of making the arrest, and not for afterwards conveying him to jail. We are of opinion, however, that the legislature intended by this section to change only the rate of mileage, and not the subjects for which it should be received, and that, if it had intended to make any other change than the rate of mileage, it would have expressed its intention in definite terms. The statute of 1869-70 (page 148) was the law in force for regulating the fees of constables at the time when the county government act was passed, and must be resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining "such fees as are allowed by law;" and the construction which that statute had received at the date of the passage of the latter act must be held to have been intended by the legislature when it was adopted as the measure of compensation for constables. In Cunningham v. San Joaquin Co., supra, the court held that the words "in going only," as used in that statute, applied only to executing a warrant of arrest, for the reason that "executing a warrant of arrest" and "taking a prisoner before a magistrate, or to jail," were mentioned as separate and distinct acts to be done by the officer, and therefore that the officer was entitled to mileage for his travel in both directions; and this construction was followed in Allen v. Napa Co., supra, in a case in which the right of a constable

98 Cal. 245

NELSON v. BREEN et al. (No. 18,012.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1893.)

CONSTABLES—MILEAGE FEES.

St. 1889, p. 297, (County Government Act.) § 201, subd. 14, provides that constables in counties of the thirty-ninth class shall receive "such fees as are now or may hereafter be allowed by law, except that the constable's mileage shall not exceed 25 cents for each mile trav-to mileage was involved. The proposition that section 201 authorizes the constable to receive only the same "fees," but that for the purpose of estimating "mileage" a new rule is prescribed, is untenable. The act of 1869-70 does not in terms authorize constables to charge any mileage, the provision being, (section 23:) "For all other services the same fees as are allowed to sheriffs for similar services;" and in construing this provision, in Allen v. Napa Co., it was held that by virtue thereof constables were entitled to receive the same mileage, as well as fees, that sheriffs were authorized to receive. "The duties of his office," in the discharge of which the constable is entitled to receive mileage, are the same duties as those which are referred to in the act of 1869-70, and the mileage for which a constable is to be allowed compensation is the same as that for which provision is made in that statute. The construction asked for by the appellant would require us to hold that the provision in that act, that "in serving a subpoena or venire, when two or more jurors or witnesses live in the same direction, but one mileage shall be charged," has also been abrogated. Such a construction would be manifestly inconsistent with the apparent intention of the legislature. We hold, therefore, that the only change in compensation of constables which the legislature intended by the above provision of the county government act was to reduce their mileage from 30 cents to 25 cents per mile, but that the subjects for which they are entitled to such mileage are the same as existed when the act was passed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

98 Cal. 271

BURNS v. SCOOFFY et al. (No. 14,805.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

OPENING DEFAULT — PLEADING — STRIKING OUT ANSWER—AMENDMENT.

1. Defendant H. and her attorney resided 600 miles from the place where the action was pending, and several days were required to make the journey between the two places. Six days before the time to answer expired, the attorney, while engaged in drawing the answer, learned that his brother, who was among strangers, had been shot, and he went to his relief. A surgical operation was necessary, and the attorney was compelled to remain with his brother several days, during which time, as he averred on oath, his condition was such that he was unable to complete the answer in time. He sent a request for a short extension, which was refused, of which refusal he learned when too late to answer. Judgment was rendered against his client by default. Held, that the case was within Code Civil Proc. § 473, providing that the court may relieve a party from a judgment rendered against him through his "excusable neglect."

2. An answer which is susceptible of being amended by a statement of facts known to exist, and which constitutes a defense to an action, should not be stricken out except in extreme cases, and the striking out of such an answer can only be justified in the face of facts showing willful neglect, inexcusable carelessness, or irreparable injury to plaintiff.

3. Where an amendment to an answer is allowed, and a delay is caused thereby, the court may impose such terms as will compensate plaintiff for any injury he may suffer from the delay.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; Jas. E. Murphy, Judge.

Action by John Burns against Ida M. Scooffy and others to establish right to purchase school lands. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendants Lallah S. Highton and Mansfield Lovell appeal. Reversed.

Chas. E. Wilson and R. W. Miller, for appellants. L. F. Cooper, L. F. Coburn, and Walter N. Linforth, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal by Mansfield Lovell and Lallah S. Highton, two of the defendants in the above-entitled cause, from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. John Burns instituted the action against Ida M. Scooffy, Lallah S. Highton, Edith Cook, Mansfield Lovell, Robert T. Cottingham, Nelson R. Doolittle, and Harry J. Gray, to establish his right to purchase from the state of California the N. ½ of section 35, (school land,) in township 14 N., range 1 E., Humboldt meridian, and to have like applications of the defendants, and each of them, to purchase from said state, declared invalid and of no effect. The time for answer by the defendant Lallah S. Highton expired January 19, 1891, and, no answer having been filed, her default was entered January 20, 1891. A motion to set aside the default with leave to answer was refused by the court, and judgment entered in favor of plaintiff.

I am of opinion the showing on the motion to set aside the default made out a clear case of excusable neglect. Defendant and her attorney resided in San Francisco, some 600 miles from Crescent City, in the county of Del Norte, where the action was pending, and several days are required to make the journey between the two points. On the 13th day of January, and while the attorney of defendant was engaged in drawing her answer, he received a telegram to the effect that his brother had been shot and dangerously wounded. He at once went to his relief. A surgical operation was rendered necessary, and, the brother being among strangers, the attorney stayed at his bedside for several days, during which time, as he avers under oath, his physical and mental condition was such, in consequence of the condition of his brother, that he was unable to complete the answer in time. He did, however, send a request for a short extension of time to answer, which was refused, and which refusal he learned when too late to answer. If there are in the profession men who, upon learning that a brother has been dangerously wounded by a would-be assassin, and who, upon being called upon to go to his relief "with a carriage and a doctor," fail to do so, and subordinate the duties of humanity and the ties of kinship to the urgency of professional engagements, they are probably few in number, and it is to be hoped their number will decrease. If the case was not one of commendable neglect, it was at least a case of excusable neglect.¹

The affidavit of Henry E. Highton on behalf of defendant shows a state of facts which, if established, constitutes a valid cause of action and defense on the part of the defendant Highton as against plaintiff. Had the application been made at an earlier day, and had it been accompanied by the proposed answer, it would certainly have commended itself more strongly to our sense of justice. The delay did not, however, extend beyond the statutory period of six months, within which the court is authorized to intervene, and the difficulty of communication with the place of trial affords some excuse for a delay which, under other circumstances, might be regarded as fatal to the application for relief.

Defendant Lovell answered in due time, setting out his application to purchase the land in dispute, and showing that his application was filed in the office of the surveyor general March 27, 1889, but failed to aver that within six months thereafter he demanded an approval of his application, or made a demand of an order of reference, or that a reference to a court had been had, as required by section 3498 of the Political Code. On motion of plaintiff's counsel his answer was for this cause stricken out. As the application to purchase became void at the expiration of six months unless the action indicated was taken, it was necessary to aver it to have been so taken, and without it the answer was fatally defective. After the motion to strike out, and before judgment, defendant asked leave to file an amendment to the answer, to be verified by one of the attorneys, then and there averring upon information and belief that Lovell, on the 26th day of September, 1889, did demand of the surveyor general an approval of his application to purchase, etc. Pending the hearing of the motion, attorneys for defendant offered, if the proposed amendment was deemed insufficient by reason of being on information and belief, instead of positive, and as within the knowledge of defendant, to answer in positive form, if given time to send the answer to defendant for verification, who was at San Francisco, and not present in court; all of which was refused. The affidavits in support of the motion showed that the omission of the allegations from the answer was in all probability an oversight on the part of the attorney who drew the pleading. Experience shows that in the attainment of justice by resort to judicial tribunals amendments to pleadings are of ever recurring necessity; and the tendency of judicial decisions should be, and is, towards liberality in permitting, where it can be done without working great delay, such amendments as facilitate the production of all the facts bearing upon the questions involved. Our Code looks to liberality in this matter, and the action of our courts tends in the same direction. To strike out a pleading, which is susceptible of being amended by a statement of facts known to exist, and which constitute a cause of action or defense to an action, is a harsh proceeding, and should only be resorted to in extreme cases. To refuse permission to answer, with a valid defense in hand, can only be justified in the face of facts showing willful neglect, inexcusable carelessness, or irreparable injury to plaintiff.

The drift of opinion in this court from an early date has favored a broad liberality, rather than severely technical tendencies, on this subject. Connally v. Peck, 3 Cal. 75; Tyron v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 494; Peters v. Foss, 16 Cal. 357; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660; Hooper v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 27, Cal. 35; Pierson v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 127; Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 318; Kirstein v. Madden, 38 Cal. 158; Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 395; Sharon v. Sharon, 77 Cal. 105, 19 Pac. Rep. 230; Railroad Co. v. Purcell, 77 Cal. 72, 18 Pac. Rep. 886; McPherson v. Weston, 85 Cal. 93, 24 Pac. Rep. 733; Chatfield v. Williams, 85 Cal. 518, 24 Pac. Rep. 839. The case last cited—Chatfield v. Williams—is in most respects similar to this. There, as here, the answer had been on file for months, without demurrer or motion to strike out, and no notice was given until the parties were ready for trial upon the merits. In that case the amendment sought did not necessitate a continuance, while here it would have done so. In commenting upon that point, however, the court said: "It does not appear that any delay would have been caused by the proposed amendment; but, if there had been, the court could have required an immediate amendment, and imposed terms commensurate to the time and expense of the continuance." These remarks of the court are pertinent to the case in hand, and, had the court allowed the amendment upon such terms as would have compensated plaintiff for all the detriment he suffered in consequence thereof, it might properly have been said in response to any objection that the mistakes and misfortunes of defendants or their attorneys should not result in injury to plaintiff. I am of opinion the judgment appealed from should be reversed, and the court below directed to permit the defendant Lallah S. Highton to file her answer, and the defendant Mansfield Lovell to amend his answer by setting up in positive terms, and not upon information or belief, the allegations set out in his proffered amendment.

¹Code Civil Proc. § 473, provides that the court may relieve a party from a judgment rendered against him through his excusable neglect.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to permit the defendant Lallah S. Highton to file her answer within 30 days after filing remittitur, and the defendant Mansfield Lovell to amend his answer by setting up in positive terms the allegations set out in his proffered amendment.

(98 Cal. xvii)

GRIFFIN v. SCOOFFY et al. (No. 14,866.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Del Norte county; Jas. E. Murphy, Judge.

Action by David R. Griffin against Ida M. Scooffy and others to establish right to purchase school lands. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendants Lallah S. Highton and Mansfield Lovell appeal. Reversed.

Chas. E. Wilson and R. W. Miller, for appellants. L. F. Cooper, L. F. Coburn, and Walter N. Linforth, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause is in all respects, except in the name of the plaintiff and the land sought to be purchased, a counterpart of Burns v. Scooffy, (No. 14,805,) 33 Pac. Rep. 86, (this day decided on appeal.) Upon the authority of that case, and for the reasons given in the opinion therein, the judgment appealed from herein is reversed, and the court below directed to permit the defendant Lallah S. Highton to file her answer within 30 days after filing remittitur, and the defendant Mansfield Lovell to amend his answer as per his motion therefor, heretofore made in the court below, except that the allegations in such amendment be positive in form, and not on information or belief.

(98 Cal. 253)

WAINSCOTT v. OCCIDENTAL BLDG. & LOAN ASS'N. (No. 18,092.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1893.)

EQUITY—RESCISSION—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS.

1. In an action by the vendee to rescind a purchase of land on the ground of fraudulent representations by the vendor, where the findings show facts indicating that, because of the fraud, plaintiff has been injured many thousand dollars, they support a judgment for plaintiff, though no specific amount of damages is found.

2. In an action by the vendee to rescind the purchase of a vineyard because of fraudulent representations by the vendor, where it appears that when plaintiff visited the premises, prior to the purchase, the vines were not sufficiently developed for any person, not an expert, to learn their condition except by a critical examination; that plaintiff was prevented from making such examination by the misrepresentations of defendant's employe, and was prevented from seeking information from a former owner, who was on the premises, by representations that the latter was opposed to leaving the place, and by such inquiry the trade was liable to be broken up,—there is no presumption that plaintiff relied on his own judgment in making the purchase, instead of on the representations made by defendant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; A. P. Catlin, Judge.

Action by F. S. Wainscott against the Occidental Building & Loan Association to rescind a purchase of land. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robt. T. Devlin, for appellant. S. Solon Holl, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an action for the rescission of certain conveyances, and instruments connected therewith, growing out of an exchange of property owned by plaintiff, in the county of Placer, for a tract of land, with vineyard thereon, etc., owned by defendant, situated at Sonoma, in the county of Sonoma. The action is based upon false and fraudulent representations of defendant and its agents, whereby plaintiff is averred to have been defrauded. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant prosecutes an appeal.

The first point made by appellant is that the complaint does not allege, and the court does not find, that the plaintiff was damaged, and hence that the findings do not support the judgment. In view of the doctrine enunciated by elementary writers, and fully concurred in by the courts of probably every state of the Union, it will be readily admitted on all hands that courts of justice do not act as mere tribunals of conscience to enforce duties which are purely moral, and involving no pecuniary or tangible injury. Falsehood, fraud, and deceit are not to be commended; but, so long as their practice only involves a question of morals, the duty of their extirpation rests elsewhere than in the courts. But when they are made use of in the business transactions of life to accomplish a fraudulent purpose, as against those having a right to rely upon their truthfulness, and who do so rely, and are thereby deceived and injured, courts intervene to redress the wrong and injury. The reproof of the moral delinquency is but an incident, an attending circumstance, of the paramount object, viz. the redress of the injury. It is said in such cases: "If any pecuniary loss is shown to have resulted the court will not inquire into the extent of the injury. It is sufficient if the party misled has been very slightly prejudiced, if the amount is at all appreciable." Pom. Eq. Jur. § 898, and cases cited. Do the complaint and findings of the court show that plaintiff was damaged? Damage is defined to be "loss, injury, or deterioration caused by the negligence, design, or accident of one person to another, in respect of the latter's person or property." Black, Law Dict. tit.

"Damage." The plural of the word "damages" signifies a compensation in money for a loss or damage. This action is not one to recover damages,—a money compensation. Doubtless, if plaintiff has a cause of action, he could have affirmed the contract, and sued for damages. He has, however, elected to seek a cancellation for the injury, the damage, sustained. A reference to a portion, only, of the findings, which follow substantially the allegations of the complaint, but are in some respects more full and explicit, will, it is thought, suffice to settle the question of damage: (1) Defendant was, and since December, 1888, had been, the owner of the property conveyed to plaintiff. (2) In May, 1890, its agent represented to plaintiff that he, as agent, but without disclosing his principal, had authority to dispose of the property for one Pickett, who lived upon the land as a tenant of defendant, and who wished to sell, by reason of his advanced age. (3) That the tract contained 43 acres, when in fact it contained but 37 acres, a street being included in the inclosure. (4) That 38 acres were set out in a vineyard with foreign varieties of grapes. That eight tons per acre was not an uncommon yield of grapes from these vines per annum. That the vines were healthy, and free from phylloxera. That the place had yielded an average income for 10 years of $2,200 per year over and above all expenses. Whereas the truth was that the vineyard had not produced more than 18 to 20 tons of grapes per annum for several years. The vines had been attacked by phylloxera and other pests until three-fourths of them were dead, and the gross annual income had, for the last five or six years, gradually decreased from $1,000 to $600, which was little more than the expense of cultivation. That the vineyard was practically valueless, and had been leased to Pickett for the year 1890, who received the whole crop for taking care of the vineyard. (5) These and other statements were false, and known by defendant to be so when made, and were made with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiff. The latter relied upon their truthfulness, and was deceived and defrauded thereby into agreeing to purchase and in purchasing the property. It is hard to realize, in the face of these facts, that the plaintiff was not injured to the extent of many thousand dollars. The injury is shown to the court by the complaint and findings, and, although the technical word "damages" is not used, the record is replete with apt expressions of like import and significance. We find nothing in the cases cited under this head in conflict with the views expressed. Wainwright v. Weske, 82 Cal. 193, 23 Pac. Rep. 12, passed off upon the sufficiency of the complaint, and the court held, in substance, (1) that, treated as an action to rescind a contract, it was fatally defective, in not showing an offer on the part of plaintiff to return certain money received by the plaintiff from defendant; (2) that, viewed as an action to recover damages, it was lacking in several elements essential to a recovery. He who would recover damages in a court of law must set forth in an orderly manner the facts showing his right to recover, and the amount to which he is entitled, to the exclusion of every presumption to the contrary. In such an action the damages are the essential thing. In an action to rescind upon the ground of fraud, the fraud is the essential thing; and while it must be coupled with loss, injury, damage, the precise amount of such damage is of secondary importance. Had plaintiff, in Wainwright v. Weske, averred a tender of the money received by him, and demanded the return of his notes and property, his complaint would have contained sufficient to entitle him to a rescission of the agreement. Morrison v. Lods, 39 Cal. 385; Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 398, 20 Pac. Rep. 868; Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 20 Pac. Rep. 386. Purdy v. Bullard, 41 Cal. 444, differed in essential particulars from the case in hand.

The second position taken by appellant is that, no matter what representations are made in reference to the character and value of the property by a vendor, if the purchaser visit the property itself, it being land, prior to the sale, and makes a personal examination of it touching those representations, he will be presumed to rely, not upon the representations, but upon his own judgment in making the purchase. Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771, sustains the proposition contended for; but in the same connection it is proper to say that this rule must be taken subject to the proviso that the vendor does nothing to prevent his investigation from being as full as he chooses. Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 259, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881. The findings show that on May 5, 1890, plaintiff, with an employe of defendant's agent, visited the vineyard, but that at that time the vines, except a few acres of Tokays, were not sufficiently developed for any person not an expert vineyardist to learn their condition, except by close and critical examination, or by inquiring of those who knew their condition; that plaintiff was prevented by the deceit and misrepresentations of the employes from making a critical or close examination of the vineyard, and from speaking to or inquiring of the former owner, who was on the premises at the time, and who well knew the facts, it being represented that the former owner's wife was opposed to leaving the place, and if the plaintiff talked to her she was liable to break up the trade; and much more, tending to satisfy and prevent any examination. At a later period and before the deeds were executed, similar artifices were resorted to, with good effect, to prevent plaintiff from again visiting the vineyard, as he desired to do, and that, too, when an examination would have demonstrated the worthless condition of the vines. Taken all in all, it is not made to appear that defendant should escape from the effect of the judgment. The offer to rescind was full and complete, and included a return of everything to which the defendant was entitled. The rules applicable to cases of this character are succinctly stated by Lamar, J., in Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S., at page 250, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881, as follows: "(1) That defendant has made a representation in regard to a material fact; (2) that such representation is false; (3) that such representation was not actually believed by the defendant, on reasonable grounds, to be true; (4) that it was made with intent that it should be acted on; (5) that it was acted on by complainant, to his damage; and (6) that in so acting on it the complainant was ignorant of its falsity, and reasonably believed it to be true." These rules, properly construed, exclude such statements as consist merely of the expression of opinions, or judgment honestly entertained, and save in exceptional cases, also opinions and statements of vendor in respect to value. Tested in the light of these propositions, the judgment and order appealed from are correct, and should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

3 Cal. Unrep. 862

KELLENBERGER et al. v. MARKET ST. CABLE RY. CO. (No. 15,020.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 3, 1893.)

APPEAL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Where the evidence is dubious and conflicting, the court on appeal will not, although it may differ in opinion with the lower court, revise the action of the court below in granting or refusing a new trial, unless an abuse of discretion is shown.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John F. Finn, Judge.

Action by Ida Kellenberger and husband against the Market Street Cable Railway Company to recover damages for personal injuries. From an order granting a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Craig, Frank Shay, and R. B. Carpenter, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, A. R. Cotton, and J. C. McKee, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been received by Ida Kellenberger, wife of her coplaintiff, on the 8th day of April, 1890, while a passenger on the cablecar of the defendant. Plaintiff was on a Hayes street car, the gripman of which, as he approached the crossing of the Sutter street cable road on Larkin street, should, it appears, have "let go," or released the cable, but was diverted from doing so by the perilous situation of a pedestrian on the track, and as a result did not let go until he went over the pulley, and then could not do so, and the grip struck the bumper in the Sutter street track, producing a concussion by which, as is alleged, plaintiff was thrown from her seat and against one of the seats on the opposite side of the car, and thereby injured.

Two issues only of importance are made by the pleadings: (1) Was defendant guilty of negligence? (2) Was plaintiff injured thereby? Manifestly both of these issues needed to be answered in the affirmative, to entitle plaintiff to recover. For if defendant was not negligent, or if, being negligent, plaintiff was not injured thereby, there is no cause of action. The court below must have concluded that there was evidence sufficient to establish the affirmative of both the propositions. Looking at the case as presented here upon the cold record, and it must be said: (1) That plaintiffs made a case entitling them to a verdict. (2) The case made by the defense on its face was sufficient to fully justify the jury in the belief that the injuries of plaintiff were simulated, and to uphold the verdict in favor of defendant. The opportunity of the court below to determine as to the credibility of witnesses, the bias and prejudice, if any, exhibited by them, and generally to divine the truth in the conflicting evidence presented, gave him a decided advantage over us when seeking the same object. It has long been held that, where the evidence is dubious and conflicting, the supreme court will not, although it may differ in opinion from the lower court, revise the discretion of the court below in granting or refusing a new trial, unless there is abuse of such discretion. Taylor v. McKinley, 4 Cal. 104; Walton v. Maguire, 17 Cal. 92; Low v. McCallan, 64 Cal. 2, 27 Pac. Rep. 787; Savage v. Sweeney, 63 Cal. 340. A large number of cases might be cited to like effect, but these will suffice. The evidence presented a substantial conflict, and we are not prepared to say there was an abuse of discretion by the court below in granting a new trial. The order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order appealed from is affirmed.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 865)

JACOBS v. WALKER. (No. 14,976.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

CONTEST OF RIGHT TO PURCHASE STATE LANDS—NEW TRIAL AFTER REVERSAL ON APPEAL.

1. The fact that plaintiff's application to purchase state land, of some portion of which he is in possession, has been adjudged invalid, and that it has been determined that he has no right to purchase, makes him none the less a proper party to proceedings to determine a contest inaugurated by a protest in the surveyor general's office against the purchase of the land by defendant. Garfield v. Wilson, 15 Pac. Rep. 620, 74 Cal. 175, and Perri v. Beaumont, 27 Pac. Rep. 534, 91 Cal. 30, followed.

2. The amendatory act of 1885, which does not require an application to purchase state land, not suitable for cultivation, to state that the applicant is an actual settler, does not cover applications made before its enactment, and render unnecessary proof that one previously applying is an actual settler, as required by the old statute.

3. Where, on appeal, a new trial is ordered without limitation for a specified reason, the new trial should not be limited to the one issue discussed. Chandler v. Bank, 61 Cal. 401; 4 Pac. Rep. 502, 65 Cal. 498; 11 Pac. Rep. 791, 14 Pac. Rep. 864, and 73 Cal. 317, —distinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Proceedings by Abner D. Jacobs against J. B. Walker to determine their right to purchase state lands. From a judgment for defendant and order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

T. L. Carothers, for appellant. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This a contest in regard to the right to purchase state land, and this is the second appeal to this court. 90 Cal. 43, 27 Pac. Rep. 48. On the first trial it was found that plaintiff in his application to purchase had falsely stated that there was no possession of any portion of the land adverse to his possession. It was found that in every other respect the matters stated in his application were true, but because of the one false statement it was adjudged that his application was invalid. This finding was affirmed on the former appeal. As to the defendant it was said that there was no finding that he was an actual resident upon the land, nor did it appear that there might not be some part of the land, equal to a legal subdivision, which was suitable for cultivation. The judgment was therefore affirmed as to plaintiff's claim, and as to the defendant it was reversed, and a new trial ordered. The complaint shows that the land in dispute is a part of a thirty-sixth section. That the defendant applied to purchase on the 23d of February, 1883, which application was approved May 3, 1883, and a certificate of purchase issued to defendant June 16, 1883. That plaintiff made his application May 6, 1884, and at the same time filed with the surveyor general a verified protest in writing against the issuance of any further evidence of title to the defendant. Attached to the complaint is the certificate of the surveyor general to the fact of the protest, and referring the contest to the courts for determination. Defendant's answer falls to deny that there was a protest, and that there was is found by the court. Yet respondent in his brief claims that plaintiff has not protested, and that the contest was not inaugurated in the state land office. He contends that as it was adjudged that the plaintiff's application to purchase was invalid, and it has been determined that he has no right to purchase, the contest is ended so far as plaintiff is concerned, and he is out of the case. Of course, if this be so, plaintiff is not a party, and cannot appeal. It would seem, also, that, if the contest inaugurated by plaintiff's protest is ended, the courts have no further jurisdiction of the matter. For where there is no contest, the surveyor general must himself determine such questions as arise. As authority for this proposition he cites Ramsey v. Flournoy, 58 Cal. 260. But that case was expressly overruled in Perri v. Beaumont, 91 Cal. 30, 27 Pac. Rep. 534. So far as this question is concerned, I am unable to find any difference whatever in the last-named case and this. In both, the contest was inaugurated by a protest in the surveyor general's office by one who appeared on the face of the record to have made no valid application to purchase, though both had filed formal applications, and both were found to be in possession of some portion of the land. And in these respects both cases seem to be exactly like Garfield v. Wilson, 74 Cal. 175, 15 Pac. Rep. 620. In those cases this point was fully discussed, and the matter need not be again considered. According to those cases, plaintiff is a proper party, and is entitled to be heard.

Respondent further contends that the specifications in the notice of the motion for a new trial, which was made upon the minutes of the court, as to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence, are defective. One is to the effect that there was no evidence tending to show that the defendant was an actual settler upon the land, when he applied to purchase. At the time defendant made his application to purchase, 1883, it was necessary to state in the application that he was an actual settler upon the land. Of course, unless this statement were true, he had no valid application to purchase, and he would be left in the same position as the plaintiff. The statute was amended in 1885, so that this statement was not required when the lands were not suitable for cultivation. This does not cover applications made before that time which were invalid when made. This defect in the findings was noticed on the last appeal, but as it was not important, since a new trial was ordered, the consequences of such failure were not commented on. But this was a material issue on the last trial, and, if there was no evidence upon that issue, the case must be reversed. This specification is therefore sufficient.

The statement shows that there was no evidence whatever upon this subject, and that there was not because the learned judge concluded that a new trial was ordered only upon the one issue,—whether the land was suitable for cultivation. I see no warrant for such a conclusion. The judgment here ordered a new trial, and there was no hint at any restriction as to the scope of such new trial. The order is in the usual form, and there is no more justification in claiming that the new trial was to be limited than in the numerous cases in which the same language is used, found in every volume of our Reports. It is not uncommon to send back a cause for a new trial because the court has failed to find upon some one material issue. Yet no one ever supposed, because the particular defect was specially pointed out in the opinion, that the new trial was limited thereby to the one issue discussed. The opinion is not the judgment, although it may constitute the law of the case. When a new trial is ordered without limitation, it must be understood, as it always has been, that a new trial is ordered in the whole case. It is said that the court based its action on the case of Chandler v. Bank, which was three times appealed to this court. 61 Cal. 401; 65 Cal. 498, 4 Pac. Rep. 502; 73 Cal. 317, 11 Pac. Rep. 791, and 14 Pac. Rep. 864. I see no similarity in the cases, and, if the case cited were authority for the position, it would simply be one case against a thousand others running through the entire Reports. But that case is not authority for the position. On the first appeal the court noticed that the findings sustained the judgment in all respects except as to the matter of interest, and it was adjudged that the case be reversed, and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion. The doubt as to the meaning of this order arose from the fact that the court did not award a new trial. The lower court did not understand what the further proceedings could be when a new trial was not ordered. It therefore refused to retry the case, but simply struck out certain interest, which the findings did not show could be legally charged, and refused to receive further evidence which would show that the interest was authorized in accordance with the requirements of our statute. A new appeal was taken, and an opinion rendered, which, as I think, was unfortunately worded. The writer of the opinion, Judge Thornton, thought it held that a new trial was awarded in the whole case. But the trial court understood it as holding that a new trial was to be had on one issue only, and that conclusion was sustained by a majority of this court on the third appeal, Judge Thornton dissenting. The case went off upon some unfortunate use of language, but on no possible construction is it authority for the course pursued in this case, where a new trial was ordered without restriction. No such new trial has been had, and therefore a discussion of other interesting questions suggested would be premature. I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

98 Cal. 281

GANCEART v. HENRY. (No. 14,554.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)
MORTGAGES—REDEMPTION—ABSOLUTE DEED—APPEAL.

1. In an action to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage, and to redeem from the same, the complaint must show that the money claimed to have been secured by the deed is payable.

2. Amending a complaint after a demurrer is sustained waives objections to the ruling on the demurrer.

3. An order denying a motion to strike out a pleading, unless made in the absence of the party complaining, is not within Code Civil Proc. § 647, which provides that certain decisions and orders are deemed to have been excepted to.

4. To establish that a deed absolute on its face was given as security for a debt, the testimony, if parol in character, should establish a clear case.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; Joseph P. Jones, Judge.

Action by Frank Ganceart against J. B. Henry to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage. Judgment was rendered for defendant, and a motion for a new trial was denied. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. W. Bowie and A. H. Griffith, for appellant. W. S. Tinning, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The action was brought to have an absolute deed executed by plaintiff to defendant October 4, 1886, conveying a lot of land in the town of Alamo, county of Contra Costa, Cal., adjudged to be a mortgage, and to permit the plaintiff to redeem, and to require the defendant to execute a deed of conveyance to the plaintiff. The complaint, in apt language, set out, in substance, that on the 4th day of October, 1886, defendant loaned him $400, plaintiff to pay interest thereon at 1 per cent. per month, and that as security for the payment thereof to defendant he, the said plaintiff, executed to defendant a deed of bargain and sale, absolute in form, but understood and agreed to be and operate as a mortgage, etc. The complaint failed to show when the $400 averred to have been loaned fell due, or that it was in fact due and payable. Defendant demurred to the complaint, which de-murrer was sustained by the court, with leave to plaintiff to amend, and in due time he filed an amendment to his complaint. Defendant answered denying all the allegations of the complaint, averred ownership of the conveyed property in himself. He also filed a cross complaint, showing ownership of the premises in himself, possession in plaintiff under a lease from month to month, a wrongful holding over, etc., and asked for judgment of restitution, etc. Defendant filed his answer and cross complaint on the 5th day of August, 1890, and afterwards, on the 15th of September, 1890, without leave of the court, so far as appears, he served and filed an amended answer and cross complaint. Plaintiff moved to strike out these amended pleadings upon the grounds that they were filed without leave of the court, and that they were sham and irrelevant, etc. The motion to strike out was denied by the court, and the ruling is assigned as error. The cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and the findings negative the theory of the plaintiff that a loan was made to him by defendant, and the deed given as security therefor, and uphold the position of defendant that the transaction was an absolute sale and conveyance absolute, etc.

The first error assigned by appellant is that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint. There are two answers to this contention: (1) The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer. The complaint failed to show that the money averred by plaintiff to have been by him borrowed from the defendant was due and payable, non constat, but that the action was prematurely brought. (2) By amending his complaint after demurrer sustained, plaintiff waived the error, if any, in the ruling by the court. Gale v. Tuolumne W. Co., 14 Cal. 26.

The refusal of the court to strike out the amended answer and cross complaint is assigned as a further error. This assignment of error cannot be considered, for the reason that an order refusing to strike out a pleading is not one of the orders or decisions which are deemed to have been excepted to by section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, except when made in the absence of the party complaining. The record fails to show either that appellant excepted to the ruling of the court, or that he was absent when it was made. No bill of exceptions was prepared embodying the action of the court in the premises, without which the notice, motion to strike out, and order of the court refusing such motion, did not become a part of the judgment roll under section 670, Code Civil Proc. In the statement on motion for new trial no allusion is made to the motion to strike out the amended pleadings or the action of the court thereon. In the assignment of errors by counsel, on his motion for a new trial, and which, according to the recital, were "errors of law, duly excepted to,"

is that "the court erred in denying plaintiff's motion to strike out the defendant's amended answer and cross complaint in this case filed and served the 12th day of September, 1890." This, considered as an assignment or specification of error, is sufficient, but it affords no proof that any such action was ever had. It may be likened to an indictment or information in a criminal case, which fills an important office in the proceedings, but which, in the absence of proof, is impotent to convict.

The other specifications of error go to the sufficiency of the evidence to authorize the decision in favor of the defendant. The evidence was quite full as to the nature of the transaction, and whether it was a loan of money by the defendant, and the taking of a deed, absolute on its face, merely as security, or an absolute sale, was one upon which there was a sharp and substantial conflict in the testimony. The court below found in favor of defendant, and we are not authorized, under such circumstances, in disturbing the findings. A deed of conveyance absolute on its face is certainly some evidence that the transaction is what it purports to be, viz. a sale. To establish an equity superior to the deed, and authorize a determination that the deed was given as security for an existing debt, the testimony, if parol in character, should establish a clear case. Hopper v. Janes, 29 Cal. 19; Henley v. Hotaling, 41 Cal. 22. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(98 Cal. 268)

GALVIN v. GUALALA MILL CO. (No. 14,404.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

NEGLECT—SETTING OUT FIRES—PRESUMPTIONS.

Under Pol. Code, § 3344, providing that every person negligently setting fire to his own woods, or negligently suffering any fire to extend beyond his own land, shall be liable in treble damages to the party injured, negligence will not be presumed because the fire started on defendant's land.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Action by M. J. C. Galvin against the Gualala Mill Company for damages for setting out a fire. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. A. Cooper, for appellant. H. A. Powell and T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The complaint states two causes of action for the destruction of tan bark, cord wood, etc., by fires alleged to have been negligently set by the defendant upon its own land, and for its own convenience, and which it negligently permitted to escape and to extend to plaintiff's land; the first occurring October, 1887, and the second, July 30, 1889. The value of the property destroyed by the first fire is alleged to be $198, and, by the second, $800, and treble damages are prayed for. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and fixed the damages at $775. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendant moved for a nonsuit upon several specific grounds, the substance of which is that the evidence failed to show that the defendant negligently, or otherwise, set fire to its own, or any, woods, or that it negligently, or otherwise, permitted the fires to escape from its land. The motion was denied, and defendant excepted.

There was some evidence tending to show that the fires originated on defendant's land, but none that they were started by the defendant, unless it could be inferred from the fact (itself doubtful) that they originated on its land. But, however that may be, there was not a scintilla of evidence that the fires were started negligently, or for an unnecessary purpose, or that due care was not exercised to prevent the fires from spreading to other lands; and without negligence, either in starting the fires, or in permitting them to escape or get beyond defendant's lands, no recovery can be had. Section 3344 of the Political Code provides: "Every person negligently setting fire to his own woods, or negligently suffering any fire to extend beyond his own land, is liable in treble damages to the party injured." This action was brought under the above section of the Code, and the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff. Under it the actual damages sustained are trebled, not as a compensation to the plaintiff, but as a punishment to the defendant for his negligence; not for doing a lawful act in a careful and proper manner, which, without his fault, inflicts an injury upon another. Negligence is the essential fact, and must be proved. For a construction of section 3344 of the Political Code, and of the other statutes cited by respondent, and hereinafter noticed, see Garnier v. Porter, 90 Cal. 105, 27 Pac. Rep. 55. Respondent contends, however, that "proof of setting the fire is sufficient, and is itself proof of negligence," and cites section 384 of the Penal Code: "Every person who willfully or negligently sets on fire, or causes or procures to be set on fire, any woods, prairies, grasses, or grain on any lands, is guilty of a misdemeanor." This section will bear no such construction. It is penal, and in such statutes the word "willfully" means with evil intent, or with legal malice, or with a bad purpose. Counsel for respondent also cites the act of February 13, 1872, for the purpose of showing that it is unlawful to set fires in woods. But that act relates only to public lands belonging to this state or the United States, and is also penal, and applies to those who "shall willfully and deliberately set fire," etc. It is quite true, as counsel say, that where damage is caused by an unlawful act no negligence need be proven. But the complaint does not allege that defendant "unlawfully" set the fire, or unlawfully permitted it to spread to plaintiff's land, while his argument seems to concede that he has not proven negligence, unless it can be inferred from the fact of the fire having originated upon defendant's land, non constat that the fire may have been purely accidental, or occurred through the negligence of a hunter, or been maliciously set by a third person, for whose acts defendant is not responsible. A plaintiff must prove every material fact which goes to constitute his cause of action. Proving loss alone is not sufficient. The evidence introduced by defendant after the motion for nonsuit was denied did not supply the defects in plaintiff's evidence, and the verdict was therefore not justified. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

3 Cal. Unrep. 869

GALVIN v. GUALALA MILL CO. (No. 14,414.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

NEGLIGENCE—SETTING OUT FIRES—TREBLE DAMAGES—MANNER OF FIXING.

Since Pol. Code, § 3344, providing for treble damages to the party injured by the negligent setting out of fires, is silent as to whether the jury shall find such damages, or whether they shall find the actual damage, and the court shall enter judgment for three times such amount, it is immaterial which course is pursued, provided absolute certainty is attained, and this can be secured by preparing the form of verdict.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Action by M. J. C. Galvin against the Gualala Mill Company for damages for setting out a fire. From an order denying his motion that judgment be entered for three times the amount named in the verdict, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

J. A. Cooper, for appellant. H. A. Powell and T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is from a judgment rendered in favor of appellant, because of the refusal of the court to treble the damages found by the jury in his favor. The action is based on section 3344 of the Political Code, and the complaint charges that certain property of the plaintiff, consisting of tan bark, cord wood, etc., was destroyed by a forest fire negligently started by the defendant on its own land, and which defendant negligently permitted to spread to other lands, whereby said property was destroyed. The jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury in this cause, find a verdict for the plaintiff, and fix the damages at $775." Plaintiff, before judgment had been entered, moved the court for an order directing judgment to be entered for three times the amount named in the verdict, which motion was denied, and plaintiff took a bill of exceptions. The question presented on this appeal is of no importance, so far as the action of the court, complained of, affects the parties, inasmuch as the defendant appealed from the same judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, and upon that appeal the judgment and order have been reversed. See Galvin v. Mill Co., 33 Pac. Rep. 93 (No. 14,404, this day filed.) However, in view of the possibility of a new trial, it may be said that the Code is silent as to whether the jury shall find treble damages, or whether they shall find the actual loss or damage, and the court enter judgment for three times that amount. We think it immaterial which course is pursued, provided absolute certainty is attained, and this can be secured by preparing the form of the verdict. Respondent, on this appeal, contends that an instruction given to the jury at plaintiff's request, together with the form of the verdict, left it uncertain whether the jury had trebled the damages or not, and if that were true the motion was properly denied. As the judgment has already been reversed upon defendant's appeal, this appeal should be dismissed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the appeal is dismissed.

98 Cal. 264

JORDAN v. FAY. (No. 15,087.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

QUIETING TITLE—WHO MAY SUE—HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—INTEREST OF SURVIVING HUSBAND—DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.

1. Code Civil Proc. § 1452, provides that devisees may themselves, or jointly with the executor or administrator, maintain an action to quiet title against any one except the executor or administrator. Held, that the grantee of a devisee could maintain such action. Page v. Tucker, 54 Cal. 121, distinguished.

2. Hittell's Gen. Laws, §§ 3564, 3573, providing that property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except such as may be acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, shall be common property, and on the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife the entire common property shall, without administration, go to the surviving husband,—declared a rule of property, and titles already vested were not disturbed by Civil Code, § 164, as amended in 1889, providing that all other property acquired after marriage by both husband and wife is community property, but, in case the conveyance is to a married woman and her husband, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument.

3. Where an undivided quarter interest in land was conveyed to a man and his wife, and on her decease he took the community property, his deed for an undivided half interest in the land should not be construed to mean the undivided half of the quarter interest, but conveyed all his interest, since, as the greater includes the less, the undivided half necessarily included the undivided quarter.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; R. F. Crawford, Judge.

Action by John Jordan against Thomas J. Fay to quiet title. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James Gartlan, for appellant. Lippitt & Lippitt, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff commenced this action on the 19th day of January, 1891, to quiet his title to 547 acres of land in Sonoma county. In the complaint filed Philip S. Fay was named as a party defendant, but as to him the action was subsequently dismissed. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple absolute, and in possession of the property described, and the answer of defendant, Thomas J. Fay, only denied this allegation. The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows: Edward P. Fay, being the owner of the undivided three-fourths of the property described, died in January, 1872, leaving a last will and testament, by which he devised to Maria Kate Fay, his wife, all of his estate. The will was admitted to probate, and Mrs. Fay was duly appointed executrix thereof. By the will no power was conferred on the executrix to sell any property of the estate, nor was she ever authorized by the court to make any sale thereof, nor was any sale made by her ever confirmed by the court. And when this action was commenced the administration of the estate had not been settled or closed. Prior to the time of Edward P. Fay's death, the other undivided one-fourth of the said property was conveyed to William Fay and Bridget Fay, his wife, for the expressed consideration of $500. In December, 1872, Bridget Fay died intestate, leaving surviving her her husband and three sons, of whom the defendant, Thomas J. Fay, was one. It does not appear from the record what was done with her estate, except that "the proceedings and record in the matter of the estate" show that she died intestate, "leaving an undivided interest in real estate in Sonoma county, California, and admitted to refer to the lands in controversy, and that her estate had not been settled or distributed." On December 11, 1880, William Fay and Jeremiah G. Fay, one of the sons, conveyed "their undivided half interest in said lands" to Maria Kate Fay, and on September 27, 1883, the latter executed to Charles F. McDermott a deed purporting to convey to him the whole property described in the complaint, and on the same day McDermott executed a like deed to the plaintiff. Ever since the plaintiff purchased the said lands in 1883 he has been in the open and undisputed possession thereof, and has paid all taxes and assessments thereon, and the defendant and heirs of Bridget Fay have never lived on the land, nor demanded possession of the same, or any part thereof, from the plaintiff. The court found the facts to be substantially as above stated, and gave judgment for the plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

In support of the appeal it is contended that, as the plaintiff alleged that he was the owner in fee simple absolute of the premises in controversy, the burden was upon him to prove that fact before he could recover, and that his proofs were insufficient to establish such ownership, as to the undivided three-fourths interest owned by Edward P. Fay at the time of his death, for the reason that it appeared that the estate was never settled, nor the property distributed. This contention cannot be sustained. When Fay died his title to the property at once vested in Mrs. Fay, who was made sole legatee by the will, subject only to the payment of the claims of creditors against the estate and the expenses of administration. Section 1452 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the heirs or devisees may themselves, or jointly with the executor or administrator, maintain an action for the possession of the real estate, or for the purpose of quieting title to the same, against any one except the executor or administrator." Unquestionably, therefore, Mrs. Fay, if she had not conveyed away the property, could, as devisee, have maintained an action to quiet her title to it; and the plaintiff, having acquired her title, must be held to have the same right. Besides, it does not appear that there were any unpaid claims or expenses when Mrs. Fay made the conveyance in 1883, and presumably there were none. The case of Page v. Tucker, 54 Cal. 121, cited by appellant, is not in point. In that case the action was brought by the administratrix of an estate to recover possession of real property which the grantee of a devisee had taken possession of; and it was held that during the administration, and until distributed, partial or final, the executor or administrator is entitled to have the possession of the property left by the deceased.

It is also contended that when Bridget Fay died she and her husband, William Fay, were the owners as tenants in common of the undivided one-fourth of the property in controversy, and that when she died intestate her interest descended to her heirs, of whom defendant was one. This position is rested upon section 164 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1889. The section referred to, before the amendment of 1889, simply provided that "all other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife or both is community property." The amendment added: "But whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. And in case the conveyance be to such married woman and her husband, or to her and any other person, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument." The one-fourth interest in the property was conveyed to William and Bridget Fay, and the latter died before the Codes took effect. At that time the statute provided that "all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except such as may be acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, shall be common property;" and also that, "upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife, the entire common property shall, without administration, go to the surviving husband." Hittell's Gen. Laws Cal. §§ 3564, 3573. Under this statute it was many times held by this court that there is a legal presumption that all property acquired by husband or wife after marriage was community property, in the absence of clear and convincing proofs that it was acquired in one of the ways specified in the statute, or was taken in exchange for separate property. It is argued, however, that this presumption was only a rule of evidence, which cast the burden of proof upon the party claiming under the wife, and that the legislature had power to change it at any time, and did change it by the amendment of the Code above referred to, so as to shift the burden upon the other side. But the rule declared by the statute was more than a rule of evidence; it was a rule of property as well; and we do not think the legislature intended or had the power to change it so that it would be retroactive in effect, and disturb titles already vested. To hold otherwise would probably upset many titles in this state, and in some cases work out great wrong and injustice. We conclude, therefore, that William Fay was the owner of the one-fourth interest after his wife's death, and had the power to convey it as he did.

But, conceding this to be so, it is further claimed that the deed executed by William Fay to Maria Kate Fay on December 11, 1880, only purported to convey an undivided half interest in the property, and that this should be construed to mean the undivided half of the quarter interest which was conveyed to him and his wife. It appears, however, as we have seen, that when he made the dead, the title to the whole quarter interest was vested in him, and, as the greater includes the less, the undivided half must necessarily include the undivided quarter.

The other points made by appellant do not require special notice. In our opinion, the findings were sufficient, and were justified by the evidence, and we therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

I concur: SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

3 Cal. Unrep. 871

PATTON et al. v. THOMSON. (No. 15,019.) (Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—RECOVERY OF PROCEEDS OF VOID SALE—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

A complaint in an action by a mortgagor to recover, under Code Civil Proc. § 957, the proceeds of a foreclosure sale set aside on appeal, alleged that foreclosure proceedings were commenced against plaintiff, in which defendant, a second mortgagee, was joined as a party, and filed a cross complaint asking a foreclosure of his mortgage; that an order of sale on the judgment foreclosing both mortgages "was duly issued by the clerk, * * * and was thereupon delivered to the sheriff," who sold the land to defendant, and after paying the first mortgage "there remained the sum of $3,080." Held, that the complaint was demurrable, as it did not show that the sheriff had applied any part of the proceeds of such sale to the satisfaction of defendant's debt.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Action by Milo Patton and James A. Foster, administrators of James H. Patton, deceased, against David Thomson, to recover the proceeds of a void foreclosure sale. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

T. L. Carothers, for appellants. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

VANCLIEF, C. In this case a demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court below, and, as plaintiffs declined to amend, judgment passed for defendant. Plaintiffs bring this appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll, and contend that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer. The material substance of the complaint may be briefly stated as follows: In May, 1887, George E. White commenced an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by Milo Patton and J. H. Patton on a tract of land owned by them, to which action the defendant herein, David Thomson, was made a party defendant on the ground that he claimed a subsequent lien upon the mortgaged land. Thomson appeared, and filed a cross complaint setting up his subsequent mortgage executed by Milo and J. H. Patton on the same land, and praying that it be foreclosed, but failed to serve his cross complaint on the Pattons, his codefendants, against whom he prayed for such relief. In October, 1887, the Pattons having failed to answer or appear, the court decreed a foreclosure of each mortgage, ordered a sale of the land, and directed the proceeds of the sale to be applied—First, to the payment of $5,127 found due on White's prior mortgage; and, second, to the payment of $4,500.34 found due on Thomson's subsequent mortgage; and further ordered the docketing of a judgment in favor of Thomson against the mortgagors for any deficiency, etc. On November 28, 1887, in pursuance of the order of sale, the sheriff sold the mortgaged land to Thomson for the sum of $8,400, and, no redemption having been made within the time limited by law, conveyed the land to Thomson. In September, 1888, the mortgagors (the Pattons) appealed from the judgment of foreclosure, whereupon, in December, 1890, so much of the decree as pertained to the foreclosure of Thomson's mortgage, and the docketing of a judgment in his favor, was reversed, and "the cause remanded," for the reason that Thomson's cross complaint had not been served on the mortgagors. 87 Cal. 151, 25 Pac. Rep. 270. The remittitur was filed in the lower court January 17, 1891, but it is not alleged whether or not there has been any further proceeding in the case since the filing of the remittitur. The proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property ($8,400) exceeded the amount necessary to satisfy White's prior mortgage and costs by the sum of $3,080.32, but what disposition was made of this excess is not alleged. J. H. Patton having died December 1, 1890, letters of administration upon his estate were issued to James A. Foster May 26, 1891. Upon these facts the plaintiffs demand judgment against the defendant for $3,080.32, the excess of the proceeds of the foreclosure sale after payment of White's prior mortgage and costs.

The appellants found their right of action upon the second clause of section 957 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that in cases of reversal or modification of a judgment "the appellant may have his action against the respondent enforcing [who may have enforced] the judgment, for the proceeds of the sale of the property, after deducting therefrom the expenses of the sale." The words in brackets are inserted in the above quotation as expressive of the intended meaning of the word "enforcing," immediately preceding, and for the same purpose a comma is inserted after the word "judgment;" for it could not have been intended that the "relief" which the appellant may have under this clause is the "enforcing" of the judgment which had been reversed or modified. The complaint shows that there were two judgments of foreclosure,—one in favor of the plaintiff White, foreclosing his prior mortgage, and the other in favor of the defendant, Thomson, on his cross complaint, foreclosing his junior mortgage; but it is not alleged that Thomson ever enforced his judgment, nor that it ever was enforced. The allegation is that "an order of sale upon the judgment so rendered in said action of George E. White against Milo Patton, J. H. Patton, David Thomson, and Henry Marks was duly issued by the clerk of said court, and was thereupon delivered to the sheriff." Not even the substance of the order of sale, or any part thereof, is stated. In all this there is no implication that the sheriff was ordered to sell, or did sell, by virtue of the decree in favor of Thomson in his cross action, nor that the sheriff applied any part of the proceeds of the sale to the satisfaction of Thomson's mortgage. From the allegations that the sheriff sold the land to Thomson for $8,400, and, after satisfying the decree in favor of White, "there remained the sum of $3,080.32," the presumption is that Thomson paid to the sheriff the full sum of the purchase money, and that the excess of $3,080.32 "remained" with the sheriff, who, for aught that is alleged, may have held it for the use, and subject to the order of, the plaintiffs herein. I think the court did not err in sustaining the demurrer, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

98 Cal. 278

PEOPLE v. BONNEY. (No. 20,964.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1893.)

BURGLARY—INSTRUCTIONS.

On a trial for burglary, where the only evidence for the prosecution is the testimony of an admitted accomplice and that of another as to defendant's oral admissions, it is error to refuse an instruction "that the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust, and the evidence of the oral admissions of a party with caution," as such is a proper occasion, within Code Civil Proc. § 2061, authorizing such instruction to be given "on all proper occasions." People v. O'Brien, 31 Pac. Rep. 45, 96 Cal. 171, distinguished.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; John Caldwell, Judge.

Charles Bonney was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Reversed.

H. McCormack and J. M. Walling, for appellant. Wm. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary in the second degree, and has appealed from the judgment entered against him, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. At the trial the only witnesses for the prosecution were Joseph A. Sargent and George F. Seibert. Sargent testified that he owned a cabin, in which he lived alone, and that in his absence some one entered it through a window, and took and carried away a few articles of small value; that subsequently defendant admitted to him that he and the witness Seibert entered the cabin, and took and carried away the said articles. Seibert testified that he was a boy 12 years old, and, in effect, that he and defendant together committed the offense charged. Defendant, as a witness in his own behalf, denied that he went into Sargent's cabin at all, or took away any of the missing articles, or broke or opened the window for the boy to go in, or knew of his going in, until afterwards; and also denied that he ever told Sargent that he had been through his place. Sargent was again called as a witness in rebuttal, and, among other things, testified that he did not tell the father of defendant that defendant denied being in his house, and told him he was not in it. The father was then called as a witness, and testified that he went to the house of Sargent, and had a talk with him about the matter, and "he told me that he did not know that my boy had been in the house; that the boy told him he was not in the house."

The defendant asked the court to give to the jury, among others, an instruction reading as follows: "The jury are instructed that the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust, and the evidence of the oral admissions of a party with caution." The court refused to give the instruction, and the defendant duly excepted. The instruction asked is in the exact language of subdivision 4 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the section provides that such an instruction should be given to the jury "on all proper occasions." It is urged for the appellant that the refusal to give the instruction was a prejudicial error, and the only answer to this point by the attorney general is that the provision of the Code authorizing such an instruction is unconstitutional, because it requires the court to charge "with respect to matters of fact," which, by article 6, § 19, of the constitution, it is forbidden to do; citing Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 282-284, 29 Pac. Rep. 481; and People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. Rep. 45. In the case first cited a long and rambling instruction about oral admissions was given to the jury, and this court held it to be improper, saying: "The instruction above quoted is, in substance, an argument to the jury 'with respect to matters of fact' that had been presented at the trial, and a comment by the court upon the weight which they should give to that testimony." In the case last cited, an instruction identically the same as that asked here was given at the request of the prosecution, and this court said: "The Code authorizes this instruction to be given to the jury on all proper occasions. Code Civil Proc. § 2061. But we do not think that this was a proper case for such an instruction, although it may be proper to give it in a case where the witness has been called by the people;" citing section 1111 of the Penal Code. The principle upon which it was held in that case that the court erred in giving the instruction made it error for the court to refuse the instruction in the present case. In that case the accomplice had been called as a witness on behalf of the defendant, and it was held that for that reason it was not a "proper occasion" to give the jury this instruction, since it told the jury in effect to discredit one of the defendant's witnesses. For the court, however, to discredit one of the defendant's witnesses before the jury is very different from giving them an instruction in his favor. One of the chief principles in criminal jurisprudence wherever the common law prevails is not only that the accused shall be presumed innocent until the moment of his conviction, but also that every fact necessary to constitute the crime of which he is accused shall be established by the prosecution by evidence competent therefor, before he shall be called upon to establish his innocence. The state is interested in seeing that none of its citizens are unjustly convicted, and it is the duty of the court before whom the trial is had to protect the accused against a conviction by incompetent testimony, both in excluding such testimony and in giving to the jury proper instructions upon the evidence before them. If, however, the court assumes to discredit a witness which the defendant has called in support of his defense, it deprives him of the constitutional guaranty of an impartial trial. And when the crime with which the accused is charged can be established only by means of the testimony of an accomplice, it is a "proper occasion" for the court, in the discharge of its duty to protect the accused, to call the attention of the jury to the well-known fact "that the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust." In this case there was no evidence to justify the verdict except the testimony of an admitted accomplice, and the testimony of Sargent as to the defendant's oral admissions. If, therefore, there could be any proper occasion for the giving of an instruction like that asked, this certainly was such an occasion, and the court erred in refusing to give the instruction.

The judgment and order are reversed.

mandamus to compel Hale McCowen, as county auditor, to issue two warrants upon the county treasurer. The writ was granted, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. G. White, for appellant. J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

SEARLES, C. This was an application in the court below by William McFarland, the respondent here, for a writ of mandate to compel appellant, auditor of the county of Mendocino, to issue two warrants to respondent upon the county treasurer for $149.25 and $244.85, respectively. The respondent was a constable of Mendocino county, and as such presented two claims for fees against the county to the board of supervisors for the above several amounts. The bills or claims presented were itemized accounts for constable fees for arresting criminals under warrants, and for serving subpoenas in criminal cases, and, so far as appears, were regular as to form, and duly verified. The board of supervisors allowed the claims, and ordered the auditor, Hale McCowen, the appellant, to draw his warrants on the county treasurer therefor, which he refused to do. Respondent procured an alternative writ of mandate to issue against appellant as such auditor, commanding him to draw his warrants as auditor on the county treasurer for the several amounts specified, and to deliver the same to respondent by a day certain, therein named, and, failing to do so, that he appear and show cause, if any, etc. Appellant appeared, and for cause showed to the court, and averred, in substance, that none of the warrants or subpoenas were placed in the hands of respondent for service, and that he never served them; denied that his fees amounted to the sums specified, or any sum of money whatever, or that anything was due him. The other allegations of the petition were admitted. At the hearing the respondent's attorney moved the court for a judgment that a final writ of mandate issue upon the pleadings, upon the ground that the matters set forth in the return constituted no defense to the matters set out and alleged in the application and writ, and on the further ground that the board of supervisors, having passed upon the facts as to the services rendered and the amount due to respondent, their judgment thereon was final in regard to such facts, and not subject to review in the pending proceeding. The court granted the motion, and ordered a peremptory writ of mandate to issue. At the time and place of the hearing of said motion the district attorney, on behalf of appellant, asked leave to prove, and offered to prove, the facts set up in his return or answer, as above specified, which leave was refused by the court; and to the ruling appellant then and there excepted, in due form, and such ruling is assigned as error on this appeal.

(98 Cal. 329)

McFARLAND v. McCOWEN, County Auditor. (No. 15,008.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1893.)

COUNTY BOARD — JURISDICTION — CONSTABLES — CLAIMS FOR FEES — POWERS OF AUDITOR — RES JUDICATA — MANDAMUS.

1. Under St. 1891, p. 301, § 25, subd. 12, which gives the board of supervisors jurisdiction "to examine, settle, and allow all accounts legally chargeable against the county, except salaries of officers, and order warrants to be drawn on the county treasurer therefor," the board has jurisdiction to "examine, settle, and allow" a constable's claim for fees.

2. St. 1891, p. 322, § 113, provides that the auditor must draw warrants on the county treasurer, in favor of all persons entitled thereto, in payment of all claims against the county which have been allowed, and ordered paid, by the supervisors. Held that, after a constable's claim for fees had been examined and allowed by the county board, the auditor could not refuse to draw warrants for the payment thereof on the ground that the services for which the fees were charged were never rendered.

3. Where the board of supervisors hears and determines the facts involved in a claim, and orders the allowance thereof, it becomes res judicata, and, in the absence of fraud, is conclusive.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county: Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Application by William McFarland for a

The appeal involves this single proposition: Where a claim for services which, if performed, is a legal charge against the county, has been duly presented to the board of supervisors, regularly considered, allowed, and ordered paid, can the auditor lawfully refuse to draw his warrant therefor upon the treasurer, upon the ground that such services were never rendered? "The auditor must draw warrants on the county treasurer, in favor of all persons entitled thereto, in payment of all claims and demands chargeable against the county, which have been legally examined, allowed, and ordered paid by the board of supervisors." St. 1891, p. 322, § 113. It is the privilege and duty of the auditor to refuse to draw his warrants upon the treasurer for claims which, although sanctioned, and ordered paid, by the board of supervisors, are void upon their face for want of jurisdiction in the board of supervisors, or showing an excess of jurisdiction, or other plain and palpable violation of law. Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 172; Merriam v. Supervisors, 72 Cal. 518, 14 Pac. Rep. 137; Carroll v. Siebenthaler, 37 Cal. 193. By subdivision 12, § 25, of the county government act, so called, (St. 1891, p. 301,) jurisdiction is conferred upon the board of supervisors "to examine, settle, and allow all accounts legally chargeable against the county, except salaries of officers, and order warrants to be drawn on the county treasurer therefor." The claim of the respondent for fees in payment of services as a constable was one which the board of supervisors had jurisdiction to hear and determine. There is no suggestion of a failure to present a duly-itemized account, verified as by law required, or in fact of any irregularity, except that the services were not rendered. This amounts simply to a charge that the board decided the case wrongly. The jurisdiction to hear and determine a case involves, from a jurisdictional standpoint, the abstract right to determine it wrong, as well as right. In other words, the jurisdiction to determine, being given, is not divested by an error of judgment in reaching a result. When the board of supervisors heard and determined the facts involved in the claim, and made their order of allowance thereof, it became res adjudicata, and, in the absence of fraud, conclusive. As was said in Colusa Co. v. De Jarnett, 55 Cal. 375: "When the board of supervisors of the county allowed it, they acted as a quasi judicial body, and their allowance and settlement was an adjudication of the claim which is conclusive." If the auditor may attack the conclusion of the board of supervisors for the reason and in the manner attempted here, there is no good reason why the treasurer, or any taxpayer, may not make a similar attack for like cause, and thus defeat the manifest object of the legislature in conferring the power of determination upon the local body. There should be an end of litigation in every case, and when a case has once been heard upon its merits, and fully determined, it should be held conclusive until reversed, modified, or set aside in the mode prescribed by law. To this rule there is the exception hereinbefore stated, of proceedings which are void, and therefore of no efficacy or binding force anywhere, or upon any person. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

98 Cal. 320

MUDD v. MUDD. (No. 18,081.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)
DIVORCE—TEMPORARY ALIMONY—COUNSEL FEES.

1. Under Civil Code, § 137, providing that the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay alimony pending proceedings, the court may, on application of a wife, make an order requiring the husband to appear, and show cause why it should not be granted, and no notice of the application to the husband is required previous to the making of such order.

2. Such wife is not entitled to an order requiring her husband to pay her a sum of money for counsel fees, where counsel have agreed to render her their services gratuitously.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county; Seth Millington, Judge.

Action by George Mudd against Martha A. L. Mudd to obtain a divorce. From an order requiring plaintiff to pay defendant a certain sum monthly pending the action, and another sum for counsel fees and costs, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed as to counsel fees and costs; affirmed as to the rest.

H. M. Alberry, for appellant. Donohue & Keys, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellant brought this action for a divorce from the defendant, and on the 19th of March, 1892, after the defendant had appeared in the action, but before she had answered the complaint, she made an application to the court for an order directing the appellant to pay to her temporary alimony pending the suit, and also a certain amount of money "as counsel fees and court costs." The court thereupon made an order directing the appellant to appear before it on the 22d day of March, and show cause why the defendant's application should not be granted. On that day the plaintiff appeared, and objected to the hearing of the application for the reason that a notice of five days had not been given him, and, upon this objection being overruled, asked for a postponement of the hearing on account of the necessary absence of his attorney, in support of which he filed the affidavits of himself, and also of his attorney. The court denied this motion, and thereupon, under his objection, proceeded to a hearing of the application, and at its close made an order directing him to pay to the defendant "the sum of seventy-five dollars per month during the pendency of this action, as temporary alimony, and the further sum of three hundred dollars as counsel fees and costs for the defense of said action." From this order the plaintiff has appealed.

1. It was not necessary for the court to give to the appellant any notice of the defendant's application. Section 137, Civil Code, provides that "the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself or her children, or to prosecute or defend the action." This order may be made without any previous notice, and in practice is usually made ex parte. It is to be presumed that the court will exercise a wise discretion in determining the amount to be paid, fixing it according to the needs of the wife, and having also due regard to the ability of the husband to comply with the order it may make. Turner v. Turner, 80 Cal. 141, 22 Pac. Rep. 72. If for any reason the order is made improvidently the court will listen to any application of the husband to set it aside, or for its modification. Presumptively, the community property is under the control, and in the hands of, the husband, and the court needs only to be advised of his ability to pay such an amount as may be needed for a proper defense by the wife, in order that, for the purposes of the litigation, the parties may be upon an equal footing. The giving notice to the appellant in the present case was a favor on the part of the court, and the court could make the notice of such length as it chose. As the defendant did not have a right to any notice, the provisions of section 1005, Code Civil Proc., have no application.

2. Upon the hearing of the application the appellant sought to prove that the defendant had an agreement with her attorneys whereby they were to charge and receive nothing for their services in this action. The defendant objected to any evidence of this fact, on the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and the objection was sustained. The object of the above section of the Code is to enable the wife to properly present her cause of action or defense to the court, and, if she can do this, either by reason of the fact that she has a sufficient separate estate, or has the custody and management of a sufficient portion of the community property, the court would not exercise a proper discretion in directing the husband to defray her expenses in the action. So, too, if her attorney has made an agreement with her that he will take charge of her case in court for a definite amount of money, or gratuitously, the necessity of calling upon the husband for money therefor is removed. In Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. Rep. 345, it was held that, when it was shown that an attorney had made an agreement to prosecute an action for divorce for a definite amount of money, it was error for the court, in the absence of any testimony showing that he was not able or willing to properly conduct the suit, to make an order for the payment of any counsel fees. In that case it was said, (page 42, 75 Cal., and page 363, 16 Pac. Rep.) "If it had appeared at the hearing of the motion that Mr. Tyler, actuated solely by a desire to vindicate justice and the good name of the plaintiff, had promised to prosecute the action without compensation; that he was fully competent, and had prosecuted it,—the circumstances would show that she had no necessity for money to pay counsel. The question is not whether, as between the parties, counsel ought to be paid, but whether the wife has need of money to prosecute her action." Although the court could have made the order ex parte, yet after it had directed a notice to be given to the plaintiff of the defendant's application, and he had appeared in pursuance thereof, he had a right to be heard upon all matters pertaining thereto. It would be unseemly, and inconsistent with judicial propriety, to direct him to show cause why the application should not be granted, and upon his offer, in response thereto, to show matters which, if true, would be a sufficient cause, refuse to hear him. The evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff was relevant to the issue pending before the court, and should have been received. That portion of the order directing that the plaintiff pay to the defendant the sum of $300 as counsel fees and costs is reversed, and the other portions of the order are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; PATERSON, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 874)

COLEGROVE et al. v. SMITH et al. (No. 14,922.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

NEGLIGENCE OF INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Where a person obtains from a city, by ordinance, license to lay pipes along its streets, he will be liable for injuries resulting from the negligent manner in which such work is done, even though the work is not done by himself, but by an independent contractor employed by him for that purpose.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action by Margaret H. Colegrove and H. H. Colegrove against Fred J. Smith and others to recover for injuries received by Margaret Colegrove through defendants' alleged negligence. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Joy & Sumner, C. E. Sumner, and Edwin E. Meserve, for appellants. A. W. Hutton, P. C. Tonner, and J. W. Swanwick, for respondents.

¹ Rehearing granted.

BAYNES, C. Action for personal injuries. Appeal by defendants from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial. Appellants, as copartners doing business under the name of the Citizens' Water Company of Pomona, obtained from the city of Pomona, by ordinance, a grant or franchise to dig trenches and lay pipes in the streets of the city for the purpose of selling to and supplying its inhabitants with water. Afterwards, on June 1, 1889, appellants contracted with M. O'Neill and Frank Osler to dig and fill the trenches for the pipe at a specified price per 100 feet, a part to be 2 feet wide, and part 20 inches wide, and all 30 inches deep. The contract contained the following clause: "Said ditches to be filled as required by city ordinance; all road crossings to be properly tamped, and kept in repair for sixty days after completion of the work; parties digging ditch to be responsible for all damages resulting by reason of injury to or breaking of any pipes owned by other persons." The ordinance required the grantees (appellants) or their assigns, immediately after laying the pipes, to restore the streets to their former condition, and have the same in as good repair as before; the work to be done under the direction, and to the satisfaction, of the superintendent of streets. Plaintiff, Margaret H. Colegrove, (wife of her coplaintiff), on June 15, 1889, was driving along Garey avenue, where defendants' pipe had been laid, and the trench improperly filled with loose dirt, in which her buggy wheels sank, whereby she was thrown out and injured. There were no guards along the line of the trench, nor any notice of its unsafe condition. Several exceptions were taken to evidence, and to the refusal of the court to give to the jury certain instructions requested by defendants; but all these exceptions present a single question, arising upon the issue raised by defendants' answer, to the effect that O'Neill and Osler were independent contractors, in the exclusive control of the work of filling up the ditch, and for whose negligence, defendants claim, they are not liable.

It is commonly said—and, in a large class of cases, correctly—that the principle of respondeat superior does not apply where the negligent or wrongful act is that of an independent contractor, or of his servant or employe, unless the superior has been guilty of negligence in contracting with an unfit person. For a full discussion of the general doctrine above stated, see Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469. But there are exceptions to the general doctrine, and this case, I think, is one of them. The board of trustees of the city was charged by the law with the care and maintenance of the streets in a safe and proper condition for the use of the public. Appellants could not lawfully dig trenches and lay water pipes without express authority from the city. If they had undertaken to do so, and had contracted with another to do the work, they would not by such contract have relieved themselves from liability to the city for the trespass, nor to individuals who might have sustained special injury. Nor does the fact that they obtained from the city a franchise or permission to dig up the street, and lay their pipes, relieve them from more than the unlawful character of the work. They stand in a contract relation to the public, represented by the city authorities, to do the work in the manner required by the ordinance, and cannot relieve themselves of the duty imposed by that contract by contracting with another to do the work. These trenches could not be dug in the street without danger to the public. If done without authority, a nuisance would necessarily be created, and, if not done in the manner required by the ordinance, the departure creates a nuisance. It is very different from the erection of a building, or the doing of other work upon private property, which does not constitute a nuisance, and which causes no danger to the public unless negligently performed. The owner, in such case, is under no contract relation to the public. He owes a duty, however,—that of care to prevent accidents; but when he selects a competent workman, and intrusts the whole work to him, he discharges that duty. But if I am under a duty to another, created by contract or by statute, it is obvious that I cannot relieve myself of any of its obligations by contracting with another to do the same work; or, if a work which I may lawfully do creates a danger to others, I cannot escape liability by contracting with another to do it; for by contracting with another I authorize him to create the danger. But where the work is unattended with danger, except from negligence, a contract to do the work excludes negligence, and the contractor is liable. Attention is not called by counsel to any case in this court where the question here presented appears to have been considered, but authorities elsewhere are abundant, and quite generally uniform in support of the views above expressed. In Gray v. Pullen, 5 Best & S. 970, A. was empowered, under the metropolis local management act, (18 & 19 Vict.,) to make a drain from his premises to a sewer by cutting a trench across a highway, and filling it up after the drain should be completed. For this purpose he employed a contractor, by whose negligence it was filled up improperly, in consequence of which damage ensued to B. Held, that A. was responsible in an action by B. In Bower v. Peate, 1 Q. B. Div. 321, 326, Cockburn, C. J., said: "A man who orders a work to be executed, from which, in the natural course of things, injurious consequences to his neighbor must be expected to arise, unless means are adopted by which such consequences may be prevented, is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief, and cannot relieve himself of his responsibility by employing some one else to do what is necessary to prevent the act he has ordered to be done from becoming wrongful. There is an obvious difference between committing work to a contractor to be executed, from which, if properly done, no injurious consequences can arise, and handing over to him work to be done, from which mischievous consequences will arise unless preventive measures are adopted." In Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 470, the defendant, having employed a coal merchant to put coals into his cellar, was held liable for injury suffered by the plaintiff from his falling through the cellar opening, which had been left open by the negligence of the coal merchant's servants. In this case, after referring to the general rule placing the liability upon an independent contractor, the court said: "That rule is, however, inapplicable to cases in which the act which occasions the injury is one which the contractor was employed to do, nor, by a parity of reasoning, to cases in which the contractor is intrusted with the performance of a duty incumbent upon his employer, and neglects its fulfillment, whereby an injury is occasioned."

Appellants contend that in this state municipal corporations are not liable for injuries resulting from imperfections in the streets, and upon this ground attempt to distinguish this case from a large number of cases where the city was primarily liable, and also from other cases where the person or corporation which had obtained permission to do the work had agreed with the city to be answerable for all damages that might be sustained. Whether or not the city of Pomona was liable for the injury to respondent is immaterial. The contractors, O'Neill and Osler, were undoubtedly liable, and, if so, appellants would have been liable, had they done the work themselves; and the question here is whether they did or could relieve themselves from responsibility by letting the work to independent contractors. Nor does the fact that there was not an express contract between appellants and the city to answer all damages at all affect the question, since the implied obligation arising from the franchise and the character of the work imposed upon them a liability for injuries caused by their negligence, in every respect as conclusive as an express contract. Chicago City v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, and Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, all sustain the view we have taken. Woodman v. Railroad Co., 149 Mass. 335, 21 N. E. Rep. 432, and Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. Rep. 421, on appellants' brief, are directly against them. The first of these cases was that of a street-railway corporation which employed a contractor to lay a new track in a city street, and through whose negligence in not properly guarding the work the injury happened. The railway company was held liable. The court said: "If the performance of a lawful contract necessarily will bring wrongful consequences to pass, unless guarded against, and if, as in the present case, the contract cannot be performed except under the right of the employer, who retains the right of access to the premises, the law may require the employer, at his peril, to see that due care is used to prevent harm, whatever the nature of his contract with those whom he employs." In the American cases above referred to will be found cases cited from many of the states sustaining the same doctrine. Appellants, however, seem to rely principally upon the case of Railroad Co. v. Kimberly, 87 Ga. 161, 13 S. E. Rep. 277, and Railroad Co. v. McConnell, 87 Ga. 756, 13 S. E. Rep. 828. In the first of these cases the court recognizes and enumerates the exceptions to respondeat superior, but concludes that the facts do not bring it within any of the exceptions. The correctness of its conclusion in that case may well be doubted, though whether correct or not need not be considered here, since the case at bar comes clearly within the second exception to the general rule there stated, and to which the learned justice cites Bower v. Peate, and Pickard v. Smith, supra. The broad distinction between that case and the case at bar is apparent, since the trenches could not be dug in the streets of Pomona without danger to those having occasion to use the street, while a railroad embankment could be constructed without danger of creating a nuisance by impounding water which by stagnation produced malaria, and thereby became a nuisance. The second case (Railroad Co. v. McConnell) supports appellants' contention, but the court clearly came to a wrong conclusion. But three cases are cited in support of the conclusions reached by the court. One of these (Overton v. Freeman, 11 C. B. 867) was a "common pleas" decision made in 1852, and which is in direct conflict with Gray v. Pullen, 5 Best & S. 970, (decided in 1864, in exchequer chamber, on appeal from queen's bench) and upon the appeal Overton v. Freeman was not only cited in the argument, but quoted from, and, though it is not referred to in the opinion, it was clearly overruled. Another of the cases there cited is Hackett v. Telegraph Co., 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. Rep. 822. There the defendant contracted with a railroad company to erect for it a line of telegraph. A hole was left unguarded overnight, into which a child fell, and was injured. A clear distinction between that case and the one at bar is stated by the court as follows: "The railroad company was not required, by its contract, to dig any hole in a traveled public street;" while here the work was required to be done in a public street in a city, and the negligence was in doing improperly that which the contract required to be done, and not in some matter collateral to, and not required to be done in the performance of, the contract. The other case referred to in the case of Railroad Co. v. McConnell is that of Railroad Co. v. Kimberly, above noticed.

The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

98 Cal. 315

PACKER et al. v. DORAY et al. (No. 18,033.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

NEW TRIAL—NOTICE—AMENDMENT.

Code Civil Proc. § 659, providing that where a motion for a new trial is made on the minutes of the court, and on the ground of errors in law occurring at the trial, the notice of intention to move for a new trial must specify the particular errors relied on, otherwise the motion must be dismissed, does not allow a party who has inadvertently omitted the specification of errors from the notice to amend.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; John Caldwell, Judge.

Action by W. S. Packer and others against Philip Doray and others. Defendants had judgment, after which plaintiffs served notice of their intention to move for a new trial. Afterwards, plaintiffs moved to amend their notice, and, from an order granting the motion, defendants appeal. Reversed.

T. D. Soward and Frank R. Wehe, for appellants. J. M. Walling, T. L. Ford, and Goodwin & Goodwin, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This case was tried by the court without a jury in June, 1891; and, the 18th of September following, findings were filed, and judgment entered in favor of the defendants. Written notice of the decision was served on the plaintiffs by the defendants on the day the findings were filed. Thereafter, on the 28th of the same month, the plaintiffs served and filed written notice of their intention to move for a new trial. The notice stated that the motion would be made upon the minutes of the court, and upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision; that the decision was against law; and of errors in law which occurred at the trial, and were excepted to by the plaintiffs. Attached to the notice were numerous specifications of the particulars wherein the evidence was alleged to be insufficient to justify the decision, but there were no specifications of any errors in law. Thereafter, on the 7th of December, 1891, plaintiffs served on defendants, and filed in court, a notice that they would apply to the court for permission to amend their "notice of intention to move for a new trial" by adding thereto a specification of "errors in law." Accompanying this notice was a copy of the proposed specification of errors, and an affidavit made by one of the plaintiffs' attorneys. The affidavit stated, among other things, that the notice of the decision was served on the affiant on the 18th of September, 1891, and that from the 19th to the 25th of that month he was actively engaged in attending to other legal business; that on the 28th of the same month he served and filed for plaintiffs their notice of intention to move for a new trial, and that in drafting the notice, through stress of other business, he inadvertently omitted to specify therein the particular errors of law upon which plaintiffs would rely on their motion; "that this affiant fully intended that said motion for new trial should be based in part upon errors of law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by plaintiffs, as stated in said notice of intention, and the omission to specify the particular errors of law upon which plaintiffs would rely was wholly the result of inadvertence and oversight of this affiant." The motion to amend was heard by the court, and granted, on the 17th of December, 1891, and from that order this appeal is prosecuted by defendants.

Section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after notice of the decision of the court, file, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made, and whether the same will be made upon affidavits, or the minutes of the court, etc., and that "when the motion is to be made upon the minutes of the court, * * * if the ground of the motion be errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the moving party, the notice must specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely. If the notice do not contain the specifications here indicated, when the motion is made on the minutes of the court the motion must be denied." It is evident from the language above quoted that in order to give the court jurisdiction to grant a new trial, when the motion is made upon the minutes of the court, and upon the ground of errors in law occurring at the trial, the notice of motion must specify the particular errors relied upon, and if it does not the motion must be denied. The notice here under review contained no such specifications, and was in that respect radically defective. The only question, then, is, could it be amended by adding the required specifications after the statutory time for giving notice had expired? In Little v. Jacks, 67 Cal. 165, 7 Pac. Rep. 449, the appeal was from an order allowing the defendant to amend his notice of intention to move for a new trial, and the court, reversing the order, said: "To allow a notice filed within statutory time, but which was radically defective, to be amended after the expiration of that time, would be, in effect, to extend the time allowed by statute for the giving of such notices, which the courts have no power to do." And see Cooney v. Furlong, 66 Cal. 521, 6 Pac. Rep. 388. It must be held, therefore, that the plaintiffs had no right to amend their notice at the time and in the manner they asked leave to do so, and that the order of the court allowing the amendment was erroneous. The order appealed from is reversed.

(98 Cal. 309.)

HAGER v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (No. 14,982.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1893.)

RAILROADS—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSING.

1. One who approaches a railway crossing in a city at a jog trot, without slackening speed, or adopting any precautions, although he knows a train is about due, which by reason of obstructions he will be unable to see until within a few feet of the crossing, is guilty of negligence such as to preclude recovery for injuries to his team and harness, although the train was running 30 or 35 miles an hour, and no signal was given.

2. The fact that after the accident the railway placed an automatic bell at the crossing was not competent as evidence of prior negligence.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; F. W. Henshaw, Judge.

Action by Lewis N. Hager against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment of nonsuit. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. L. Smoot, for appellant. J. C. Martin and A. A. Moore, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover damages for injuries to property, (horses and harness,) resulting from a collision with a train of cars at a railroad crossing in the city of Oakland. A nonsuit was ordered by the trial court, and the plaintiff has appealed.

The accident occurred in the settled portion of the city. The train was going at the rate of 30 or 35 miles an hour, and the engineer was neither ringing the bell nor blowing the whistle, as required by the statute. The team injured consisted of six horses attached to a band wagon containing sixteen men. The train was a regular train, and known to be due at that point by the driver of the horses at about the time of the injury. The view of the track towards the point from which the train was approaching was obstructed until the driver arrived within about 40 feet of the crossing, when he would be able to see an approaching train for a distance of 250 yards. The bill of exceptions contains further recitals of the evidence as follows: "The driver approached Short street crossing at a jog trot, and without stopping or checking the speed of his team, and, before the crossing was reached by the train, one or two of the passengers jumped from the wagon while it was in motion, because nervous about riding over railroad tracks. The driver of the team did not check the speed of his team and listen for approaching trains before driving upon the crossing, although he knew the train was due about that time, and although he knew that by reason of the intervening houses he could not see the approaching train until his team would be within a few feet of the crossing, yet he drove on at the jog trot at which he had been previously driving, without stopping or checking his speed or lessening the noise of his team, or adopting any precaution, or making any effort to listen for the approaching train while his vision was obstructed, or observing the precaution of looking after reaching a point where his vision was unobstructed."

No comment by the court upon this state of facts is demanded. The conduct of the driver indicates a degree of negligence closely allied to recklessness. His negligence would have been but one degree more culpable if he had driven his team upon the track, and there awaited the coming train and the inevitable collision. The conduct of both plaintiff and defendant clearly indicates an absence of the exercise of the most ordinary care, and under those circumstances the defendant is not liable, unless the acts which resulted in the injury were willfully and deliberately done, and the evidence does not go to that extent. This is the established doctrine, and is supported in this state by an unbroken line of authority. We are satisfied with the construction of section 486 of the Civil Code announced in Meeks v. Railroad Co., 52 Cal. 604; also that the offer of evidence that subsequent to the accident the defendant placed an automatic bell at the crossing where the collision occurred was properly rejected. Sappenfield v. Railroad Co., 91 Cal. 61, 27 Pac. Rep. 590. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(98 Cal. 332)

JACOB v. LORENZ et al. (No. 18,075.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 18, 1893.)

PUBLIC LANDS—DITCHES—SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT—DEMURRER—JOINDER OF CAUSE OF ACTION—INJUNCTION—RESTRAINING DESTRUCTION OF DITCH—EVIDENCE.

1. Under Act Cong. July 26, 1866, § 9, relating to public land, which provides that whenever, by priority of possession, water rights have vested, and are recognized by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, such vested rights shall be protected, and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes specified is acknowledged and conferred, it is not necessary that the right should have vested before the passage of the act.

2. In a suit to enjoin defendants from destroying plaintiff's ditch, where the answer sets up that, since the commencement of the suit, defendants had destroyed part of the ditch, and that it could not be specifically replaced, a supplemental complaint which alleges the facts stated in the answer, and asks damages, does not state an independent cause of action.

3. A cause of action for damages for a trespass and a cause of action for an injunction to restrain a threatened additional trespass may be joined, and an objection that they are not separately stated cannot be reached by a demurrer, upon the ground of misjoinder, but can only be reached by motion, unless the failure to state them separately renders the complaint ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain.

4. In an action for destroying a ditch, deeds and receiver's receipts for mineral entries are competent to show ownership in plaintiff, and the use to which he could put the water; and the fact that he was not sole owner of some of the parcels did not affect their admissibility.

5. In an action for destroying plaintiff's ditch, which crossed defendants' mine, the fact that there had been locations covering part of the mine before the ditch was constructed is immaterial, when defendants' title was not connected with them, but was based upon a survey and location made after the construction of the ditch.

6. Where plaintiff owned a right to a quantity of water, it is immaterial in what ditch the water was taken when he acquired the right, if the change of ditches did not injure defendants.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Trinity county; T. E. Jones, Judge.

Action by Henry Jacob against Henry Lorenz and Jacob Liebrandt to enjoin defendants from destroying a certain ditch, and for damages for the injury already done. An injunction was refused, and the damages were assessed at $650. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James W. Bartlett, for appellants. John W. Turner, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This action was originally brought by the plaintiff to enjoin the defendants, who are owners of the Mammoth placer mine, and who are working the same by hydraulic process, from injuring or washing away a certain water ditch, known as the "East Branch of the Jacob Ditch," owned by plaintiff, and which crosses defendants' mine. Several ditches, among them the Jacob ditch and the Butcher ditch, take water from Connor's creek. Plaintiff acquired the ownership of the Butcher ditch in 1863, and commenced the construction of the Jacob ditch in 1868, and completed the east branch and turned water into it in October, 1870. This east branch of the Jacob ditch connects with and conveys water into the lower part of the Butcher ditch and to a reservoir used by plaintiff in working a mine. The amended complaint alleged the ownership and right to the 20 inches of the "first flow" of the waters of Connor's creek through the Jacob's ditch and branches; that a portion of this water had been used through this ditch since 1868, and later all of it; and that the ditches above-named, "united, formed one complete system." It was further alleged that, at the time said east branch was constructed, the ground over which it passed was vacant and unappropriated mineral land of the United States, but which was afterwards, on December 31, 1877, patented to defendants; that the patent reserved the water rights and ditches mentioned in section 2339¹ of the United States Revised Statutes; that plaintiff had a prior vested right of way for the same; that defendants denied his title to said ditch and water, and had washed away the earth to within 80 feet of his ditch, and threatened and intended to wash away and destroy the same; and prayed for a perpetual injunction. Defendants' demurrer to this complaint was overruled, and this ruling is assigned as error. But one cause of action is stated in the complaint. The Butcher ditch was doubtless mentioned because of its relation to the east branch of the Jacob ditch. Some, if not all, of these allegations, were not material, but surplusage does not vitiate. As to a further ground of demurrer, appellants contend that sufficient facts are not stated, because the complaint does not allege "that plaintiff owned a vested and accrued water right appurtenant to the Jacob ditch, or that he did in 1868 or in 1870." It is not necessary to use the language of the act of congress. Facts are alleged which show that he had such vested right. Whether this right must be appurtenant to a particular ditch will be noticed hereafter. As to the date at which the right must have accrued, defendants contend that the right must have vested and accrued prior to the passage of the act of congress of July 26, 1866, and that only water and ditch rights which had accrued and vested prior to that act are protected by sections 2339 and 2340 of the Revised Statutes. Such contention cannot be sustained. Section 9 of the act of July 26, 1866, (14 Stat. 253,) after acknowledging and confirming water and ditch rights then existing, contains the following proviso: "Provided, however, that whenever, after the passage of this act, any person or persons shall, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injure or damage the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage." Any doubt which may have existed as to the meaning of the act of 1866 was removed by the amendatory act of July 9, 1870, (16 Stat. p. 218, § 17,) which provided that "all patents granted, or pre-emptions or homesteads allowed, shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights as may have been acquired under or recognized by the ninth section of the act of which this is amendatory." That Jennison v. Kirk, 98

¹Section 2339 provides: "Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water, for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed."

U. S. 453, cited by appellants, does not sustain their contention, is apparent from the fact that the ditch there in controversy was constructed in 1873, and its validity was not questioned, except as to a conflict with an older ditch. The language used in the opinion in Broder v. Water Co., 101 U. S. 274, also cited by appellants, would appear to support their contention, but the question here raised was not before the court. The ditch there in question was completed in 1853, and the opinion must be read in the light of that fact. The case of Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249, also arose before the act of 1866, and was not applicable to the question here. Lewis, C. J., who wrote the opinion in Vansickle v. Haines, also wrote the opinion in Hobart v. Ford, 6 Nev. 77. In construing section 9 of the act of 1866, the court said: "In its adoption there appears to have been three distinct objects in view: First, the confirmation of all existing water rights; second, to grant the right of way over the public land to all who may desire to construct flumes or canals for mining or manufacturing purposes; and, third, to authorize the recovery of damages by settlers on such land," etc. See, also, Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217. The demurrer to the amended complaint was properly overruled.

Defendants then answered, denying specifically the allegations of the complaint, and, for a further and separate answer, alleged "that since the commencement of this action the defendants, in the ordinary course and manner of working the Mammoth placer mine by the hydraulic process, have mined and washed away about seventy feet of the ditch described in the complaint as the 'East Branch of the Jacob Ditch;' that it is destroyed, and cannot be specifically replaced." Plaintiff thereupon, by leave of court, filed a supplemental complaint, alleging the facts stated in defendants' additional answer above quoted, and further alleging that it was done wrongfully and maliciously, and with intent to destroy said ditch, and that he was thereby damaged in the sum of $5,000. Defendants moved to strike out the supplemental complaint, and also demurred thereto. An amended supplemental complaint was afterwards regularly filed, alleging more fully the damage sustained, and that at that time defendants had washed away 627 feet of his ditch, and prayed, as before, for a judgment for damages, and an injunction to restrain further injury to his ditch, and for general relief. The motion being denied, and the demurrer overruled, these rulings are assigned as error, and present the most important questions in the case.

1. The motion to strike out was properly denied. Permission to file a supplemental complaint is in the discretion of the court. Code Civil Proc. § 464; Harding v. Minear, 54 Cal. 504; Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 77, 21 Pac. Rep. 1134. This discretion, however, is not an arbitrary one. In Gleason v. Gleason, 54 Cal. 135, it was said: "As a general rule, the right to file a supplemental complaint can be exercised only with reference to matters which may be consistent with and in aid of the case made by the original complaint, and it is not allowable to substitute a new and independent cause of action by way of a supplemental complaint." But the court violated none of these limitations upon its discretion. Plaintiff came into a court of equity seeking only preventive relief. His property had not been invaded, and he could then have only preventive relief. He alleged that defendants threatened and intended to destroy his ditch, and deprive him of the substance of his property. They did not deny that they threatened and intended to destroy plaintiff's ditch, but defiantly answered that since the commencement of the suit they had executed their threats; had destroyed the ditch; that it could not be specifically replaced; and upon that ground, as a separate defense, asked a court of equity that plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that they recover costs. Assuming plaintiff's ownership of the ditch, preventive relief was not all that he was then entitled to. He had suffered damage. The facts alleged in his complaint showing his ownership and title were appropriate to an action for damages, and he was still entitled to an injunction to restrain further injury. The jurisdiction of a court of equity had been properly invoked and acquired. The defendants, by their own act, made different or additional relief necessary. The subject of the action was plaintiff's property, and his right to convey water in his ditch across defendants' mine. That right was not destroyed, and was still the subject of litigation. Damages for the injury to that property—the ditch—was incident to that right, and consistent with it. It was not an "Independent cause of action." It does not appear but that a new ditch might then have been dug around the part washed away, or that a flume or pipe might not have been used to cross the break. It is no objection to a supplemental complaint that different or additional relief is asked for. Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 483. Indeed, the object of the supplemental complaint is to obtain additional or different relief without resort to a new action. Not only did the court not err in refusing to strike out the supplemental complaint, but appellants should not be heard to complain that their efforts to defeat plaintiff's action, by making the relief he sought inadequate, had not proved successful.

2. The demurrer was upon several grounds. The first and second grounds need not be noticed. The third ground is that there is a misjoinder of causes of action, and that they are not separately stated. Treating it as two causes of action, it is too well settled to require discussion that a cause of action for damages for a trespass and a cause of action for injunction to restrain further or additional trespass threatened to be committed upon the same property may be joined. The objection that they are not separately stated cannot be reached by a demurrer upon that ground. It can only be reached by motion, unless the failure to state them separately renders the complaint ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain. That ground was also assigned, but I think the objection was not well taken.

Several other objections are urged under this head, the chief of which is that the complaint does not apportion the damages, or state how much each particular mine or other property owned by plaintiff was damaged by the destruction of the ditch. It is true that damages which, though the natural, are not the necessary, consequence of defendants' acts, are special, and should be specially alleged. But the references in the complaint, amended and supplemental, to the mines and reservoir of the plaintiff, and the use to which he applied the water conveyed through the ditch, were pertinent, for the purpose of showing the permanent and continued use and value of the ditch. If there were no useful purposes to which plaintiff could apply the water, or if the use were but a temporary one, it is manifest that the value of the ditch would be greatly diminished. Plaintiff's failure to allege special damage by the depreciation of the value of his mines could not make his complaint obnoxious to this form of demurrer. It simply eliminated the question of special damages from the case, but left the allegations pertinent for the purpose of showing a useful and continued purpose to which the water could be applied; for, without such showing, he could not recover more than nominal damages. The demurrer was properly overruled.

Defendants' answer put in issue all the material allegations of the complaint, and the cause was tried by the court, without a jury, and resulted in findings and judgment for the plaintiff for $650 damages; but the injunction was denied. In their motion for new trial, defendants specify numerous errors of law, and many particulars in which they claim the findings are not justified by the evidence. The several deeds and receiver's receipts for mineral entries, offered by plaintiff, were properly received to show ownership in the plaintiff, and a use to which the water was and could be applied. That, as to some of these parcels, he was not the sole owner, did not affect their admissibility.

The objection to the deed of Barthol Jacob and wife, on the ground that it was defectively executed by the wife, is without merit.

It is not perceived why surface water from rains and melting snow, which naturally drained into this ditch, (though not the subject of appropriation,) to the extent to which it adds to the quantity of water which was received into the ditch from Connor's creek, does not add to the value of the ditch, nor why its loss does not cause injury.

Defendants' motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. Two points specially are urged in support of this motion:

(1) That a part of the Mammoth mine was located before the ditch was constructed. That there had been some prior locations covering a portion of the Mammoth mine, made or attempted appears in the evidence. Defendants' title to the mine was not, however, connected with any prior location, but was based upon a survey and location made after the ditch was constructed. While the patent relates back to the location, it only relates to the location which is the inception of the title perfected by the patent, and not to any prior location which does not appear in the chain of title resulting in the patent. It is therefore immaterial whether there had been prior locations; and, besides, the use of the ditch had been permitted without objection up to about the time this action was commenced, a period of nearly 18 years.

(2) It is urged that plaintiff's right to the 20 inches of water was not appurtenant to the Jacob ditch. It is not disputed that plaintiff owned the right to that quantity of water to be diverted from Connor's creek. It is immaterial in what ditch this water was taken when he acquired the right. The place of diversion, or of use, or of the purpose to which the use was applied, could be changed. Civil Code, § 1412; Ramell v. Irish, 96 Cal., at page 217, 31 Pac. Rep. 41. The restriction imposed by section 1412, Civil Code, is a matter of defense, and defendants could not be injured by its being taken in a ditch above theirs, it being the first right on the stream, as in any event it could not be taken in their ditch, and therefore did not diminish the water to which they were entitled. The testimony of the witness Schoppl, that plaintiff, by taking these 20 inches in the Jacob ditch, left that much less to come to defendants' ditch below, does not tend to show injury; for, if plaintiff's ditch were below, they would be required to let that amount pass and reach plaintiff's ditch. Appellants' contention that the water right must be appurtenant to a certain ditch is not sound. The water right is the principal thing, and, if either is appurtenant to the other, the ditch is appurtenant to the water right, and, as the water may be used through any ditch, the question becomes unimportant.

3. The date at which plaintiff acquired title to the several parcels of mining property is wholly immaterial, nor was it material that plaintiff's title to the 20 inches of water was not conveyed to him until 1887. Title to this water originated prior to June

8, 1852, and it could not affect defendants' liability whether they were the owners, though without legal title, or were the lessees of the water right, or conveyed it in their ditch for the owner prior to 1887.

4. The evidence as to the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff was conflicting, both as to the amount and the grounds upon which it should be estimated; but the finding placing plaintiff's damages at $650 is fully justified by the evidence, upon grounds to which no exception could properly be taken. There was evidence tending to show that the market value of the ditch was $2,000, and that its rental value was $125 per annum. While defendants' testimony tended to show very little injury, as there was an unauthorized invasion of plaintiff's property he was entitled to some damages; and, as the court could have found upon unobjectionable testimony the amount awarded, we are not justified in holding that this finding is not justified by the evidence.

Other questions are made upon the introduction of evidence and as to other findings, which need not be specially noticed. We have examined each of them, and find no material error prejudicial to defendants. The right of the plaintiff is clear, and we see no ground upon which a judgment for defendants could be properly based, and advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VAN-CLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

98 Cal. 304

DULIN v. PACIFIC WOOD & COAL
et al. (No. 19,251.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)

APPEAL—SUPERSEDEAS.

1. Where, in an action to determine whether plaintiff or defendant was elected a director of a corporation, the judgment declares plaintiff elected and defendant not elected, and grants no other relief, and an appeal is taken, plaintiff will not be restrained, pending appeal, from performing his duties as such director, since his assuming to act as a director, while it may be in consequence of the judgment, is not a proceeding on it.

2. Where a case is one within Code Civil Proc. § 949, providing for a stay of proceedings on appeal, a writ of supersedeas will not be issued until an appeal has been perfected as provided in said section, and then only in a case where the lower court seeks to enforce its judgment notwithstanding such appeal.

3. A writ of supersedeas will not be issued to restrain a party to an action in the assertion of his rights as established by a judgment therein, other than to prevent him from using the process of the court below to enforce such judgment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; George Puterbaugh, Judge.

Action by E. G. Dulin against the Pacific Wood & Coal Company and B. D. Clugston to determine whether plaintiff or defendant Clugston was elected a director of the defendant the Pacific Wood & Coal Company. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant Clugston moves for an order restraining plaintiff from acting as director pending appeal. Motion denied.

D. L. Withington and Works & Works, for appellants. Mr. Palmer, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. At a meeting of the stockholders of the Pacific Wood & Coal Company, a corporation, held at San Diego, November 17, 1892, for the election of five directors for the year then next ensuing, the appellant Clugston was declared elected as one of the directors. The respondent herein claimed that certain votes offered to be cast for himself at the election should have been received, and that, if they had been received, the result of the election would have been shown that he was elected instead of Clugston. On the 10th of December, 1892, Dulin filed his petition in the superior court of the county of San Diego, under the provisions of section 315 of the Civil Code, making the corporation and Clugston defendants, and praying the court to set aside the election of Clugston as a director, and to confirm the election of himself as such director, and for such other relief in the premises as might seem proper. The matter was heard by the court, and on the 25th of January, 1893, it rendered its judgment that, at the said election, Dulin was elected one of the directors of the corporation, and that his election be confirmed, and that Clugston was not elected, and had not, since the 17th day of November, 1892, been a director in said corporation. On the same day the defendants appealed from the judgment, and now ask for an order "staying the proceedings in this action, and restraining the respondent Dulin from doing any act as director, president, or manager of the appellant the Pacific Wood & Coal Company, or interfering with the management of the business of said company by the appellant Clugston as director and president, and the other directors thereof." Each of the contestants herein states in his affidavit filed upon this motion that after the election in November he was duly elected president of the corporation,—the respondent Dulin stating that he "was by said board of directors duly elected president of said corporation," and the appellant Clugston that he "was duly elected president of said corporation by the votes of himself, James Wells, and L. Clugston, being a majority of said board,"—from which it would appear that, after the election, two of the directors recognized the appellant as having been elected one of their number, while two others recognized the respondent, and that each of the contestants thereafter assumed to act as such president. It also appears from the affidavits that, after judgment had been entered herein, the corporation brought an action against the appellant Clugston for the purpose of preventing him from trespassing upon its property or interfering with its business, and that, by virtue of the process issued therein, Clugston was ejected from certain premises belonging to the corporation, and Dulin took possession thereof, and assumed to act as a director and its president, and that Clugston was excluded from the management thereof. The appellants contend that by virtue of their appeal the respondent is prohibited from doing these acts, and they now ask for this order in support of their contention.

The writ of supersedeas is "an auxiliary process designed to supersede the enforcement of the judgment of the court below, brought up by writ of error for review." Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 249. Originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come into his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings," and is employed to designate the effect of an act or proceeding which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment. In this state the writ is frequently granted by this court for the purpose of staying proceedings in the superior court, when a review of the action of that court is sought in this court, either upon direct proceeding or on appeal, and is directed to the court whose action is under review, or to an officer of that court who may be about to enforce its judgment. Section 949, Code Civil Proc., declares that in cases like the present the perfecting of an appeal "stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from," thus creating a statutory supersedeas, or "a suspension of the power of the court below to issue an execution on the judgment or decree appealed from, or, if a writ of execution is issued, a prohibition against the execution of the writ." Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 159, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136. If, after such appeal, the court below seeks to enforce its judgment, this court will grant a special order or writ restraining its action. The writ itself is directed to the court whose action is sought to be restrained, or to some one of its officers, and is limited to restraining any action upon the judgment appealed from. It cannot be used to perform the functions of an injunction against the parties to the action, restraining them from any act in the assertion of their rights, other than to prevent them from using the process of the court below to enforce the judgment, nor can the writ be employed for any purpose upon persons not parties to the judgment. Its effect is merely to leave the parties to the judgment in the same position as they were prior to its entry, and to prevent the appellant from being prejudiced by its enforcement. There are many judgments, however, which are self-executing, or which have an intrinsic effect, upon which there are no proceedings to be stayed, and which will not be affected by an appeal therefrom. A judgment granting or dissolving an injunction, or determining the status of an individual, granting or denying a divorce or an annulment of marriage, quieting title to a tract of land, setting aside the execution of a deed, are instances of such judgments. In Walls v. Palmer, 64 Ind. 496, a judgment had been rendered suspending the petitioner from practicing as an attorney, and it was urged that an appeal therefrom had the effect of restoring him to his right to practice during the pendency of the appeal. The court, however, held that to give that effect to the appeal would be to reverse the judgment of the suspension before the appeal was judicially decided; saying: "The effect of the appeal and supersedeas is to stay the judgment of suspension as it is, and prevent further proceedings against the petitioner. It does not reverse, suspend, or supersede the force of the judgment. That remains in all respects the same. The judgment itself requires no further execution than its own terms. It executes itself except as to the collection of costs, which is stayed by the appeal and supersedeas. The only effect of an appeal to a court of error, when perfected and while pending, is to stay execution upon the judgment from which it is taken." And herein should be observed the distinction between the effect of an appeal from a judgment in staying further proceedings thereon, and its effect in depriving the judgment itself of any efficacy as evidence of the fact determined. The appeal suspends its force as a conclusive determination of the rights of the parties, but the stay of proceedings consequent upon the appeal is limited to the enforcement of the judgment itself, and does not destroy or impair its character.

The purpose of the present application is not to prevent the court from taking any action to enforce its judgment, but to prevent Dulin from acting as one of the directors of the corporation. His assuming to be such director, while it may be in consequence of the judgment, is not a proceeding upon the judgment. The acts done and threatened by him were not done by virtue of the judgment, but in consequence of the recognition by his fellow directors of his right to co-operate with them. The fact that the judgment was rendered in his favor may have been a motive governing the other directors in recognizing him as a fellow director, and in admitting him to their counsels and excluding Clugston therefrom, but such action is independent of the proceeding in court. The stay of proceedings upon the enforcement of the judgment resulting from the appeal cannot prevent the moral support which the rendition of the judgment may give to the other directors, or form the basis of an injunction against them, nor can it be invoked to prevent the respondent from committing a trespass against the appellant. Its only effect is to leave the parties in the same situation, with reference to the rights involved in the action, as they were prior to the rendition of the judgment. They still have, notwithstanding the appeal, the same right to assert, outside of the court, or in any other proceeding, their respective rights, as they had prior thereto. While this proceeding was pending in the court below, that court had no authority, by virtue thereof, to enjoin Dulin from assuming to act as a director, and, after it had adjudged that he had been duly elected one of the directors, there would have been a manifest inconsistency in enjoining him from acting as such director. The appeal from that judgment cannot confer upon Clugston any greater right to an injunction against Dulin than he had prior to its rendition. The court limited its action to ascertaining the result of the election, and did not grant any relief in the premises other than to confirm the election of Dulin, and to declare that Clugston was not elected. No other proceedings have been had or attempted in the court below upon this judgment, and the judgment itself does not contemplate or authorize any other proceedings, or any process to enforce it. The motion is denied.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

(3 Cal. Unrep. 883)

GREENBERG v. CALIFORNIA BITUMINOUS ROCK CO., (JOHNSON, Intervener.
No. 19,146.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 26, 1893.)
VENDOR'S LIEN—ACTION TO FORECLOSE—INTERVENTION—DECREE.

In an action to foreclose a vendor's lien, a third party intervened, and asked a foreclosure of an interest claimed by him. Plaintiff denied the allegations of intervenor's complaint, and thereupon dismissed his action. Defendant made default. Held, that a decree finding intervenor had the interest claimed, but denying him a foreclosure as to such interest, was erroneous.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by Meyer Greenberg against the California Bituminous Rock Company to recover the price of, and enforce a vendor's lien on, certain land, in which C. B. Johnson intervened, and claimed an interest. Plaintiff answered intervenor's complaint, and thereupon dismissed his action, while defendant made default. From the judgment entered, and from an order denying a new trial, intervenor appeals. Reversed.

Luis Laney, for plaintiff. T. C. Van Ness, for intervenor. Graves & Graves, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. This is an appeal from a final judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. The action was brought to recover $25,000, the purchase price of certain land conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant, and to enforce a vendor's lien upon the land conveyed. C. B. Johnson, the intervenor, filed his complaint of intervention, in which he set out that the plaintiff held the property in part as a trustee for intervenor and one L. M. Warden; that the interest of intervenor was a one-fourth share or interest therein. He denies, on information and belief, that the purchase price of the land was $25,000, but avers that defendant, (a corporation,) as the consideration for the sale of the land, was to deliver 1,250 shares of the capital stock of the corporation defendant, (being the whole capital stock,) as follows: 300 shares each to plaintiff, Warden, intervenor, and Underhill, and 50 shares to Ernest Graves; that defendant never delivered any of the shares or other consideration; and that no security was given. Intervenor prays that, if it shall appear that the sum of $25,000 shall appear to have been the consideration, a decree in favor of plaintiff be entered as prayed for in the complaint; that, if it shall appear that the stock was to be delivered, a decree of foreclosure be entered in favor of plaintiff in consonance with the facts stated in the complaint of intervention; and that in either case intervenor's interest in the judgment be established to the extent of his interest in the land, etc. The complaint of intervention was served upon the plaintiff and defendant, the latter of whom made default. Plaintiff denied all the allegations of the complaint, and thereupon dismissed his action. The cause was tried by the court, and written findings filed upon which judgment was entered, whereby it was decreed that, at the date of the sale of the land to defendant, plaintiff held one-quarter of the property in trust for intervener, and that the latter, upon the payment of one-third of the amount due on a promissory note for $2,937.50, executed by plaintiff, Greenberg, L. M. Warden, and the intervenor, as found in the findings, will be entitled to have issued to him by defendant 300 shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation.

The judgment and order appealed from are erroneous, in this: The defendant being in default, intervenor was entitled to a decree of foreclosure, as prayed for against it. Whether the stock was to be delivered only upon the payment of the promissory note as found by the court was not an issue as between intervenor and defendant, and, as the plaintiff did not set it up as against intervenor, it is hard to see how it had any place in the evidence. The case is a peculiar one in some respects, and the pleadings should be so amended as to make plaintiff, who dismissed his case, a defendant, or by such further statements as, in the light of the proceedings and affidavits on file, will enable the court below to glean all the facts, and do complete justice to all the parties. The judgment and order appealed from should be reversed, and a new trial had, with leave to the parties intervenor and plaintiff to amend their pleadings as they may be advised.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered, with leave to the parties intervenor and plaintiff to amend their pleadings as they may be advised.

98 Cal. 355

BULLARD v. McCARDLE et al. (No. 18,011.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 26, 1893.)

JUSTICE'S JUDGMENT—EXECUTION SALE AFTER APPEAL — TITLE OF PURCHASER — ORDERS OF SUPERIOR COURT—NOTICE.

1. Where execution is issued on a judgment in justice's court after an appeal has been taken therefrom to the superior court, a purchaser at constable's sale under such execution acquires no title to the property purchased.

2. The facts that such appeal was dismissed by the superior court, and the order of dismissal filed in the justice's court, and that a subsequent order of the superior court vacating the order of dismissal was not filed in the justice's court, will not afford such purchaser protection, since he purchased at his peril.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action of claim and delivery by W. P. Bullard against James McCardle and others, in which plaintiff had judgment. From an order granting defendants' motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank H. Short and D. M. Seaton, for appellant. Church & Cory, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. A money judgment was recovered in the justice's court against the plaintiff herein on the 19th of July, 1889, from which, on the same day, he appealed to the superior court upon questions of law and fact, giving a sufficient undertaking for the appeal, and to stay execution upon the judgment. The record on the appeal was filed in the superior court September 5, 1889, but on the 21st of October the plaintiff in the action, evidently not knowing that fact, obtained an order dismissing the appeal, upon the ground that the papers on appeal had not been filed. The appeal, when filed, had been numbered 2,820 on the register of actions in the superior court, and the motion to dismiss the appeal, as well as the order of dismissal, was entitled as of a case No. 2,909 on that register. On the next day after this order was made a certified copy thereof was filed in the justice's court, and an execution upon the judgment appealed from was issued and placed in the hands of the officer for service. On the 29th of October the superior court made an order vacating its previous order dismissing the appeal, and recalling the execution that had been issued out of the justice's court, but no copy of this order was filed in the justice's court. On the 7th of November the constable, by virtue of the execution, sold certain cattle of the plaintiff to the defendants herein, and immediately after the sale the plaintiff herein demanded the property from the defendants, and upon their refusal brought this action of claim and delivery. The property was delivered to him pending the action, and the court rendered judgment in his favor. The defendants moved for a new trial, which was granted, and the plaintiff has appealed from that order.

One who derails title to property through a sale under an execution must show not only the execution and the sale, but also a valid judgment in support of the execution. Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 654; Quirk v. Falk, 47 Cal. 453; Schuyler v. Broughton, 65 Cal. 252, 3 Pac. Rep. 870. The sheriff, in making the sale, acts under a naked, statutory power, dependent for its existence upon the existence of the judgment which he is attempting to execute, and, if there is no judgment in support of the writ of execution under which he makes the sale, the power to make the sale is wanting. By obtaining his judgment the plaintiff has become authorized to satisfy the amount therein named out of the defendant's property, and the law designates the sheriff as his agent to effect this result. The sheriff is, however, but the agent of the plaintiff in making the satisfaction, and can exercise no greater power therefor than could the plaintiff himself. Unless there is a valid judgment in existence, neither the plaintiff himself nor the sheriff has any authority to deprive the defendant of his property. Even though there was a judgment in existence at the time the writ of execution was issued, yet, if it has been vacated or satisfied before any sale is made under the execution, the power to make the sale has also been destroyed; and it is immaterial whether the judgment was directly satisfied or vacated, as by payment, or an order of court, or indirectly, as by granting a new trial in the action, or by an appeal whose effect is to prevent the execution of the judgment. A different rule obtains when the judgment is vacated or appealed from after a sale of property under its authority. In such a case the bona fide purchaser is not affected even by a reversal of the judgment. It is, however, always incumbent upon the purchaser to see at his peril that there is a valid judgment in existence at the time he makes his purchase. Herm. Ex'ns, § 255; Wood v. Colvin, 2 Hill, 566; Frost v. Yonkers Bank, 70 N. Y. 553; McClure v. Logan, 59 Mo. 234. "The sheriff, in making sale of property under process of the court, acts under a power; and, if the power does not exist, no title passes, even to an innocent purchaser. He who buys under a power buys at his peril, and acquires no title without showing a valid, subsisting power." Carpenter v. Stilwell, 11 N. Y. 71. "The judgment was the sole foundation of the sheriff's power to sell and convey the premises, and, if the judgment was paid when he undertook to sell and convey, his power was at an end, and all his acts were without authority and void. The purchaser under a power is chargeable with notice if the power does not exist, and purchases at his peril." Craft v. Merrill, 14 N. Y. 461.

By perfecting the appeal from the justice's court, the case was entirely removed from that court, and only the superior court had thereafter jurisdiction in the matter. The judgment in the justice's court was not merely suspended, but by the removal of the record was vacated and set aside. Thornton v. Mahoney, 24 Cal. 569; People v. Treadwell, 66 Cal. 400, 5 Pac. Rep. 686. When the effect of an appeal is to transfer the entire record to the appellate court, and to cause the action to be retried in that court, as if originally brought therein, as is the case when appeals are taken from a justice's court upon questions of law and fact, the judgment appealed from is completely annulled, and is not thereafter available for any purpose. Bank of North America v. Wheeler, 28 Conn. 441; Campbell v. Howard, 5 Mass. 376; Levi v. Karrick, 15 Iowa, 444; Keyser v. Farr, 105 U. S. 265. The order made by the superior court vacating its previous order of dismissal took from the execution that had been issued by the justice its entire vigor, and rendered the acts of the officer thereunder nugatory. The judgment upon which it was issued had been vacated by an appeal therefrom, which was sufficient both in form and substance to divest the justice's court of any further jurisdiction over the case. The case was thereafter in the superior court, and the rights of the parties were to be determined by the action of that court. Being a court of general jurisdiction, all its orders are attended with the presumption of regularity. (Sherer v. Superior Court, 94 Cal. 354, 29 Pac. Rep. 716,) and its order vacating its previous order of dismissal, and recalling the execution, left the cause undetermined, and pending before it, as it was when the appeal was first perfected. It was not essential to the validity of this order that it should be filed in the justice's court. It was effective as soon as it was made. The defendant had done all that was required of him in taking the appeal, and it was not necessary for him to take any steps to protect himself from further proceedings in the justice's court. It was, however, incumbent upon the purchasers at the sale, under the execution issued out of the justice's court, to see that such execution was supported by a valid judgment, and they were charged with notice of the proceedings in that court, and that the judgment had been appealed from prior to the issuance of the execution. They were also charged with notice that the cause was thereafter pending in the superior court, and they were required to examine the proceedings of that court to find support for the issuance of the execution. They could not rely upon the fact that a copy of the order dismissing the appeal had been filed in the justice's court. They assumed at their risk the regularity of that order, as well as any subsequent proceedings in the superior court, and their ignorance of the subsequent order vacating it is not available to them in their attempt to retain the property of the plaintiff herein, which they purchased in reliance upon the order of dismissal. Inasmuch as, upon the uncontroverted facts in the case, the decision could not have been different from that which was given at the trial, the order for a new trial cannot be sustained, and it is therefore reversed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; McFARLAND, J.

(98 Cal. 241)

GREISS v. STATE INVEST. & INS. CO.
(No. 14,301.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1893.)

FIRE INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY—ANSWER—ARBITRATION AND AWARD—AGREEMENT—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

1. In an action on a fire insurance policy providing that immediate notice of loss should be given, with full statement and particulars and amount of loss, and that any fraud should work a forfeiture, an answer alleging that defendant specifically excepts "to plaintiff's notice of loss or proof of loss, because it is false and untrue in respect to quality, quantity, and value of the property insured, and in respect to the amount of the loss," does not give plaintiff notice that fraud was charged, or that a forfeiture would be claimed.

2. In such action, the answer not having raised the question of fraud, the court properly refused to charge that plaintiff could not recover if the proof of loss was fraudulent, even though evidence was admitted in proving amount of loss, which was relevant whether there was an issue as to fraud or not.

3. A stipulation for a submission to arbitration, which does not provide for the number of arbitrators, nor the mode of their selection, is too indefinite to be enforced.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by George Greiss against the State Investment & Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fisher Ames, for appellant. O'Brien, Morrison & Daingerfield and Morrison, Stratton & Foerster, for respondent Greiss. F. A. Meyer and Wm. B. Haskell, for respondent Meyer.

TEMPLE, C. This action is upon a fire insurance policy, and this appeal is taken by the insurance company from the judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial. Only two points are made here: (1) That the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that, in case they find that the proof of loss furnished by plaintiff to the company was false and fraudulent, their verdict should be for the defendant; and (2) in refusing to instruct the jury that plaintiff could not recover if he refused to submit the matter of loss to arbitration, but, on the other hand, instructed the jury that arbitration was not a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to recover.

Respondent contends that the answer raises no issue as to false statements or fraud, and that a forfeiture is not claimed. The instruction asked, therefore, was not pertinent to any matter involved in the trial, and was rejected for that reason. I think this contention must be sustained.

The policy was attached to, and made a part of, the complaint. It provided that immediate notice of any loss should be given, with a full statement of particulars and amount of loss, etc., and that "any false swearing, fraud, or attempt at fraud on the part of the assured shall cause a forfeiture of all claims under this policy." The complaint avers due proof of loss, and a compliance with the conditions of the policy in other respects. The answer denies this allegation, sets out the proof of loss made, and points out several alleged defects in it, but does not charge that it is either false or fraudulent. It does state, however, that "thereafter, on or about the 21st day of March, A. D. 1887, defendant presented to and served upon plaintiff its objections and exceptions to said proof of loss, a full, true, and correct copy of which said objections and exceptions is hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit B,' and is hereby expressly referred to, and made a part thereof; and that said objections and exceptions to said proof of loss, and each of them, are and is, in all respects, true and correct, as therein stated, and the same are hereby expressly referred to and made a part hereof." The matter is not otherwise alluded to in the answer, and, as already said, it charges no fraud, nor does it claim a forfeiture. No facts are stated which could amount to fraud. It is provided in section 2635 of the Civil Code: "All defects in a notice of loss, or in preliminary proof thereof, which the insured might remedy, and which the insurer omits to specify to him without unnecessary delay, as ground of objection, are waived." The notice of objection specifies many other objections, and was doubtless served that the company might not be precluded from making any objection to the sufficiency of the proof; and plaintiff had a right to suppose that it was pleaded simply to show that no objections were waived. It gave him no notice that by such reference defendant intended to plead a forfeiture, especially as even in the notice no fraud is charged, and no forfeiture claimed. But, conceding that by such reference the statements in the notice can be converted into substantial averments of the answer, it states no facts tending to show fraud. By it plaintiff was notified that the company specifically excepts to "said notice of loss or proof of loss," on the ground that "it is false and untrue in respect to quality, quantity, and value of the property insured, and in respect to the amount of loss." It does not charge that it was willfully false or untrue, states no facts constituting fraud, and does not claim a forfeiture has been incurred. As there was another apparent reason for giving the notice and for pleading it, I think the answer did not inform the plaintiff that fraud was charged, or that a forfeiture would be claimed. The general rule is that a defense should be so pleaded that, being admitted as pleaded, judgment must go for defendant, and this rule is especially rigid in pleading fraud or a forfeiture. The pleading here considered would not stand this test.

But it is contended that it is now too late to make this point, because proof was admitted on the trial, without objection, that the answer was insufficient in this respect, or that no issue was raised as to fraud by this plea. A careful reading of the voluminous record has convinced me that this position is untenable. The policy being a contract of indemnity, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove the amount of his loss. Upon this issue, evidence was produced by both parties, and was, of course, relevant, whether there was an issue as to fraud or not. Therefore the plaintiff could not object to such evidence when offered by defendant, nor did such offer convey any information to plaintiff that defendant was attempting to prove fraud or claimed a forfeiture. The first opportunity he had of objecting to such an issue being made was when the rejected instruction was presented. The doctrine invoked is founded partly upon a sort of estoppel. It is unfair for a party to withhold an objection founded upon a defect which, if pointed out in time, might be remedied, until it is too late to correct the defect, thereby inducing an opponent to rely upon his pleading as sufficient, in order that he may have a fatal objection. Such course is a fraud upon justice, and prevents a fair trial. It is therefore not tolerated. Sometimes, perhaps, the rule has been enforced, on the ground that the issue has been fairly tried, and neither party has been prejudiced by the want of a good pleading. Neither reason exists here. Defendant was not misled by the conduct of plaintiff, and no one can say that plaintiff could not have proven his good faith in his estimate of his loss by other testimony than the mere proof of the extent of his loss. The stipulation for an arbitration was too indefinite to be enforced, and a submission to arbitration cannot therefore be held to have been a condition precedent to a right of action. It did not provide for the number of the arbitrators, nor the mode of their selection. Case v. Insurance Co., 82 Cal. 263, 21 Pac. Rep. 843, and 22 Pac. Rep. 1083. I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

93 Cal. 318

CREDITORS v. CONSUMERS' LUMBER CO. (No. 14,933.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

INSOLVENCY — PETITION — BOND — PLACE OF BUSINESS OF CORPORATION — WHAT CONSTITUTES — PAROL EVIDENCE.

1. St. 1880, c. 87, (Insolvency Act,) § 8, provides that a petition in insolvency "shall be accompanied by a bond, with two sureties," in a certain sum. Held, that a failure to file such bond was not jurisdictional.

2. St. 1880, c. 87, § 8, requires that a petition in insolvency shall be filed "in the superior court of the county, or city and county, in which the debtor resides or has his place of business." Held, that a corporation whose residence was in the county of S., but whose mill was located in the county of H., where all its operations were carried on, where it contracted its liabilities, and where its creditors lived, had its place of business in the county of H. for the purposes of the above statute.

3. In proceedings by creditors of a corporation to have the same declared insolvent, the creditors may prove by parol evidence in what county the corporation has its place of business.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Petition by the creditors of the Consumers' Lumber Company to have the corporation declared insolvent. From an order adjudging the same insolvent, it appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Turner, for appellant, J. F. Coonan and Denver Sevier, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from an order of adjudication of insolvency, based upon a petition of creditors. The demurrer to the petition was properly overruled. Section 8 of the insolvency act requires the petition to be filed in the superior court of the county, or city and county, in which the debtor resides or has his place of business. The allegation of the petition is that the lumber company has its place of business at Humboldt county, Cal. Even conceding that an allegation of residence or place of business is essential to the sufficiency of the petition, then the allegation in this case comes squarely within the statute. Section 8 of the act provides that "the petition shall be accompanied by a bond, with two sureties, in the penal sum of five hundred dollars." It is now insisted for the first time that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the proceeding, because no bond signed by the petitioning creditors and two sureties accompanied the petition, but an undertaking by sureties alone was filed. It is not necessary to enter into an examination of the law as to the character of the bond or undertaking contemplated by the statute. A provision of law very similar in principle to the one under investigation was before the court in Dixon v. Allen, 69 Cal. 528, 11 Pac. Rep. 179, and it was there decided that a failure to file a bond was in no sense jurisdictional. If the undertaking in this case was objectionable, in fairness to the other side the defects should have been pointed out, in order that they might have been remedied. As was said in Greiss v. Insurance Co., 33 Pac. Rep. 195, (decision filed May 11, 1893:) "Such a course is a fraud upon justice, and prevents a fair trial. It is therefore not tolerated."

We know of no rule of evidence denying petitioners the right to prove, by parol, in what county the appellant corporation had its place of business. As we construe this provision of the insolvency act, it would be difficult to prove the fact in any other manner. The petition must be filed in the county where the "debtor resides, or has his place of business." A tradesman's residence and his place of business are often in different counties, and his creditors, under the foregoing provision, would be authorized to force him into insolvency in the county of his residence, or in the county where he has his place of business. A corporation occupies no better or different position. As has been held in Jenkins v. Stage Co., 22 Cal. 538, and Cohn v. Railroad Co., 71 Cal. 488, 12 Pac. Rep. 498, the principal place of business of a corporation, as stated in its articles, is its residence; but, as in the case of an individual, its actual place of business, its scene of operations, the place where it buys and sells, may be a county entirely different from its place of residence. Justice Sanderson said in Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 128: "But the operations of a corporation may be carried on in one county, and its principal place of business, within the meaning of the statute, be in another and distinct county." In the present case, conceding the residence, viz. the principal place of business of the appellant, to be in the city and county of San Francisco, its mill was located in Humboldt county; it carried on all its operations there; it contracted its liabilities there; and there its creditors lived. Under the statute, it had its place of business in Humboldt county, as contradistinguished from its residence, and it follows that the petition by the creditors was filed in the proper county. Under this construction of the statute, it becomes immaterial to examine the ruling of the court as to the rejection, as evidence, of a certified copy of the original articles of incorporation. The certified copy was offered to prove residence, but, as we have seen, residence is an immaterial element in the present case. We might suggest that, as a certified copy of the original articles would not prove the existence of a corporation, it is not plain that such evidence would establish residence for a corporation. Let the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

(98 Cal. 287)

FIRST NAT. BANK OF SAN LUIS OBISPO v. SIMMONS et al. (No. 19,151.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)

PARTNERSHIP—PURCHASE OF INTEREST—LIABILITY OF PURCHASER ON PRIOR OBLIGATION OF FIRM.

A person who buys the interest of one of the partners of a firm does not thereby become personally liable on a prior obligation of such firm, in the absence of proof that he in some way assumed such obligation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from San Luis Obispo county; V. A. Gregg, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of San Luis Obispo against L. H. Simmons and E. M. Hall, copartners, on a written contract for the payment of money, executed by L. H. Simmons and Charles F. Hall, copartners under the firm name of Simmons & Hall. From a judgment of nonsuit as to defendant E. M. Hall, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wilcoxon & Boudin, for appellant. H. C. Firebaugh and Graves & Graves, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. Action on a promissory note, so called, of which the following is a copy: "$1,000.00. San Luis Obispo, Cal., March 29, 1890. For value received I promise to pay to the order of the First National Bank of San Luis Obispo, in gold coin of the U. S., any and all sums of money which the said First National Bank of San Luis Obispo may loan or advance to me on my account, to the amount of one thousand dollars, with interest on such loans and advances from the time the same are made, respectively, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable monthly; said payment to be made by one day after date; and this obligation shall always apply to the balance of my indebtedness with said bank. No. 1,172. L. H. Simmons, for Simmons & Hall." The complaint alleges that the defendants, as copartners, made the note on the day of its date; that plaintiff then and thereafter "loaned and advanced to defendants, as such copartners as aforesaid, the sum of $1,000, and the same was used by said defendants as such partners, in and about the business of said partnership;" and that only $300.35 has been paid thereon. The complaint is not verified. The defendant E. M. Hall denied each and every allegation of the complaint, and specifically denied that any partnership ever existed between him and Simmons. At the close of the evidence on the part of the plaintiff the defendant Hall moved for a nonsuit as to him, on the ground that the evidence did not tend to prove that he was one of the makers of the note, or had ever promised to pay the same. The court granted the motion, and judgment of nonsuit was entered in favor of the defendant Hall, from which plaintiff brings this appeal on a bill of exceptions.

The evidence on the part of the plaintiff, as stated in the bill of exceptions, shows that on August 22, 1889, a written agreement of partnership was executed between Simmons and one Charles F. Hall, the son of the defendant E. M. Hall, by the terms of which Charles F. Hall purchased from Simmons an undivided half of the stock in trade of a hardware business theretofore carried on by Simmons at the town of San Luis Obispo, for the sum of $2,950; that after the payment of this sum, and transfer of one-half of said stock, the parties to the agreement should be partners in the business under the firm name of Simmons & Hall. It appears that the defendant E. M. Hall, who resided in San Francisco, advanced and paid for his son Charles F. Hall the whole sum of the purchase money, but that the son alone took possession of the interest purchased, and with Simmons conducted the business until some time between August 1, and October 8, 1890, when it is claimed by appellant that, being dangerously ill, he sold his interest in the concern to his father, E. M. Hall. Simmons, who was the principal witness for the plaintiff, testified that in August or September, or possibly as late as November 1, 1890, Charles F. Hall, while sick at San Luis Obispo, signed a bill of sale of his interest in the business to his father, E. M. Hall, who was not in San Luis Obispo at that time, and that he (Simmons) consented to such sale, but that E. M. Hall never took possession of the interest, nor claimed any right to it, under that bill of sale, and never, to the knowledge of witness, took any part in the conduct of the business; and, further, that no partnership agreement was ever made between him and E. M. Hall. There is no evidence that the bill of sale signed by Charles F. Hall was ever delivered to E. M. Hall, and it appears that on December 3, 1890, Charles F. Hall executed a bill of sale of his interest in the partnership to one Charles Haskins, and soon after died. Simmons testified that Haskins presented his bill of sale, claiming the interest of Charles F. Hall, and came into possession, and represented that interest. Mr. R. E. Jack, who was president of the plaintiff bank at the time the note was made, and cashier at the time of the trial, testified that on October 8, 1890, he called on E. M. Hall, who was then on a visit to San Luis Obispo, with whom he had not been acquainted before, and procured an introduction to him; that, upon such introduction, "Mr. Hall's first remark that he addressed to me was, 'How is my partner, Simmons?' And then I asked him if he had taken, as I understood, a transfer of that interest, and if he owned it. He said he had, and it was his." Witness further testified that having been informed of the signing of the bill of sale by Charles F. Hall to his father, as testified by Simmons, his object in calling on E. M. Hall was to ascertain whether he had purchased Charles F. Hall's interest. The evidence does not fix the date of the alleged bill of sale from Charles F. Hall to E. M. Hall, but appellant claims it to have been about October 1, 1890.

Assuming, for the purpose of this appeal, that the evidence tends to prove a transfer of the interest of Charles F. to E. M. Hall between August 1, and October 1, 1890, and also that Simmons accepted E. M. Hall as a partner at the time of the transfer, yet these facts alone did not make E. M. Hall responsible on the note upon which this action is brought, which had been made by the firm composed of Simmons and Charles F. Hall a year before E. M. Hall came into the firm. In order to make E. M. Hall liable on that note it must have been proved that in some way he assumed the obligation created by it. Smith v. Millard, 77 Cal. 440, 19 Pac. Rep. 824; Lindl. Partn. (2d Amer. Ed.) marg. p. 205 et seq. Of this, however, there is no evidence whatever. I think the nonsuit was properly granted, (Stoddart v. Van Dyke, 12 Cal. 438,) and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

98 Cal. 327

GUTZEIT v. PENNIE et al. (No. 15,004.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE.

A judgment for plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mortgage on land, where the mortgagor has parted with his interest in the land, and the only relief sought by plaintiff is the sale of the mortgaged premises, is valid against the grantees of the mortgagor, though the personal representative of the mortgagor is not a party to the action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; W. G. Lorigan, Judge.

Action originally brought by Henry Gutzeit against James C. Pennie, administrator, etc., Bozo Radovich, and Henry Plageman. During the pendency of the action James C. Pennie was removed as administrator, and the action was continued against the other defendants. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendants Radovich and Plageman appeal. Affirmed.

Eugene N. Deuprey, W. L. Gill, and J. R. Patton, for appellants. S. A. Barker and S. F. Leib, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The only question in the case at bar requiring special notice is this: Is a judgment foreclosing a mortgage valid as against grantees of the mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers although a representative of the deceased mortgagor is not before the court at the time of the judgment, the plaintiff waiving all recourse against any of the property of the estate except the mortgaged premises? The facts necessary to be stated are these: On the 25th of July, 1884, W. C. Palmer, since deceased, executed the note and mortgage sued on to one Nils Sjöholm, and immediately thereafter conveyed the mortgaged premises, and all his right, title, and interest therein, to his wife, Mattie A. Palmer, who was made a defendant in this action. Sjöholm assigned the note and mortgage to plaintiff. Bozo Radovich and Henry Plageman claim an interest in the mortgaged premises under said Mattie A. Palmer, and they were also made defendants, and appeared and defended. The mortgagor, W. C. Palmer, died before the commencement of the suit, and one Pennie had been appointed and was acting as the administrator of said Palmer, deceased. Pennie, as such administrator, was made a party defendant; but before the trial and judgment said Pennie was removed as administrator, and no other administrator was appointed. The plaintiff, in his complaint, waived all recourse against any other property of the estate; and the decree of foreclosure was entered without the estate of Palmer being before the court in any other way than as above stated. Judgment and decree was rendered for plaintiff, and the said Radovich and Plageman appealed; and they contend that the decree of foreclosure was invalid, and must be reversed, because the estate of Palmer was not before the court at the time it was entered. This position is not tenable. However the heirs of Palmer may be affected by the judgment, his personal representative was not a necessary party to the suit, so far as the appellants herein are concerned. No one interested in the estate of said Palmer appeals. The appellants are merely subsequent grantees of Mattie A. Palmer, to whom the deceased conveyed all his interest in the mortgaged premises. The point made by appellants has several times been decided by this court against their contention. In Society v. Herbert, 53 Cal. 378, the court say: "The mortgagor, Burke, having conveyed the mortgaged premises by deed to his wife, and having thenceforth no interest in the property, his personal representative was not a necessary party to the foreclosure suit." In Schadt v. Heppe, 45 Cal. 437, where the mortgaged premises, after the death of the mortgagor, had been set apart to the widow, the court say: "For the purposes of a mere foreclosure, therefore, the administrator was no longer a necessary * * * party to the action. Nothing being claimed against the estate, it was no matter of concern to him whether the mortgage should be foreclosed or not." See, also, Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 124; also, Story, Eq. Pl. 197; Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 326, and notes. We do not think that either of the other points made by appellants demand special notice. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: DE HAVEN, J.; FITZGERALD, J.

98 Cal. 311

GREGORY v. BLANCHARD. (No. 18,070.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

MANDAMUS—JURISDICTION—AID TO EXECUTION OF LOWER COURT—TOLL ROADS—FRANCHISE—LEVY AND SALE.

1. The superior court is not authorized to issue a writ of mandate in aid of the execution of a judgment rendered in a justice's court.

2. The franchise of an individual to collect tolls on a toll road, and his rights and privileges therein, cannot be levied on and sold under execution, there being no statutory provision therefor, though Civil Code, § 388, provides that, for the satisfaction of a judgment against a corporation authorized to receive tolls, its franchise, and all its rights and privileges, may be levied on and sold under execution, in the same manner as any other property.

3. A provision in a judgment, and in the writ thereon, requiring defendant "to deliver the possession of said franchise to collect the tolls on the * * * toll road," and "the possession of all property necessary for the exercise of the powers and the receipt of the proceeds" thereof, is not susceptible of execution, and too indefinite to constitute a determination of the rights of the parties.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mono county; W. H. Virden, Judge.

Application by S. W. Gregory for a writ of mandamus to compel H. C. Blanchard to let petitioner into the possession of the franchise to collect toll on the Bodie & State Line Toll Road, and of all property necessary for the exercise of the powers and the receipts of the proceeds thereof. From an order granting the writ, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Charles C. Hayes, for appellant. F. P. Willard, (Richard S. Miner, of counsel,) for respondent.

HARRISON, J. A judgment was rendered against the appellant in the justice's court of Bodie township, in Mono county, on the 31st day of December, 1888, and an execution thereon was issued out of said court on the 27th day of November, 1891. By virtue of this execution the sheriff of Mono county, on the 30th day of November, 1891, levied upon "the franchise to collect toll, and all the rights and privileges thereunder, or belonging thereto, of the said H. C. Blanchard," on a certain toll road, and on the 14th of January, 1892, sold the same to the plaintiff, and executed to him a certificate of such sale. Thereupon the plaintiff notified the defendant of such purchase, and demanded to be let into the possession thereof, and upon his refusal made an application to the superior court of Mono county for a writ of mandamus commanding him "to let the petitioner, S. W. Gregory, immediately into the possession of said franchise, and of all property necessary for the exercise of the powers and the receipts of the proceeds thereof." After a hearing upon the application the court granted the writ, and the defendant has appealed to this court.

1. The superior court was not authorized to issue a writ of mandate in aid of the execution of the judgment rendered in the justice's court. For the purpose of a complete execution of a judgment, resort should be had to the court in which the judgment was rendered. If for that purpose it is necessary to place the purchaser in possession of the property sold by virtue of the judgment, as in the case of a purchaser at a sale under the foreclosure of a mortgage, any writ or process for that purpose must be issued by the court in which the action is pending. If resort is had to another tribunal for the purpose of enforcing the rights acquired by such purchase, it must be by an action in that court, and not by a summary proceeding. The purchaser of property at a sheriff's sale has no greater right to a writ of mandamus to compel its delivery by the judgment debtor than has a purchaser at any other sale. The plaintiff herein has no greater right to the writ by reason of the fact that he bought the franchise at a sale under an execution upon the judgment than he would have had if he had bought it at public auction, or upon a direct dealing with the defendant, and, upon a demand therefor, had been refused its possession. The writ is never employed for the purpose of trying title to property, whether the property be the right to land, or to an office, or to a franchise.

2. A franchise is merely a privilege, and is not the subject of sale and transfer without the consent of the authority by which it was granted. "The persons to whom such privileges are granted hold them in personal trust, and therefore they cannot be transferred by forced sale, (Munroe v. Thomas, 5 Cal. 470; Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 286,) nor by voluntary assignment, unless by the permission of government, and even then, if a special mode of transfer is pointed out, that mode must be followed," (Wood v. Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 487; People v. Duncan, 41 Cal. 509.) In the absence of a statutory provision therefor, a franchise cannot be levied on or sold under execution. Freem. Ex'ns, § 179; Stewart v. Jones, 40 Mo. 140; Gue v. Canal Co., 24 How. 263. Whenever such a provision exists, the extent as well as the mode of such levy and sale are limited thereby. Section 388 of the Civil Code provides that, "for the satisfaction of any judgment against a corporation authorized to receive tolls, its franchise, and all the rights and privileges thereof, may be levied upon and sold under execution, in the same manner, and with like effect, as any other property." This provision is, by its terms, limited to a sale of the franchise held by a "corporation" against whom the judgment has been rendered, and we have not been referred to any other provision of the Codes suspending or changing the rule declared in the above cases. Section 523 of the Civil Code, referred to by the respondent, makes only the provisions of the title in which that section is found applicable to individuals as well as corporations, and has no reference to the transfer of a franchise. That title (title 5, pt. 4) purports to define certain rights and obligations of the owners of wagon roads; and this section makes those rights and obligations applicable to all such owners, whether they be individuals or corporations. Similar provisions are found with reference to the titles in which they are placed in sections 511, 531, Civil Code. Neither of these sections, however, or of the titles in which they are found, refers in any respect to the assignment or other disposition of the franchise therein referred to. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff did not, by virtue of the sale under the execution, acquire the right to exercise the franchise held by the defendant.

3. Inasmuch as a franchise is only a privilege, and is not capable of manual delivery, the provision in the judgment, as well as in the writ thereon, requiring the defendant "to deliver the possession of said franchise to collect the tolls on the Bodie and State Line Toll Road," is not susceptible of execution.

The further provision therein, that he deliver to the plaintiff "the possession of all property necessary for the exercise of the powers and the receipt of the proceeds of said franchise," is too indefinite to constitute a determination of the rights of the parties. The court should determine what property is "necessary" for the exercise of those powers, and not leave it to the arbitrament of the defendant. The plaintiff, moreover, did not claim to have purchased at the execution sale anything but the "franchise," with its rights and privileges, and, even if the franchise had been subject to a sale under that judgment, the purchaser in any suitable proceeding for its recovery must have been limited to that which he had purchased; but, if it could be established that the rights and privileges incident to the franchise included any articles of property, such property should have been designated in the judgment, and not left to be the matter of a future investigation upon the question whether the writ had been complied with. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

3 Cal. Unrep. 879

HIBBERD v. MELLVILLE. (No. 15,001.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

HIGHWAYS—DEDICATION—EVIDENCE.

1. In an action for trespass, where defendant alleges that the land entered on was a public highway, it appeared that the line of the road for nearly its whole length had been changed from time to time by the owner of the land; that during all the time the public had been permitted to use the road it had been barred by several gates, to be opened and closed by persons passing over it; that for 12 years no work had been done or public money expended thereon by the road overseers; and it did not appear that there had been before that time. Held, that the road had not become a highway by dedication.

2. A question, "For the last 10 or 15 years, how many people have used that road or traveled it?"—was properly excluded, since its answer would not have shown an intention of the owners to dedicate the road to the public.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. Hibberd against Charles A. Mellville to recover damages for an alleged trespass. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Cooper, for appellant. T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This is an action to recover damages for trespasses alleged to have been committed by the defendant in entering upon the land of plaintiff, riding over and across the same, and cutting down a gate thereon. The defense set up in the answer and relied upon at the trial was that the gate cut down was upon a road which had become a public highway by dedication, and user by the public for more than 15 years. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff had been damaged by the trespasses complained of in the sum of $325, but the court found that she was damaged by the cutting of the gate only, and in the sum of $5, for which sum, with costs, judgment was given in her favor. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and has appealed from the judgment and order.

The principal question presented for decision is as to whether or not there was a public highway extending across plaintiff's land, and over which the defendant had a right to travel. It is not pretended that the road was ever laid out or established as a highway under the provisions of the Code, and the only question is, had it been dedicated by the owners of the land, and accepted and used by the public, so as to constitute it a public highway? The findings of the court are very full, covering all the probative as well as the ultimate facts, and so far as they need be stated are as follows: "That the plaintiff and her predecessors in title have permitted the defendant and his neighbors * * * to pass over the land of plaintiff. * * * While they have been so traveling over the said land of the plaintiff for more than twenty years without any express understanding between the public and the plaintiff or her predecessors, the route has never been confined to one place for any considerable length of time, and has always been under the control of the plaintiff and her predecessors in title, and has been changed by her and them at their pleasure; and there have during all of said time been gates kept up by the plaintiff and her said predecessors on the route or routes traveled across the land of plaintiff, and at the time of the commencement of this action, and on the said 22d day of April, 1891, (the day the gate was cut down by defendant,) there were, and are now, five gates maintained by the plaintiff on the said route so traveled by the defendant and others. From said dwelling of plaintiff to the north side of her lands she has a lane, across which she has three of said gates, and between two of them the lane widens out, so that plaintiff uses the space between them as a corral, and what travel passes over said road passes through said corral. That plaintiff and none of her predecessors in interest in said land ever intended to dedicate a right of way to the public across said land, and they, or neither of them, have ever so dedicated to the public such right of way. That the road claimed by the defendant to be a public highway across the lands of the plaintiff has never been accepted by the public as a public road, and the road overseers of the road district in which the said lands are situated have not for a period of eleven years next prior to the trial of this action, or at any other time, caused any work to be done thereon, or any public money to be expended thereon, and have never in any way exercised any acts of control or jurisdiction over the same." Appellant contends that these findings were not justified by the evidence, and this is the main point relied on for a reversal.

"The vital principle of dedication is the intention to dedicate, and whenever this is unequivocally manifested, the dedication, so far as the owner of the soil is concerned, has been made. * * * If accepted and used by the public in the manner intended, the dedication is complete, precluding the owner and all claiming in his right from asserting any ownership inconsistent with such use. Dedication, therefore, is a conclusion of fact to be drawn by the jury from the circumstances of each particular case." But "dedication is never to be presumed without evidence of an unequivocal intention on the part of the owner." Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 648; Quinn v. Anderson, 70 Cal. 456, 11 Pac. Rep. 746; Ang. & D. Highw. §§ 142, 147. In this case it was clearly proved that the line of the road for nearly its whole length had been changed from time to time by the owners of the land, and that for about 12 years before the trial no work had ever been done on the road by the road overseers, and no public money expended thereon. As to whether any work had been done on it by the overseers, or money expended before that, the evidence is silent. And speaking of this road and its changes, Robinson, one of plaintiff's predecessors in interest, testified: "As long as they did not interfere with me they could use it. If it had interfered with me I would have raised an objection. I did not intend at the time to part with the title to the land, or give a permanent road there." It was also proved without contradiction that during all the time the owners had permitted the road to be used by the public it had been barred by several gates to be opened and closed by persons passing over it; and, as said in Quinn v. Anderson, supra, this, in the absence of a statute providing that such gates may be maintained on a public highway, "has always been considered strong evidence in support of a mere license to the public to pass over the designated way, and in rebuttal of a dedication to public use." See, also, Smithers v. Fitch, 82 Cal. 153, 22 Pac. Rep. 935, where this language is quoted and approved. Looking, then, at all the evidence in the light of the authorities above quoted, we do not think it can be said that the owners of the land ever manifested an unequivocal intention to dedicate the road in question to the use of the public; and it must follow, therefore, that the judgment cannot be reversed for want of evidence to justify the findings.

The point is also made that the court erred in sustaining objections to certain evidence offered by defendant, but we see no material error in the rulings complained of. Counsel asked the witness Adams: "Since 1876, for the last ten or fifteen years, how many people have used that road, or traveled it?" The question was clearly immaterial, for the reason that the answer, if given, would not have shown or tended to show an intention on the part of the owners to dedicate the road to the public. Besides, it had already appeared in the testimony that the number was "three or four families." Counsel also asked the witness Ledford: "Did Mr. Kelso tell you, in that conversation about raising money to make a better grade from his house to the county road, that the citizens helped him?" One of the grounds of objection to the question was that it was leading, and that it was so is evident. The objection was therefore properly sustained. We advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

98 Cal. 235

PEOPLE v. SANSOME. (No. 20,948.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1893.)

CRIMINAL LAW—REMARKS OF COUNSEL—PRELIMINARY HEARING—NEW TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where on a criminal trial the prosecuting attorney improperly comments on defendant's failure to testify, and after a verdict against defendant he moves for a new trial, and fails to make the misconduct of the prosecuting attorney one of the grounds of such motion, the objection thereto will be regarded as waived.

2. After the submission of a criminal case to the jury, the officer in charge took the jury-men to an hotel for dinner, and two of them drank intoxicating liquor, but not sufficient to affect them. Held not to constitute misconduct which would warrant the reversal of the judgment.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. § 105, providing that a justice of the peace may hold the court of any other justice of the peace in the same county, where a complaint for burglary is filed with a justice of the peace, any other justice of the peace in the same county has jurisdiction to hear the preliminary examination thereon, if requested so to do by the justice before whom the complaint was filed.

4. Where the jury has been fully instructed as to the weight and effect of the testimony of an accomplice, it is not error to refuse to charge that, if defendant committed the crime, a certain witness was an accomplice, as this would be a charge "with respect to matters of fact."

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

One Sansome was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Chamberlain, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart and A. K. Robinson, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of burglary, committed at Iowa Hill, in the county of Placer, on the 10th day of May, 1891. He was arraigned, and pleaded not guilty to the charge. At the trial, witnesses were called and examined by the people and by defendant, but the latter did not take the stand and testify in his own behalf. At the conclusion of the evidence the district attorney made an opening argument to the jury, speaking about 30 minutes. Defendant's counsel then declined to make any argument at all. The court thereupon instructed the jury, and they retired to deliberate upon their verdict. Within a reasonable time the jury returned and presented to the court their verdict, finding the defendant guilty of burglary in the second degree. Time was then fixed for pronouncing judgment, and, when that time arrived, counsel for defendant moved the court in arrest of judgment and for a new trial, but upon what grounds does not appear from the record, except that in support thereof he presented, read, and filed five affidavits to show misconduct on the part of certain jurors. The time for passing sentence was then, on motion of the district attorney, postponed to give him time to procure and file counter affidavits, and, within the time allowed, counter affidavits of nine of the jurors were filed. The court subsequently denied both motions, and stated, as one of the reasons for doing so, that at the time the motion for new trial was submitted the court called upon and requested the attorney for defendant to designate and draw the attention of the court to any errors alleged to have been committed, and to the particulars wherein he claimed that the evidence was insufficient, and that the request was not complied with, or attempted to be complied with. The court then entered judgment that the defendant be punished by being imprisoned in the state prison for the term of nine years. From this judgment, and the order denying his motion for new trial and his motion in arrest of judgment, the defendant appeals. The principal grounds presented and relied upon for a reversal of the judgment are as follows:

1. While the district attorney was making his opening speech to the jury, he remarked: "True, we have not shown that defendant was in the immediate vicinity of Iowa Hill about the time of the burglary, but Mr. Conroy has testified that he believes he saw this defendant in the town of Auburn on the 30th of April, 1891, ten days before the alleged burglary; and I say to you, gentlemen, the defendant was there, and committed this offense, or why does he not go upon the stand like a man, and tell where he was?" The record shows that the attorney for defendant at once "interrupted the district attorney, and objected to any argument being made upon the failure of defendant to take the stand and testify in his own behalf;" and the "court thereupon instructed the district attorney that this was not a legitimate argument, and instructed the jury that they were not to consider the remarks made by the district attorney upon the failure of the defendant to take the stand in determining their verdict;" and "the district attorney thereupon, in a few words, proceeded to assert to the jury that the ruling of the court was correct; and the court thereupon suggested that there be no further reference, whether favorable or unfavorable, to the matter, and the district attorney did not further refer to it." It is argued that these remarks of the district attorney, notwithstanding the ruling of the court, constituted "error prejudicial to the defendant, and sufficient to reverse the judgment." The Penal Code provides that a defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself, and "his neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him, nor be used against him, on the trial or proceeding." Section 1323. It is clear, in view of this plain provision of the statute, that the district attorney had no right to make the remarks complained of, and it is to be regretted that prosecuting officers, in their zeal to procure convictions, so often forget that they are under as much obligation to give one accused of crime a fair and impartial trial as is the judge upon the bench. But while the remarks were not legitimate or proper argument, still it hardly seems possible that intelligent jurors could have been influenced by them to the prejudice of the defendant, after they were instructed by the court that they were not to consider them in making up their verdict. Conceding, however, that they constituted error, still it was an error that could only be availed of by a motion for a new trial; and the question is, can the defendant, upon the record presented here, be heard to complain of that error? A motion for new trial in a criminal case may be, and ordinarily is, made viva voce, and if it is denied, and the defendant wishes to appeal, a bill of exceptions may then be prepared, setting forth so much of the evidence and the rulings as are relied upon to show error; but in making such a motion the grounds relied upon should be stated, and the attention of the court called to them at the time, and the bill of exceptions should show that such was the fact, or the order will not be reviewed on appeal. This is a well-settled rule, where a motion in arrest of judgment has been made and denied in a criminal case, (People v. Dick, 37 Cal. 277,) and also where a motion for nonsuit has been made and denied in a civil case, (Coffey v. Greenfield, 62 Cal. 602; Shain v. Forbes, 82 Cal. 577, 23 Pac. Rep. 198;) and we think it equally applicable to a motion for new trial in a criminal case. Here the bill of exceptions fails entirely to show that the alleged error under review was stated as a ground of the motion for new trial, or that the attention of the court below was in any way called to it, and it must therefore be regarded as waived.

2. The affidavits read by defendant at the time his motion for new trial was made were to the effect that the case was submitted to the jury at about 11:50 A. M., and that at 1:10 P. M., before they had agreed upon a verdict, they were taken by the officer in charge of them to an hotel for dinner, and that, before eating, four of the jurors took drinks of whisky at the bar of the hotel. In the counter affidavits two of the jurors admitted that, at the time and place named, they each "took one small drink of liquor," but denied that they were drunk or intoxicated or in any way affected thereby. The other two jurors named denied that they drank any intoxicating liquor at all, and each of the nine counter affidavits denied that any of the jurors appeared to be under the influence of liquor while the case was pending before them. It is argued that the admitted indulgence in intoxicating liquor by two of the jurors constituted misconduct on the part of the jury, sufficient to reverse the judgment. We do not think this position can be maintained. If the two jurors who drank a little liquor were not affected by it, and, in view of the conflicting affidavits and the action of the court below, it must be assumed that they were not, then it would seem that neither law nor sound reason would require the judgment to be reversed on this ground. People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 602, 26 Pac. Rep. 500.

3. When the defendant was called upon to plead to the information, he moved the court to set it aside upon the ground, among others, that he was examined and held to answer by a magistrate other than the one before whom the complaint was filed, and who issued the warrant for his arrest. The motion was denied, and an exception reserved. The record shows that the complaint was filed before J. F. Macey, a justice of the peace in and for township No. 7, in Placer county, and a warrant was then issued, and under it defendant was arrested and brought before the said justice; that a time was then fixed for the examination, and, at the time appointed, the defendant appeared in person and by his attorney, and the people by the district attorney; that Justice Macey then stated that he was too ill to proceed with the examination, and thereupon he substituted Amos Stevens, a justice of the peace of township No. 4, in said county, to act as committing magistrate in his place; that defendant objected to any one hearing the preliminary examination except the one before whom the complaint was sworn to, and that, notwithstanding the objection, Justice Stevens proceeded to hold the examination, and, after hearing the evidence, held the defendant to answer before the superior court of the county. It is argued that there is no provision of law authorizing one justice suddenly to call in another justice from a different township to continue or conclude a preliminary examination, and hence that the examination should have been set aside. A sufficient answer to this point is found in section 105 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "A justice of the peace of any township may hold the court of any other justice of the peace of the same county, at his request, and while so acting shall be vested with the power of the justice for whom he so holds court," etc.

4. It is urged that it was plain, from the testimony of the witness Kelley, that he was an accomplice of the defendant, if defendant committed the crime alleged, and the court should have so instructed the jury. But the court fully and properly instructed the jury as to the weight and effect of the testimony of an accomplice, and to have gone further, and told them that Kelley was an accomplice, would have been clearly a charge "with respect to matters of fact," which is not allowed.

5. It is also urged that there was no evidence to connect the defendant with the commission of the burglary charged, and that, if any crime was proven against him, it was that of having in his possession stolen property, for which offense, only, he should have been tried. But there was proof that a burglary was committed, and a large number of watches and other things, subsequently found in the possession of defendant, were stolen. The instructions to the jury upon this and all the other points were quite full and clear, and as favorable to defendant as he could properly claim they should be. The judgment cannot, therefore, be reversed on this ground.

6. Numerous other errors are specified in the bill of exceptions, but they are not particularly referred to in the brief, though it is said none of them are waived, and "all are expressly insisted upon." We fail to find any material error in the rulings referred to which would justify a reversal. The order denying the motion in arrest of judgment was not appealable, and it therefore cannot be considered here. People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 100, 3 Pac. Rep. 401; People v. Henry, 77 Cal. 445, 19 Pac. Rep. 830. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

98 Cal. 323

BEER v. CLIFTON et al. (No. 15,108.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1893.)

PROMISSORY NOTE—INDORSER AFTER MATURITY—LIABILITY—DEMAND AND NOTICE OF NONPAYMENT.

An indorser of overdue notes is not liable thereon in the absence of demand on the maker within a reasonable time after the indorsement and notice of nonpayment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Action by Jennie Beer against E. Clifton, D. H. Weill, and G. E. White on a promissory note, in which defendants pleaded as an offset plaintiff's liability to defendants Clifton and Weill on certain notes sold and indorsed to them. Plaintiff had judgment for part of her claim only, and, from an order granting her motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James W. Oates, for appellants. T. L. Carothers, Crittenden Thornton, and F. H. Merzbach, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to recover $3,500, with interest, costs, etc., upon a promissory note made by defendants to plaintiff on March 29, 1890, and payable July 1, 1890. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for only $1,240.24, and plaintiff moved for a new trial upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, that the verdict is against law, and errors of law occurring at the trial, etc. The court granted a motion for a new trial, stating in its order that the motion was granted because "the first and third instructions offered by defendants' attorneys, and given, are erroneous, and must have been misleading to the jury." The defendants appeal from the order granting a new trial.

The facts necessary to be stated are these: In March, 1889, the plaintiff was, and for several years before that had been, engaged in the business of keeping a country store at Covelo, in Mendocino county. The defendant Weill is her nephew, and for five years prior to the time last stated had been her principal clerk and assistant in said business. On March 18, 1889, she sold said business, together with certain real estate, live stock, and choses in action, to the defendants Weill and Clifton. In payment for the property sold, in addition to certain cash payments and a mortgage for $1,500 on the real property sold, they gave her seven promissory notes for $500 each, payable monthly in succession, the first becoming due on November 1, 1889. These notes not having been paid as they became due, and plaintiff becoming anxious for their payment, a little over a year afterwards, to wit, on March 29, 1890, the said notes were taken up by the giving of a note for $3,500, signed by said defendants Weill and Clifton, and also by the defendant George E. White, which is the note sued on in this present action. Among the choses in action sold by plaintiff to Weill and Clifton on said March 18, 1889, were 11 promissory notes which had been given by different parties to plaintiff, and all of said 11 notes were at the time of said sale overdue. These notes were at the time of said sale, and being overdue as aforesaid, indorsed by said plaintiff; that is, she wrote her name on the back of said notes. Plaintiff testified that she delivered said notes to Weill and Clifton at the time of the sale without indorsement; and that about two weeks afterwards Weill requested her to write her name on the back, saying that he could not collect the notes unless she did so, and that she would not have indorsed them if she had known that such indorsement would make her liable in any way for or upon said notes, and that she sold them absolutely, and without any intention of being personally liable thereon. But Weill and Clifton contended, and introduced evidence to the point, that according to the terms of the sale they were to collect whatever could be collected on said 11 notes, and that whatever they could not collect after the exercise of due diligence was to be credited upon and deducted from the amount due from them to plaintiff upon the said 7 promissory notes which they had given her, and consequently to be credited upon the $3,500 note sued on, which was given in lieu of said 7 notes, as aforesaid. Under these circumstances, it was, of course, material and important for the jury, in view of the conflicting evidence, to know what, in law, was the liability which attached to plaintiff upon said 11 notes from the mere fact of her indorsement of them; and upon this point the said instructions, No. 1 and No. 3, are as follows: No. 1: "If you find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff indorsed the eleven promissory notes by writing her name on the back of each, and that nothing was said by any of the parties when she did so about her liability thereon by reason of indorsing them, then she is liable, and you will so find by your verdict, unless defendants failed to collect the notes, or any of them, through their own negligence." No. 3: "The indorsement of the eleven promissory notes by the plaintiff is admitted, and by that indorsement she made herself liable for their payment. Indorsing them as she did makes her liable, unless there was at the time a contract between her and Clifton and Weill that she was not to be held liable thereon. The burden of showing such a contract is upon her, and she must prove it to your satisfaction, from all the evidence, before you would be justified in finding that she is not liable." It is clear, as the court below decided when granting a new trial, that these instructions were erroneous. They are somewhat conflicting, but they announce the doctrine that the indorser of a note after its maturity is absolutely liable thereon without regard to any right to have a demand made upon the maker and notice to the indorser on nonpayment. This is not the law. The indorser of an overdue note has as much right to demand and notice as the indorser of a note before maturity, the only difference being as to the time when the demand and notice must be made and given. This has always been the law and is stated in all the text-books. In Daniel, Neg. Inst. par. 611, the rule is stated in these words: "When a negotiable instrument is indorsed after maturity, payment must be demanded of the payer within a reasonable time, and notice in the event of a refusal, given to the indorser, in order to charge him, it being regarded as equivalent to one payable on demand." This court has had occasion to so announce the law, e. g. Beebe v. Brooks, 12 Cal. 310; Thompson v. Williams, 14 Cal. 162; Keyes v. Fenstermaker, 24 Cal. 329. See, also, McKewer v. Kirtland, 33 Iowa, 351; Colt v. Barnard, 18 Pick. 260; Swartz v. Redfield, 13 Kan. 550; Light v. Kingsbury, 50 Mo. 331; Ecfert v. Des Coudres, 12 Amer. Dec. 609, and note; Simpson v. Griffin, 9 Johns. 131; Leavitt v. Putnam, 3 N. Y. 494. At common law the rule is that, in case of indorsement after maturity, the demand and notice must be within a reasonable time; reasonable time depending upon the facts in each particular case. Section 3135 of our Civil Code provides that the apparent maturity of a promissory note payable at sight or on demand is, if it bear interest, one year after its date; or, if it does not bear interest, six months after its date. According to the above quotation from Daniel, an instrument indorsed after maturity "is equivalent to one payable on demand." In Chit. Bills, 215, it is said that indorsing a promissory note after maturity is "equivalent to the act of drawing a bill at sight;" and in Goodwin v. Davenport, 47 Me. 118, the court say: "It is equivalent to a note on demand, dated at the time of the transfer, so far as demand and notice are concerned." If these authorities be correct, then it might be safely said that, in case of indorsement of an overdue note, demand and notice should be made and given at least within the time specified in said section 3135 for demand and notice in case of a note payable on demand; and there might be cases where the demand and notice should be within a much shorter time than that mentioned in said section of the Code. In the case at bar, however, the question of reasonable time does not arise, for the jury were erroneously instructed that plaintiff was not entitled to any demand and notice whatever. In fact, no notice was given until July 8, 1890, and the notice did not state the date of the demand. For the reasons above given, the order granting a new trial should be affirmed, for we see nothing in appellants' point that said erroneous instructions were not prejudicial to plaintiff.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

33 Cal. 45

BENSON v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 13,290.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 22, 1893.)

Amendment of previous order.

For report of decision on appeal, see 32 Pac. Rep. 809.

PER CURIAM. That portion of the order made herein March 30, 1893, which affirms the judgment of the court below, having been inadvertently made, inasmuch as there was no appeal from the judgment pending in this court, it is hereby directed that the said order be amended so that it will read: "The order denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial is affirmed."

5 Cal. Unrep. 750

LINK v. JARVIS. (No. 18,045.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1893.)

AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS — FORM OF ACTION — LIMITATION — INTEREST.

1. Applications to amend pleadings are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and should be allowed at any stage of the trial, when necessary for the purposes of justice.

2. A complaint which sets out that defendant received plaintiff's money under an agreement which he afterwards refused to perform, and asks damages for the breach, does not state a cause of action sounding in tort.

3. Where money is given under an agreement that the person who receives it will do certain things, and he fails to perform his agreement, the statute of limitations will not commence to run against the claim of the person who gave money until there is a refusal to perform the contract.

4. Where an amended complaint is filed which does not state a new cause of action, nor bring in new parties, it relates back to the filing of the original complaint, and the statute of limitations ceases to run against plaintiff's claim at the date of filing the original complaint.

5. In an action to recover money given under an agreement that the person who received it would do certain things, where such person has refused to perform his agreement he is chargeable with interest on the sum received from the time of such refusal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by Sylvester Link against Dustin Jarvis to recover money given under an agreement that defendant would do certain things for plaintiff. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and from such judgment, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Kile and M. De Vries, for appellant. Loutitt, Woods & Lezinsky, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. This action was commenced on July 12, 1889, to recover the sum of $600, money had and received by the defendant for the use and benefit of the plaintiff. Issue was joined, and when the case came on for trial, on the objection of the defendant, the testimony on the part of the plaintiff was excluded by the court, as not admissible under the complaint. The plaintiff thereupon asked leave to file an amended complaint, and, over the objection of defendant, his application was granted, on condition that he pay all costs of the action up to the time of filing the amendment. The costs were paid, and amended complaint was filed September 18, 1890. The new complaint alleged that in October, 1887, the plaintiff gave to the defendant the sum of $600, under an agreement that defendant would do for the plaintiff certain specified things; that plaintiff afterwards demanded of defendant that he perform his agreement, but that he then refused, and has ever since refused, to do so, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $600, for which he asked judgment, with interest. The defendant answered to the complaint, and, among other defenses interposed, pleaded in bar of the action subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case was tried by the court, and all the findings were in favor of the plaintiff. Among other things, the court found that the plaintiff made frequent demands of the defendant that he comply with his agreement, but that he continuously neglected and delayed so to do, and on October 1, 1888, finally and absolutely refused so to do, and that the action was not barred by the section of the Code pleaded. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum prayed for, with interest thereon from October 1, 1888. From the judgment so entered, and an order denying his motion for new trial, the defendant appeals.

The first point made for a reversal is that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff to amend his complaint, after having proceeded to trial upon the original complaint and answer. There was no error in the ruling complained of. The Code provides that courts may allow amendments to pleadings "upon such terms as may be just," (section 473, Code Civil Proc.) and the rule is well settled that applications to amend pleadings are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and should be allowed at any stage of the trial, when necessary for the purposes of justice. Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 387; Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 519, 17 Pac. Rep. 673; Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. Rep. 786.

The next point is that the court erred in allowing the amended complaint to be filed, because the action was thereby changed from one ex contractu to one in tort. It is true that such an amendment would not be allowable, but we do not think the amended complaint states a cause of action sounding in tort. It simply sets out that defendant received the plaintiff's money under an agreement, which he afterwards refused to perform, and asks damages for the breach. This no more sounds in tort than did the action for money had and received.

The point is also made that the court erred in finding that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations; and it is argued that the statute began to run when defendant received the money, and continued to run until the amended complaint was filed, and that as more than two years elapsed between those dates, the action was barred. But the statute did not begin to run until the defendant refused to perform his agreement, and that, as found by the court, was less than two years before the amendment was filed. Besides, an amended complaint relates back to the commencement of the action, if a new cause of action is not pleaded, and new parties are not brought in; and in such case the statute ceases to run when the original complaint is filed. Barber v. Reynolds, 33 Cal. 497; Allen v. Marshall, 34 Cal. 165; Lorenzana v. Camarillo, 45 Cal. 125.

Another point urged for a reversal is that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff interest on the amount claimed from October 1, 1888. But it was proved by the plaintiff, and found by the court, that plaintiff made frequent demands upon the defendant that he perform his agreement, and that defendant put him off, from time to time, until October 1, 1888, and then absolutely refused to perform it. If this was so, plaintiff was certainly entitled to interest from that date.

Finally, it is insisted that the findings were not justified by the evidence. It was admitted by defendant that he received $600 of the plaintiff's money, but claimed that the money was paid to him upon conditions which justified him in retaining it. It would subserve no useful purpose to set out the testimony, but, in our opinion, the judgment cannot be disturbed on this ground.

The appeal from the judgment was taken more than a year after judgment was entered, and should be dismissed, but the order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

98 Cal. 342

TOWLE v. PACIFIC IMP. CO. (No. 14,425.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 23, 1893.)

NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE — GENERAL CHARACTER FOR CARE.

In an action for injuries inflicted by defendant's servant in negligently causing or permitting a team of horses to run over plaintiff, evidence that such servant is a prudent and first-class driver, and that he had never been guilty of any carelessness during the four years he had been in defendant's employ, is inadmissible to show that he exercised ordinary care when the accident occurred, since that question must be determined on evidence of what took place at the time. Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 468, and Ficken v. Jones, 28 Cal. 618, distinguished.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; F. E. Spencer, Judge.

Action by George W. Towle against the Pacific Improvement Company for the death of plaintiff's wife. From a judgment in defendant's favor, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

D. M. Delmas, for appellant. S. F. Geil and H. V. Morehouse, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for the death of his wife, alleged to have been caused by the defendant's servant, by negligently causing or permitting a team of horses to run over her. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

At the trial the defendant was allowed, over plaintiff's objection and exception, to introduce evidence that the defendant's driver, who was in charge of the team, was a good, first-class driver, careful in handling horses, and that during the four years he had been in the employ of defendant he had never been guilty of any mismanagement or carelessness in the conduct or care of the team. Whether or not this evidence was admissible is the only question presented for decision. The law as to the admissibility of such evidence in cases of similar character is thus stated in Deering on Negligence, (section 407): "Whether the act or omission of the defendant is actionable negligence is to be determined by the character of the act or omission, and not by the defendant's character for care and caution. Evidence that the defendant is a careful, prudent, and cautious man is inadmissible to negative his want of ordinary care. Upon the question of the negligence of the engineer at the time of the collision of two trains, evidence of the general incapacity of the engineer, or of his being subject to fits, is immaterial. The reputation of the driver of a horse and carriage is inadmissible in an action by the owner of another horse killed by a collision therewith." And in Thompson on Negligence (volume 2, p. 804) it is said: "Evidence that the plaintiff was commonly a careful and skillful driver is not admissible to show that when the accident occurred he was in the exercise of due care. The principle is that the question whether a person was at a given time in the exercise of due care is to be resolved upon evidence of what took place at the time, and not upon evidence of the general character he may sustain." The rule as above declared is supported by numerous decisions in other states, and we think it should be followed in this state. See Tenney v. Tuttle, 1 Allen, 185; McDonald v. Savoy, 110 Mass. 49; McCarty v. Leary, 118 Mass. 509; Jacobs v. Duke, 1 E. D. Smith, 271; Hays v. Millar, 77 Pa. St. 238; Dunham v. Rackliff, 71 Me. 345; Chase v. Railroad Co., 77 Me. 62; Morris v. Town of East Haven, 41 Conn. 252; Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92, 42 N. W. Rep. 534; Boick v. Bissell, 80 Mich. 260, 45 N. W. Rep. 55; Propsom v. Leatham, 80 Wis. 608, 50 N. W. Rep. 586; Railroad Co. v. Roach, 64 Ga. 635; Railroad Co. v. Newton, 85 Ga. 517, 11 S. E. Rep. 776. But, whatever may be the rule elsewhere as to the admissibility of such evidence, it is claimed for respondent that under the decisions of the supreme court of this state it must be held admissible here; and in support of this position counsel cite Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 468, and Ficken v. Jones, 28 Cal. 618.

The first of these cases was an action to recover damages for injuries to the plaintiff by the overturning of a stage coach in which he was a passenger. The law applicable in such cases to carriers of passengers for hire was declared, and, among other things, it was said that to maintain the action it was only necessary for the plaintiff to prove the overturning of the coach and the injuries caused thereby; that the presumption then arose that the overturning occurred through the negligence of the coachman, and that, in order to rebut this presumption, the defendant must show that the overturning was the result of inevitable casualty, or of some cause which human care and foresight could not prevent; and that, when the pleadings center all the negligence upon the driver, the law requires the defendant to show that he was not only a careful and skillful driver, but that he used that care and skill to the best of his ability on the occasion in question.

The second case cited was an action to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligent driving of cattle through the streets of San Francisco. It was held that the driving of cattle through the streets of a city was a highly dangerous business, by which the lives and limbs of human beings were placed in peril, and that, therefore, "the law requires of the proprietors and managers of that business the utmost care and diligence;" that when it was shown that a person lawfully in the street was injured by the cattle so driven, without any fault on his part, a case of prima facie negligence was made out, and the burden was cast on the defendant of showing that he was not at fault. The court said: "As it was incumbent on the defendants, in order to overcome the prima facie case made out against them, to establish that the injury to the plaintiff did not result from want of due care and skill on their part, they should have been permitted to have shown in the first place the important fact that Jones was competent, careful, and skillful in the conduct and management of that kind of business. * * * The rule of law governing in the case under consideration rests for its foundation on the same principle as that by which the duties and liabilities of the carriers of passengers are governed. In the one case the proprietor of the business must exercise the care, circumspection, and skill which is characteristic of cautious persons where the lives and limbs of human beings are liable to injury from exposure to the fury of excited cattle, and in the other the carrier is to convey his passenger safely and securely; and, because of the value of human life and limbs, the law requires the utmost degree of care and skill in the preparation and management of the means of conveyance, and will hold the proprietor liable for the slightest negligence. * * * In such case it is well settled to be competent for and incumbent on the defendant to show that those in charge of and conducting the business were persons of good and careful habits and competent skill, and also whatever else is necessary to establish the fact of the utmost care and prudence on the defendant's part."

It is evident from the above brief review of those cases that they are not in point here. They state correctly the law applicable to cases where the utmost care is required, and where the defendant is held liable for injuries resulting from the slightest negligence. The rule declared, however, does not apply to cases where the defendant can be held liable only for a failure to exercise ordinary care, and this distinction seems to be recognized by the cases cited. Here the driver of defendant's team was only required to exercise ordinary care in the management of the team, and the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that at the time his wife was injured the driver was not exercising such care, but was negligent, and that her injuries were the direct result of that negligence. This proof, if made, could only be overcome by counter proof showing that the driver was not negligent, but was exercising ordinary care in the management of the team at that time. It follows, in our opinion, that the evidence objected to was inadmissible, and that the court erred in receiving it. We advise, therefore, that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

98 Cal. 346

SULLIVAN v. ZEINER. (No. 14,149.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1893.)

ADJOINING OWNERS — LATERAL SUPPORT — PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT.

1. Civil Code, § 832, which provides that each coterminous owner is entitled to the lateral and subjacent support which his land receives from the adjoining land, subject to the right of the adjoining owner to make excavations for construction on using ordinary care to sustain the land of the other, and giving previous reasonable notice of his intention, is merely declaratory of the common law; and, while a coterminous owner has the right to the support of his soil in its natural state by that of his neighbor, such right does not extend to the support of any additional weight or structure he may place thereon.

2. Civil Code, § 1007, which provides that occupancy for the period prescribed by the statute of limitations confers a title by prescription, leaves the circumstances to be determined by the common law; and hence the erection of a building wholly on one's own land is not the basis of a prescriptive right to have it supported by the soil of the adjacent owner, since no injury is inflicted on the latter on which he could base an action to secure the removal of the building.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. Lawler, Judge.

Action by Francis J. Sullivan, executor of John Sullivan, deceased, against Wendelin Zeiner to restrain excavations on defendant's land, and for damages. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank J. Sullivan, for appellant. Arthur Rodgers, Wm. L. Rodgers, and W. H. Barrows, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Defendant demurred to plaintiff's complaint. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Judgment was thereupon entered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff and defendant own adjoining lots in the city of San Francisco; that on plaintiff's lot there is a building, erected 20 years ago, along the line between the two lots; that defendant commenced an excavation on his lot for the purpose of building thereon, and excavated up to the line of, and deeper than the foundation of, plaintiff's building, whereby it is left without the lateral and subjacent support to which it is entitled, etc., and prays judgment for damages and an injunction. The complaint also alleges that no "written notice" of defendant's intention to excavate was given, but no question is made here as to the sufficiency of the notice. There is no allegation in the complaint that defendant's excavation was so made that plaintiff's lot was left without sufficient lateral support if there had been no building thereon, but appellant relies solely upon the proposition that he has gained by prescription a right to the support of his building, whereby the duty is cast upon defendant of protecting it, when the excavation, in the absence of the building, would not have affected his ground. It is well settled at common law that coterminous owners have a natural right to the lateral support of each other's ground; or, to state it more exactly, that, while a coterminous owner has the right to excavate his own ground for any lawful purpose, he must do so in such manner that his neighbor's ground will not by its own weight, or through the action of the elements, fall into the excavation. Appellant contends that the amendment of section 832 of the Civil Code, made in 1874, has modified this rule. That section, as originally enacted, was taken from the proposed Civil Code of New York, and read as follows: "Each coterminous owner is entitled to the lateral and subjacent support which his land by nature received from the land of the other." This section was probably intended to be a statement of the common law, but it is capable of a widely different construction. If instead of the words "by nature" the words "in a state of nature," had been used, the meaning would have conformed to the common law; while the words used, if literally interpreted, would prevent either owner from diminishing the support which his soil in a state of nature gave to the other, and so make all excavations up to the dividing line unlawful. As amended in 1874, that section now reads: "Sec. 832. Each coterminal owner is entitled to the lateral and subjacent support which his land receives from the adjoining land, subject to the right of the owner of the adjoining land to make proper and usual excavations on the same for purposes of construction, on using ordinary care and skill and taking reasonable precautions to sustain the land of the other, and giving previous reasonable notice to the other of his intention to make such excavations."

In Aston v. Nolan, 63 Cal. 269, this section as it now stands was considered, and it was there held that it imposed no new duty upon one intending to excavate, unless it were the duty of giving reasonable notice of his intention; and as to what the law was prior to the enactment of the above section, the court, quoting from 2 Washb. Real Prop. 331, said: "Every one has so far the right to have his own soil sustained by that of his neighbor that the latter may not dig so near to the land of the former as to cause the same to fall into the excavation by its own natural weight. * * * But this right of a landowner to support his land against that of the adjacent owner does not, as before stated, extend to the support of any additional weight or structure that he may place thereon. If, therefore, a man erects a house on his own land so near the boundary thereof as to be injured by the adjacent owner excavating his land in a proper manner, and so as not to have caused the soil of the adjacent parcel to fall, if it had not been loaded with an additional weight, it would be damnum absque injuria,—a loss for which the person so excavating the land would not be responsible in damages." This case was cited and approved in Conboy v. Dickinson, 92 Cal. 602, 28 Pac. Rep. 809, where it was stipulated that the slide of plaintiffs' land into the excavation was not caused or assisted in any respect by plaintiffs' building. The jury were instructed that, in case they found for the plaintiffs, they were only entitled to recover for the damage done to the land, and not for damage to the house; and this instruction was approved. In neither of these cases was the question presented of an easement by prescription for the support of buildings; but, aside from that question, they settle the construction of section 832, Civil Code, and conclusively show that the omission of the words "by nature" from the original section did not, as contended by appellant, enlarge the right of lateral support as given by the common law. In Aston v. Nolan, supra, after quoting from Washburn on Real Property as above, the learned justice who wrote the opinion said: "It may be added, if the building has stood for five years (in this state) before the excavation, the person who has erected it has acquired a species of easement in his neighbor's land,—a right to the support of his building as well as soil. No such question as this last is presented in the case now before us." This expression of opinion, though not authority, is entitled to consideration. It was doubtless suggested by some of the many authorities which support that proposition, but without a consideration of analogous cases in this court which conclusively settle the question the other way.

Section 1007 of the Civil Code is as follows: "Occupancy for the period prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, as sufficient to bar an action for the recovery of the property, confers a title thereto, denominated a 'title by prescription,' which is sufficient against all." In Woodruff v. Mining Co., 9 Sawy. 513, 18 Fed. Rep. 753, it was said of this section: "The statute really does nothing but fix the time at which a title by prescription shall vest, which was not very definite at the common law, but leaves the circumstances which shall constitute prescription to be determined by the settled law of the land as it stood before the Code." See, also, Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 456, 458, 12 Pac. Rep. 491. The basis of a right or title by prescription was the fiction of presuming a grant from possession or use for a given time, now for the period required to bar an action for possession. But the possession or use, in order to create the presumption of a grant, must, under the Code as well as at common law, have been made under such circumstances that he whose property or right was affected could have prevented the possession or use, if no grant had in fact been made. This reference in section 1007, Civil Code, to the statute of limitations is significant, inasmuch as the latter statute is based upon the ability of the party to maintain an action, and excludes the time during which a disability to sue may have existed; but the personal ability to sue can surely not be more important, as an element in title by prescription, than the invasion of a right which gave a cause of action. The plaintiff, by the erection of his building wholly upon his own lot, invaded no right of defendant. He might place the foundation of his building upon the surface, or sink it any depth he desired, and in neither case could defendant object. No injury was inflicted upon him upon which he could base an action, and, if so, his failure to sue could create no right against him, or easement in or servitude upon his property. The case of Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal.

303, was upon different facts, but involved this precise question. There the waters from a spring upon defendant's land flowed upon plaintiff's land, and had been used and enjoyed for 15 years without interruption; and this, it was claimed, presumed the grant of an easement. The court said, (page 310:) "The presumption of the grant of an easement, when indulged, is because the conduct of the other party, in submitting to the use for so long a time without objection, cannot be accounted for on any other hypothesis. The acts done by the party claiming the benefit of the presumption, and his predecessors in interest, must, however, have been in themselves such as the other party, having the right to object to or complain of, did neither, but submitted to them without objection or challenge. * * * If they had no right to complain in the first instance, we are not driven to the presumption of the grant of an easement to account for why they did not complain." In Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 183, 22 Pac. Rep. 76, it was said: "The latter could not complain, and title by prescription cannot be acquired, unless the acts constituting the adverse use are of such a nature as to give a cause of action in favor of the person against whom the acts are performed;" citing Hanson v. McCue, supra. See, also, Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 595; Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 457-460, 12 Pac. Rep. 491. In Gilmore v. Driscoll, 122 Mass., at page 207, Gray, C. J., said: "It is difficult to see how the owner of a house can acquire by prescription a right to have it supported by the adjoining land, inasmuch as he does nothing upon, and has no use of, that land, which can be seen or known or interrupted or sued for by the owner thereof, and therefore no assent of the latter can be presumed to the acquirement of any right in his land by the former." It is true that case did not require the decision of that question, but the statement commends itself as based upon sound reason. The case of Mitchell v. Mayor, 49 Ga. 25, involved similar facts, and is directly in point. It is there said: "The fact that the user must be adverse must exist in every such case. If the use of the easement be ab initio legal or rightful, the title of the occupant is as good at the outset as it could be by the lapse of any length of time; but if it be the usurpation of the property of another under a claim of right, it then becomes adverse, for it is in hostility to the title and in derogation of the rights of the original owner. In such cases a grant or license or consent is presumed for the purpose of quieting the enjoyment or possession thus adversely held or used. The injured party, who may for such a long time sleep on his rights, cannot complain of this rule. He could have had redress any day during the twenty years. * * * His remedy was in his own hands. This right of the injured party is a cardinal fact which must exist, else all statutes of limitation and all rules of prescription or of presumption of license or grant would be but rules of spoliation or robbery." See, also, Napier v. Bulwinkle, 5 Rich. Law, 311.

As the principle involved in this appeal is conclusively settled in this state, a review of the authorities cited by appellant from other states and from the English reports becomes unnecessary. Whether there may not be cases arising upon special circumstances where a right, either original or prescriptive, of lateral support to buildings may exist without a grant, is not considered. The demurrer was properly sustained, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

98 Cal. 360

BRODER et al. v. CONKLIN et al. (No. 18,104.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1893.)
COLLATERAL ATTACK—JUDGMENT—ENTRY AFTER EXPIRATION OF JUDGE'S TERM.

1. To uphold an order of the judge of a superior court transferring a cause to the superior court of another county on the ground of his disqualification, the supreme court will assume, when such order is collaterally attacked, not only that the judge was disqualified, but that the court to which the transfer was made was the next nearest court in which like objection did not exist, as required by Code Civil Proc. § 398.

2. A conclusion of law that plaintiff is entitled to recover, filed by a judge, together with his findings of fact, followed by a direction to counsel to prepare an interlocutory judgment directing an accounting, is insufficient to serve as the basis for a final judgment; and hence it is not competent for the judge to file such judgment after the expiration of his term, since his judicial power then ceases.

3. A judgment does not become effective until filed with the clerk, and is of no effect if filed after the expiration of the judge's term, no matter when prepared and signed.

4. In an action to establish a trust in property in plaintiff's favor, on the ground of defendant's fraud, and for an accounting of the moneys that had been received by defendant under such trust, a conclusion of law that plaintiff is entitled to recover, followed by a direction to counsel to prepare an interlocutory judgment directing an accounting, is not equivalent to a rendition of judgment by the judge, so as to authorize the clerk, in the performance of his ministerial duties, to enter up judgment after the expiration of the judge's term.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mono county; W. H. Virden, Judge.

Action by Broder and others against Conklin and others to establish a trust in plaintiffs' favor in certain property, on the ground of defendants' fraud, and for an accounting of the moneys that had been received by defendants under such trust. From an order striking from the files, and setting aside, a judgment in plaintiffs' favor, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Richard S. Miner, for appellants. P. Reddy, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. A trial of the issues herein was had in Inyo county before Hon. J. F. Rooney, judge of the superior court of Tuolumne county, who had been directed by the governor to try the cause on account of the disqualification of the superior judge of Inyo county; and on the 26th of September, 1890, the judge filed his findings of fact and conclusions of law, in which he found "that the plaintiffs herein are entitled to judgment," and added, as a closing direction: "Counsel will prepare an interlocutory judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, directing a reference to a commissioner, to be appointed by the court, to take an account between the parties." Between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock in the afternoon of January 5, 1891, the clerk received through the mail a document signed by Judge Rooney, which purported to be a formal judgment in the case, and which the clerk afterwards entered in the judgment book of Inyo county. Judge Rooney's term of office expired on the first Monday of January, 1891, and the newly-elected judge of Inyo county had assumed his office on the morning of that day. On the 9th of February, 1891, the defendants Conklin gave notice to the plaintiffs that on the 9th day of March, 1891, they would move the court "to strike from the files, and to strike out and cancel and set aside," the aforesaid judgment, upon the grounds that the trial of the cause had not been completed, and that at the time the said document was filed the term of office of Judge Rooney had expired. The judge of Inyo county deeming himself disqualified to act in the matter, the cause was thereafter transferred by him to Mono county for trial, and, the above motion having been brought on for hearing in the superior court of Mono county, an order was made on the 13th of May, 1892, granting the aforesaid motion of the defendants. From this order the plaintiffs have appealed.

1. Upon this appeal the regularity of the proceedings in transferring the cause to Mono county cannot be considered. If any condition of facts could exist under which the transfer would be authorized, the action of the court in making the transfer will be upheld, whenever collaterally attacked. Section 170, Code Civil Proc., prohibits a judge from sitting or acting in any action in which he may be disqualified, except that he may transfer the action to some other court; and section 398, Code Civil Proc., provides that if an action is "pending" in a court, and the judge thereof is disqualified from acting, it must be transferred to the nearest court where the like objection does not exist. We may assume, upon this appeal, not only that the judge of Inyo county was disqualified from acting in the cause, but also that the superior court of Mono county was the nearest court in which the like objection did not exist. If for any reason the order of transfer was erroneous, it could have been reviewed by a direct appeal therefrom.

2. Upon the expiration of his term of office the judicial power of Judge Rooney ceased, and it was not competent for him thereafter to do any act necessary to complete the trial of any cause which then remained unfinished. Mace v. O'Reilly, 70 Cal. 231, 11 Pac. Rep. 721; Connolly v. Ashworth, (No. 15,053,) 33 Pac. Rep. 60. The trial of the issues of fact in an action is not completed until the decision upon those issues has been given by the court, (Hastings v. Hastings, 31 Cal. 95;) and this decision must not only be given in writing, but it must also be filed with the clerk. If not filed until after the expiration of the term of office, it cannot form the basis of a judgment. Connolly v. Ashworth, supra. Section 633, Code Civil Proc., requires the court, in giving the decision, to state the facts found and the conclusions of law separately, and provides that, after the decision has been given, judgment must be entered "accordingly." The judgment which is to be entered "upon the decision" is the sentence of the court in conformity with the conclusions of law, and must find its basis therein. Chamberlain v. Dempsey, 14 Abb. Pr. 241, and 15 Abb. Pr. 1; Loeschigk v. Addison, 19 Abb. Pr. 169; Belmont v. Ponvert, 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 693. The conclusions of law resulting from the facts found form the basis of the judgment, and until they have been made the decision of the case has not been given. The findings of fact are in the nature of a special verdict, and the conclusions of law to be drawn therefrom need not be made at the same time with the findings themselves, but may be reserved by the court for argument or further consideration, as is provided in the case of a special verdict in section 628, Code Civil Proc., and, if made at the same time with the findings of fact, they may be changed by the court at any time prior to the entry of judgment. Condee v. Barton, 62 Cal. 1; Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 489, 26 Pac. Rep. 1074. Inasmuch, therefore, as the judgment is to be entered "upon the decision," and must find its basis in the conclusions of law, which are to be a part of the decision, it follows that the trial of the action is not completed until a decision has been given which states the conclusions of law upon which the judgment is to rest. It sufficiently appears in the present case that at the time when Judge Rooney filed his findings of fact, and certain conclusions of law, he did not himself consider that the action had been fully tried. His conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment was qualified by the next clause, in which he directed counsel to prepare an interlocutory judgment for the purpose of directing a referee to take an account between the parties. It is manifest from this direction that the character and extent of the judgment was not to be determined by him until after such account had been taken. The conclusions of law which he had then made were insufficient as the basis of the judgment which he evidently intended to render, and it still remained for him to make further conclusions of law as the basis of his judgment, or to incorporate them in the order for a reference and an accounting which he had directed to be prepared.

3. The judgment which was prepared and signed by Judge Rooney could not be effective as a judgment until it was filed with the clerk. Until then it was but a purpose in the breast of the judge, which could be changed as he might determine. Whether he deposited it in the post office to be transmitted to the clerk, or himself carried it in person to the office of the clerk, is immaterial. Until it was actually filed it did not become a part of the records in the case, and consequently was not a judgment.

4. Upon the findings that were filed in September the clerk was not authorized to enter any judgment. It is unquestionably true that when a judgment has been rendered the subsequent act of the clerk in entering it is only ministerial, and may be done by him, even after the expiration of the term of office of the judge by whom the judgment was rendered. If the judgment which was entered herein had been in fact "rendered" by Judge Rooney prior to January 5th, it would not have become nugatory by the failure of the clerk to enter it until after that date. The signature of the judge is not necessary to the validity of the judgment, (Crim v. Kessing, supra,) but it is of service in determining what has been adjudged, and in its absence there must be something of record, as, for example, the minutes of the court, or the conclusions of law stated in the findings, by which the clerk can be guided in the performance of his ministerial duties, and from which the actual judgment of the court can be ascertained, and by which it can also be determined whether the clerk, while acting in a ministerial capacity, has correctly entered such judgment. There are many judgments whose entry involves nothing more than clerical or ministerial duties, such as a judgment for the recovery of specific real or personal property, or a fixed amount of damages, or one which is rendered generally,—that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover his demand from the defendant. In such cases the mere order for judgment in favor of the defendant or the plaintiff is all that is needed for the clerk; but in many other actions, and especially in those of an equitable nature, the form of the judgment, and the character of relief that is to be granted, are as much matters for the exercise of judicial power as is the determination of the party in whose favor judgment is to be rendered.

Aside from the fact that it is evident from the findings themselves that it was not the opinion of the judge who tried the present case that the trial was completed, a consideration of the character of the action will show that the clerk was neither authorized to enter the judgment which he did enter herein, nor to enter any judgment whatever, upon the findings themselves, at the time they were filed, or at any time thereafter. The action is for the purpose of declaring that the defendant Conklin had been guilty of certain fraudulent acts in the matter of an insolvent's estate, and of declaring that he held certain property in trust for the benefit of the plaintiffs, and for an accounting of the moneys that had been received by him under such trust. Although the court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment, there still remained many matters to be adjudicated by it before there could be a final determination of the rights of the parties. It was necessary to determine the principles upon which the accounting should be had; whether the property that had been conveyed to Conklin should be sold or not; and, if it was to be sold, whether the sale should be had before the accounting was taken, as well as the manner and terms of such sale; whether the sale should be absolute when made by the referee, or should only become so after a confirmation by the court; whether the plaintiffs should have a direct money judgment against Conklin for the amount of their claims, or whether their recovery should be limited to the proceeds of the property received by him; whether those claims should bear interest, and, if so, at what rate; and whether, in the accounting which was to be given by Conklin, he should be charged interest upon the moneys he had received; whether the plaintiff John Broder was entitled to any judgment against Conklin, or was estopped therefrom. These and many other subjects involved in the action demanded judicial determination, and could not be determined by the clerk, and until they were so determined the ministerial act of the clerk in entering the judgment did not arise. The order is affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

98 Cal. 366

CARR v. EEL RIVER & E. R. CO. (No. 14,998.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 30, 1893.)
CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS—ALIGHTING FROM TRAIN —CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. It is the duty of a railroad company to stop its train at a station a reasonable time, so that passengers may get on and off its cars with safety to themselves; and, if it does not do so, it is guilty of negligence in starting the train without notice that it is about to start.

2. It is not contributory negligence per se for a passenger to jump from a train which had failed to stop at the station a sufficient length of time to enable her to alight therefrom, and which had traveled less than 100 feet when she jumped, but the question should be left to the determination of the jury.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Sarah J. Carr against the Eel River & Eureka Railroad Company for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while alighting from one of defendant's trains. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor, and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Horace L. Smith, for appellant. Ford & Burnell and Chamberlain & Wheeler, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Respondent recovered $5,000 damages for personal injuries, claimed to have been sustained by her through the negligence of appellant, and this appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial. The first count of the complaint relies for a recovery upon the theory that plaintiff, a passenger, was not allowed a reasonable time to alight from the train at Rhonerville, her point of destination, but that appellant negligently and carelessly started the train while she was upon the steps of the coach, preparatory to alighting, and thereby threw her to the ground, causing permanent injuries. The second count of the complaint is based upon the allegations that appellant negligently carried its coach, in which she was seated, beyond the platform for the use of passengers alighting from the cars at said station, and stopped the said coach at an unsuitable place for passengers to alight therefrom; that respondent attempted to alight, but appellant failed to allow her a reasonable time within which to do so, and while she was upon the steps of the coach, attempting to leave the train, the coach was started, she was thrown to the ground, and the injuries received. The answer denies negligence upon the part of the railroad company, and alleges contributory negligence upon the part of the respondent, in this: that she attempted to alight from the train while it was in motion, and after it had started from the station. There was some evidence offered by appellant tending to support its contention in this regard. It is claimed that the law is not properly declared in instructions Nos. 6 and 7, which read as follows: "(6) It is the duty of the carrier of passengers to stop the train a sufficient length of time to enable passengers to alight in safety, and to hold the train still during such time. It is negligence for the carrier to start the train without warning passengers after making such stop, and before the passenger has had a reasonable time to leave the car. Should the carrier start the train while the passenger is on the steps of the car, in the act of alighting, without giving sufficient time to alight, and without giving notice to the passenger, whereby the passenger is thrown from the car and injured, then the carrier is guilty of negligence, and is responsible in damages for all the injuries caused the passenger by such negligent act. (7) Should you find from the evidence that on the 4th day of May, 1890, plaintiff was a passenger on the train of defendant from Alton to Rhonerville station; that the train was stopped on its arrival at Rhonerville station for passengers to leave the cars; that immediately upon the stoppage of the train the plaintiff left her seat in the car, and went out upon the platform or steps of the car for the purpose of alighting; that the defendant started the train before the plaintiff had time to leave the car, and while she was on the steps of the car in the act of leaving it, without giving her notice or warning; and that the plaintiff was thrown from the car by its starting, and injured, without fault on her part,—then, in that event, I charge you that your verdict must be for the plaintiff for the damages sustained by her, not exceeding the amount claimed in the complaint." The principle of law involved in the foregoing instructions is the same, and, considering them together, it is clearly stated and entirely correct. An elementary principle governing the conduct of common carriers of the character of appellant is contained in these charges of the court, and that is, it is the duty of a railroad company to stop its train at a station a reasonable time in order that passengers may get on and off its cars with safety to themselves. The court incorporates an additional principle into the instruction, to the effect that, if such common carrier does not stop its train for a reasonable length of time in order that passengers may get on and off, it is guilty of negligence in starting the train without notice or warning that it is about to start. It is first declared that the railroad company must stop at each station a reasonable time, and, if injury results to passengers owing to its failure so to do, then it is guilty of negligence. Such being the law,—and the soundness of the proposition cannot be doubted,—the additional element incorporated into the charge of the court becomes self-evident as an unquestioned legal principle. The law demands of a common carrier of passengers for hire that he observe the utmost caution, characteristic of a very careful, prudent man. The carrier is bound to use the greatest care and diligence in the transportation of passengers, consistent with the carrying on of his business, and, in view of these demands of the law, appellant has no just cause of complaint against this portion of the court's charge.

Upon the part of the appellant evidence was introduced to the effect that respondent jumped from the train while it was in motion, and it is now contended that if such was the fact, it was negligence per se upon her part, and the court should have instructed the jury to that effect. Conceding that respondent alighted from the train while in motion, there was some evidence in the case tending to show that the train did not stop at the station a sufficient length of time to enable passengers to alight with safety; that the respondent was upon the lower step of the coach, preparatory to alighting, when the train started, and that the train had traveled a distance of less than 100 feet when she jumped, conceding that she did jump. No evidence is disclosed by the record as to the rate of speed the train was traveling at that moment, and upon this state of facts the court gave the jury the following instruction: "Ordinarily a passenger would be held not to be justified in getting off the train while it is in motion, except at his own risk. Unless the train is moving very slowly, and the circumstances are specially favorable, it would be deemed prima facie negligence. It is not necessarily so, however, and, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff stepped from the defendant's train while in motion, you are to determine the question of negligence on her part from all the evidence and circumstances in the case. If you believe from the evidence that the defendant's train did not stop a reasonable time to allow her to get off, and started while she was in the act of alighting, and that she jumped from the steps of the car while the train was leaving the station, and in motion, and under such circumstances that an ordinarily cautious, careful, and prudent person would not have apprehended danger therefrom, then you will find for the plaintiff; but if you find from the evidence that sufficient time was not allowed her to get off the car, and that she jumped from the steps of the car while the train was leaving the station, and in motion, and under such circumstances that an ordinarily cautious, careful, and prudent person would have apprehended danger therefrom, then it was such an act of carelessness as would relieve the defendant from the responsibility otherwise resting upon it, and your verdict will be for the defendant." The legal principle enunciated in this instruction is attacked as not sound; appellant's position being that the act of a passenger in jumping from a moving train is negligence per se, with the exception that by the act of the carrier the passenger has been placed between two dangers, or that some situation was created by the carrier which interfered with his free agency, and created in his mind a confidence that the attempt to leave the moving train could be made in safety. There is nothing in the record involving the question of the exercise of an immediate judgment upon the part of the respondent as to the choice of one of two impending dangers, and therefore we eliminate that element from the case.

The remaining exception stated by appellant to the general rule upon which he relies is not made plain to us by counsel; neither do we find it recognized in the books. Appellant's claims in this regard are drawn from the facts of certain cases, where the passenger has been injured in alighting from a train at the suggestion of the brakeman or conductor. Such was the case of Filer v. Railroad Co., 49 N. Y. 47; but that case and others, which as to the facts are found in company, do not recognize the rule of negligence per se by reason of alighting from or boarding a moving train, and do not base their respective decisions upon an exception to such rule by reason of the advice or suggestion of one of the employees of the company. A passenger's act in jumping from a moving train may be grossly negligent, and thereby release the carrier from all liability, notwithstanding it was done at the suggestion or upon the assurance of safety by the employee. The employee's advice at the moment is in no sense conclusive upon the passenger as to his negligence or nonnegligence in jumping from the train. Like every other circumstance surrounding the transaction, it casts some light upon the scene, and thereby aids the court, according to the power and brilliancy of its light in each particular case, to determine what a careful, prudent man would have done, placed in the position of the unfortunate passenger. This is all that is decided in the Filer Case, and in no sense does the doctrine there declared form an exception to any general principle found in the law of negligence. The earlier cases in many instances recognize the principle of negligence per se in alighting from a moving train, but modern authority to a great extent has supplanted that doctrine with broader views upon the question. In this case the court carefully and fairly stated to the jurors what in law would constitute "negligence" and "contributory negligence" upon the part of the respondent, and with that law in their possession remanded them to the jury room to find the facts, and apply the law to the facts. Under the conditions surrounding respondent immediately prior to the injury, and to which we have already adverted, conceding the company's claims that respondent jumped from a moving train, still we think the case without question justified the instructions of which complaint is now made. No trial court would be authorized to grant a nonsuit upon the facts, and such being the case the instruction was properly given. Volume 2 of the American and English Encyclopedia of Law (page 762) says: "When a passenger, on having been set down or taken up at the station to or from which the railroad has contracted to carry him, is injured in the attempt to board or leave a moving train, the railway is liable if the person injured in getting on or off the train did not incur a danger obviously apparent to the mind of a reasonable man." In the Filer Case the court supports the foregoing doctrine as follows: "That there was more hazard in leaving a car while in motion, although moving ever so slowly, than when it is at rest, is self-evident; but whether it is imprudent and careless to make the attempt depends upon circumstances; and where a party, by the wrongful act of another, has been placed in circumstances calling for an election between leaving the cars or submitting to an inconvenience and a further wrong, it is a proper question for a jury whether it was a prudent and ordinarily careful act, or whether it was a rash and reckless exposure of the person to peril and hazard." In the well-considered case of Johnson v. Railroad Co., 70 Pa. St. 357, the trial court indorsed the principle of negligence per se, and the supreme court said: "Instead, therefore, of the rule laid down by the learned judge, he should have left it to the jury to say, under all the circumstances in evidence, whether the danger of boarding the train when in motion was so apparent as to have made it the duty of the plaintiff to desist from the attempt." To the same effect is Railroad Co. v. Crunk, 119 Ind. 542, 21 N. E. Rep. 31, where the party jumped from a train moving at the rate of 4½ miles per hour, and that was held not to be negligence per se. See, also, Banking Co. v. Miles, 88 Ala. 256, 6 South. Rep. 696; Nichols v. Railway Co., 68 Iowa, 732, 28 N. W. Rep. 44; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 123 Ind. 422, 23 N. E. Rep. 973. Among other cases relied upon to support appellant's position is Jewell v. Railway Co., 54 Wis. 610, 12 N. W. Rep. 83. That case is opposed to the views we have expressed and to the authorities we have cited. It does not state the better doctrine, and many of the decisions from other courts upon which it relies for support are not in line with it upon the facts. We notice no other matters in the record demanding our attention. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 352

PEOPLE v. WESSEL. (No. 20,958.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 25, 1893.)

RAPE—INFORMATION—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—NEW TRIAL.

1. An information for rape need not allege that defendant was a male, or over the age of 14 years, or, if under that age, that he possessed physical ability, as required by Pen Code, § 262, to commit the offense, since defendant's want of ability to commit the crime is a matter of defense.

2. On a prosecution for rape on a child 11 years old, where defendant has read her testimony given before the committing magistrate to contradict her evidence at the trial, she may be recalled to explain the discrepancies.

3. An instruction that, "while it is the law that the testimony of the prosecutrix should be carefully scanned, still this does not mean that such evidence is never sufficient to convict; and if you believe the prosecutrix it is your duty to render a verdict accordingly,"—is not equivalent to telling the jury that they should convict if they believe the prosecutrix, regardless of whether her testimony is sufficient to establish the offense, but only means that the offense may be proven by the testimony of the prosecutrix.

4. In a criminal case, where defendant's motion for a new trial is denied, and judgment is pronounced, his application for leave to amend the motion, made nearly a year later, is properly denied, since no motion for a new trial is pending, and there is nothing to amend.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCann, Judge.

Frederick Wessel, Jr., was convicted of rape, and appeals. Affirmed.

L. F. Smith and P. B. Tully, for appellant. Carl E. Lindsay, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. The defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, and sentenced to the penitentiary for 10 years.

The first point made is that the court erred in overruling defendant's demurrer to the information on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The information charges rape upon the person of a female child under the age of 14 years, but does not state that the defendant was a male, or over the age of 14 years, or, if under that age, that he possessed physical ability, as required by section 262 of the Penal Code, to commit the offense. This is not necessary. If the defendant was incapable of committing the offense, such fact may be shown in defense; but the averment that he was capable is implied in the charge that he willfully and feloniously committed the act. People v. Ah Yek, 29 Cal. 576; Com. v. Sugland, 4 Gray, 7; Com. v. Sullivan, 6 Gray, 479; Com. v. Scannel, 11 Cush. 548.

It is next contended that the court erred in overruling defendant's objections to certain testimony. To contradict the testimony of the prosecutrix, who was a child of 11 years, the defense read her testimony before the committing magistrate, in which it was claimed that she had made statements inconsistent with her evidence on the trial. Thereupon the prosecution recalled the prosecutrix, and asked her to explain the discrepancies. This course was too plainly proper, and of too common practice, to justify the presentation of the question here. The court instructed the jury as follows: "While it is the law that the testimony of the prosecutrix should be carefully scanned, still this does not mean that such evidence is never sufficient to convict. If you believe the prosecutrix, it is your duty to render a verdict accordingly." It is contended that this is telling the jury that they may act on the testimony if they believe it, although it may not be sufficient in substance, though true, to establish the offense. I cannot understand the instruction as equivalent to telling the jury that they should convict if they believe the prosecutrix. It is simply saying that if they believe it they should act upon it as establishing the facts proved by it; that is, that the offense may be proven by the testimony of the prosecutrix. The jury was fully instructed as to the elements of the crime. Defendant copied from Ram on Facts a long statement as to the testimony of children, and asked the court to give it as an instruction. To have given it would have been clearly erroneous, and is inhibited by section 19, art. 6, of the constitution.

It is next argued that the testimony of the prosecutrix, if true, fails to show that there was sexual penetration. The child was naturally averse to calling some things by their names, and the prosecuting attorney was considerate, but the testimony is not of doubtful import on this point.

The testimony was ample as to the identity of the defendant. On this subject the witness made some rather inconsistent and unintelligible statements, but that was for the jury.

On the 28th day of August, 1891, the defendant submitted a motion for a new trial, which was then denied, and the court on the same day proceeded to pronounce judgment. On the 25th of June, 1892, the defendant gave notice that he would ask leave to amend his motion for a new trial by adding the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and he served certain affidavits showing the nature of the alleged newly-discovered evidence. The defendant at that time had no motion for a new trial pending. There was, therefore, nothing to amend. It was too late to institute such motion. Section 1182, Pen. Code.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

same, should be payable to another person, as his interest might appear. The lessee surrendered the property to the owner, and the person to whom the loss was made payable notified the agent of the insurance company of the surrender by the lessee, and was informed by the agent that no change in the policy was necessary because of the same. Held, that the insurance company thereby waived a provision in the policy that the same should be void if, without the consent of the company indorsed thereon, there should be any change in the title or possession of the property.

2. Such a policy further provided that false swearing in the proofs of a loss would avoid the same; and the insurance company, with notice that the assured had parted with his interest in the property insured, insisted that he should make the proofs of loss. In the sworn proofs the assured was stated to be the owner of the property, and the loss was thereupon adjusted, and the agent of the company authorized to make a draft for the amount of the loss to the order of the person to whom, by the terms of the policy, the loss was payable. Held, that the company could not afterwards avoid liability by claiming that the assured swore falsely as to the ownership of the property.

3. Under such a policy the person to whom the loss is made payable may maintain an action in his own name for the amount of the loss, where the value of his interest in the property exceeds such amount.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the West Coast Lumber Company against the State Investment & Insurance Company to recover the amount of a loss under a fire insurance policy. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fisher Ames, for appellant. Haven & Haven, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. Action upon a policy of insurance. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendant appeals. On the 18th day of June, 1888, the State Investment & Insurance Company, a corporation,—the defendant herein,—issued its policy of insurance against loss or damage by fire to one E. B. Newkirk, to the amount of $1,200, upon a three-story frame store building situate in San Diego, Cal.; loss, if any, payable to West Coast Lumber Company, as their interest may appear." The building insured was wholly destroyed by fire February 5, 1889. The complaint contains two counts: (1) A count, in the usual form, for nonpayment by defendant of $1,200 on account of the loss by fire of the insured property. (2) For the nonpayment of a bill of exchange drawn, by direction of defendant, upon itself, in the adjustment by defendant of the loss, in the sum of $1,200. The answer sets out a number of defenses to the action, among which may be enumerated: (1) The plaintiff had no interest in the property, except as a holder of a mechanic's lien thereon, which had been paid, satisfied, and discharged. (2) The fire occurred by reason of the neglect of the plaintiff and of E. B. Newkirk to use means practicable and necessary to preserve the insured property from damages. (3) That the interest of Newkirk in the property was a leasehold interest, and that on or about July 12, 1888, Newkirk and the plaintiff, without the knowledge or consent of defendant, and contrary to the provisions of the policy, conveyed and delivered the property to one E. V. Roberts, whereby the policy became void. (4) That after July 12, 1888, neither Newkirk nor plaintiff occupied or controlled the building, and that defendant had no knowledge that their insurable interest in the property, or occupancy or control thereof, had ceased, until on or about June 13, 1889, and that, at the time of giving the supposed draft or bill of exchange, defendant supposed they had an insurable interest therein. (5) That neither plaintiff nor Newkirk gave notice or proof of loss as required by the policy.

At the date of the policy of insurance, E. B. Newkirk was the lessee of the insured property, under one E. V. Roberts, from whom he held a written lease. The plaintiff herein had furnished lumber to Newkirk for the construction of the building on the property; had on the 20th day of March, 1888, filed its mechanic's lien upon the property as security for the sum due and owing for such lumber, amounting to something over $2,200; and had on the 11th day of June, 1888, brought suit to recover and to foreclose the mechanic's lien, against the lessee and owner of the premises. The application for insurance was made by plaintiff, the premium paid by it, and the policy was delivered to it. Subsequent to the issue of the policy, and on the 23d day of October, 1888, plaintiff obtained judgment on its claim for $2,332.58, and it was decreed that plaintiff had a lien therefor on the house and lot of land in question. After the fire the lot of land was sold by the sheriff under the decree of foreclosure, and purchased by the plaintiff. Its value was $1,000. On or about July 12, 1888, the lessee, E. B. Newkirk, surrendered his leasehold interest in the insured building, and the lot of land upon which it was situated, to his landlord, E. V. Roberts. There was evidence tending to show, and the court found, that thereafter, and prior to the loss, defendant's agent was informed by plaintiff that the leasehold interest had been surrendered by Newkirk, and was assured by the agent of defendant that no change in the policy of insurance was necessary by reason thereof. The court finds, also, that within 60 days after the fire, plaintiff, under the direction and instructions of the defendant, procured proofs of the loss to be made and signed by Newkirk, as required by the policy of insurance, and delivered the same to defendant. These proofs were retained by defendant. An examination of the circumstances of the destruction of the property was made by it, and of plaintiff's interest therein, and right to receive the amount of the insurance under the policy; and thereafter, by direction of defendant, its agent in San Diego made and accepted, and delivered to plaintiff, its bill of exchange, in writing, for $1,200. The court finds that there was no misapprehension on the part of defendant respecting the insurable interest of the plaintiff, or of Newkirk, at the time the bill of exchange was executed. The foregoing statement is not intended as a synopsis of all the issues, or of all the facts found by the court, but is deemed sufficient to an understanding of the principal objections made by appellant to the findings of the court, and the judgment based thereon. The contentions of appellant may be grouped under two heads: (1) Those relating to the forfeiture of the policy by the surrender of the leasehold interest of Newkirk to his landlord, and to his subsequent lack of an insurable interest in the property; and (2) those founded upon the alleged false and fraudulent statements of Newkirk in the proof of loss furnished the defendant. The insured building stood upon leased ground, which fact was stated in the policy.

Among the causes of forfeiture mentioned in the policy are the following: If the above-mentioned premises "become vacant and unoccupied, * * * or if the property be sold or transferred, or any change takes place in title or possession, whether by legal process or judicial decree, or voluntary transfer or conveyance, * * * without the consent of the company indorsed hereon, * * * then, and in every such case, this policy shall be void." The finding of the court is, as before stated, that on or about July 12, 1888, Newkirk surrendered his leasehold to his landlord, E. V. Roberts, and that thereafter, and prior to the fire, defendant's agent was informed of such fact by the agent of plaintiff, and he thereupon assured the agent of plaintiff that no change in the policy of insurance was necessary. This finding is supported by evidence. The witness Hickman, who had charge of plaintiff's business, testified that he informed Mr. Pierce, the agent of defendant, two or three days after the change, that the property had passed from Newkirk to the owner of the real estate, and says: "I told him the policy should be changed to show the difference in ownership, and he claimed it was just as well to let it stand as it was, as our [plaintiff's] interest in the building was not changed, and Newkirk might possibly reclaim his property." And again: "He [Pierce] assured me that the policy was just as good then as it ever was, and covered our interest in the building, just the same." The question involved under this head is not as to the binding effect of the clauses in the policy as to change of ownership or possession, or as to the original right of defendant to insist upon their observance, and in default thereof to uphold a forfeiture of the policy. The proposition is, rather, that, conceding all this, could and did the defendant waive their observance? Insurers may, and often do, by their acts and conduct, place themselves in such a position that they cannot avail themselves of a defense which they might otherwise interpose to an action upon their policies. When thus placed they are said to be estopped from availing themselves, or to have waived their right to avail themselves, of such a defense. If, as was the case here, a building is insured against loss by fire under a policy containing a proviso that it shall be or become void in case the building is or shall become vacant or unoccupied, when, as was well known to the insurer at the date of the policy, and subsequently, it was and remained unoccupied, the insurer will be presumed to have waived the clause as to occupancy. May on Insurance states it in this wise: "To deliver a policy with full knowledge of facts upon which its validity may be disputed, and then to insist upon these facts as ground of avoidance, is to attempt a fraud. This the courts will neither aid nor presume; and when the alternative is to find this or to find that, in accordance with honesty, there was an intent to waive the known ground of avoidance, they will choose the latter." May, Ins. § 497; Insurance Co. v. Ives, 56 Ill. 402. In many policies of insurance a proviso is inserted inhibiting any waiver of the conditions or requirements of the contract of insurance, except in some specified manner, by certain designated persons or officers, or excepting such waiver shall be in writing, and indorsed on the policy. Questions under provisions of this character arose in Shugart v. Insurance Co., 55 Cal. 408; Gladding v. Association, 66 Cal. 6, 4 Pac. Rep. 764; Enos v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 621, 8 Pac. Rep. 379. I find no such provision in the policy here. It does provide that certain things shall avoid it unless the consent of the company is indorsed thereon, or "without the written assent of the company indorsed thereon," or "without the consent of the company written thereon," etc.; but there is no clause expressly requiring a waiver of any of the rights of the company to be in writing, or to be assented to by any particular officer, or in any specified manner. Under such circumstances it must be assumed, as was said in Silverberg v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 41, 7 Pac. Rep. 38, quoting from Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222: "The powers of the agent are, prima facie, coextensive with the business intrusted to his care, and will not be narrowed by limitations not communicated to the person with whom he deals. An insurance company establishing a local agency must be held responsible to the parties with whom they transact business for the acts and declarations of the agent, within the scope of his employment, as if they proceeded from the principal." The agents of the defendant at San Diego, having the authority to so act, must be presumed, by their conduct and declarations, exercised and made with full knowledge of all the facts, to have waived, on behalf of defendant, its right to have the policy terminated by the surrender of the leasehold interest of Newkirk to his lessor. To hold otherwise would be to uphold practices which would lull the insured into fancied security; to prevent their seeking other and further insurance, until, when too late, they find themselves doomed to loss by confiding in the declarations, and following the advice, of those who were bound, by every consideration of justice and honesty, to speak the truth, or at least to stand mute. Defendant had a right to cancel its policy, or to treat it as forfeited by reason of the change of title and possession. It failed to do so when it should, if at all, and cannot now be permitted to profit at the expense of plaintiff, who would be a sufferer by the delay.

We proceed to consider the alleged false and fraudulent statement of Newkirk in the proofs of loss furnished defendant, and its effect, if any, on the rights of the latter. The policy provided that "in case of loss the assured shall give immediate notice thereof, and shall render to the company a particular account of said loss, under oath, stating the time, origin, and circumstances of the fire; occupancy of the building insured; * * * ownership of the property," etc. Also, the following clause: "False swearing, fraud, or attempt at fraud, on the part of the assured, shall cause a forfeiture of all claim under this policy." The false swearing and fraud that will forfeit a policy under a clause of this character is willful fraud or false swearing, and not the result of inadvertence or mistake. Insurance Co. v. Starr, 71 Tex. 733, 12 S. W. Rep. 45; May, Ins. § 447. It should be knowingly and willfully false, and intended to injure the company, (Erman v. Insurance Co., 35 La. Ann. 1095,) or, if not so intended, must relate to some matter material to the inquiry, concerning which the company has a right to know the truth, and the effect of which would have a bearing upon its liability, (Clafin v. Insurance Co., 110 U. S. 81, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507.)

1. Was Newkirk guilty of false swearing? The proofs of loss subscribed and sworn to by him are not set out in full in the record. So far as made to appear, the document is as follows: "The property so insured, on which this claim for loss is made, was owned at the time of the fire as follows: By assured, $5,000. Held in trust or commission for —, and no other person or persons have any title to or interest therein. * * * Witness my hand, at San Diego, this 15th day of April, A. D. 1889. [Signed] E. B. Newkirk. Sworn," etc., "before A. O. Morgan, Notary Public." The finding of the court is that Newkirk surrendered his lease in and to the property on or about July 12, 1888, and thenceforth we must presume he had no legal interest therein. In determining, however, whether or not he was guilty of false swearing in making the proofs of loss, we may look to all the evidence in the case; and, if such a state of facts is presented thereby as leaves a reasonable presumption of mistake or misapprehension on his part, such presumption should be indulged in preference to that of willful false swearing, founded upon the single fact that the legal title had passed from him. E. C. Hickman, who had charge of plaintiff's business in San Diego at the time, testified that, as soon as he heard of the transfer of the property by Newkirk, "I went to him about it, and he said it was only security for the back rent, and that as soon as he was able to pay the rent the building would be returned to him, and in the mean time, if Mrs. Roberts [the owner] was able to sell the buildings, Mr. Newkirk was to receive all the money received from the buildings that was in surplus of the rent in arrears." If this was true, Newkirk still had an equitable interest in the property, and, subject to the payment of back rent, was entitled to be restored to his legal status under the lease. An equitable interest in real property is an insurable interest. This much is deemed due to the memory of Newkirk, who was confined by sickness at the date of taking the proofs, and died three days later.

2. Conceding, however, all that the appellant claims in reference to the falsity of the proofs of loss, and it is not perceived that its case is improved. It is shown to have known where the title was vested. Knowing all this, and the interest of plaintiff in the property, and the amount and nature of such interest, it still insisted that Newkirk should make the proofs of loss, and its agent had them filled out in his office by his bookkeeper, and under his instructions, and then delivered them to plaintiff's agent for execution by Newkirk. It received such proofs on or about April 15, 1889, and, so far as appears, made no objection thereto for a long time thereafter. Its adjuster had, as early as February, 1889, furnished the officers of defendant at San Francisco with evidence of plaintiff's claim, and with information as to the state of the title. On the 3d of June thereafter, defendant instructed its agents at San Diego to draw on it for Newkirk's loss, and to send policy and proper receipts. Thereupon, defendant, by its agents, drew, and delivered to the plaintiff, its bill of exchange, as follows: "San Diego, Calif., June 3, 1889. At sight, pay to order of West Coast Lumber Co. twelve hundred, no 100ths, dollars, value received, and charge the same to account of Pierce & Daly. To Charles H. Cushing, Esq., Sec'y State Investment Insurance Co., San Francisco, Calif." This bill of exchange was presented for payment soon after June 3, 1889, and was not paid to plaintiff, because unaccompanied by a receipt from Newkirk; no other objection being made to such payment. A receipt from Newkirk was then sent for, but he had died in the mean time, as before stated. Thereafter, and about June 14, 1889, defendant refused to pay the draft. The court finds that there was no misapprehension of the facts respecting the insurable interest of plaintiff or of Newkirk, on the part of defendant, at the time the bill of exchange was executed. There was evidence to support the finding, and I am of opinion defendant had, with a full knowledge of all the facts, waived its right to set up the forfeitures relied upon as a defense to the action. The case made here is in many respects similar, but in some particulars a stronger one in favor of plaintiff than Silverberg v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 36, 7 Pac. Rep. 38. In that case the proofs had been taken by the defendant, and pronounced satisfactory, and a promise to pay, while here a bill of exchange, which presupposes a final adjustment of the loss and the furnishing of all needed proofs, had been given. Each, in its way, is a waiver of all causes of forfeiture known, or which ought to have been known, to defendant at the time. Murray v. Association, 90 Cal. 406, 27 Pac. Rep. 309; Wheaton v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 429, 18 Pac. Rep. 758; Stache v. Insurance Co., 49 Wis. 89, 5 N. W. Rep. 36; Smith v. Insurance Co., 62 N. Y. 85. In the case last cited it was said: "The time for investigation as to breaches of warranty is when a claim is made of payment; and if the company elects to pay the claim, or, what is equivalent, to adjust it by an independent contract, it cannot afterwards, in the absence of fraud, retract, or fall back upon an alleged breach of warranty."

The claim of plaintiff, after satisfying its lien to the extent of the value of the property purchased under foreclosure sale,—$1,000,—was in excess of the amount of the insurance; and, if it was entitled to recover at all, it was for the $1,200. Insurance Co. v. Stinson, 103 U. S. 25.

A receipt from Newkirk was not necessary to the security or discharge of defendant. A party entitled to maintain an action may, upon payment being made to him, give a valid discharge from the cause of action. Under our law an action may be maintained by the party in interest. The courts, with some exceptions, hold that the party to whom the loss is payable may sue. Cone v. Insurance Co., 60 N. Y. 619; Chamberlain v. Insurance Co., 55 N. H. 249. It is sufficient to say, under this head, that decisions to like effect are to be found emanating from the courts of Missouri, New Jersey, Illinois, and many other states. Where the proceeds of the policy are to go in part to the assured, and in part to others, the authorities are not uniform as to the proper plaintiff. The better opinion, however, is believed to be that all the beneficiaries may unite as plaintiffs in the action.

We have followed counsel for appellant through the several objections made by him as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and in his objections to the sufficiency of the facts to uphold the judgment, and it would have been more satisfactory to us, and perhaps to him, to have adopted the same course herein, but the necessity of confining our opinions within briefer limits than such method would have rendered necessary has prevented. The case seems to have been fairly tried, and wisely determined, and the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(98 Cal. xviii; 3 Cal. Unrep. 886)

McKENZIE v. GILMORE. (No. 18,067.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1893.)

HIGHWAYS—DEDICATION.

1. Defendant, for the purpose of changing the course of a highway, opened a road through his land, fenced it on both sides, allowed it to be used by the public, and to be worked and controlled by the public authorities. Held, that the road was dedicated to the public.

2. Where a person dedicates land for a public highway he cannot afterwards reclaim the same by showing that he was induced to make such dedication by the promise of a neighbor to give him the use of other lands, and that he had ceased to use such lands.

3. A petition asking that a highway be vacated was presented to a board of supervisors. Viewers were appointed, and in their report they recommended that the highway be made a private road, and that the owners of the land over which the road passed give a deed to the county for the private road. The board made an order adopting the report, but no deeds of the land were ever made. Held, that the order of the supervisors was not an abandonment of the highway.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; Edward Sweeney, Judge.

Action by Isaac McKenzie against John Gilmore to cause obstructions to be removed from a highway. Judgment was rendered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. P. Chipman, for appellant. L. V. Hitchcock and J. T. Matlock, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is an action brought by a road overseer to cause certain obstructions to be removed from the public highway. The cause was tried with the aid of a jury, which found for the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial.

There are numerous assignments of error in the record, but I think it necessary to notice but a few of them. The existence of the highway for a portion of the way was shown by proceedings before the board of superviors, which resulted in an order establishing the road. Between certain points this road had been changed by one Hickman, who opened a road across his land, fenced it on both sides, and allowed it to be used by the public, and to be worked and controlled by the public authorities. The old road had been fenced up. It was claimed that the new road was dedicated by Hickman to the public. Defendant was permitted to show, as rebutting the presumption which would arise from the above and other acts on the part of Hickman, that Hickman had opened the road to the public in consideration of the promise of one of his neighbors that he should have the use of certain other land if he would allow the new road to be opened, and that subsequently he had ceased to use the land given him as a consideration. This was clearly erroneous. The facts being assumed, there was a complete dedication to the public. The effect of the acts of Hickman, which show a dedication, cannot be qualified by evidence that he was induced to dedicate by his neighbor. If such proof could have any effect, it would strengthen the proof of dedication. He proves that he did dedicate when he shows that he was paid by a neighbor to do so, and tries to avoid the effect of his acts by showing partial failure of consideration. The use was not given to Copeland, but to the public, by acts indicating an offer without condition. It was also error to allow proof that Cone had consented to the obstructions, or had himself obstructed the road at another point, except so far as such proof might tend to discredit Cone as a witness. On the trial the defendant admitted the erection and maintenance of the gates which constituted the obstruction complained of, but justified on the ground that the highway, if one ever existed, had been vacated by the board of supervisors. In this matter it appeared that a petition was presented to the board, signed by the defendant and several others, asking that the road be vacated. A day was set for the hearing, when viewers were appointed, who subsequently reported to the board, stating, among other things, that Gilmore agreed to give Cone and Hickman a private road 25 feet wide, and concluding as follows: "Being that a portion of this road has recently been abandoned, we recommend that the road described in this report be made a private road, and that the landowners over which the road passes give a deed to the county for a private road on the route as described above, which is shown more particularly by the accompanying plat." After the filing of this report the board made the following order: "In the matter of the road in Antelope road district, known as the 'Gilmore Private Road,' it was ordered by the board that the viewers' report be adopted." Deeds were not taken from the landowners for the right of way, nor were any steps taken to establish a private road. The last order was made June 5, 1889. Nothing further seems to have been done until December 4, 1889, when the board made an order rescinding an order made April 3, 1889, pertaining to gates on Gilmore's land, and ordering the road master to open the road to the public.

Under the last order the plaintiff assumes to be acting. Defendant contends that the order of June 5th is an order vacating the road. That a private road could not be established until the public road was first vacated. Therefore, although the report did not in terms recommend that the road be vacated, such is necessarily implied, and by adopting it the board must be held to have vacated the highway, although it was not competent for them to convert it into a private road in that way.

I do not think this position can be maintained. An order vacating a public highway is legislative, and the enactment ought to appear in the order. Great strictness is not required, but, if an order may be helped by such a reference, the report referred to should itself be sufficient to indicate the act determined upon. The statute does not provide for viewers in the matter of the discontinuance of a highway. The provisions in regard to viewers evidently refer only to laying out and altering highways. By the twenty-first section of the county government act of 1883, in force when these proceedings were had, it was provided that the board should cause to be kept a road book containing all proceedings and adjudications relating to the establishment and discontinuance of roads, etc. This matter does not seem to have been entered in such book. The report adopted did not recommend the abandonment of the road, but that deeds be taken of a right of way for a private road 25 feet wide, and then the laying out of a private road. The adoption of the report was an indication that the board would pursue that course, but no conveyances were received, and to lay out a private road would seem to require the concurrence of the person chiefly interested. Section 2692, Pol. Code. Although the board indicated a willingness to pursue that course, it does not appear that they had the power to do so. Under the circumstances, I do not think the order was an abandonment of the highway, and it was therefore error to admit it in evidence over the objection of plaintiff.

This will dispose of many exceptions taken. If the order were excluded, no instructions in regard to its effect would be required. The plaintiff was entitled to an instruction as to the right of defendant to erect gates across a public highway, and the instruction offered upon that subject should have been given. I think the court erred in giving the fourth and seventh instructions asked for by the defendant. The fourth was upon a matter which had no bearing upon the issues in the case, and the seventh was erroneous. Neither the public nor the county is responsible for unauthorized acts of the board of supervisors. Their acts, when ultra vires, are simply void, and cannot be imputed to the public. I think the judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

98 Cal. 299

PEOPLE v. BEMMERLY. (No. 20,939.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1893.)

MURDER—INSANITY AS A DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS—NEW TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

1. The fact that several jurors in a murder cause were separated from their fellow jurors during the progress of the trial, and out of the sight of the officer who had them in charge, contrary to the orders of the court, is not sufficient ground to grant a new trial where it does not appear that anything was said to either of them concerning the cause, or that they were guilty of any misconduct, or that they did any act inconsistent with their duties as jurors during the separation.

2. Nor does the fact that one of the jurors drank intoxicating liquors during the progress of the trial constitute a ground for a new trial, where it does not appear that such juror was affected by the liquor.

3. Where the record on appeal in a criminal cause does not contain defendant's testimony in the court below, an objection that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to cross-examine him upon matters not brought out in direct examination will not be considered.

4. A statement of defendant's testimony in the assignment of errors in a criminal cause cannot be considered as a part of the record in determining whether or not the court below erred in permitting certain questions to be asked him. People v. Faulke, 30 Pac. Rep. 837, 96 Cal. 17, followed.

5. On a trial for murder, the burden of showing insanity, relied on as a defense, is on defendant, and the insanity must be established by a preponderance of evidence. People v. Travers, 26 Pac. Rep. 88, 88 Cal. 238, followed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county; J. E. Prewitt, Judge.

One Bemmerly was convicted of murder in the second degree. From the judgment of conviction, and from an order overruling his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

For former appeal, see 25 Pac. Rep. 266.

K. Clark, J. C. Ball, J. E. Strong, and J. Craig, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Hart, for the People.

HARRISON, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and upon the judgment of conviction, and an order denying a new trial, he has appealed.

1. After the jurors had been impaneled and sworn to try the cause, the court, upon its own motion, ordered them into the custody of the sheriff during the progress of the trial, and instructed the sheriff to keep them together, and not to speak to any one, or permit any other person to speak to them or in their presence, about the case; and also instructed them not to drink any intoxicating liquors during the progress of the trial. One of the grounds urged for a new trial and upon the appeal is that before the final submission of the cause certain of the jurors separated from the others, and from the officer who had them in charge, and that certain of the jurors did before the final submission of the case to them drink intoxicating liquors. It appears that after an adjournment upon one of the days while the cause was on trial certain of the jurors, while upon the street in company with the sheriff, joined a crowd of people who were listening to the utterance of a street fakir, and were for a few minutes out of the sight or custody of the sheriff; that on a Sunday which intervened during the trial, eight of the jurors, in company with a deputy sheriff, attended church separately from the remaining four, and that some of the other four listened to the singing and preaching of the Salvation Army in the streets of Woodland; that one of the jurors, in the company of a deputy sheriff, visited his place of business, without being accompanied by the others; that individual jurors were several times during the trial separated from the body of jurors for a few minutes at a time, and occasionally were out of sight of the officer who had them in charge; that several of the jurors, at various times during the trial, drank intoxicating liquors, and at times engaged in conversation with other persons. It was not shown that anything was said to either of the jurors concerning the case before them, or that they were at any time during their separation guilty of any misconduct, or that they did any act inconsistent with their duties as jurors. The amount or character of the intoxicating liquors which they drank is not shown, nor the time or frequency of such drinking, and it was not claimed that either of them was in any visible way affected thereby. Ten of the jurors were severally sworn before the court, and denied that they had conversed with any person respecting the case, or been influenced by any matter other than the evidence before them; and those who drank the intoxicating liquors denied that they had been affected thereby. Two of the jurors were not examined upon these points, but there was no showing made against their conduct. We cannot hold that these facts constituted such misconduct as to justify setting aside the verdict. The direction to the sheriff to keep the jury together, as well as the instruction to the jurors themselves not to drink any intoxicating liquors during the progress of the trial, was for the purpose of having the trial conducted in an orderly and discreet manner, and was evincive of the desire of the court to prevent the jury from being affected by any improper influences. The ultimate object of these instructions was not to keep the jury together, but to prevent them from improper intercourse with others, and their being kept together was merely a means of accomplishing this ultimate purpose. The direction of the court did not give to the defendant the right to control the action of the jury or of the officer in that respect during the pendency of the trial, nor the right to any exception for error or misconduct by reason of a failure to literally comply therewith. The mere fact that the direction of the court was violated does not give to the defendant the right to have the verdict set aside. He must show as fully as if the direction had not been given that one or more of the jurors was influenced in his verdict by some outside influence during or in consequence of such separation. Neither does the mere fact that a juror drank intoxicating liquor during the trial show that his verdict was affected thereby. The defendant, in addition thereto, should show that the juror was affected by the liquor which he drank, or should at least show the quantity and character of the liquor, so that there might be a basis for the court to determine whether it would presumptively affect his capacity as a juror. The failure on the part of the people to call two of the jurors to exonerate themselves from the charge of having been influenced in their verdict by reason of the violation of the above direction of the court does not strengthen the position of the defendant. The burden of showing error was upon him, and, in the absence of any showing that these two jurors had themselves drank any liquor, or conversed or been spoken to about the case, the people were not required to introduce negative testimony upon these points.

2. It was held upon the appeal from the former trial of the defendant (87 Cal. 117, 25 Pac. Rep. 266) that the dying declarations of the deceased were properly received in evidence. The testimony at the present trial concerning the circumstances under which they were made does not differ in any material respect from that presented upon the former trial.

3. The objection that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to cross-examine the defendant upon matters not brought out in direct examination is not sustained by the record. The bill of exceptions merely shows that the court permitted him to be cross-examined "upon the transcript of the reporter's notes of his testimony at the former trial." In the absence of the testimony given by him, we cannot say that it was upon matters to which he did not testify at the present trial. The statement of such testimony in the assignment of errors cannot be regarded as a part of the record for this purpose. People v. Faulke, 96 Cal. 17, 30 Pac. Rep. 837.

4. Objections are made by the appellant to some of the instructions given to the jury, but, after a careful examination thereof, we are unable to say that the court committed any error. The instructions are very voluminous, occupying 50 pages of the printed transcript, and informed the jury very fully upon the law applicable to the defenses presented at the trial. The chief argument of the appellant is directed to showing that the court erred in instructing the jury upon the subject of insanity, and that the burden of showing that defense was upon the defendant, and must be established by a preponderance of evidence. This rule was, however, affirmed in People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 238, 26 Pac. Rep. 88, and cannot any longer be regarded as an open question in this state.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; FITZGERALD, J.; DE HAVEN, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 374

BRUNNER et al. v. MARKS. (No. 14,971.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 30, 1893.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—CONTRACT—JUDGMENT FORECLOSING LIEN ON PORTION OF BUILDING—VALIDITY—PLEADING AND PROOF—VARIANCE.

1. A building contract provided for adding to an old building on a part of a lot, and the erection of a new building on the other part. Mechanics' liens were filed for the construction of additions to the building situated on that portion of the lot covered by the old building. The complaint in an action to foreclose such liens alleged that the contractor agreed to provide all materials, and change into a two-story building the one-story building then on the premises described, (referring to the entire lot,) and such allegations were not denied. The findings supported the allegations, and the judgment followed the findings. Held, that the judgment was not open to the objection that it was invalid because the liens were filed on a portion of the building only.

2. The fact that the notice of liens describes the building as situated on a specified number of feet of a certain lot, while the complaint describes it as situated on the entire lot, causes no variance, and is immaterial.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; Robert McGarvey, Judge.

Action by F. Brunner, Sr., and others, against A. Marks and B. Marks and others, to foreclose mechanics' liens. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

T. L. Carothers and E. H. Wakeman, for appellants. J. M. Mannon and J. A. Cooper, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. In this action judgment was rendered foreclosing certain mechanics' liens, and the appeal is prosecuted from that judgment, and the order of the court denying a new trial.

Various liens were filed against the property by different mechanics, and actions brought thereon, which were subsequently consolidated under an order of the court. Appellants were the owners of a lot in the city of Ukiah, described as being 66 feet front upon State street, with a depth of 86 feet upon Perkins street. There was a building situated upon this lot, covering a frontage of 48 feet, at the time the contract was entered into with one Ludwig, upon which this action arose. The contract, as stated by Ludwig, was to build a one-story brick building, and to extend to two stories an old brick building. The old building here referred to is the building covering 48 feet of said lot, the one-story building to be erected covering the remaining 18 feet of the lot. The contract price was $8,000 for the entire work, and one contract covered it all.

Appellant relied upon 29 assignments of errors of law, but states his principal one to be that all the liens but one were filed against that part of the structure situated upon the lot described as having a frontage of 48 feet, the remaining lien being filed against that portion of the building not covered by other liens; "that is to say, all the liens but one are filed against that portion of the structure covered by 48 feet frontage, and the remaining one against the balance of the structure, covering about 18 feet frontage." It will be seen that appellants' contention is that the liens were filed upon a portion of the building, and not upon it all; and that, consequently, no valid judgment could be rendered foreclosing them, inasmuch as no judgment could embrace more than is included in the claim of lien. This principle is supported by Mills Co. v. Kremer, 94 Cal. 210, 29 Pac. Rep. 635, where the court said: "The statute gives a lien upon the entire building for any portion of the labor done or materials furnished therefor, and there is no provision for a lien upon a portion of a building, or for the sale of a part of a building to satisfy a lien upon the whole." There can be no question but that a fatal variance might be created between the claim of lien and the complaint upon the one side, and the proof upon the other, by showing that the lien did not cover the entire building; but in the present case the liens, save one, are claimed for labor and materials furnished in the improvement and construction of additions to that certain building or structure situated upon the portion of appellants' lot having 48 feet frontage, and covered by the old building. In direct line with the claim made by the lien follows the allegation of the complaint, as follows: "That on or about the 25th day of October, 1889, the defendant T. J. Ludwig entered into a contract with the defendants A. Marks and B. Marks, whereby the said Ludwig agreed to provide all materials, and add to and change into a two-story brick building the one-story brick building then upon the premises above described." (Referring to the entire lot.) This allegation of the complaint is not denied, and therefore no issue is made by the pleading as to whether or not the claim of lien covers an entire building or only a part thereof. Such being the fact, appellant was not authorized to introduce evidence against his own admission. The findings of the court also fully support the allegations of the complaint in this regard, and the judgment follows the findings; hence the difficulties that arose in the Willamette Case are not present here. These views also dispose of the ruling of the court upon the question addressed to the witness Copeland as to the character of the structure erected upon the lot.

The fact that the liens described the building as situated upon 48 feet of the lot, and the complaint described the building as situated upon the entire lot, causes no variance, and is entirely immaterial. The description of the land upon which the structure is erected, required to be set out in the claim of lien, is not a technical description, and is demanded only for the purposes of identification, although in this case it appears that the description in these liens was technically correct. Having disposed of appellants' principal point, we will not notice the little ones in detail, but simply say that after a due consideration of them we think them too small to justify a reversal of the case. For the foregoing reasons, let the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 377

HANSON v. SLAVEN. (No. 14,456.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 30, 1893.)

SALE — OPTION TO PURCHASE — ACCEPTANCE — ACTION FOR FAILURE TO DELIVER — INABILITY TO PERFORM CONTRACT — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. In a letter to plaintiff, defendant and another agreed to take 2,000 shares of stock of a specified corporation, subscribed by the former, and granted him "the privilege of calling for all or any part of said 2,000 shares, at any time during the next two years from the date of this letter, at $30 per share." Within the two years, plaintiff told defendant he wanted the stock. Held, that the written offer to plaintiff, and the latter's statement to defendant, constituted an agreement to sell and buy, containing concurrent conditions, mutually dependent on each other.

2. Under Civil Code, § 1439, providing that, before any party to an obligation can require another party to perform any act under it, he must be able, and offer, to fulfill all conditions imposed on him on the like fulfillment by the other party, plaintiff was not entitled to maintain an action on such agreement against defendant for failure to deliver such stock on demand, in the absence of an offer by him to pay for it, unless defendant's conduct was such as to excuse the failure of such offer.

3. A direction by defendant, to his agent, to tell plaintiff "that he will get his stock. Our stock is all hypothecated,—tied up. As soon as we are free, I will give him his stock,"—did not constitute such refusal to deliver the stock as will excuse the failure of plaintiff to offer to perform on his part, where neither party regarded it as a refusal at the time.

4. It appeared that, during the times plaintiff demanded such stock, large amounts of it were for sale; that buyers were few; and that an offer of the agreed price per share would have secured to defendant any reasonable amount of it. Held that, though defendant's stock was held by third persons as collateral, the evidence was insufficient to support a finding that defendant had placed it out of his power to deliver the stock.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action by Charles Hanson against Henry B. Slaven on a contract for the sale to plaintiff of certain shares of stock of the American Contracting & Dredging Company of New York. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Galpin & Zeigler, for appellant. W. C. Belcher and E. P. Cole, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action brought to recover the sum of $1,270,000, as damages for a breach of contract to deliver 2,000 shares of stock of the American Contracting & Dredging Company of New York city. The contract was executory, and in the following words: "San Francisco, June 10, 1882. Charles Hanson, Esq. Dear Sir: We hereby agree to take and pay for the amount of stock subscribed by you, namely, two thousand shares, at $30 per share, in a company now being organized, and to be known as the American Contracting and Dredging Company of New York city. We further grant to you the privilege of calling for all or any part of said two thousand shares at any time during the next two years from the date of this letter, at thirty dollars per share. Respectfully, yours, H. B. Slaven. M. A. Slaven." The latter portion of the writing forms the basis of plaintiff's cause of action, he claiming to have been damaged by reason of the failure and refusal of respondents to deliver the stock as therein provided.

The motion for a nonsuit was based upon very narrow grounds,—grounds that could well have been enlarged. It was made upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove the payment or tender of the purchase price of said stock, to wit, $60,000 mentioned in the option, within the time therein stated, to wit, two years from date, and there was no waiver of such tender or excuse for the making of the same. The evidence bearing upon the question of nonsuit may be summarized as follows: Robert F. Pratt, who had charge of certain branches of Slaven's business, testified: "In January, 1883, Hanson called me into his private office, and said: 'I want my stock. You tell H. B. Slaven I want my stock.' I said, 'All right. H. B. Slaven is in town, and I will report to him just what you say.' And I did report the conversation to Slaven, who said: 'Tell good friend Hanson that he will get his stock. Our stock is all hypothecated,—tied up. As soon as we are free I will give him his stock.' In March, Hanson again asked me for his stock, but he never tendered me any money at any time. I told Hanson what Slaven said about it." Plaintiff Hanson testified: "I told Slaven in December, 1882, I wanted the stock, and he said he would get it for me, but he never did. I told him again in February that I wanted the stock, and he said he would get it for me. I never tendered any money to Slaven at any time. Never offered to pay him any, either in writing or otherwise. Never at any time tendered any money to Pratt, or to any person. Never offered to pay any person any money for this stock."

That portion of the writing involved in the consideration of this case constitutes, under section 1727 of the Civil Code, an agreement upon the part of the Slaven to sell to Hanson 2,000 shares of stock, or any part thereof, at the price stated, at any time within two years from date. If, at any time within the two years, Hanson accepted the Slavens' proposition, as stated in their agreement, then the contract, under section 1729 of the Civil Code, became an agreement to sell and buy, containing concurrent conditions mutually dependent upon each other. Taking a broad and liberal view of the testimony cited, it may be fairly construed to constitute a notification to the Slavens by Hanson of an acceptance upon his part of the offer to sell previously made by them. His testimony as to his statements made to Slaven is a little more explicit than his demands and claims made through the medium of the witness Pratt, but in neither case did he state that he would take the entire 2,000 shares. His option extended to all or any part, and it would seem but fair to the vendors that they should know the exact amount he elected to buy. Still, we pass the point, conceding it to be a fair inference of fact from the evidence that his acceptance extended to the entire amount. We then have an agreement upon the one part to sell to Hanson 2,000 shares of stock, and an agreement upon the part of Hanson to pay therefor, to the Slavens, the sum of $60,000. Upon this state of facts, let us see wherein lies plaintiff's cause of action for a breach of the contract. Section 1439 reads: "Before any party to an obligation can require another party to perform any act under it * * * he must be able, and offer, to fulfill all conditions concurrent, so imposed upon him, on the like fulfillment by the other party, except as provided by the next section." This section is equally applicable to obligations arising either upon agreements for the sale of realty or personalty, and the authorities, both before and since the adoption of the Codes, recognize that fact. It follows therefrom, in order that one party may place the other party in default upon a contract consisting of mutually dependent obligations, he must not only be able to perform, but must offer to perform. If he is able to perform, and offers to perform, he has done his part, and a refusal to accept such offer, and thereby meet him halfway, creates a breach of the contract, and gives an immediate right of action. Whatever courts of other states may have held upon this question, the provisions of our Code are plain and explicit, and demand that an offer of performance be made. See section 1485, Civil Code, et seq. In Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 422, it was held that a complaint which stated that the plaintiff was "ready and willing" to perform failed to state a cause of action, as it showed no default upon the part of the defendant, the complaint failing to allege a tender. In Loan Soc. v. Hildreth, 53 Cal. 721, the complaint was held fatally defective in failing to allege an offer to perform. In this case the plaintiff testified that he made no offer to perform; that he made no offer to pay the $60,000; and that was the concurrent condition assumed by him under the contract.

Plaintiff, having failed to make an offer of payment of the $60,000, has no cause of action for a breach thereof, unless the defendant's conduct was such as to excuse the failure of an offer. As showing such excuse, appellant contends (1) that respondent refused to deliver the stock; and (2) that he had placed it out of his power to deliver it. All the evidence in the record tending to show a refusal to deliver is the evidence of the witness Pratt, wherein Slaven said to him, in answer to a request or demand for the stock from Hanson: "Tell good friend Hanson that he will get his stock. Our stock is all hypothecated,—tied up. As soon as we are free, I will give him his stock." Under no recognized principle governing the construction of language can this statement of Slaven be construed into a refusal to deliver the stock. It was a promise to deliver the stock at a future day, and indicated a perfect willingness to deliver it. The authorities all agree that, in order to constitute an implied waiver of an offer or tender, the refusal must be explicit and positive. In the latest edition of Mr. Benjamin's work on Sales it is said, in section 568: "It must be a distinct and unequivocally absolute refusal to perform the promise, and must be treated and acted upon as such by the party to whom the promise was made; for, if he afterwards continue to urge or demand compliance with the contract, it is plain that he does not understand it to be at an end." And this language is approved in Smoot's Case, 15 Wall. 36. We have in the present case no such refusal as is contemplated by the law, and plaintiff's requests for his stock, made subsequently to the foregoing statement of Slaven, and Slaven's promise to deliver the stock, made subsequent to this statement, clearly indicate that neither party regarded Slaven's language at this time as constituting a refusal. When Hanson was told by Pratt what Slaven said in reference to the matter, he appears to have made no objection to Slaven's plea for an extension of time in which to make the delivery, and, in the absence of any objection upon his part at that time to a failure of present delivery, his assent to the course proposed by Slaven must be assumed. To be sure, subsequently, he made further demands for the stock of the witness Pratt, but nothing is disclosed by the record to indicate anything in the nature of a refusal to have followed from such demands.

Neither is the evidence sufficient to support a finding of the jury that defendant had placed it out of his power to deliver the stock. It appears that during these times large amounts of the stock were for sale. The stock was plentiful, but buyers few, and the whole record indicates, conceding that the stock was then held by third parties as collateral, that an offer of $30 per share would have brought to the possession of Slaven any reasonable amount of it for purposes of sale at that figure. For these reasons it is not shown by the record that the defendant was unable to comply with the contract. Upon the facts of this case it becomes unnecessary to determine, by a construction of the writing, whether an offer to perform should be made within the two years referred to in the writing, or whether Hanson did not have a reasonable time from the date of his acceptance of the terms of the contract in which to make the offer, as his testimony disclosed that he made no offer at any time. For the foregoing reasons, let the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

98 Cal. 384

DIXON v. PLUNS. (No. 14,429.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1893.)

MISCONDUCT OF JURY—AVERAGE VERDICT—PROOF—AFFIDAVITS OF JURORS—PERSONAL INJURIES—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. Where a jury agree that each member thereof shall write out the sum which he thinks plaintiff is entitled to recover, and then divide the aggregate of such sums by 12, and that the quotient shall be the amount of their verdict, such verdict is obtained "by a resort to the determination of chance," within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. § 657, providing that for the purpose of obtaining a new trial such misconduct of the jury may be shown by the affidavits of the jurors.

2. The fact that plaintiff passed under a scaffold erected over the sidewalk, on which defendant was engaged with tools and materials repairing a building, is not negligence contributing to his injury from a chisel dropping on him.

3. Where a chisel dropped from the scaffold erected over the sidewalk, and on which defendant was at work repairing the building, it is presumed to have dropped because of defendant's negligence.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Eugene R. Garber, Judge.

Action for personal injuries by Katie E. Dixon against William J. F. W. Pluns. Plaintiff had judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. C. Firebaugh, for appellant. Nagle & Nagle, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Respondent, while walking upon the sidewalk of Larkin street, in the city of San Francisco, was struck upon the head, and quite seriously injured, by a chisel that fell from a scaffolding above, upon which one of appellant's employes was standing while engaged in affixing a cornice to the building. Damages were recovered in the lower court, and the appeal is from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. This case was decided in department, and the judgment and order reversed upon the ground that the verdict was arrived at by chance. The question involved being an important one, and there being some decisions of this court opposed to the doctrine there laid down, which had not been noticed in the opinion, the case was ordered to bank for further consideration.

Appellant moved for a new trial upon the ground of misconduct of the jury in this: that they arrived at their verdict by a resort to the determination of chance. The Code expressly provides that such misconduct may be shown by the affidavits of jurors, (section 657, Code Civil Proc.,) and in support of the motion appellant presented the affidavit of one Koster, a juror, wherein he stated "that, upon retiring to the jury room, the twelve jurors first agreed by a vote that the average sense of the jurors should control in arriving at what the verdict should be, and then the twelve jurors agreed to be controlled by their vote, and voted that the said average sense of the jurors should be arrived at in the manner following, namely, by each individual juror writing on a piece of paper what he would fix the verdict at, and that the sums so written should then be added together, and the aggregate divided by twelve, and that the amount resulting should be taken as the average sense of the jurors, and be put in the verdict accordingly; and thereupon the said plan was carried out," etc. Courts have not been astute in perceiving sufficient error to set aside verdicts upon the ground here relied upon, and evidence sustaining the verdict has been generally favored; but upon this motion no opposing affidavits were offered, and the merits of the contention rest alone upon the sufficiency of the statement of facts above recited. Reduced to its lowest terms, the affidavit plainly discloses that the verdict was the result of a previous agreement, and was arrived at upon the basis that the amount of the verdict should be the quotient resulting from a division wherein 12 was the divisor, and the sum of the various amounts at which each juror would fix the verdict the dividend. The calculation was made in pursuance of a prior agreement that the result should be the verdict; and that result was adopted as the verdict, not upon further consideration of the jury, and upon the determination that such amount formed a just and proper verdict, but it was adopted in pursuance of the prior "agreement." The decisions of our courts clearly indicate that they do not countenance such procedure, and the verdict must be set aside if the affidavits of jurors are entitled to be received as evidence to prove the agreement and the consummation thereof; and that matter is dependent upon the solution of the question, is the verdict a chance verdict, within the meaning of the statute?

Counsel for respondent, with good reason, rely upon Turner v. Water Co., 25 Cal. 397, to support his contention in this regard. It is there decided that a verdict arrived at in the manner hereinbefore set forth is not a chance verdict, and therefore cannot be attacked by the affidavits of jurors. But, after mature consideration, we think the principle there declared erroneous, and that the establishment of a contrary rule, in this country especially, where the rights of property, reputation, and life are all taken into the jury room, and there passed upon by jurors, will result in a purer and more satisfactory administration of justice. In the case cited Mr. Justice Sanderson used the following language: "To ascertain this average the jury may properly adopt the method which was used in the present case, but they ought not to agree to be bound by the result, whatever it may be. If they do so agree, and such result is made the verdict without further consideration or assent, such verdict is vicious and irregular, and must be set aside whenever the fact is made to appear by proper and competent evidence." If this character of verdict is vicious and irregular, it can only be vicious and irregular upon the ground that it was not the result of that calm and deliberate judgment of jurors contemplated by the law, but that it was arrived at by a resort to chance or lot. The vicious character of the verdict can consist of nothing else. The jurors have not been corrupted. They have acted under no duress, mistake, or fraud. Their verdict is the result of free and voluntary action. Outsiders have not participated in or influenced their determinations. Hence the verdict is vicious only in this: that the amount was determined by a resort to methods condemned by the law. In the few cases relied upon to support Turner v. Water Co. it will be noticed that the verdicts were upheld upon the ground that, after the computations were made and the result obtained, that result was not adopted as the verdict of the jury in pursuance of the prior agreement, but independently thereof, and upon further deliberation and thought; and as to such a course we see no serious objection.

"Chance" may be defined to be hazard, risk, or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces, and the facts here developed bring the case clearly within such definition. In the present case each juror agreed that a definite amount should be the verdict of the jury, at a time when he had no knowledge whatever as to what the amount should be, for it had not yet been computed. No person even knew the figures upon which the computation would be made. If the estimate of each juror is before the eyes of the others when the agreement is made, then no element of chance will be found in the result, for it would be a mere matter of mathematical computation; but without a knowledge of these estimates the character of the verdict will be as entirely unknown to the jurors as though the whole matter were decided by the casting of a die or the tossing of a coin. In the casting of a die or the tossing of a coin justice has an equal chance with injustice, but under the system here considered one unscrupulous and cunning juror always has the power to defeat justice by increasing or decreasing the amount of the verdict in proportion as he places his estimate at an unconscionably high or low figure. In the casting of a die the chance of winning or losing is dependent upon the face of the die that presents itself after the cast. In arriving at a verdict in the manner here practiced the chance of the respective parties, plaintiff and defendant, to secure the verdict is entirely dependent upon the sum total of the estimates made by the various jurors, and that sum total is as uncertain and unknown to the jurors at the time the agreement is made as the result of the cast is unknown to the gamester. We are clearly of the opinion that this verdict was obtained by a resort to chance, and Turner v. Water Co., and other cases following in its wake, are no longer valuable as authority.

Under a statute similar to the provision of our Code this question has been directly adjudicated, and the position here taken supported, in the recent case of Improvement Co. v. Adams, (Colo. App.) 28 Pac. Rep. 662. Under the same provision of the Idaho statute this question has been carefully considered in the very late case of Flood v. McClure, (Idaho,) 32 Pac. Rep. 254. Turner v. Water Co. is there reviewed, and its reasoning declared not sound. It is insisted that the case of Turner v. Water Co., having been decided under the former practice act, and the same provision being carried into the Code of Civil Procedure, that re-enactment carried with it the construction previously given the provision. Such can only be the law where the rules of statutory construction are the same at the date of both enactments. This principle is declared in Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 591, 31 Pac. Rep. 915, and also in Flood v. McClure, (Idaho,) 32 Pac. Rep. 254.

As the cause must be returned to the lower court for further proceedings, we pass to an examination of some additional matters. The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. Upon the evidence we cannot say that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence in walking upon the sidewalk at the time the injury was inflicted. She had a right to be there, and had no sufficient reason to anticipate danger from overhead. Respondent's evidence also established a prima facie case of negligence upon the part of the appellant. He was engaged with tools and materials directly over a thoroughfare where people were constantly travelling, and had an undoubted right to travel. Under such circumstances, the law demanded of him more than ordinary care. He was called upon to exercise the greatest care and caution in the performance of his work, in order that travelers might not be injured. The injury was received at the hands of appellant by the dropping of the chisel while respondent was walking upon the public street. Under the foregoing circumstances, the court was justified in submitting the case to the jury. This question is carefully considered and the authorities reviewed in Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567. In that case the wall of a building fell upon a traveler in the street. The court held that the presumption of negligence arose from the fact of the building falling. In Lyons v. Rosenthal, 11 Hun, 46, the injury arose from the falling of a box of goods from the story above, and it was held that negligence would be presumed. In support of this doctrine the court cited various English authorities which, upon the facts, stand upon common ground with the case at bar. See Kearney v. Railroad Co., L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; Byrne v. Boadle, 2 Hurl. & C. 722; Scott v. Docks Co., 3 Hurl. & C. 596. The rule recognized by the foregoing authorities as pertaining to this class of accidents is, where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care. Shear. & R. Neg. § 60.

Inasmuch as counsel for respondent at the oral argument stated that he relied upon previous decisions of this court to the effect that affidavits of jurors would not be received to impeach a verdict arrived at in the manner set out in the affidavit of the juror in this case, and for that reason did not offer counter affidavits upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial, which he could have done, it is ordered that the order denying a new trial be reversed, and the same remanded to the court below for further action as herein indicated; that the court below permit the respondent, if she shall be so advised, to file within 20 days after the filing of the remittitur counter affidavits as to the manner in which the jurors arrived at their verdict; and that thereupon, upon such affidavits and the other matters already before it upon the motion for a new trial, the court render its decision thereon. It is further ordered that the order heretofore made in this court submitting her appeal from the judgment be set aside, and that the hearing upon the said appeal be continued to a day to be hereafter fixed upon the motion of either party hereto.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.; DE HAVEN, J.

(98 Cal. 415)

DAVIS v. HONEY LAKE WATER CO.
(No. 18,047.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1893.)

STRIKING OUT PLEADINGS—DEMURRER—APPEAL.

1. A demurrer which contains no other matter than the grounds enumerated in Code Civil Proc. § 430, is not irrelevant or redundant, within section 453, providing for striking out pleadings.

2. A demurrer, though stricken out, constitutes part of the judgment roll.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. § 647, providing that an order striking out a pleading will be deemed to have been excepted to, an exception to an order striking out a demurrer is unnecessary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; W. T. Master, Judge.

Action by John C. Davis against the Honey Lake Water Company. Defendant demurred, and on motion the demurrer was stricken out, and judgment entered for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Goodwin & Dodge, Olney, Chickering & Thomas, and Warren Gregory, for appellant. A. L. Shinn, for respondent.

VANOLIEF, C. The complaint consists of three counts, each for the recovery of a specific sum of money on an alleged distinct cause of action. The action was commenced in the county of Lassen, and the summons was served on the defendant in the city and county of San Francisco on the 29th day of August, 1891. On the 28th day of September, 1891, the defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint on the grounds of misjoinder of causes of action, and that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant. On November 3, 1891, on motion of plaintiff's attorney, the court ordered that the demurrer be "stricken from the files of the court, for the reason that it had not been filed in time." On November 4, 1891, the default of the defendant was entered, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff for the full sum demanded, viz. $4,589. This appeal is from the judgment, and comes here upon the judgment roll alone. The roll contains a copy of the demurrer, indorsed "Filed" by the clerk, as above stated, and shows no other disposition of it than the order striking it from the files.

The appellant's counsel contend that the court erred in thus disposing of the demurrer, and that defendant was not thereby put in default; and, consequently, that the judgment by default was unauthorized by law; and I think this point should be sustained. A similar point was carefully considered and decided in the case of Larco v. Casanueva, 30 Cal. 565, under section 50 of the practice act, which then read as follows: "Sham and irrelevant answers and defenses, and so much of any answer as may be irrelevant, redundant, and immaterial, may be stricken out on motion." The principal question as to the construction of that section was whether the word "defenses" included demurrers, and it was held that it did not. The corresponding provision of the Code of Civil Procedure omits the word "defenses," and reads as follows: "Sec. 453. Sham and irrelevant answers and irrelevant and redundant matter in a pleading may be stricken out." In the part of this section relating to irrelevant and redundant matter, however, the word "pleading" is substituted for the word "answer" in the practice act. While there is no doubt that the word "pleading" includes demurrers, and that irrelevant and redundant matters may be inserted in demurrers, yet a demurrer stating only one or more of the grounds enumerated in section 430 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as in this case, contains nothing irrelevant and nothing redundant; nor is it claimed that it does. And since the record shows that the demurrer was filed within thirty days after the service of summons, it appears that the ground upon which it was stricken out, namely, that it "was not filed in time," is not true.

But it is contended for respondent that inasmuch as the demurrer was stricken out, it constitutes no part of the judgment roll, and therefore cannot be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining when it was filed. But, notwithstanding the order striking it out, the demurrer was a pleading in the case, and therefore constitutes a part of the judgment roll. Abbott v. Douglass, 28 Cal. 296. To the objection that the record shows no exception to the order striking out the demurrer, the answer is that the law deems that such an order was excepted to. Section 647, Code Civil Proc. Finally, it is claimed that the demurrer may have been stricken out on the ground that it had not been served, since the record does not show whether it had been served or not. But the only other possible valid grounds are those stated in section 453 of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, the insertion in the demurrer of irrelevant or redundant matter, which, as above shown, is negatived by the record. I think the judgment should be reversed, and the court below directed to restore the demurrer to the files, and to proceed to dispose of it according to its merits.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to restore the demurrer to the files, and to proceed to dispose of it according to its merits.

98 Cal. 418

CROCKER et al. v. CARPENTER et al.
(No. 18,078.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1893.)

QUIETING TITLE—TRIAL BY JURY—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

1. In an action under Code Civil Proc. § 738, authorizing an action against one claiming an interest in real property adversely to plaintiff, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim, defendant is not entitled to a trial by jury, where the only issue is whether defendant is entitled to a specific performance of a contract for the purchase of the land, made by plaintiff's grantor.

2. Where evidence is objected to at the trial only on the general grounds of "incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality," the objection that the proper foundation for its admission had not been laid will not be considered on appeal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Ansel Smith, Judge.

Action to quiet title to realty by one Crocker and others against one Carpenter and others. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Thompson & Paulsell, E. Murphy, and A. H. Carpenter, for appellants. Loutitt, Wood & Levinsky, for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. The complaint in this action states substantially a cause of action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes one person to bring an action against another, claiming an interest in real property adversely to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim; and the prayer of the complaint is that the defendants be required to set forth the nature of their adverse claims, and for a judgment that the title of plaintiffs to the lands described be quieted, and declared good and valid, and that plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of the same, and the defendants be enjoined "from asserting any claim whatever of, in, or to the said lands, * * * or any part thereof, or to the possession thereof, adverse to these plaintiffs." The judgment of the superior court was in favor of plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal.

1. The court did not err in refusing the demand of the defendants that all the issues made by the pleadings should be tried by a jury. It is certainly true that in an action brought under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure the issues may be such as require their trial by a jury, upon the demand of either of the parties. In the case of Donahue v. Meister, 88 Cal. 121, 25 Pac. Rep. 1096, which is relied upon by defendants, the court said that the main effect of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure was "to give parties the right to compel others, by suit, to litigate and determine controversies in cases where such right did not exist before; but if, in such a suit, issues arise which are clearly cognizable in a court of law, the Code does not take away the right to have such issues tried by a jury." And this same principle was again affirmed in the later case of Newman v. Duane, 89 Cal. 597, 27 Pac. Rep. 66. But there is a very broad distinction between those cases and the one now under consideration. In both of the cases cited the issues were of a purely legal character, as distinguished from those usually arising in what are termed "equitable actions." In Donahue v. Meister, from which we have just quoted, the defendant asserted a right to the possession of the premises in controversy, founded upon prior possession, and alleged that he had been ousted from such possession by the plaintiff in the action, and he demanded judgment for the recovery of such possession; and the court simply held that the issues tendered by this answer were such as are involved in an ordinary action for the recovery of real estate, and that the defendant was entitled to have the same tried by a jury. So, also, in Newman v. Duane, 89 Cal. 598, 27 Pac. Rep. 66, the defendant was in possession, and, in his answer, not only denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the land there in controversy, but also alleged that he (the defendant) had been in possession of such land for more than 15 years; and it was held by the court in that case that the action, under the issues thus made, was, in substance, one for the recovery of specific real property, and that the defendant was entitled to a jury for the trial of his alleged rights. But in the case at bar there are no such issues. The defendants admit that the legal title to the land described in the complaint is in the plaintiffs, and, while alleging possession in themselves, they do not claim any right to such possession except under and by virtue of an alleged agreement for the sale of said lands made by the predecessor of plaintiffs, and to which agreement the defendants claim they have succeeded by assignment; and they aver that "they are now ready, able, and willing to make to plaintiffs herein the payments," required by such agreement, and under the general prayer of their answer they, in effect, ask for a specific performance of such agreement. Indeed, in the brief filed in this court in behalf of defendants, their counsel say: "The defendants based their defense upon these contracts, and demanded a specific performance thereof." It is very clear to us that the defendants were not entitled to a jury for the trial of the equitable issues thus presented.

2. The court admitted in evidence the answers of certain defendants in an action brought against them by one Tully R. Wise concerning this same land. The answers were not verified by the defendants referred to, nor signed by them, and there was no evidence showing that they knew the contents of such answers when filed, or that they had ever authorized the attorneys signing them to make the statements therein contained. The defendants objected to the admission of these papers upon the general grounds of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality, and also as not being in rebuttal. We think there was no error in overruling the general objection thus made. If the defendants desired to object to the offered evidence upon the ground that the proper foundation for its admission had not been laid, because it had not been shown that the facts stated in such answers were inserted with the knowledge of defendants, the objection should have been specifically pointed out, and called to the attention of the court and the opposing counsel. If this specific objection had been made it is possible that it could have been removed by further evidence upon the part of plaintiffs, showing such knowledge, but the general objection that the offered evidence was incompetent was not sufficient. When such a general objection is overruled by a trial court the party against whom the ruling is made cannot be permitted for the first time to urge in the appellate court the particular objection which, if it had been openly urged in the trial court at the time of the ruling complained of, might have been easily cured. This is not laying down a merely technical rule. It is one which has its foundation in the proper consideration of what is due to the court and adverse counsel in the trial of a case. As was well said by the supreme court of the territory of Arizona in Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 124, 25 Pac. Rep. 816: "The object of requiring the grounds of objection to be stated, which may seem to be a technical rule, is really to avoid technicalities, and prevent delay in the administration of justice. When evidence is offered to which there is some objection, substantial justice requires that the objection be specified, so that the party offering the evidence can remove it, if possible, and let the case be tried on its merits." See, also, Bundy v. Hyde, 50 N. H. 121.

3. There are many other errors assigned upon rulings of the court in the admission and exclusion of evidence, but we do not deem it necessary to notice them, further than to say that we discover no material error in the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

98 Cal. 406

SAMUEL v. ALLEN. (No. 18,077.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1893.)
CONTRACTS — PERFORMANCE — SUFFICIENCY OF OFFER—FINDINGS.

1. Civil Code, § 1489, provides that an offer of performance may be made at any place within the state if the person to whom the offer ought to be made, or such person's residence or place of business, cannot, with reasonable diligence, be found in the state. Held, in an action to recover money due upon a contract to convey land, that a sufficient compliance with this section was not shown by proof that plaintiff prepared a deed and was ready to deliver it; that defendant was a resident of another state; and that plaintiff had been told that defendant had no residence in this state.

2. An action may be maintained for the recovery of unpaid purchase money on a contract to convey land, even though the vendor retains in himself the title to such land.

3. Where, in an action to recover money due upon a contract to convey land, the answer alleges that plaintiff was unable to convey the land free from incumbrance, and there is evidence tending to support such allegation, the failure to find upon it is error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; M. K. Harris, Judge.

Action by A. J. Samuel against Ormanzo Allen to recover money due upon a contract for the sale of land. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. S. Wright, for appellant. Church & Cory, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from the judgment, but was taken within 60 days after the rendition and entry thereof. The action is brought to recover money due upon a contract for the sale of land. The plaintiff, who is the vendor, avers that he has performed all the conditions of the contract on his part, and that on the 17th day of January, 1890, the defendant refused to accept performance on his part, and notified plaintiff of his refusal to accept performance on the part of plaintiff, and still does refuse to accept performance. These allegations are specifically denied in the answer. There was, at the trial, no attempt made to prove the alleged waiver of an offer to perform, or that defendant had refused to accept performance on the part of plaintiff, or had notified him to that effect. In lieu of the waiver alleged, plaintiff proved that he prepared a deed, and was ready to deliver it, and that defendant was a resident of Austin, Minn., and plaintiff had been told in Los Angeles that defendant had no residence in this state. Section 1489 of the Civil Code provides that, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, an offer of performance may be made "(3) if such person cannot, with reasonable diligence, be found within this state, and within a reasonable distance from his residence or place of business, or if he evades the debtor, then at his residence or place of business, if the same can with reasonable diligence be found within the state; or (4) if this cannot be done, then at any place within this state." It was not shown that the defendant was not at the time of the alleged offer within this state, nor that he did not have a place of business within the state. Nor was any diligence shown on the part of plaintiff to find defendant within the state, or to ascertain whether he had here a place of business. It is denied in the answer that any offer of performance was ever made, or at least the denial is as broad as the allegation, which is really that an offer had been waived. We think the evidence does not sustain the finding that the offer was made by plaintiff, or that defendant has refused to perform.

The appellant contends that inasmuch as plaintiff, by his contract, retained the title to the land, which was the subject of the contract, he cannot maintain an action for the unpaid purchase money, except in the form of an action to enforce specific performance, or for foreclosure of the lien. It is true that in some sense the vendor has a lien on the land for the portion of the purchase money which remains unpaid, and that it has been held that until a conveyance has been made the lien constitutes such security as will prevent the creditor from suing out an attachment, but it has also been uniformly held that such contract does not establish the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee. There is therefore no statutory prohibition upon the right to a personal action to enforce the debt when it becomes due. The action is for money due, as much so as though suit were upon a promissory note. It is not, therefore, a local action, and the court in Fresno county has jurisdiction, although the land which is the subject of the contract is in Los Angeles county.

The defendant denied that plaintiff was able to convey the land free from incumbrance, and it is stated in a stipulation that defendant had denied that plaintiff could furnish title according to the contract. There was evidence, the effect of which appellant contends was to show an existing incumbrance. There should have been a distinct finding upon this question.

We think the evidence also defective in that it did not show what was the pro rata share of the water stock mentioned, or that the money claimed to be due as an assessment upon such stock, in the supposed tender, was assessed or paid by plaintiff upon such pro rata share. We advise that the judgment be reversed, and a new trial had.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

3 Cal. Unrep. 890

CLARK v. OLSEN et ux. (No. 18,090.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1893.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — ACTION TO SET ASIDE — REVIEW ON APPEAL — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Where, in an action to set aside a conveyance from a husband to his wife as fraudulent as to plaintiff, a creditor of the husband, the evidence plainly supports a finding that the conveyance was not made with such intent, a judgment for defendants, based on such finding, will not be disturbed.

2. It was not reversible error to refuse to strike out certain parts of the answer as "sham, irrelevant, and redundant," where they could have no effect upon, and were not necessary to support, the judgment.

3. It was not error to exclude certain letters written by defendants to plaintiff, offered to show the financial condition of defendant husband, where the complaint alleged the husband's insolvency, and the answer did not deny it.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; Joseph H. Budd, Judge.

Action by Howell Clark against A. S. Olsen and wife to set aside a conveyance from said Olsen to his said wife on the ground that it was made with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud plaintiff, a creditor of said Olsen. Judgment for defendants. From an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. Salon Holl and Carter H. Smith, for appellant. F. T. Baldwin and Baldwin & Campbell, for respondents.

VANCLIEF, C. The defendants are husband and wife, and this action is in the nature of a creditors' bill in equity, to set aside two conveyances of a certain tract of land (about 327 acres) situate in the county of San Joaquin, made by A. S. Olsen to his wife, Anna, on the ground that they were made "with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the said A. S. Olsen, and particularly the plaintiff herein." The separate answers of the defendants admit the conveyances, but deny the alleged intent thereby to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of A. S. Olsen. Judgment passed for the defendants, and the plaintiff brings this appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The court found, among other things, that neither of the conveyances was made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of A. S. Olsen, and also found that A. S. Olsen never had any beneficial interest in the land, though the naked legal title had been vested in him for the use and benefit of his wife, whose equitable title was her separate property. Counsel for appellant contend that these findings are not justified by the evidence. If the finding that the conveyances were not made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the plaintiff, or any other creditor of A. S. Olsen, is justified by the evidence, it disposes of the appeal in favor of the respondents, so far as the facts are concerned, even though creditors may have been hindered and delayed by those conveyances, (Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 286, 26 Pac. Rep. 873; Windhaus v. Bootz, 92 Cal. 617, 28 Pac. Rep. 557;) and that the evidence is sufficient to justify this finding is so plainly apparent that no statement of it, in detail, is necessary in this opinion.

2. It is contended for appellant that the court erred in denying plaintiff's motion to strike out certain parts of the separate answers of defendants, on the alleged ground that such parts of their answers "are sham, and irrelevant and redundant." It does not appear that any part of the answers was sham. The seventh paragraph of each answer, alleging the declaration and recording of a homestead by the wife, and the tenth paragraph, alleging a novation of promissory notes from the husband to plaintiff, may be conceded to be insufficient defenses; but the first does not affect the issue as to the intention of defendants to delay or defraud creditors by the conveyance of the land from the husband to the wife, and therefore does not affect, and is not necessary to support, the judgment. As to the novation of the promissory notes, the court found that the plaintiff had obtained a valid judgment upon the original notes, which was a lien upon all real property of A. S. Olsen in the county of San Joaquin. This, by implication, negated the novation of the notes, and defeated any possible effect on the tenth paragraph of the answer. All the allegations and findings relating to the homestead and to the novation of notes may be stricken from the record without any possible effect upon the judgment. As to other parts of the answers comprehended in the motion to strike out, the most that can be fairly claimed is that some of them are averments of evidentiary facts tending to negative the alleged fraudulent intent of the defendants, and to prove that the entire equitable estate in the land was the separate property of the wife; but this was not one of the grounds of the motion. Besides, the striking out of all such parts of the answers would not have curtailed the evidence given upon the issue as to the alleged fraudulent intent.

3. It is claimed that the court erred in excluding certain letters written by defendants to plaintiff, offered by plaintiff to show the financial condition of A. S. Olsen at the time he conveyed the land to his wife. It is averred in the complaint that, at all the times therein mentioned, A. S. Olsen was insolvent, and had no other property not exempt from execution than the land in question. This averment was not denied, and the court expressly found it to be true; therefore the exclusion of the letters was neither injurious to the plaintiff nor erroneous. I think the order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

PACIFIC YACHT CLUB v. SAUSALITO BAY WATER CO. (No. 14,965.)

98 Cal. 487

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1893.)

ACTION TO QUIET TITLE IN EASEMENT—VENUE.

An action to determine plaintiff's right to the use of the waters of a spring on defendant's land, and to maintain pipes for the enjoyment of such use, is an action to quiet title to realty, within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 5, requiring such actions to be brought in the county in which the land is situated. Fritts v. Camp, 29 Pac. Rep. 867, 94 Cal. 394, followed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Walter N. Levy, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Yacht Club against the Sausalito Bay Water Company. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Kellogg & King, for appellant. John H. Dickinson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This litigation arises over an alleged right by plaintiff to the use of the waters of a certain spring, and the right to maintain pipes for the enjoyment of such use. The complaint, in effect, alleges "that the plaintiff is the owner of a certain tract of land in Marin county; that when plaintiff bought said land there was situated upon the adjoining land of the Old Sausalito Land and Dry Dock Co., plaintiff's grantor, a spring of water; that this spring was and is the only available water supply for the use of plaintiff's property; that plaintiff specially contracted and agreed with the Old Sausalito Land and Dry Dock Co. that, as part of the consideration for the purchase price of the land aforesaid, plaintiff should have the privilege of laying pipes from said spring over the adjoining land of said grantor, to plaintiff's clubhouse, and should have the free and uninterrupted use of water from said spring forever; that plaintiff has had the free, uninterrupted, and continuous use and adverse possession of the water pipes aforesaid, and the water of said spring, in the manner above described, ever since the 10th day of May, 1879, and that all claims against said easement and adverse thereto are barred by the statute of limitations; * * * that defendant claims some right or interest to the land upon which said spring is situated, and upon which said water pipes are laid, and further claims the exclusive right to use and sell the water of said spring; that any right defendant may have was acquired subsequently to the right granted to this plaintiff and from the same grantor; that defendant claims the right and privilege to charge the plaintiff herein water rates for the use of the water of said spring, and demands of plaintiff that it pay to defendant at the rate of 75 cents per 1,000 gallons for the water plaintiff uses; that defendant threatens to disconnect plaintiff's pipes from said spring, and shut off the supply of water from plaintiff's clubhouse, unless plaintiff pays at once said water rates." Wherefore plaintiff asks for an injunction restraining defendant from interfering with the water pipes running from plaintiff's clubhouse to the spring above described, and from shutting off from said pipes the supply of water furnished thereto by said spring, or any part thereof, and for general relief.

This action was brought in the city and county of San Francisco, and the subject-matter of the action is all situated in the county of Marin. Defendant demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action by reason of the fact that it was brought in the city and county of San Francisco, instead of the county of Marin. The point made is jurisdictional, and if it has merit the demurrer was not necessary. It is provided in section 5, art. 6, of the constitution, "that all actions for the recovery of the possession of, quieting title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon real estate shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof affected by such action or actions, is situated." A fair construction of the complaint in this case proves it to be an action to quiet plaintiff's title to an easement in the waters of a spring situated upon defendant's land, and the right of way over defendant's land for the purpose of conducting such waters. This fact is fully exemplified by an examination of the findings and conclusions of law. An adjudication of plaintiff's title to the easement is the principal relief granted, and the restraining order is merely incidental thereto, and follows an affirmation of plaintiff's title as a matter of course. There can be no question but that a complaint might be framed, alleging title to an easement, a threatened interference therewith, and asking for an injunction, which could not be considered an action to quiet title, for in a case of that character the defendant in his answer might concede the easement, and deny the interference; but here the complaint alleges title in the plaintiff, and adverse claims upon the part of the defendant, and that the defendant justifies its acts by reason of such claims. Upon a careful examination of the complaint in the case of Fritts v. Camp, 94 Cal. 394, 29 Pac. Rep. 867, we find it in all essential particulars similar to the complaint in the case at bar. The cause of action appears to be the same, the prayer for relief is the same; and that action was dismissed upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction, it being brought in the wrong county, thereby violating the provision of the constitution heretofore quoted; and upon the authority of that case we think the court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the present action. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to dismiss the action.

We concur: HARRISON, J.; PATERSON, J.

97 Cal. 532

GOULD v. WISE. (No. 19,021.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1893.)

MORTGAGES—PRIORITIES—DELIVERY.

1. Defendant agreed with A. to sell him certain land, part cash, and balance secured by mortgage. Defendant went with A. to a notary's office, where a deed was executed. While the mortgage was being prepared, A. said, "Let me see that deed," and took it from the table, and went, without defendant's knowledge, to plaintiff, from whom he negotiated a loan. A. then returned to defendant, paid him the money, and executed the mortgage, which defendant at once recorded. Prior to this time plaintiff had the deed and A.'s mortgage to her recorded. Held, that defendant's mortgage was entitled to priority, as there had been no delivery of the deed to A. at the time he negotiated the loan from plaintiff. 32 Pac. Rep. 576, affirmed.

2. Defendant's negligence in allowing the deed to be removed from the room was not such as would justify an estoppel against a plea of nondelivery of the deed. 32 Pac. Rep. 576, affirmed.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

On rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J., (dissenting.) Having dissented from the order denying a rehearing of this cause, I desire to state briefly the grounds of my dissent. The decision of the court is based upon the single proposition that on the facts testified to by the appellant he was not estopped to deny the delivery of his deed as against an innocent purchaser for value from his grantee. There are other questions presented by the record, which have been fully argued by counsel; but, since they have been left unnoticed by the court they will not be considered here, it being my intention merely to state my reasons for dissenting from the proposition decided, as to which alone the case becomes a precedent.

If there were no doubt of the soundness of the conclusion that on the facts as stated by the appellant there was no estoppel, it would still, in my opinion, be insufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment and order of the superior court; for the judge who tried the cause was not bound to accept the appellant's version of the facts upon his own uncorroborated testimony. The possession by his grantee of his deed, fully and formally executed, acknowledged, and certified, and containing a recital that the purchase price had been fully paid, was prima facie proof of a delivery. It created a presumption against appellant which it became necessary for him to rebut, and his testimony that there was no delivery merely produced a conflict of evidence upon which the finding of the judge who tried the cause should be held conclusive. To rebut the presumption of delivery in such a case for the purpose of defeating the title of an innocent purchaser who has paid a valuable consideration on the faith of the grantee's possession of a deed to which every appearance of validity has been imparted by the voluntary act of the grantor, it is necessary to show not only that there was no delivery as between the parties to the instrument, but that the grantor did not voluntarily intrust it to the custody of the grantee, or allow him to obtain the custody by any culpable negligence; for, if the grantor has voluntarily intrusted such evidence of title to one who abuses his confidence, or even if he has neglected reasonable precautions to prevent his perfected deed from being stolen, he is estopped from denying a delivery as against an innocent purchaser for value. All the authorities sustain this proposition, and none more emphatically than those cited in support of the opinion of the court. This being so, upon what principle can it be held that a trial court must accept the uncorroborated testimony of the grantor that he did not intrust his grantee with the possession of his deed, and that he was not guilty of culpable negligence in allowing him to get possession of it? It seems to me a sufficiently dangerous rule to hold that such testimony may be accepted to defeat the apparent validity of the deed. To hold that as matter of law it necessarily defeats its validity, or, in other words, that when the trial judge has found in favor the presumption and against the testimony of the interested party, his finding of fact must be reversed on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence, is going beyond all reason and in the face of numerous decisions of this court. It establishes a new rule, which not only puts it in the power of a party to relieve himself of the consequences of his own folly or negligence at the expense of innocent purchasers, but opens a wide door to deliberate fraud; and this in a class of transactions of every-day occurrence, which it should be the policy of the law to guard against every element of danger or uncertainty.

But, aside from this consideration, which is sufficiently serious, I am entirely satisfied that there is no authority for holding that, on a fair construction of the appellant's own statement of the manner in which Adams obtained and kept possession of his deed, he is not estopped to deny a delivery. Two decisions only are cited in the opinion of the court to sustain its conclusion upon this point. In one—Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 416—it was held that the maker of a negotiable promissory note was not estopped to deny its delivery as against an innocent holder for value; and in the other—Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55—it was held that a grantor of land was not estopped to deny a delivery of his deed against an innocent purchaser for value. But in each of those cases the instrument in question had been obtained by theft, and without the consent, express or tacit, of the maker. It had not, in other words, been intrusted by the maker or grantor to the custody of the payee or grantee, and the only question was one of culpable negligence. The opinion of the court in each case fully and expressly concedes that, if the instrument had been voluntarily intrusted to the party making a fraudulent use of it, the loss must have fallen upon the maker or grantor. It was also conceded that the same result must have ensued if the instrument had come into the hands of the grantee or payee by reason of the culpable negligence of the maker or grantor. But it was held on the peculiar facts of each case—proved by the testimony of disinterested witnesses—that there was no culpable negligence. In the Michigan case the maker of the note, after signing it, but before it was stamped, went out of the room to get a surety to sign with him, leaving the note lying on a table, and his sister present, at the same time directing the payee not to touch it while he was gone. Before he returned, the payee took the note, and went away with it, in defiance of the command of the maker and the protest of his sister. It was held not culpable negligence to fail to anticipate this criminal act of the payee. In the Wisconsin case, the deed, not fully executed, was placed in a locked trunk, of which the grantor's wife kept the key. While so kept it was stolen by the grantee, (the grantor's son,) and completed by a forgery. The court, in its opinion, distinctly says that if the deed had been completely executed by the grantor the loss must have fallen on him, on account of his negligence in leaving it where the grantee could gain access to it, but holds that he was not bound to anticipate the theft of an instrument to which apparent validity could only be imparted "by the crime of forgery."

